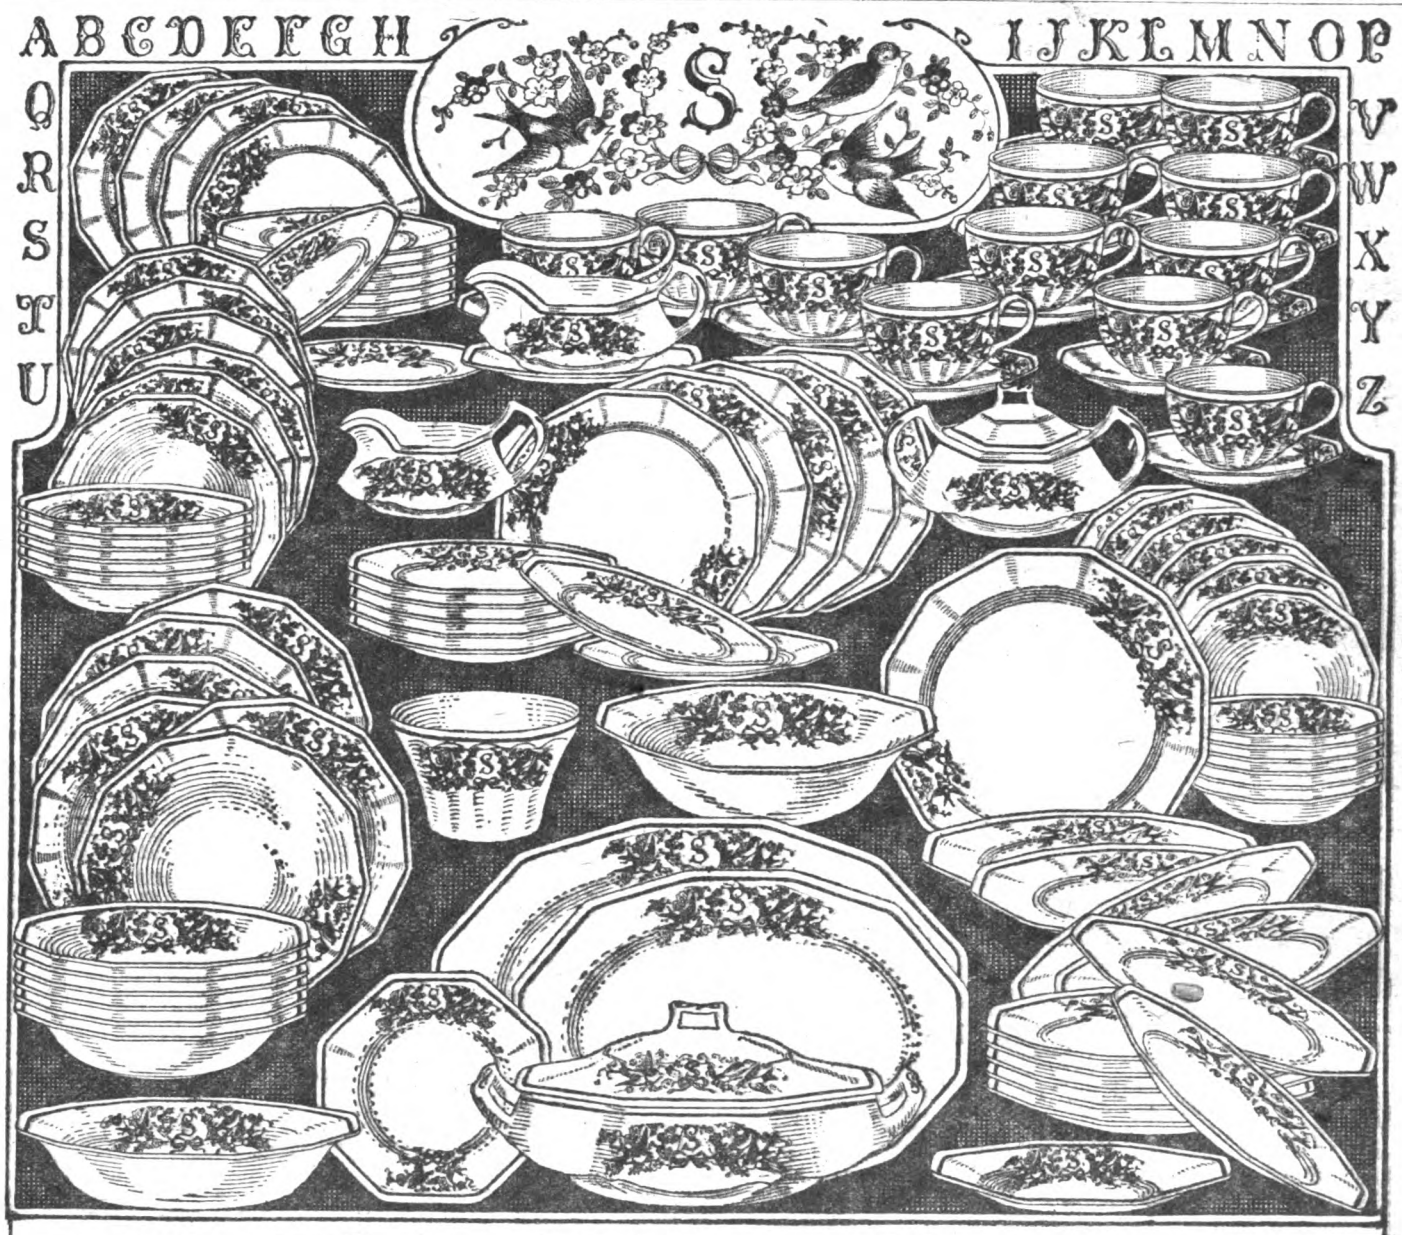
Kanred is highly resistant to prevalent forms of stem and leaf rust, is less liable to winter killing than Turkey or Karlof, and matures somewhat earlier than these varieties. It outyields the hard winter wheat varieties now popular in the winter wheat section by from three to five bushels per acre, another point in its favor.



The new variety was developed from a single head of Crimean wheat selected at the Kansas Experiment Station some ten years ago. From this source it is estimated that 2,000,000 acres were harvested in 1921. Kanred is a hard red winter wheat resembling Turkey. It is bearded and has white hairless chaff. The increased yields it has made, and its highly rust resistant quality, explain its growing popularity.

In milling and baking tests Kanred has compared favorably with other hard winter varieties. Pure seed is highly important. The new variety closely resembles others in appearance; for this reason, certification of seed has been found essential. This is done through the Kansas Crop Association in co-operation with the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

An Oat Hull Remover

A machine has recently been placed on the market which removes oat or barley hulls from the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 28.)

110-Piece Dinner Set

Superb Bluebird Monogram Design

$1.00 Down

A Complete Service for 12 People

This splendid set consists of:

12 dinner plates, 9 in.	1 gravy boat stand.
12 breakfast plates, 7 in.	1 covered vegetable dish, (2 pieces).
12 coupe soups, 7½ in.	1 oval open vegetable dish, 8½ in.
12 fruit saucers, 5¼ in.	1 round vegetable dish, 8¾ in.
12 cups.	1 bowl, 1 pint.
12 saucers.	1 sugar bowl and cover, 2 pieces.
12 oatmeal dishes, 6 in.	1 cream pitcher.
12 bread and butter plates, 6 in.	1 pickle dish.
1 platter, 11½ in.	1 butter dish, 7½ in.
1 platter, 13¾ in.
1 gravy boat.

This set is one that will add tone and beauty to any dining room. With ordinary care it will last a lifetime. Weight packed, about 100 pounds.

Order by No. G6702A. Send $1.00 with order, $2.70 monthly. Price of 110 pieces, $29.90. No C. O. D. No discount for cash.

A wonderful, exclusive bargain for Straus & Schram customers. A dinner set which combines the exquisite Bluebird design, that emblem of happiness, with the distinctive monogram, all woven together with a harmonious floral pattern in pink, green and lavender. Lovely blue border on each piece. Popular Colonial shape. Each piece is fired in the glaze and guaranteed not to check or craze. That splendid Old English finish is applied to the clay before firing and gives that indestructible, snow-white glaze.

Your Initial on Every Piece FREE

Yes, we will furnish you this set with your choice of any initial in the distinctive shaded Puritan letter on every one of the 110 pieces—and no extra charge! This wonderful dinner set is yours for only $1.00 down and $2.70 a month; $29.90 in all. Satisfaction guaranteed.

NOTICE! This set is guaranteed first quality, standard pattern. Replacements may be secured from us for three years.

30 Days Trial

Just $1 with the coupon brings you this set for 30 days use in your own home. Our guarantee protects you. If not satisfied after 30 days, return the set at our expense and we will refund your $1, plus any freight or express charges you paid.

Easy Payments

If satisfied, pay balance of rock-bottom price on small monthly payments. Almost a year to pay! We trust honest people anywhere in the U. S. No discount for cash; nothing extra for credit. No C. O. D. Easy terms on everything in our bargain catalog.

Cut Price—Send Now

Rock bottom prices now. Lowest since before the war. So send coupon at once with only $1 and we will ship this complete 110-Piece Bluebird Monogram Dinner Set at once to you on 30 days trial. Money refunded if not satisfied.

Free Bargain Catalog

Shows thousands of bargains in furniture, jewelry, carpets, rugs, curtains, silverware, stoves, talking machines, porch and lawn furniture, women's, men's and children's wearing apparel. Send coupon today.

Straus & Schram, Dept. 3041 W. 35th St., Chicago

Straus & Schram, Dept. 3041 W. 35th St., Chicago

Enclosed find $1.00. Ship special advertised 110-Piece Bluebird Monogram Dinner Set, No. G6702A. I am to have 30 days' free trial. If I keep the set I will pay $2.70 monthly, $29.90 in all. If not satisfied, I am to return the set within 30 days and you are to refund my money and any express charges I paid.

State Initial desired. (One letter only).....

Name.....

Street, R. F. D. or Box No......

Shipping Point.....

Post Office..... State.....

If You Only Want Catalog, Put X in Box Below:
☐ Furniture, Stoves, Jewelry ☐ Men's, Women's, Children's Clothing

Chase Pain Away with Musterole

When the winds blow raw and chill and rheumatism starts to tingle in your joints and muscles, get out your good friend Musterole.

Rub this soothing white ointment gently over the sore spot. As Musterole penetrates the skin and goes down to the seat of trouble you feel a gentle, healing warmth; then comes cooling, welcome relief from old man Pain.

Better by far than the old-fashioned mustard plaster, Musterole does the work without the burn and blister Grandma knew so well.

For croupy colds, sore throat, rheumatism and congestion of all kinds, just rub on Musterole.

Don't wait for trouble, keep a jar or tube on the bathroom shelf.

Recommended often by nurses and doctors, it comes in 35c and 65c jars and tubes; hospital size, $3.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

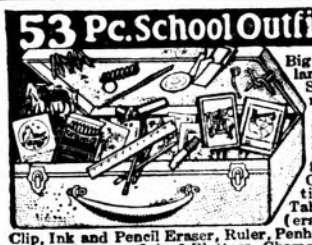
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE

WILL NOT BLISTER

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

A Bushel of Reading Matter



REMEMBER We will not send you merely your choice of one of these books, but ALL FIVE of them, just as listed above. You all know Charlotte M. Braeme. She is one of the world's most fascinating writers. Her name alone is enough to guarantee a good strong story, interesting and entertainingly told. Here is a chance for you to read 5 of her best books, aggregating 160 large double column pages.

FREE OFFER To introduce our publication, EVERYDAY LIFE, the great monthly story paper of interest to all members of the family. Send only 25c to pay for year's subscription, and 10c extra to pay for postage, etc. (35c in all) and we will send our paper for one year and the collection of books as above. This is a big introductory offer. If the above titles are out, will send others just as good.

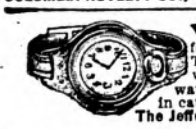
EVERYDAY LIFE, 337 W. Madison St., R M 5, Chicago

53 Pc. School Outfit FREE

Big Outfit consists of large metal trimmed School Case, Famous Donkey Game, Nail Puzzle, Ring Puzzle, 25 fine assorted Post Cards, Box 8 colored Wax Crayons, Composition Book, Writing Tablet, three Pencils (eraser tips) Pencil Clip, Ink and Pencil Eraser, Ruler, Penholder, 6 Pens, Ink Tablets for 1 pt. Ink, 6 Blotters, Chamois Penwiper—Entire Outfit given for selling only 20 pkgs. fancy Post Cards at 15c. Order Now. SUN MFG. CO. DEPT 225 CHICAGO

GIVEN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE

Fine moving picture machine with supply of films. Easy to operate, by oil or electricity. Free for selling only 12 boxes of Mentho-Nova. Sell at 25c a box, return the $3 and receive this dandy premium. Satisfaction guaranteed. Order now. Hundreds of other premiums and big Cash Commission.



U. S. SUPPLY CO., Dept. 850, Greenville, Pa.

VIOLIN FREE

Beautiful Violin, richly polished wood, well finished finger board and tail piece, full set strings, fine bow, box of rosin, and Instruction Book, for selling 30 packages Colored Postcards at 10 cts. a package. Write for Postcards today.

COLUMBIA NOVELTY CO., Dept. 627, EAST BOSTON, MASS.

Wrist Watch Given for selling 40 big packets "Best by Test" garden seed at 10c. Order 40, when sold send $4 and choose wrist watch, cash commission or other prize in catalog sent with seeds. We trust you

The Jefferson Farms, Dept. D, Albany, Ga.

The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be taken to your local doctor.

Address The Family Doctor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Sign your true name and give your address. Name will not be published

MISS I. M. H., Pineland, Texas.—"Sunken eyes" are due, as a rule, to lack of fat in the orbit. There is no remedy for the same except a general building up of the system.

MRS. W. L. S., North Fairfield, Ohio.—To get rid of the "lice and nits" in your son's head, apply at night tincture of larkspur.

MISS A. M., Minneapolis, Minn.—Blushing is purely a nervous phenomenon. There is no remedy and no treatment, medical or otherwise, that will do any good.

MRS. E. G., Manton, R. I.—You probably have a serious kidney trouble. Have your urine examined and, in this way, find out the true condition of your kidneys. In the meantime you might take a tablespoonful of Basham's mixture, well diluted, after meals. You should also live principally on a milk diet.

MRS. H. N., Altura, Minn.—You are probably suffering from malarial poisoning. Take a tablespoonful of Warburg's mixture after meals. Your husband should have his appendix removed.

MRS. L. A. M., Rutledge, Mo.—Probably change of climate, as you suggest, would benefit your husband's throat. In the meantime have him use, as a gargle and spray, Dobell's solution. Also apply to the nostrils white precipitate ointment, at night only.

MRS. E. D., Philadelphia, Pa.—For the gravel, you mention, one of the best remedies is effervescing potassium citrate. Of this remedy take a tablespoonful in a glass of cold water four times a day. Of course you must avoid sweets and pastries of all kinds. For the irritable heart action, probably a five-grain pill of asafœtida, taken three or more times a day, will be beneficial.

MISS L. G., Chatham, Va.—"Head noises," due to doubt to a catarrhal condition of the middle ear, are very annoying and also very hard to cure. Only persistent treatment for a catarrhal condition of the nasal passages, and also of the tube leading from the middle ear, will help the condition mentioned. Consult a good ear specialist and be treated for this condition. Of course your general health must be taken into account and any circulatory or irregularity of heart action must be remedied as well. High blood-pressure will also aggravate the condition, as well as excessive nervousness.

MRS. A. D., Annandale, Minn.—You have an intercostal (between-the-ribs) neuralgia, following your exposure husking corn. Take five-grain tablets of bicarbonate of soda four times a day, and apply, locally, chloroform liniment to the painful side.

MR. S. B. D., Buell, Va.—Lobelia is good for asthma, but dangerous. Better take 1-150 tablet of astropin once or twice at night. This remedy is safe and very efficacious in asthmatic conditions. All so-called asthmatic remedies are built on this remedy in various combinations.

MRS. A. M., Elmwood.—Kindly give the state you come from in the next letter. There are all manner of cures for rheumatism, but the best one remedy is ten-grain tablets of salicylate of soda taken with a large glass of water after meals. Locally, apply chloroform liniment. Of course avoid sweets of all kinds, including pastries, and drink plenty of water.

MISS A. D., Lind, Wash.—Remove the blackheads with a comedo extractor, then apply a hot stoupe to the face. After you have thus prepared your face, apply lotio alba.

MISS L. S. K., Anderson, S. C.—If you are run down and anemic the Basham's mixture will do you good. Take a tablespoonful, well diluted, after meals.

MRS. G. W. S., Goodwin, Ark.—You probably have a nervous trouble which causes excessive action of the heart. Take a five-grain pill of asafœtida after meals for some time and note action of the pills.

MISS H. E., Waynesburg, Pa.—Remove the dandruff from the scalp by using green soap, followed by the application of linseed oil. Keep the oil on the scalp over night and in the morning wash the oil out of the hair with some good tar soap. Then apply a two per cent. solution of resorcin dissolved in equal parts of alcohol and water. Repeat this treatment if necessary.

MRS. N. F., Quebec, N. C.—You probably have some adhesions following your many operations. Would not advise any severe exercises but would advise breathing exercises. Stand erect and take in a full breath, rising on the toes at the same time. Do this slowly for five minutes three times a day. You can take cascara sagrada pills for your constipation.

MRS. F. D., Castile, New York.—Gall stones, if obstructive, are best removed by operation. Large doses of olive oil eaten on salads are indicated and may prove helpful. Also American Oil, or some form of liquid paraffin, is helpful to lubricate the intestinal passages. Sweets and starchy foods should be taboo in most cases. Water should be drunk freely, and ten-grain tablets of bicarbonate of soda taken after meals, to relieve excessive acidity if indicated.

MRS. V. M., Vincennes, Ind.—Malaria is at the bottom of your melancholia. Take thirty drops of fluid extract of eupatorium, well diluted, after meals. Of course, exercise in the open and try to forget your gloomy forebodings.

MRS. I. T., Galien, Ill.—Boils in the ear are due to a direct infection of the part. Douche the ear with a tablet of chlorezene dissolved in a pint of hot water. After the douche, instill in the canal two or three drops of the following solution: Fifteen drops of carbolic acid, fifteen drops of tincture of iodine added to one ounce of equal parts of alcohol and water. Internally, you might take a tablespoonful of Basham's mixture, well diluted, after meals.

MRS. E. S. S., Watseka, Ill.—The collection of gas in the intestines is due always to some form of indigestion resulting from getting improper foods, such as sweets, pastries, etc. You must keep your bowels free by using some effective cathartic, and take, after meals, some tablets known as compound bicarbonate of soda tablets. You can obtain these tablets at any reliable drug store and they will prove effective in your case. Improving your digestion will tend also to increase your flesh.

Genuine BAYER ASPIRIN

Never say "Aspirin" without saying "Bayer."

WARNING! Unless you see name "Bayer" on tablets, you are not getting genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians over 21 years and proved safe by millions for

Colds	Headache	Rheumatism
Toothache	Neuralgia	Neuritis
Earache	Lumbago	Pain, Pain

Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proper directions.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—Bottles of 24 and 100—All druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

The Modern Farmer

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27.)

ground grain. This machine will no doubt be welcomed by hog breeders and feeders, as the hulls have always been a source of trouble in feeding either ground oats or ground barley in the form of slop to young pigs.

Feeders report frequently that trouble with oat hulls has compelled them to give up using an otherwise ideal forcing feed for young pigs, as the hulls cause strangling, choking or vomiting; some go so far as to attribute certain digestive disorders to the same cause. With the new machine, which sifts the hulls out of the ground grain and leaves only the clean meal, the former source of trouble will be avoided. The machine is placed on the market by a well-known manufacturer of feed grinding mills, and should fill a real need on the part of the great many hog feeders who grind their own oats or barley for hog feed but who have always had difficulty on account of the hulls.

Brief Facts for Busy Readers

A half-million-dollar cash crop of watermelons is grown annually in two counties of southeastern Missouri on land which until recently was considered swamp. Clearing and drainage has obtained a sandy soil, with abundant moisture and hot weather, to make this new district the most important melon shipping region in the country.

Of the 753 Eastern farmers who were asked to state what they found to be the chief advantage in owning a motor truck, 91 per cent. replied, "My truck saves me time". Farmers' Bulletin No. 1201, giving in full the results of this interesting investigation, may be secured on application to the Division of Publications, United States Department of Agriculture, free of charge.

Yeast as a feed for laying hens has not been found beneficial, according to a recent report of the Poultry Husbandry Division of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. The egg yield was not greater than that from a check pen of hens fed without yeast. These tests of the feeding value of yeast were not conducted on an extensive scale, but from all indications it is unlikely that yeast will be found of value in feeding laying hens.

Presence of garlic or wild onion bulblets in wheat grown and marketed in Eastern States increases risks of spoilage, decreases milling output, and lowers value of flour. Garlicky wheat is "docked" to offset a discount of 25 cents to $1.00 a barrel, the allowance made by the mills selling garlick-tainted flour. The Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates recommends rotation of crops, careful preparation of land and the purchase of clean wheat seed of good quality as the best means of controlling and eradicating garlic.

The majority of accidents to motorists are caused by their own recklessness, and 90 per cent. of them are the direct result of speeding, according to a statement in Public Roads. A three-months' study of motor accidents and their causes on Maryland roads was the basis for the facts published. It was also found that very few accidents were due to the condition of the roads themselves, aside from slippery surfaces resulting from rains.

Kindness pays in livestock management. Keep livestock quiet and gentle by being quiet and gentle yourself, and insisting that your hired man do likewise. Your feeding costs will be lessened and your results surprisingly improved. Every farmer knows that livestock lose weight by shipping; this loss is mainly due to digestive troubles caused by the excitement and fear of train travel with its noises and jars. The same holds true on the farm.

A canning plant in Michigan has installed a germinator which will test 7,000 ears of sweet corn a week for its farmer patrons. This shows clearly the value of testing seed corn as held by a large canning company. With the new machine testing can be done on a larger scale and more economically than by each individual farmer. It has been found that the increased vigor and yield of the sweet corn crop give better profits to both the growers and the canners.

As a fertilizer for alfalfa, sulphur seems to be proving highly valuable, to judge from reports received from Oregon. On 27 fields the average yield increased by 144 per cent. in 1920, and indications so far last year indicate a still greater increase. Especially is this the case in old fields which have been steadily decreasing. The expense of sulphuring an acre of alfalfa, including the cost of the sulphur, does not exceed $3.50 per acre. At this reasonable figure it will be highly economical for use in regions where it is recommended by experts, following experiments.

A very simple muffler or silencer for a farm gas engine may be readily made by running the exhaust pipe into a barrel or box placed a foot or so under ground, then filling the barrel with round stones about "first-size". This method proves very effective, costs little or nothing, takes little time to construct, and may be depended upon to make the troublesome and noisy exhaust almost vanish. In case of back-firing, no damage can result, as the loose stones "give" slightly, then settle back into place.

Ergot, a widespread disease of rye and occasionally found in wheat, is steadily increasing in the United States, according to a report published by Prof. H. L. Bolley, of the North Dakota Experiment Station. It not only reduces yields by destroying the heads of grain, but it is poisonous to livestock which eat it in the grain, in the straw or in ground feed. It is particularly harmful to mares or cows which consume it in quantities during the period of gestation, for the reason that it is likely to result in abortion. more careful threshing, screening of seed, and purchase of ergot-free seed grain are control measures.

Questions and Answers

BUYING SEED CORN.—I am a new settler here in northern Minnesota and want your advice about getting seed corn. The corn I brought in from Iowa and planted last fall did not ripen, but I hardly expected it to, and didn't mind as I wanted it for winter roughage, anyhow. What I want to know is where to get my seed for next spring. Here in my neighborhood every man has a different story to tell and they grow everything from flint corn to white or yellow dent. Shall I buy my seed from them? If so, which kind is best?

C. E. C., Minn.

A.—Do not depend on your settler neighbors for advice. They may be almost as new to climatic conditions and soil requirements as you are, and can hardly be expected to either tell you the right thing or supply you with the seed best suited to your locality. Write to your Agricultural Experiment Station at Minneapolis and get bulletins on corn. These will tell you all you want to know about best varieties to plant, etc. Also send to some well-known seed house for a catalogue, and buy guaranteed seed of known germination. It is more economical in the long run.

HOGS EAT SOFT COAL.—My hogs have been eating the soft coal we have had piled up in the yard until we could build a new coal-bin. Is it safe to let them eat it or will it do them any harm, do you think? What makes them eat the coal?

L. C. P., Indiana.

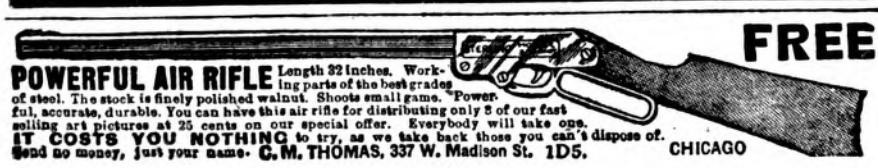
A.—Hogs require charcoal in some form in their diet. When it is not provided they will eat other things, such as soft coal for instance, to satisfy their bodily need and craving. They will not be harmed by the small amount of soft coal they have eaten, but it would be better—and cheaper—to supply them with either hardwood or corn-cob charcoal and have the supply where they can get at it at all times. Some hog raisers provide a separate self-feeder for this purpose, others keep a small pile of charcoal in a large and strong box laid on its side in the feedlot and staked down with posts; still others keep a large stump in the lot and burn it from time to time as the pigs remove the charcoal formed by the burning.

MOLDY CORN DANGEROUS.—We have had a good deal of moldly corn this year and I would like to learn if it can be fed to hogs safely. I have heard that it is dangerous for horses, but one of my neighbors has fed it to hogs, he says, and without doing any harm. Please tell me what I can do with it as we have a big pile lying beside the corn-crib.

MRS. J. W., Illinois.

A.—Many serious losses have been reported following the feeding of moldy corn to livestock. Horses are especially liable to sickness, and even death, from eating moldy corn. Hogs are liable to injury, so we should strongly advise against feeding it to them. Cattle and sheep are not so subject to injury, but they are by no means immune to the ill effects that may result from the utilization of moldy corn as a feed. The corn thrown out of the crib because it was found to be moldy may represent a considerable loss to you, but not so great as if the corn were fed to livestock and the feeding resulted in sickness or death of valuable animals.

WATCH, CHAIN AND TWO RINGS



as premiums—send no money—simply name and address—merely give away FREE 12 Beautiful Art Pictures with 12 Boxes of our famous White Cloverine, which you sell at 25c each. We will send you this Genuine American Watch, also Chain and two Gold Shell Rings, according to offer in our Premium Catalog which you receive with the Cloverine. Millions are using Cloverine.

OR LADIES! YOU CAN ALSO EARN A BEAUTIFUL DINNER SET SIX LACE CURTAINS

and many other beautiful premiums. Our plan is the easiest and absolutely square. Write quick—Pictures and Cloverine sent promptly, post-paid. Be first in your town.

THE WILSON CHEMICAL CO.,

BIG CASH COMMISSION TO AGENTS Dept. M. 107, Tyrone, Pa.

FREE

POWERFUL AIR RIFLE Length 32 inches. Working parts of the best grades of steel. The stock is finely polished walnut. Shoots small game. Powerful, accurate, durable. You can have this air rifle for distributing only 8 of our fast selling art pictures at 25 cents on our special offer. Everybody will take one.

IT COSTS YOU NOTHING to try, as we take back those you can't dispose of. Send no money, just your name. C. M. THOMAS, 337 W. Madison St. 1D5. CHICAGO

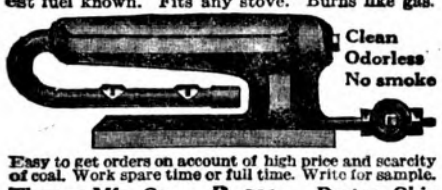
Don't Kill Her

Because she is not laying. Maybe it is not her fault. A hen is an egg factory. She takes raw material and manufactures eggs from it. Give her a food that contains material for 25 yolks and 100 whites and she can lay but 25 eggs. Balance that ration. Give her material for 100 yolks as well as 100 whites. You can learn about it in our book

Feeding For Egg Production

Tells how and what to feed for best results. No matter whether you keep ten hens or ten hundred, you can not afford to waste high priced feed. This book is given free as a premium with one year's subscription to POULTRY KEEPER for 50 cents. You need POULTRY KEEPER too. It is chuck full of practical information on how to make poultry pay. The book and the paper will both make money for you. Send 50 cents at once for a year's subscription and get "Feeding for Eggs" free. Address,

A. OTIS ARNOLD, Dept. 97, Quincy, Illinois



Splendid for every sort of external ache and pain, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, stiff joints and sore muscles, sprains and strains, and the after effects of weather exposure.

Sloan's penetrates without rubbing. At all druggists, 35c, 70c, $1.40.

Keep it handy
Sloan's Liniment Pain's enemy

We pay $8 a Day

taking orders for New Kerogas Burner. Makes any stove a gas stove. Burns kerosene (coal oil). Cheapest fuel known. Fits any stove. Burns like gas.

Clean
Odorless
No smoke

Easy to get orders on account of high price and scarcity of coal. Work spare time or full time. Write for sample.
Thomas Mfg. Co. B-730 Dayton, Ohio

FREE FORD AUTO TO AGENTS

Here's an opportunity to earn big money—$6 to $12 a day, with easy work, all your time or spare time and obtain a Ford Automobile free besides. A straightout from the shoulder business proposition. No voting or guessing contest. We want wide-awake men and women to introduce into every home our famous ZANOL Pure Food Products, Non-Alcoholic Food Flavors in tubes, Toilet Preparations, Perfumes and Soaps; 250 other light weight household necessities.

MAKE $60 A WEEK EASY.

No experience necessary—we teach you how, give you the right start and help you make a success. Absolutely no limit to your earning power. We can use only a certain number of General Agents so get in touch with us at once. We furnish our representatives with a free automobile. Just send postal for particulars and money making offer.
AMERICAN PRODUCTS CO. 5390 Amer. Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

EARN MORE MONEY

selling Lange products direct from wagon to home. Old established house with a big line of tea, coffee, spices, extracts, medicines, toilet preparations, stock remedies and pure food specialties. Sales better every trip. You furnish horse or auto, we supply wagon on easy terms. Our contract beats all others 3 ways. Let us tell you how. 200 more men wanted at once. Write today.
THE LANGE CO., Box A. De Pere, Wisconsin

150 EGG CHICK Incubator and Brooder Both for $19.75

made of California Redwood. Incubator covered with asbestos and galvanized iron, triple walls, nursery, copper tanks in incubator and brooder. 30 days' trial—money back if not O. K. FREE Catalog.
FREIGHT PAID East of the Rockies
260 EGG INCUBATOR AND BROODER $28.75
Ironclad Incubator Co. Box 21, Racine, Wis.

Mankato Incubator Direct to user at lowest price. Made by experts of 28 years experience. Has triple walls, best material, hot water, copper tank, large oil tank—one filling to hatch, self regulator, safety lamp, double heating system etc., safe, simple, set up ready to use. Big book and catalog free.
Freight Prepaid Mankato Incubator Co., Box 749, Mankato, Minn.

62 BREEDS High class, profitable pure-bred, hardy chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys. Fowls, Eggs and Incubators at reduced prices. At it 26 years. Large new valuable Poultry book and catalog free.
F. A. NEUBERT, Box 342 Mankato, Minn.

DOLLARS IN HARES

We pay $7.00 to $18.50 and up a pair and express charges. Big Profits. We furnish guaranteed high grade stock and buy all you raise. Use back yard, barn, cellar, attic. Contract and Illustrated Catalog Free.
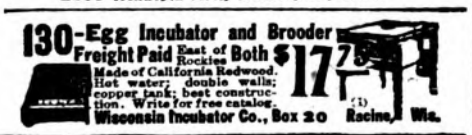
STANDARD FOOD & FUR ASS'N
405 A. Broadway New York

55 EGGS FROM 57 HENS were received by Mr. C. E. Graham after feeding ARROW EGG TABLETS. They will double your egg supply and prevent cholera.

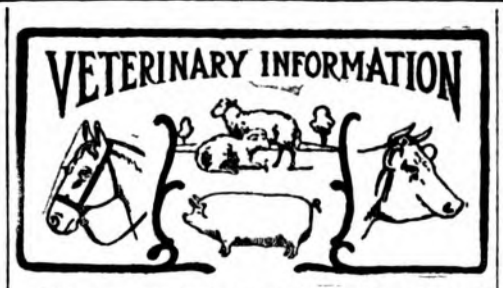
Don't send a cent: Cut out this adv. and mail to us, giving your name and address, and we will send you two $1.00 boxes ARROW EGG TABLETS. When they arrive, pay the postman $1.00 for one box, the other is yours free of charge.



Baby chicks given free until Mar. 1st, to users of Arrow Egg Tablets. Full information mailed with your order.
Write today. ARROW CHEMICAL CO., Rocky Ridge, Maryland.

Egg Tonic FREE

Write for FREE sample of old reliable Make-em-Lay Egg Tonic in powdered form. Start hens laying at once. Let me prove it FREE. Send no money.
ALLEN E. WOODALL, Poultry Remedy Expert
2160 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.



130-Egg Incubator and Brooder Freight Paid East of Rockies Both $17.75

Made of California Redwood. Hot water; double walls; copper tank; best construction. Write for free catalog.
Wisconsin Incubator Co., Box 20 Racine, Wis.

BABY CHICKS All leading breeds. Pure bred. Lowest prices. Place order now for 1922.
Live delivery guaranteed in U. S. Price List FREE.
BOWLES HATCHERY CO., Box 8, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

Sales Agents wanted in every county to give all or spare time. Positions worth $750 to $1,500 yearly. We train the inexperienced. Novelty Cutlery Co., 75 Bar St., Canton, Ohio

Subscribers are invited to write to this department asking for any information desired relative to the treatment of animal troubles. Questions will be answered in these columns free by an eminent veterinarian. Describe the trouble fully, sign full name and give your address; direct all correspondence to the Veterinary Department, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

No attention will be given any inquiry which lacks the sender's full name and address, but we will print only initials if so requested.

New Facts About Cholera

VETERINARIANS have been worried and owners of swine disappointed ever since vaccination as a preventive of hog cholera came into vogue because the results from the use of virus and serum have been irregular and in some instances apparently injurious. In seeking to explain and offset the contradictory results of vaccination and illness that often has lingered after its application, veterinarians and research workers in the laboratories of the experiment stations and firms manufacturing biologic preparations have blamed a "mixed infection" for the trouble and have supplied a biologic for the prevention and cure of that somewhat mythical ailment. Hemorrhagic septicemia has also been thought responsible and vaccination against that as well as cholera has been practiced. In some cases, too, disastrous sickness following vaccination has been attributed to putrid changes in the serum, and one unfortunate veterinarian was sued by the owner of a herd of hogs that died after vaccination and had to pay for the animals, as it was proved that he had not been cleanly in his application of the treatment. Dr. Robert Graham, animal pathologist of the Illinois Experiment Station, now states as the result of extensive research work that the presence of Bacillus botulinus, type A, has been found related to 90 per cent. of the outbreaks of disease following vaccination and has frequently been encountered in the surface soil of many of the infected premises. Dr. Graham has also found that the bacillus mentioned was present in some 16 per cent. of the samples of virus and serum he purchased in the open market. Bacterins against hemorrhagic septicemia proved worthless and even detrimental when used to offset so-called "breaks" following vaccination. The outcome of the experiments of this scientist is that he advises simultaneous use of serum, virus and botulinus antitoxin for the immunization of hogs against cholera and prevention of the injurious after effects to which we have referred. Botulinus antitoxin is now on the market and certainly should be employed by veterinarians in the way suggested.

MAMMITIS.—I have a cow that freshened a year ago last April. In four months she went dry in her left front udder. She is fresh again but that part of the udder does not give as much milk as the rest. Can you tell me the reason and what to do to make the flow of milk increase? (2) She has had two attacks of meningitis of the brain. What can I do to prevent it?
MRS. L. B. C.

A.—Mammitis (garget) has affected the quarter of the udder and it will not be likely to regain its full function. Indeed, the attacks may recede until the quarter eventually is ruined for milk production. Some improvement may result if you strip that quarter clean three or four times daily; massage it thoroughly each time and each evening rub in a mixture of 1 part each of turpentine and fluid extract of poke root and 6 parts of melted lard. (2) You should have described the symptoms. True cerebro spinal meningitis, often called "forage poisoning," usually proves fatal. A preventive serum has been prepared by Dr. Robert Graham of the Illinois Agricultural Experiment Station. Have your veterinarian apply to him for a bulletin about the treatment for "botulism".

HIGH RINGBONE.—I have a pony ten years old that has a solid lump or growth on her left hind ankle. It has some movement and only bothers when trotting. She wears off the toe by hitting it on the ground. If the growth cannot be taken off, can the ankle be made free in action? R. E. H.

A.—We suspect that a high ringbone is present in this case and if so it may eventually unite the bones of the joint and do away with motion. If it is a callous growth instead of a bony one, there is some possibility that persistent use of a proprietary reducing preparation, which you can buy at a drug store, may relieve the stiffness. It would be better, however, to have a qualified veterinarian make an examination, as he may decide that line or point firing and blistering should be done.

SHRINK IN MILK: THRIFTLESS PIGS.—Can you tell me what caused my cow to shrink in milking? She freshened last March and gave four and one-half gallons of milk at a milking and now only one-half gallon. (2) I bought some young pigs ten months ago and they are not doing as they ought—they do not look more than five or six months old. I feed them corn and slop. What is good for them? J. W. S.

A.—This cow should be carefully watched as she may be robbing her own dairy or being milked by another cow, calf or pig, or by campers or other people. If such does not prove to be the case, give her a pound dose of Epsom salt in three pints of warm water well sweetened with molasses and afterwards feed roots or silage and bran and oilmeal to regulate the bowels. If possible, feed well on clover or alfalfa hay and allow ground oats or barley and corn meal in addition to bran and oilmeal. Apply to the State Agricultural Experiment Station for bulletins on cow feeding and management and feeding of swine. (2) The pigs are probably infested with worms. Withhold feed for 24 hours, then give a little slop or water, for each 50 pounds of body weight of pig, 2½ grains each of santonin and calomel, 1 dram of powdered areca nut and ½ dram of bicarbonate of soda. Repeat the dose in 10 days.

INDIGESTION.—Can you tell me what causes my cow to have dumpy spells and not eat her food and throw up her food and hay, and then in a week or so she gets all right? She will freshen next month. Is there a remedy? MRS. J. M. S.

A.—Indigestion, no doubt, causes the attacks described. Sometimes they are incidental to pregnancy and cease after calving. If you have not done so, the cow should be "dried off" at once. Have her take outdoor exercise daily. Feed good clover or alfalfa hay, roots or a little sound corn silage and enough bran and flaxseed meal to keep her bowels active. Do not feed corn or any constipating feed. If another attack occurs, give her a pound dose of Epsom salt in three pints of warm water well sweetened with molasses. Afterwards, if necessary, mix in the food twice daily a tablespoonful of a mixture of two parts of powdered wood charcoal and one part each of bicarbonate of soda and powdered ginger root and nux vomica.

INDIGESTION.—I have a five-year-old mare, and about two months ago she began to lose in flesh and her hair seems to stand out, does not lie down. I have been feeding her grass instead of hay until a month ago. I am not doing any heavy work with her. J. W. S.

A.—The mare apparently is suffering from indigestion. Have her teeth put in order. Then feed good mixed clover and timothy hay and a mixture of whole or crushed oats and one-ninth part of wheat bran, by weight. Allow one pound of hay and one pound of the grain mixture in three feeds, as a day's ration. Add a few ears of hard corn at noon in cold weather. Bed with sawdust or shavings if she eats her bedding. Have her work or take outdoor exercise every day. Carrots would be good for her. Also allow free access to rock salt.

TICK FEVER.—Will you describe how tick fever works on cows? I lost a fine Jersey cow, some say from tick fever. I have taken COMFORT for years and would not be without it. G.

Amaze Your Friends— Learn Music Quickly At Home

Through This Wonderful New Method You Can Now Learn To Play Your Favorite Instrument in a Few Short Months. Entire Cost Averages a Few Cents a Lesson

"HOW did you ever do it? Where in the wide world did you ever learn to play so quickly?"

This is the question that thousands of my students have been asked and are being asked daily. With my wonderful easy print and picture lessons for beginners, their progress has been nothing short of astonishing.

Even if you don't know the first thing about music, don't know one note from another—with this new method you can easily and quickly learn to sing or to play your favorite musical instrument. And all in your spare time at home—without a teacher!

To those not acquainted with my system this may sound like a pretty strong statement. Yet I stand ready to back up every word of it.

I have taught music to over 250,000 men, women, and children in all parts of the world. Just think!—over a quarter of a million graduates. Their thousands of grateful letters to me are more convincing than anything I could say of the true merit of my system.

But I don't ask you to judge my methods by what others say or I myself say. You can take any course on trial—singing or any instrument you prefer—without risking a single penny. I want you to judge entirely by your own progress. If for any reason whatever you are not satisfied with the course or what you can learn from it—then it won't cost you a cent, as outlined in our guarantee.

My method removes all the discouraging drawbacks and entangling hindrances of the old way of learning music. There is no need of joining a class, pinning yourself down to certain hours of practice, paying a dollar or more per lesson to a private teacher.

All these obstacles have been eliminated entirely. In their place are delightfully clear, easy and interesting lessons which make every step as simple as A, B, C. You take lessons in the privacy of your own home with no strangers around to embarrass you. Practice whenever it is most convenient for you.

LEARN TO PLAY

Piano	'Cello
Organ	Guitar
Violin	Ukulele
Drums and Traps	Hawaiian Steel Guitar
Banjo
Tenor Banjo	Harp
Mandolin	Cornet
Clarinet	Piccolo
Flute	Trombone
Automatic Finger Control	Saxophone
Harmony & Composition
Voice & Speech Culture

So easy is my method that children only 10 to 12 years old have quickly become accomplished singers or players as well as men and women 50 to 60 years old—including many who have never before taken a lesson.

And my lessons are just as thorough as they are easy—no "trick" music, no "numbers," no makeshifts of any kind. I teach you the only right way—teach you to play or sing by note.

Think of the pleasure and happiness you can add to your own daily life once you know how to play! Think of the popularity you can gain—for players and singers are always in demand at social gatherings of every kind.

Thousands of our students now play in orchestras, at dances, etc. Many have orchestras of their own. Why can't you do the same?

Special Offer

When learning to play or sing is so easy, why continue to confine your enjoyment of music to mere listening? Why not at least let me send you my free book that tells you all about my method? It shows you how easy it is to turn your wish to play or sing into an actual fact. Just now I am making a special short-time offer that cuts the cost per lesson in two—send your name now before this special offer is withdrawn. Instruments supplied when needed, cash or credit. No obligation—simply use the coupon or send your name and address in a letter or on a post-card.

U. S. School of Music, 41 Brunswick Bldg., New York City

Mr. David F. Kemp, U. S. School of Music, 41 Brunswick Bldg., New York City.

Please send me your free book, "Music Lessons in Your Own Home," and particulars of your special offer. I am interested in the following course:

on .....
(Name of Instrument or course)

Name .....
Please Write Plainly

Address .....

City..... State.....

A.—Tick or Texas fever is indicated by high fever, loss of appetite, suppression of cud-chewing, weakness, emaciation and a bloody condition of the udder. There is no successful medicinal treatment. The infection is communicated by cattle ticks and if they can be kept off attacks will not occur. Cattle should therefore be dipped frequently, their legs and bellies also kept smeared with crude (Beaumont) oil and a rotation of pasture followed to starve out the ticks. Cattle may also be minimized against the disease. Apply to the State Agricultural Experiment Station and U. S. Department of Agriculture for bulletins on the subject.

COW POX.—I have a cow that has white knots or blisters on her teats. Some of them are changing to look like blood boils. Is it serious? MRS. M. C.

A.—The symptoms described are those of cow pox, which is contagious and is readily spread from cow to cow by the milker's hands. It can also be communicated to cows by a milker who has recently recovered from smallpox or vaccination against that disease. Isolate affected cows and have them milked by a person who does not handle the other cattle. Twice daily immerse the affected teats for five minutes or more in a hot 1-1000 solution of chinosol or in hot water containing all the boric acid it will dissolve. Then dry gently and swab the sores with a saturated solution of permanganate of potash. If any sore is tardy in healing, apply strong iodin ointment twice daily.

NERVOUS HORSE.—I have a horse that keeps in good appetite and appears to be in good health, but stays thin. He kicks and paws all night. He balks sometimes and will not go. Is there a remedy? N. D.

A.—The horse naturally is nervous and as that is temperamental it is unlikely that he can be much helped by treatment. Allow him a box-stall when in the stable or turn him loose in a shed at night. As pinworms in the rectum may be causing the kicking, give him a pint of raw linseed oil carefully, by way of the mouth, as one dose. When it has acted, inject into the rectum two-thirds of a pailful of lukewarm water containing two ounces of sulphate of iron (copperas). It would also be well to have his teeth put in order by a veterinarian. Feed well on oats, bran, ear corn and good mixed clover and timothy hay.

SORE FEET.—I have a young heifer that was probably foundered last winter and the top of each hoof is very sore. All remedies have failed to help. S. E. S.

A.—Perfectly cleanse the affected parts and cut away any parts of the hoof that may be loose or rotten. Then bathe them thoroughly, once, with hot water containing two ounces of powdered bluestone (sulphate of copper). Afterwards apply two or three times daily a lotion composed of one ounce of acetate of lead, six drams of sulphate of zinc and one pint of soft water. Label the bottle "poison" and shake it well before using.

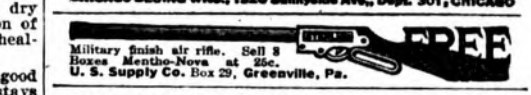
Poultry Farming for Women

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 24.)

and expert operators as most desirable for incubation. The machine once being "set" for this degree of temperature, any excess of heat causes the thermostat to expand, which makes it press on the lower nut of the connecting rod, so instituting a tension that influences the regulator arm at the point of balance, raising the disk over the lamp chimney in sympathetic conjunction with the thermostat. Reverse the condition to a dying lamp and a sudden cold wave, and of course the thermostat contracts, and general release of pressure allows the regulator arm to resume a normal balance, which permits the disk to lie closely down on the chimney. It will be readily conceded that on a correct adjustment of the machine before the start, depends the operator's peace of mind and subsequent success.

After the incubator has been properly located, fill the lamp, light and hang in place, using only a moderate flame at first. Leave all the ventilators open for a few hours, to thoroughly air the machine; then close and adjust the regulator so that an even temperature of 102½ degrees, with the disk one-fourth of an inch above the lamp chimney, is steadily maintained for twelve hours before setting the eggs. Patience and scrupulous exactness at first will save accident and loss later.

Money in Poultry and Squabs Start small, grow big, get winter eggs, keep healthy fowls, raise prize winners. Our stock pays best, low prices on leading varieties. Big Free Book tells how. Crescent Poultry Co., Box 2, Des Moines, Iowa



BABY CHICKS Superlative Quality. 12 cents each and up. 17 leading breeds. Satisfaction Guaranteed.
Catalog Free. Springfield Hatcheries, Box E, Springfield, Ohio

Hundred Hounds. Cheap. C. O. D. Trial. Photos. Beck's Kennels, Herrick, Ill's.

WRIST WATCH AND RING REALLY GIVEN

This up-to-date, serviceable, stem wind & set, popular size, guaranteed fine timekeeper, & fine ring actually given for selling only 24 pks Bluette our famous wash bluing at 15c or 24 & 12 pks Sachet Perfume at 10c. Order Choice. Both in big demand and easy to sell.
CHICAGO BLUING WKS., 1920 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 301, CHICAGO

Military finish air rifle. Sell 8 Boxes Mentho-Nova at 25c.
U. S. Supply Co. Box 29, Greenville, Pa.

When the cold trays and eggs are first put in, the temperature will run down, but do not turn up the lamp or alter the regulators. As the eggs gradually become warm, the heat will creep up again. After the first day, the trays must be shaken out every night and morning, and then turned and allowed to cool to ninety degrees. The time allowed for the process must be regulated by the temperature of the room; if very cold, five minutes will be enough; if moderate, twenty or thirty will be needed. They must not be allowed to chill, but the more airing they get under that point the stronger the chickens when hatched. The eggs should be tested on the seventh and fifteenth days. This is best done by a block tin device sold by all incubator companies.

The guide which is most reliable in determining the progress of the hatch is the development of the air cell. This is a little space in the large end of the egg which is visible at testing time, and should continue to grow larger and larger until about the nineteenth day, when it occupies about one-fifth of the egg. Unless this air cell is developed correctly by the nineteenth day, the chick cannot turn itself in the cell, and hence sticks fast and dies. The development of this air cell is the vital point to be considered in obtaining a first-class hatch. If it develops slowly, which is usually the case, give the machine and eggs all the air you can. This can be done by opening the slides in the ventilators full width and cooling the eggs as long as possible each day. The cooling is best accomplished by placing the trays of eggs on top of the machine (closing the doors meanwhile) and leaving them there until the thermometer drops to about eighty degrees.

After the morning of the twentieth day do not open the incubator until the hatch is over, or until late on the twenty-second day, and do not get nervous if the temperature runs to 104 or even to 105; it is caused by the animal heat of the chicks, and will do them no harm. Turning down the lamp slightly will of course reduce the heat, but be very careful not to let it run below 103 during the last twenty-four hours. Low temperature prolongs the hatch, weakens the chickens, and makes them susceptible to all sorts of ailments.

As the amount of moisture in the egg chamber is as important as the heat, I think it is advisable for every beginner to buy and use a hygrometer. They cost only about $1.50, register the moisture just as plainly as a thermometer does heat, and are just as easy to read.

During the first week, the hygrometer should register 75 degrees; the thermometer, 102½.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31.)

Ladies Wrist Watch

With Silk Ribbon Bracelet

For A Club Of Only Ten

WE have long searched the market for a suitable wrist watch for our girl readers and at last we have found it.

The above illustration really fails to do the watch justice. We know you will instantly fall in love with it. It is the popular octagon shape, only 5-16 of an inch thick and one inch in diameter. It has a high-grade jeweled Swiss movement and will keep accurate time. The dial is pure white with Arabic numerals. The bracelet is made of the finest black silk ribbon with a genuine rolled-gold catch and slide.

If you want a dainty, stylish, up-to-date wrist watch that you will be proud to show your friends, here is your opportunity to secure one absolutely free. You can easily secure the small club mentioned below and as soon as you have done so this beautiful wrist watch is yours without one cent of cost.

Given To You! For a club of only ten one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this fine wrist watch with ribbon bracelet exactly as described above, absolutely free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 75110.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

5 Rose Bushes

THIS year we are giving our readers five splendid varieties of Hardy Ever-blooming Roses. They are the "Alexander Hill Gray," a deep golden yellow, "Columbia," a beautiful deep pink, "Lady Gray," a light pink rambler, "Eugene E. Marlitt," a magnificent bright red giant, and "Bessie Brown," a white and pink beauty. Each bush is one year old and in a growing condition when delivered to you.

No matter where you live, our grower will send the bushes at the proper time to plant in your locality. You will receive them packed in damp moss, by prepaid parcel post, and we guarantee that they will reach you in perfect condition. If, for any reason, they do not, or if any of the bushes fail to grow or otherwise prove unsatisfactory, we will replace them for you free of all cost. We will give you these five beautiful rose bushes upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, we will send you the above described five rose bushes free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8661.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

54 Inch Rope Of Pearls

Reward No. 9882

For A Club Of Two!

THE dream of every woman and girl is to possess her own necklace of gleaming, iridescent pearls. There's a wonderful fascination about them—a beauty that appeals to every feminine heart.

Now your dream can come true—for we are giving away this handsome, full opera length rope of Parisian pearls. It is 54 inches long, all the pearls are of uniform size—¼ inch in diameter—of perfect finish and luster, far handsomer than the ordinary imitation pearl necklace sold at a high price. It can easily be wound twice around the neck, making the double rope as shown in our illustration.

By rare good luck we secured first choice of these necklaces from a large importer and at a price that enables us to give them for an unusually small club. Please read the following offer and learn how you can get a beautiful, 54-inch rope of pearls free of all cost.

Given To You! For only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this handsome, opera length Pearl Necklace free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9882.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

What A Beautiful Life-Like Doll For Some Little Girl In Your Home!

Won't She Fairly Shout With Joy When She Finds This Big, Handsome, Sleeping Dolly Is All Her Own!

Nearly One Foot And A Half Tall

Look At Her Beautiful Dress And Real Stockings And Slippers

YES, we will send this big lifelike Doll to any little girl whose Papa, Mama, brother or sister will send in a club of only six one-year subscriptions to COMFORT. Not since before the war have we been able to offer such an expensive Doll. No city store will show a larger or handsomer Doll this season at anywhere near the price we paid for this one. We bought five thousand of them in one lot direct from the factory—that is how we secured them so cheaply. And just think—a club of only six subscriptions to COMFORT brings this beautiful Doll right to your door—yours to have and to own without one cent of expense. What a delightful surprise for some little tot in your home!

She Can Open And Close Her Eyes. She Has Imitation Teeth, Long Golden Hair And Wears A Pretty Dress With Real Stockings And Slippers.

NOW let us tell you more about this Doll. she stands nearly a foot and a half tall. The body, arms and legs are made by a new improved process which renders them practically indestructible. The head is unbreakable and head, arms and legs are movable. And if you could only see her hair. It is a light golden color, thick, long and luxuriant, falling far below her waist. Her eyes are as blue as the sky and she can open and shut them and go to sleep like a real baby whenever you want her to. Her rosebud lips are parted in a winsome smile showing her pretty white teeth in a truly lifelike manner.

She is fully dressed from head to feet in the latest style with cute short sleeves, handsome figured lace trimmed waist and short pleated skirt and she wears real stockings and slippers with silveroid buckles. You can undress and dress this Doll as often as you please and you can take off her stockings and slippers and put them on again just as you do your own.

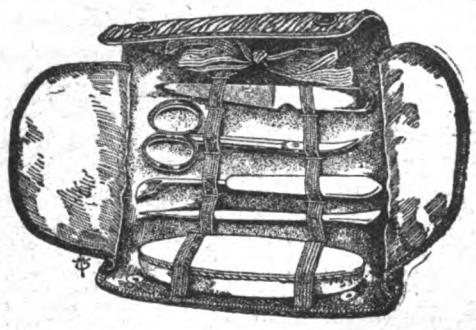
Fathers and Mothers—just look at this beautiful Doll as she stands smiling and waiting for someone to pick her up, hug her and kiss her and take her out to play. Don't you think your little girl would just love to have her for her very own? Of course she would—and you should take advantage of this offer at once. Remember we have but five thousand of these Dolls on hand and when they are gone this offer will be withdrawn.

FOR A CLUB OF ONLY SIX!

YOU can surely find six neighbors and friends who will be glad to subscribe to COMFORT at the present bargain rate of 50 cents a year. Send us their names and addresses and the money collected ($3.00 in all) and we will send you this big, beautiful Sleeping Doll, fully dressed and otherwise exactly as described above, packed in a strong box so that it cannot possibly get broken, free by parcel post prepaid. There will be no expense to you whatever. Your Mail Carrier will deliver the Doll right to your door without charge. This Doll is Reward No. 7806 and please mention this number when ordering.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

2-Piece Toilet Set



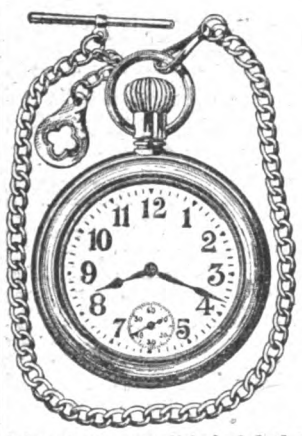
THIS is a good grade Toilet Set, consisting of comb and brush. The comb is seven inches long, with coarse and fine teeth, and comes in the new popular "Malachite" green finish. The brush is nine inches long, two and a half inches wide, with firm white bristles, and is finished in the same beautiful "Malachite" green, with a silverine shield on the back. We have given away thousands of these sets and it never fails to please.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Comb and Brush Set free and prepaid. Reward No. 9982.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

French Ivory Manicure Set

In A Roll-Up Leather Case



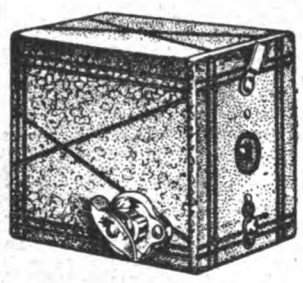
Given For A Club Of Four!

A PRACTICAL and beautiful Set, containing everything necessary for the proper care of the nails. It consists of a 5-inch flexible polished steel nail file, a pair of 3½-inch polished steel curved nail scissors, a 4-inch cuticle knife with French Ivory handle, a 4-inch French Ivory nail stick, and a 4½-inch nail polisher or buffer with French Ivory Top. All these articles are neatly contained in a moire-lined, genuine leather case, measuring 5½ inches wide and 6 inches from end to end when opened. The case rolls up as shown in illustration, and fastens with two snap clasps. In this form it resembles a miniature pocketbook, and is just as convenient to carry, as it measures only 5½x2 inches and only 1 inch in thickness.

Although we offer this Manicure Set for an unusually small club, please understand that each and every piece is strictly high grade and regulation size. We know that every woman and girl who accepts this offer and earns one of these splendid Sets will be more than delighted with it. It is free on the terms of the following offer.

Given To You! For four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this splendid French Ivory Manicure Set in a roll-up leather case free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8124.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.



Gent's Watch and Chain

Reward No. 7696

For A Club Of Six!

A WATCH that any man or boy may feel proud to carry, and an excellent timekeeper. It has a handsome polished nickel case; the movement is American made, stem wind and stem set, the dial is pure white with large plain easily read figures. We have already given away thousands of these watches and they never fail to please and satisfy. Now is the time for you to secure one of these guaranteed watches before the price of them goes up still further as it is pretty sure to do in the near future. We will send you this watch exactly as described, together with a chain, if you will accept the following Club Offer. For a club of only six one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this guaranteed watch, also a handsome chain free by Parcel Post, prepaid. Reward No. 7696. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Premo Camera

Reward No. 7944

Films And Instruction Book Free

THIS is not a toy but a genuine "Premo" camera, made by the Eastman Kodak Co., therefore you can depend upon it to produce the most pleasing and satisfactory results. It takes a picture 1¼ by 1¾ inches, is fitted with the best quality Meniscus lens and an automatic shutter adapted for snapshots and time exposures. The pictures may be taken either the long way or the short way of the camera. It uses the regulation roll film cartridge containing six exposures, and this may be put in the camera and taken out again in broad daylight, so that you don't have to go into a dark room every time you want to load the camera. Anybody can make good pictures with this camera. Being small and compact, it is just the thing to carry with you to "snap" pictures of your friends, sports, etc., with. And remember, we send you not only the camera itself but also include One Six Exposure Roll Film Cartridge and Instruction Book, all packed together in a strong box and sent to you Free by Parcel Post, prepaid, on the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For a club of four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you by parcel post, prepaid, this Premo Camera with one Roll Film Cartridge containing six exposures and complete Instruction Book. Reward No. 7944.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Sweet Grass Basket

For Your Sewing And Fancy Work

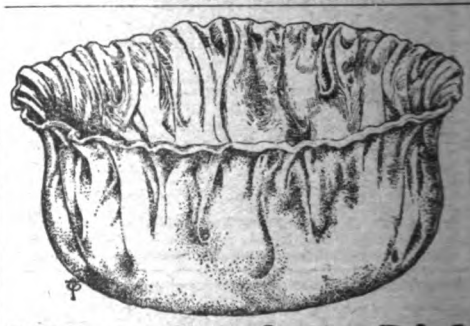
WHERE is the woman who does not "just love" these beautiful Sewing Baskets made of sweet grass? Their delightful fragrance which is practically everlasting is like that of flowers; they are handsome in appearance and very strong and serviceable, being hand-woven by the St. Regis Indians of Canada, who produce the finest hand-made baskets in the world.

Of ample size—eight inches in diameter and three inches deep—and with its close-fitting top, this sweet-grass Basket is just what you need in which to take along your sewing or fancy work when calling or visiting. And at home it holds your work, along with scissors, buttons, thread and other necessities, so that you always know just where to look for them. And the Basket itself is such a beautiful ornament for any room.

The Indians sell these Baskets for $2.00 and $3.00 apiece at summer resorts, but by buying in large quantities they let us have them at a special low price. Therefore, we are able to offer the Basket herewith illustrated and described for a very small club of subscriptions as you will note by reading the following bargain offer.

Given To You! For only four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this fragrant, sweet-grass Sewing Basket free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 8084.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

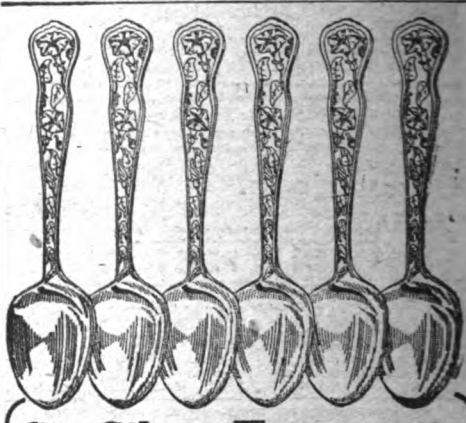


Little Giant Typewriter

A REAL machine that writes very distinctly. Has every letter in the alphabet, all the numerals from 1 to 10 and punctuation marks. Uses any size letter paper up to 5 inches wide. For correspondence, making out invoices, statements, addressing envelopes, etc., this machine will do the work well. It is very easy to operate, in fact, a child can write on it after a little practice.

Given To You! For three one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Typewriter free and prepaid. Reward No. 8853.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.



Silver Bonbon Dish

THIS beautiful dish can be used for a variety of purposes—for candy, nuts, salted peanuts, popcorn, etc. It is much larger than it appears in the above illustration, measuring over five inches in width and two inches deep. It is heavily silver plated outside and gold lined. Needless to say, it makes a handsome ornament for the sideboard and will last a lifetime.

We will send you this handsome Silver Bonbon Dish free upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this Silver Plated, Gold Lined Bonbon Dish free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9942.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Six Silver Teaspoons

The Beautiful "Morning Glory" Design

BY buying in large quantities we are enabled to offer our readers this handsome set of six teaspoons for the ridiculously small club mentioned below. They are six inches long, silver plated on a white metal base, so there is no brass to show through, and they will never have that dingy or tarnished appearance even after years of constant use. The design is the beautiful "Morning Glory" deeply embossed on the handles which are finished in soft, elegant French grey. The bowls of the spoons are perfectly smooth and bright polished.

The rich design and splendid wearing qualities of these teaspoons combine to make this the most attractive premium offer in years. Our illustration does not do them justice. They must be seen to be appreciated. We know they will exceed your highest expectations.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you six of these fine Silver Plated Teaspoons free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 9682.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Deformities of the Back

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

An old lady, 72 years of age, who suffered for many years and was absolutely helpless, found relief. A man who was helpless, unable to rise from his chair, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house after wearing a Philo Burt Appliance three weeks. We have successfully treated more than 45,000 cases the past 19 years.

30 Days' Trial Free

We will prove its value in your own case. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer. The photographs show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjusted the Philo Burt Appliance is — how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.

Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. Price within reach of all.

Send For Our Free Book.

If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definite information at once.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
334-13 Odd Fellows Temple
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

RITA or, the OUTCAST SISTER

By LIBBIE SPRAGUE PHILLIPS

SPECIAL SALE PRICE with a six (6) months' subscription to THE ILLUSTRATED COMPANION ONLY 25 CENTS.

This Book contains one of this noted author's best novels.

Pressed close against the window pane was a wan, white face.

The pathos of this story sweeps all before it. It touches the heart of humanity everywhere. Even the man with a heart of stone learns from this story that deep down under the cold, hard strata of stone, he has in his heart a deep well of human sympathy for the erring one; that he has also a heart capable of love and admiration for the good and noble character of Luella, the gentle, loving, self-sacrificing sister. Righteous indignation is aroused toward Silas Lockwood, her relentless and unnatural father. The heart's emotions like a great ocean billow, rolls on from the beginning to end of the book; when you lay it down and say blessed is God who rules over all for the good of all. Thousands will want to read this book and pass it on to their friends. Libbie Sprague Phillips writes exclusively for THE ILLUSTRATED COMPANION; has done so for 10 years. One minister has furnished it with sermons for 13 years; other writers have contributed regularly for years. THE ILLUSTRATED COMPANION is 36 years old. The years of continued service of its writers show that our magazine is one of fixed and standard worth. We know you will enjoy reading it. THIS OFFER of magazine 6 months and book, for 25 cents is made to get new trial subscribers. Book without paper, 10c. Address

F. B. WARNER CO., Dept. C. T., 96 Chambers St., New York

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

THROW YOUR VOICE

Into a trunk, under the bed or anywhere. Lots of Fun fooling the Teacher, Policeman or Friends.

THE VENTRILO,

a little instrument, fits in the mouth out of sight, used with above for Bird Calls, etc. Anyone can use it. NEVER FAILS. Also a 32 PAGE BOOK which gives full instructions on Ventriloquism. Formula for Secret Writing [Invisible Ink], 12 Money Making Secrets and 10 BIG TRICKS ON MAGIC all for 10¢

ROY. NOV. CO., Dept. 331, So. Norwalk, Conn.
LARGEST and OLDEST Mail Order House in Connecticut.

REMNANTS SILK, VELVET, GINGHAM, ETC.

WONDERFUL BARGAIN IN 4-POUND BUNDLES

of beautiful Silk Remnants for fancy work, quilts, portieres, pillows, etc. Send 10 cents for a big package of lovely silk, including free quilt designs and catalog describing our 4-pound silk, velvet, gingham, and other remnant bargain bundles; also instructions how to earn money at home by sewing.

AGENTS WANTED To sell our Remnant Bargain bundles

UNION S. WORKS, 207 Factory St., BOONVILLE, N. Y.

Blue Bird WATER SET

Six fine shell glasses and full-sized pitcher, handsomely decorated. All given free for selling only 40 packs vegetable seeds at 10c per large pack. Sell easily. Earn Big Money on Premiums. Send no money. We trust you with seeds until sold.

American Seed Company, Box F-32, Lancaster, Pa.

Not a toy but a genuine Violin, perfect tone, handsome appearance. Boy Included. Sell 40 packets Garden Spot Seeds at 10c a packet and violin is yours. Write for seeds today. Lancaster Co. Seed Co., Sta. 161, PARADISE, PA.

Missing Relatives and Friends

For the convenience of its subscribers, COMFORT reopens the "Missing Relatives' and Friends" column.

To the readers of COMFORT is extended the privilege of inserting three-line notices in this column if they will secure only one new yearly subscriber to COMFORT at 50c. If you wish to find a missing relative or friend you can insert a three-line notice containing not over 22 words in this column by securing only one new subscription at 50c. If a longer notice is required send one 50c subscription for each additional seven words.

About 18 years ago our aged Uncle Kosek left Chicago. Can anyone tell me where he lives? Heard he moved to Minnesota. Mrs. J. P. Slater, Jim Falls, Wisc.

Would someone knowing the whereabouts of J. A. Shaffer, formerly of Hilgard, Oregon, please notify Wm. T. Cluster, Fidelity, Box 7, Ill.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Cooper D. Heath, age 39, tall, dark complexion, please write Mrs. Ira Day, Harmany, N. Car.

Can anyone give me the address of Perry Pults, Emma Pults or Maude Sawyer, who lived in Springfield, Mo., about 20 years ago? Mrs. H. B. Myers, Cherokee, Box 25, Kansas.

Anyone knowing the address of Mr. Harry N. Pimm, last heard from in New York, please communicate with Miss D. L. B., Kinston, 808 Chestnut St., N. Car.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Joseph Blazer or wife, last heard of in Nebraska, please write Mrs. Jim Smith, Wallowa, Box 322, Oregon.

Anyone knowing the address of Simon Canty, last heard from in Potter County, Pa., please notify his sister, Mrs. Katie Jackson, Lincolnville, R. R. 2, Box 58, Maine.

Wanted: Information of Mrs. Grace Hinman (now probably Roumaine); was heard from in 1913. Write Harry Hinman, Indianapolis, 426 Sander St., Ind.

Mrs. H. Frank Lewis, Athens, Ala., would appreciate information of her brother, Audie Vinson, last heard from at Ogden, Utah, last January.

Comfort's Information Bureau

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT subscribers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions addressed to this Bureau. They will thus save time, labor and postage.

No attention will be given any inquiry which lacks the sender's full name and address but we will print only initials if so requested.

C. L., Vermont.—Living as you do on a well-traveled highway, it should be quite possible for you to build up a profitable trade in home-canned fruits and vegetables attractively put up by you in glass. For vegetables, we suggest as a beginning: tomatoes, string beans of the yellow or wax variety, and pumpkin. For fruits: cherries, strawberries, peaches and pears. For jellies: currants, grape and quince. You should have a sign prepared in black and white, and sufficiently large and plainly lettered so that it may be easily read by motorists. This might read: "For Sale. Delicious Home Raised and Home Preserved Farm Products. A Trial Purchase Will Make You Stop Again." Below this sign and in connection with it should be a shelf, upon which you could exhibit several sample cans of your most shining, attractive and colorful products. If you wish, you could go to the extra small expense and trouble of printed labels bearing your name and the name of your farm. Another nearby sign might also list, according to season: "Special This Month: Strawberries and Wax Beans." As to prices, a most important feature, estimate carefully and liberally the cost of each product, cost of can, fuel, labor, etc. Add to this such a profit as you think will properly compensate you and make your home business worth-while. Touring city people will pay well and willingly if your products are flavorful and attractively put up. You will be helped in estimating how much you might charge by asking the prices obtained for high-grade glass-containered canned goods at the best of the stores in your nearby town of St. Albans. You might eventually find it profitable to advertise your home-canned products in St. Albans newspapers—giving the location of your farm and inviting inquiries and calls from motor parties.

P. P., Markham, Minn.—Although we have several times printed in this column directions for the resilvering of mirrors, we regard the operation as a difficult one and one which can hardly be successfully done as a home job. We advise you to purchase a new mirror, or give your present one into the hands of some furniture shop and let them have the work done for you. (2) Perhaps more than any other stains, those made by blood are more successfully removed if taken in hand soon after the stain occurs. The fact that your stain is on so delicate a fabric as chiffon will make its removal more difficult. Try first the soaking of the chiffon in a weak solution of soda, followed by a subsequent rinsing in a weak solution of alum. If your fabric is a colored one, you must be careful of the strength of your soda solution. Another good method would be to mix common starch to the consistency of ordinary laundry use. Spread this mixture quite wet over the stained places and wash off in warm water after the starch has dried on.

GAIL, Texas.—Julia Ward Howe, the author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," was born in 1819 and died during 1910. (2) The best authorities unite in declaring the author of "Annie Laurie" to be past finding out. The celebrated ballad has sometimes been said to have been written by a Mr. Douglas who unsuccessfully paid court to the daughter of Sir Robert Laurie—which shows that the sweetest singers are not always lucky lovers!

D. P., Belleville, W. Va.—The U. S. Navy maintains aviation schools. Write to the Bureau of Navigation, Washington, D. C., and inquire concerning joining this branch of the service. You would find private aviation schools expensive.

M. H., Catawba, Va.—Mirrors are backed not with paint but with quicksilver—the application of which is a difficult and not an amateur job. See reply to P. P., Markham, Minn., in this issue.

J. M., Dawson, Ala.—If we understand your inquiry correctly, we assure you that you can readily redeem any U. S. Government bonds or certificates which you may own. Ask your postmaster or your nearest bank concerning this, and do not sell your holdings without proper and responsible advice.

A. G. K., West Virginia.—A U. S. silver half dollar of the date of 1853 is worth from $150 to $250 should the coin be one without arrow heads at the side of date and without rays around eagle. If the coin has both arrow heads and rays, it is worth no more than its face value.

W. W., Lavonia, Ga.—The moon is considered by astronomers to be a "dead world." It is not inhabited and is not believed to have ever been inhabited. (2) Our column will not permit us to give space to tell you how you should address letters to the heads of "every nation on earth." This would be a considerable matter. Briefly stated, the head of a republic might be addressed: "His Excellency, the President of the French Republic," or a monarch: "His Majesty, the King of Italy." Your postmaster can give you information concerning the rates of postage to foreign countries.

J. B. W., North Carolina.—The engaging of policemen is a matter entirely within the control of the different municipalities who establish various requirements as to age, height, weight, mental equipment, etc. You would have to write to the police department heads of the various large cities in order to find out specific requirements and form of procedure in the selection of candidates.

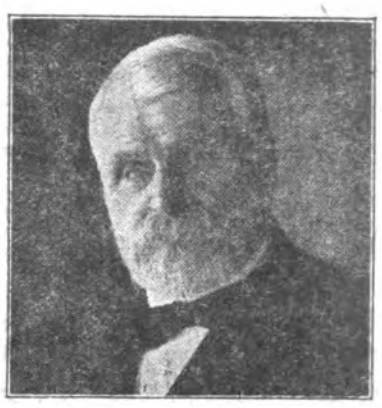
L. R. H., Oklahoma.—To tan a calf skin with the hair on, the skin should be stretched flesh side up and carefully scraped with a dull knife to remove all fleshy matter. Finish by washing well with soap and warm water. Now turn the skin, and scrub the hair well with soft soap and warm water, using care to rinse well. Take one-half pound each of common soap and ground alum and dissolve with an ounce of borax in a gallon or less of water. Add sufficient rye meal to make a stiff paste and spread this paste over the flesh side of the hide. Fold up lengthwise with the flesh side in, and let remain in an airy, shaded place for ten days or longer. Then shake out, remove all paste from the surface, wash with warm water and dry. A second application may be necessary if the skin does not seem in a condition where all blood and flesh matter has been removed and absorbed. You will have to work the finished dried skin until it is soft, by rubbing it over a rounded beam, by working it over with a dulled knife on the flesh side, and by a thorough rubbing and pummeling with your hands. The secret of the Indians' very successful tanning was generally owing to their careful and persistent hand work on the skins they cured.

C. F., Lawrenceburg, Tenn.—There is no vacant public land in the state of Tennessee. The following is a list of the states which offer the best opportunities for homesteading. In each case the name of the town or city where the principal U. S. Land Office is located follows the name of the state: Arizona, Phoenix; California, San Francisco; Colorado, Denver; Idaho, Boise; Montana, Helena; Nevada, Carson City; New Mexico, Santa Fe; Oregon, Portland; Utah, Salt Lake City; Washington, Seattle; Wyoming, Cheyenne. In writing to any of these, address Register of U. S. Land Office in the particular city and state which may interest you.

C. B., Ellsworth, Kans.—We are not aware of any large premium being offered for U. S. silver dollars of the dates of 1894 or 1904. We think in some way you have confused your information with the rather astounding premium which is commanded by U. S. silver dimes of 1894. Dimes of this date which have an "S" under the wreath below the words "One Dime," are extremely rare. They are worth from $250 to $500 each, according to condition. Without the "S" mint mark the dimes are worth but their face value.

Try It Three Times Free!

Dr Caldwell will send you a trial bottle of his famous Syrup Pepsin free of charge, enough to relieve three stubborn attacks of constipation.



SEND HIM YOUR ADDRESS TODAY FOR YOUR FREE TRIAL BOTTLE

PEOPLE who are occasionally or habitually constipated will be glad to know of a remedy that brings quick relief; and to dispel all question and doubt I will send a small bottle, enough to relieve three attacks of constipation, free of charge. I ask no money or promise of money, just your name and address in the most convenient way for you.

What I will send you is a compound of Egyptian Senna and other simple laxative herbs with pepsin, known to druggists as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I have been making it for 29 years, and it is today the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. You can buy it in any drug store. A dose would cost you less than a cent, and a bottle will last even a large family several months.

My object in sending free trial bottles is to prove to skeptics and doubters, at my own expense, that my Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a different laxative from any other you may ever have tried. I want to prove that it will relieve any case of constipation, no matter how old, chronic or stubborn; that it will help to regulate your system so that medicines can in time be altogether dispensed with; that it is smoother and pleasanter than others; that it does not pain or gripe.

Thousands of people after using Syrup Pepsin promptly discarded strong physics, cathartics and purgatives; pills, salt waters, calomel, coal tar drugs in candy form and such things. They wrench the system and cause a reaction worse than before. My Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin operates gently and smoothly, and is safe. That is why over 8,000,000 bottles were bought in drug stores last year, several million by mothers who gave them to constipated infants and children. Elderly people, too, prefer mild Syrup Pepsin, for they have not the strength to stand powerful drugs. This is especially gratifying to me, as I know the troubles of the old, being myself in the 83d year of my age.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL
who will send three trials of his Syrup Pepsin free of all cost

There is someone in every family who should send for the trial bottle that I offer free, and parents should send in behalf of the children. Send for it if there is constipation only now and then, and keep the free bottle until it is needed; send for it if there is chronic constipation, and use it at once; send for it if someone is subject to headaches, biliousness, feverishness, loss of appetite, dyspepsia, restlessness, sleeplessness, indigestion, sniffling and colds, for even common colds are complicated with constipation.

CLIP AND MAIL

Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 553 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois.
Send me a trial bottle of your Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin free of all cost. I or some one in the family will give it a trial the next time there is constipation.

Your name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

If you prefer, simply send your name and address on a postcard or in a letter. I will understand.

Poultry Farming for Women

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29.)

Second week: hygrometer, 70 degrees; thermometer, 102½ to 103.

During the third week we have a changed condition of affairs. The small systems of blood vessels of the first week have greatly increased, so that by the fourteenth day the white of the egg is full of veins in which the blood is rapidly circulating and the chick is growing fast. Bear in mind that the first ten days are devoted to development, and in that short time the chick is fully formed in all its parts. During this period the quantity of blood circulation is comparatively small.

Then comes the ten days of growth, or increase in size of the body and its parts, when great quantities of blood are rushing through the numerous blood vessels, carrying the building material. It is during this latter period that the water (after being used in the blood circulation) should be allowed to escape freely from the egg, with consequent rapid enlargement of the air cell. Therefore, during the last week of incubation, I would remove the water pans or wet sand from the egg chamber, and let the humidity decrease even to 50 degrees, or possibly to 40 in some cases. Simply removing the extra supply of water usually answers the purpose.

The moisture supply must be renewed again on the nineteenth day for another distinct purpose. If the air surrounding the hatching eggs is dry, the chicks are likely to have a hard time breaking through the tough inner lining of the eggs. When this parchment-like lining is dry, it is exceedingly difficult to tear it, and its strong bands may hold a vigorous chick a prisoner even after it has broken the outer shell clear around.

Keeping the air of the egg chamber moist renders the inner linings of the egg-shell easy for the chick to burst through.

The greatest danger from overheating comes during the first few days of incubating. It is well to hold the temperature at the level of the tops of the eggs under 103 F. for the first week. I like to keep it at 102.

During the third week the animal heat exerts some influence, and 103 will be about right at the upper part of the egg.

While the chickens are hatching from the eggs, 104 may be registered at the level of the tops of the eggs. In some parts of our country, where incubators are operated at altitudes of several thousand feet, the temperature may run a degree higher than I have indicated. At these altitudes, where the air is usually very dry, the matter of extra moisture supply becomes a very important item in successful incubation.

It is quite an exertion for the chicks to pick their way out of the shell, consequently they should remain in the incubator at least thirty-six hours and be given time to rest and recover strength. If bacillary white diarrhea, which is transmitted from the chick to the mother hen, be present in any of the chicks, it will be voided in the droppings from the very first. To prevent the spread of this disease from chick to chick by the picking up of infected droppings, the incubator should be darkened as soon as the first chick is out, and kept darkened until the chicks are removed to the brooder. There is very little danger of disease spreading by this means after the chicks are moved to the brooder and have a chance to take food into the digestive system.

Correspondence

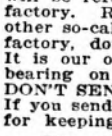
Subscribers are entitled to advice of our Poultry Editor, free, through the columns of this department. Address Poultry Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. BE SURE to give your full name and address, otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

W. H. H.—The Reliable Poultry Journal, Quincy, Illinois; The American Poultry Journal, Chicago; Successful Poultry, Syracuse, N. Y.; Farm and Poultry, Boston, and at least half a dozen others.

Repeat the Egg

The New Discovery to Make Your Hens Earn More Money

A combination of high class drugs in powdered form to be mixed with the feed, measured with an ALUMINUM spoon which we send you FREE.



$1.00 PACKAGE FREE

It stimulates the whole system and puts your hens in condition to lay double the number of eggs when they are the highest. Drop us a card today and say: "Send me FREE a $1.00 box REPEAT THE EGG."

DON'T SEND ANY MONEY

We will send you a $1.00 box and will include FREE a $1.00 box (2 in all). Pay the postman $1.00 when the two $1.00 boxes arrive. Money will be refunded at end of 30 days if not satisfactory. REMEMBER THIS—if you have used other so-called egg tonics and they were unsatisfactory, don't fail to try REPEAT THE EGG. It is our own discovery—a powder—and has no bearing on any other kind. Write today but DON'T SEND ANY MONEY. AGENTS WANTED. If you send $1.00 in advance we will send a card for keeping record of the eggs you get daily.

The W. A. KITTREDGE CO.
Poultry Dept. C, Tunkhannock, Penna.

Get My Reduced Prices on OLD TRUSTY

Find out how much I can save you on Old Trusty Incubators and Brooders. Nearly a million owners.

Quick shipment from factory at Clay Center, Neb., or warehouse at St. Joseph, Mo. Mail a postal or letter today.

H. H. JOHNSON, "Incubator Man" Clay Center, Neb.

FREE WRIST WATCH & RING

Guaranteed Timekeeper

We positively give this Genuine Stylish Wrist Watch & Handsome Ring for selling only 25 & 12 beautiful Art and Religious pictures at 10c. Order today. You can't fail.

It's easy our way

GAIR MFG. CO. 1928 Sunnyside Dept. 201 CHICAGO

Money Making Poultry

Our specialty. Leading varieties pure bred chickens, turkeys, ducks and geese. Prize winners. Best stock and eggs. Lowest prices; oldest farm; 37th year. Fine catalog FREE. H. M. JONES CO., Box 22, Des Moines, Iowa.

I. V. S.—Refer to the poultry advertisements in last month's COMFORT and you will find an answer to your question about oat sprouters.

M. B.—This is a case which is almost impossible to diagnose without personal examination. The swelling and lumps may be the result of roup. But from your description of the bird's general condition of health, I am inclined to think that they are tumors or some malignant growth. If you think you have any skill in surgery, it might be advisable to lance and treat them but, frankly, I would rather kill and burn the carcasses than to risk torturing the bird and perhaps spreading the infection.

F. L. D.—I cannot give the address of breeders in this column. It would be quite safe to use the cockerel this year, and dispose of him at the end of the breeding season.

A. E. B.—The chickens must have been hatched from eggs laid by hens that had suffered from roup at some previous time. Chickens hatched from such eggs very frequently develop a sort of roup, hardly noticeable except for a slight discharge and the offensive breath which you describe. I advise you to get rid of them before they develop any more active symptoms, and under no circumstances should you be tempted to use any of their eggs for incubation.

Valentines

Big Package For One Subscription!

All the Newest Valentine Post Cards, Cut-Outs, Folders, Novelties and Some Up-to-Date Valentines With Envelopes in Which To Enclose Them.

WE realize that it is hard for our readers to secure the latest up-to-date Valentine novelties so we have had this special assortment made up for us at a great bargain. Just see what it contains:

1 Large Lace Two Leaf Valentine Folder with Envelope, 1 large Embossed and Colored Valentine Folder with Envelope, 1 large Magic Turnover Valentine with Envelope, 1 small Magic Turnover Valentine, 1 small Embossed Valentine Folder, 2 Heart Valentine Folders, 3 Assorted Valentine Novelty Cut-Outs, 1 Juvenile Valentine Heart, 1 Embossed Valentine Enclosure Card, 1 Handsomely Colored Valentine Bookmark, 5 Colored and Embossed Valentine Post Cards.

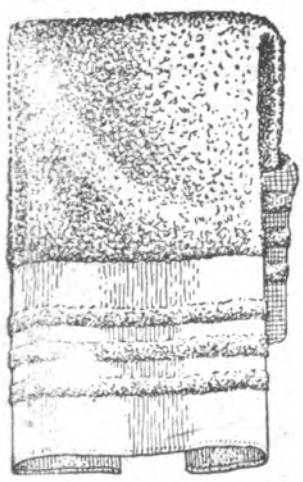
Our illustration is, of course, greatly reduced in size. The lace Valentine is 5 inches long and 4 inches wide, of fine lace work with a heart and gold decorated base and a charming verse on the inside. Then there is a dainty embossed Valentine 7 inches long and 5 inches wide. Another is a pretty heart-shaped Folder, 7x5 inches, on the background of which is shown the face over Valentine is a genuine novelty and shows a cute juvenile scene. We also include in the collection two pretty embossed Valentine Folders with verse inside, three choice assorted Valentine Novelty Cut-Outs, one Colored and illustrated Valentine Heart, one Valentine Bookmark one small Magic Turnover Valentine and five handsome Valentine Post Cards embossed in gold and many bright colors, each with some suitable sentiment expressed by an appropriate verse.

We will send you this choice Valentine collection free and postpaid if you will accept our special offer printed below. Be sure to send your order early so as to get it in time for St. Valentine's Day.

Our Free Offer. For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you this big package of handsome Valentine Novelties free by mail, postpaid. Premium No. 7291.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Shaggy Teddy Bear



EVERY little boy and girl wants a Teddy Bear and here is an opportunity for every father or mother who reads COMFORT to get one without expense. "Teddy" is a plump, shaggy fellow, 10 inches tall, made of brown plush, carefully stitched and finished, and his head and legs are jointed in such a manner that you can place him in almost any position. He will stand up, sit down, stand on his head, walk on all fours, in fact he gets himself into all kinds of positions, so comical and lifelike that it makes the children scream with delight just to look at him. Teddy is so well made that he cannot easily become broken, and with ordinary care should last for years. We will send you Teddy free if you will accept the following special offer:

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Teddy Bear free and prepaid. Reward No. 9992.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Two Turkish Towels

Good Size Soft And Fleecy

AFTER bathing there is nothing quite as fine as a good rub down with a Turkish towel, in fact it is the best towel for all purposes, whether for the bathroom, guestroom or everyday family use. They absorb the water much more readily than other towels and the soft fleece-like surface imparts to the body a delightful feeling of warmth and well-being. They are also fine for baby's toilet as they will not hurt the tender skin. The towels offered here are 15 inches wide and 32 inches long which is a good convenient size for all-round family use, and are of good weight, well made and finished. We will make you a present of two of these towels upon the terms of the following offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you one pair (2) of these fine Turkish Towels free by parcel post, prepaid. Premium No. 9912.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Plant This Grand Fruit Orchard

Delaware Grape

Bartlett Pear

Concord Grape

Wealthy Apple

Rex Raspberry

Niagara Grape

For A Club Of Two

We Will Send You Seventeen Apple And Pear Trees, Berry Bushes and Grape Vines!

BY special arrangement with the growers in Michigan we can again, offer our readers this grand Fruit and Orchard Collection of 17 Choice Fruit Tree Grafts, Berry Bushes and Grape Vines. If planted at standard distances apart they will nicely fill an eighth of an acre. Or they can be planted closer if desired, or they can be made to form a border around your yard or lot. Wherever grown, however they will in due time yield loads of the finest Apples, Pears, Grapes, Raspberries and Dewberries every year as long as you live. We believe it would be difficult to secure as much actual value from any other assortment of the same size.

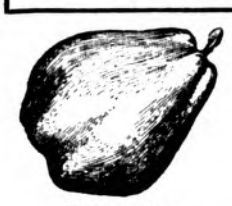
Here is what we give you:

One Snow Apple Tree, One Wealthy Apple Tree, One Kieffer Pear Tree, One Bartlett Pear Tree, Two Lucretia Dewberry Bushes, Two Rex Raspberry Bushes, Three Niagara Grape Vines, Three Delaware Grape Vines, Three Concord Grape Vines.

The four Apple and Pear Tree Grafts in this Collection are one foot high, grafted by experts from bearing trees with good records. They will take root as soon as planted and grow rapidly into vigorous healthy trees.

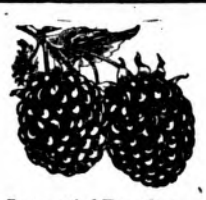
The nine Grape Vines are a product of southern Michigan, where the finest grapes in the world are grown. From selected vines, cuttings are taken and buried in underground pits until they undergo a process known as "callousing." After being properly "calloused" the cuttings will take root as soon as planted. The "calloused" grape cuttings in this Collection are all produced in this manner. They will grow rapidly and bear large crops of choice grapes as soon as large vines planted at the same time.

The two Raspberry Bushes and two Dewberry Bushes in this Collection are one-year-old youngsters, ready to set out as soon as you receive them. They will begin growing at once and develop into fine, heavy-bearing bushes if given proper attention.



All Will Bear Soon! The orchard which you plant with this fine Fruit Collection will prove an ever increasing source of pleasure and profit to you year after year. All the trees, vines and bushes will bear fruit in a remarkably short time. In two years the Raspberries and Dewberries will commence bearing. The following year you will have grapes and some pears. (A properly cared-for Grape Vine will yield a bushel of grapes every season.) Your Apple and Pear Trees will begin bearing in from three to five years. Then you will have loads and loads of fine fruit in increasing quantity every year.

Guaranteed To Grow! Everything in this Collection is absolutely guaranteed to grow. We stand behind every Collection sent out and the growers in turn stand behind us. You may rest assured that if you order this splendid Collection (and you surely ought to), it will reach you in good condition and grow to your entire satisfaction if the directions for planting are carefully followed. If any of the trees, bushes or vines fail to make growth satisfactory to you, we hereby guarantee to replace them promptly and absolutely without charge to you. You cannot lose. You run absolutely no risk in accepting this offer.



Full Planting Instructions! With this fine Fruit and Orchard Collection we are also going to send you complete instructions for planting. These directions are fully illustrated with pictures and diagrams showing you just what to do and when and how to do it. By following these simple directions you should in a few years have one of the finest orchards in your neighborhood.

Our Free Offer! Send us only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each and this remarkable Fruit and Orchard Collection is yours free—the two Apple Trees, two Pear Trees, two Dewberry Bushes, two Raspberry Bushes and nine Grape Vines. The whole collection will be carefully packed, securely wrapped and sent to you by prepaid parcel post, direct from the Michigan growers at the proper time for planting in your locality. Remember we guarantee that everything will reach you in perfect condition. Be sure to send in your order this very day and ask for Reward No. 9542.

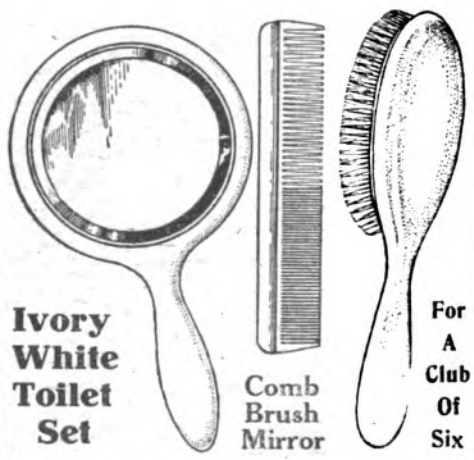
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine

Kieffer Pear

Lucretia Dewberry

Snow Apple

Box Of Initial Stationery



Latest Style Monogram

IT is now the height of fashion and evidence of the very best taste to use stationery with your own monogram initial or "crest" on it. In this offer we give you two dozen sheets white linen stationery 10½x6¼ inches in size, each sheet beautifully embossed in colors with any monogram initial you desire and two dozen envelopes. Just think how nice it will be when writing to your friends to have your own letter crest monogram initial embossed in colors on this high-grade fine quality stationery. Remember you get one full quire of choice paper and twenty-four envelopes in this complete writer's outfit. Don't hesitate to send for this premium today because you will surely be delighted with it.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you a box of this Initial Stationery free by parcel post, prepaid. When ordering be sure to specify what monogram initial you want. Reward No. 9482.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

PURE white, with a fine smooth finish, this handsome Comb, Brush and Mirror Set equals in appearance the finest French Ivory. The Comb is 7½ inches long, very light and dainty, with both coarse and fine teeth. The Brush is 10 inches long and 2½ inches wide, with medium-length, finest, stiff bristles. The Mirror, which measures 10x5½ inches, is made of heavy, flawless, beveled French glass, 4½ inches in diameter.

No lady could wish for a finer Toilet Set than this one. It has the air of refinement found in the highest grade Ivory Sets, it is just as durable and can be cleaned as often as desired without injury to its smooth ivory white finish.

We will give you, free, this fine Ivory White Comb, Brush and Mirror Set in a fitted box upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For six one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this Comb, Brush and Mirror Set in a fitted box, free, by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 7796.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Writing And Drawing Outfit

For A Club Of Two!

HERE is something that is needed in every home and by every schoolboy and schoolgirl—a big value-assortment of almost everything needed for writing and drawing. Our illustration is, of course, greatly reduced in size. The Case, which is made of fine leatherette, is 10½ inches long and 2½ inches wide. It is of the folding style, with a snap fastener, so that it can conveniently be carried in the pocket or in the children's lunch basket. Inside the Case there are three high-grade pencils with erasers, one good quality penholder with pen, one twin pencil (in reality two pencils in a combination holder), one pencil sharpener, one large rubber eraser, one 10-inch ruler and an aluminum collapsible drinking cup with cover.

This Outfit is manufactured by the American Lead Pencil Company, which is sufficient guarantee of its fine quality, and we know that it will please our readers, especially those who have children going to school, and of course it is just as handy in the home, because all the pencils, penholder, etc., are high grade and just what grown people like to use. If you will accept the following special offer we will send you one of these fine Outfits free.

Given To You! For only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this complete Writing and Drawing Outfit, exactly as above described, free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9972.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Gold Birthstone Rings

THE most popular ladies' rings worn today are these beautiful birthstone rings. Not only is it considered lucky to wear one of them but they are now and always will be exceedingly stylish. We are able to illustrate only three of the rings but there are twelve in all—a different stone for each month of the year, and of course you should wear the stone that is symbolical of the month you were born. The following is a list of the twelve rings, names of the stones and the month to which they apply:

No. 8411, January, Garnet. No. 8421, February, Amethyst. No. 8431, March, Bloodstone. No. 8441, April, Diamond. No. 8451, May, Emerald. No. 8461, June, Agate. No. 8471, July, Ruby. No. 8481, August, Sardonyx. No. 8491, September, Sapphire. No. 8501, October, Opal. No. 8511, November, Topaz. No. 8521, December, Turquoise.

Each ring is guaranteed genuine gold filled, which looks exactly like solid gold and will wear for years. In fact we absolutely guarantee each ring for at least five years. The rings themselves are perfectly plain, the stones are solitaires and perfect imitations of the real gems. The setting of each ring is the ever popular "Tiffany" style. As a Christmas, Birthday or all-the-year-round gift for wife, mother, sweetheart or sister, nothing could be more appropriate and acceptable than one of these beautiful guaranteed rings set with the birthstone of the person to whom it is given. We will send you one of these rings free upon the terms of the following offer:

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you one of these beautiful gold-filled Rings by parcel post, prepaid. Please be sure to give size and number of ring wanted.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

31-Piece Dinner Set

THIS splendid set of dishes is full size for family use and consists of 6 Plates, 6 Cups, 6 Saucers, 6 Cereal or Fruit Dishes, 6 Individual Butters and large Meat Platter all handsomely decorated with clusters of purple wood violets surrounded with rich green foliage and bordered with lovely tracings of gold. Our illustration gives you no idea of the real beauty of these dishes. This is by far the handsomest, daintiest dinner set we have ever offered and we are positive that it will more than please every woman who secures one of them on the terms of our very liberal offer. No matter where you live (if it is not outside the United States), we will ship you this set by express direct from the pottery in Ohio. You are to pay the express charges, but they will be but a fraction of what this set would cost you at retail.

Given To You! For a club of only ten one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this handsome 31-piece Violet Decorated Dinner Set carefully packed to prevent breakage, charges collect. Reward No. 75010.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

It's Nerve Force from Nuxated Iron that helps make STRONG, MAGNETIC, FORCEFUL MEN AND WOMEN, who make their over mastering presence felt the moment they enter a room.

NUXATED IRON

contains the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force in a form which most nearly resembles that in the brain and nerve cells of man. It also contains organic iron like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. Organic iron enriches the blood and plenty of rich red blood means more nerve force, so that Nuxated Iron not only feeds what might be termed artificial nerve force to the nerve cells, but it stimulates the blood to manufacture a greatly increased supply of new nerve force. If you are weak, nervous or run-down, get a bottle of Nuxated Iron today, and if within two weeks' time you do not feel that it has increased your nerve force and made you feel better and stronger in every way, your money will be refunded. Sold by all druggists.

BIG VALUE for 10 Cts.

6 Songs, words and music; 25 Pictures Pretty Girls; 40 Ways to Make Money; 1 Joke Book; 1 Book on Love; 1 Magic Book; 1 Book Letter Writing; 1 Dream Book and Fortune Teller; 1 Cook Book; 1 Base Ball Book, gives rules for games; 1 Toy Maker Book; Language of Flowers; 1 Morse Telegraph Alphabet; 12 Chemical Experiments; Magic Age Table; Great North Pole Game; 100 Conundrums; 3 Puzzles; 12 Games; 80 Verses for Autograph Albums. All the above by mail for 10 cts. and 2 cts. postage.
ROYAL SALES CO., Box 448, South Norwalk, Conn.

$1.97

GUARANTEED WATCH

To advertise our business, and introduce our bargain price list of Elgin Watches, we will send this elegant guaranteed watch by Parcel Post C. O. D. $1.97 ONLY, nickel silver plated case, stem wind and stem set, genuine American lever movement, fully guaranteed a reliable timekeeper. Give your full P. O. address, box or St. No., and watch will be sent at once. Pay your Postmaster $1.97 and it is yours. Satisfaction guaranteed. Boston Jewelry Co., 39 W. Adams St. B31, Chicago, Ill.

Earn a Real Phonograph

Beautifully finished, nickel winding crank, spring motor, speed regulator, stop lever. New improved sound box with mica diaphragm, makes perfect reproductions of all kinds of music. Send name and we will send 24 of our Art Pictures to dispose of on special offer at 25c each. Send us the $6 you collect and we will send this new improved E. D. L. Phonograph and a selection of six records free. Write at once.
E. D. LIFE, 337 W. Madison St., Dept. T-8, Chicago

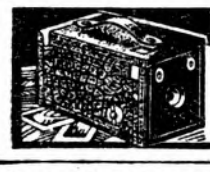
FREE

All this jewelry is yours for selling only 6 Boxes Mentho-Nova at 25 cts. Needed in every household. Sells easily. Order today. When sold return $1.50 and all 6 pieces are yours.
U. S. SUPPLY CO., Box 329, Greenville, Pa.

SCHOOL BOX FREE

with Fountain Pen, Pencils, Knife, Pen Holder, Eraser, for selling 10 packages Bluine at 15c a pckg. Write today.
BLUINE MFG. CO., 562 Mill St., Concord Junction, Mass.

VIOLIN GIVEN

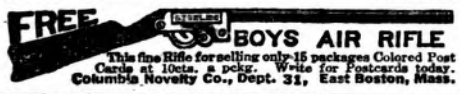


This special sweet toned Violin given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10 cents each. Order 20 pictures, when sold send the $2.00 and choose Violin or other prize according to big list sent with pictures.
RAY ART CO., DEPT. 48, CHICAGO, ILL.

MOVIE MACHINE FREE

Have Your Own "Movie" at home. Wonderful moving picture machine, complete with gas generator and 3 sets assorted reels (96 views). Shows large clear pictures. Sent Charges Prepaid for selling 35 large colored pictures or 35 packages Fancy Post Cards at 10c each. Order pictures OR cards TODAY.
GATES MFG. CO. DEPT. 525 CHICAGO

FREE

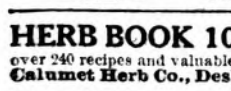


Eastman Camera. Load and unload in daylight. Takes pictures 2 1-4 x 3 1-4, sharp, clear and distinct. Sell 40 packets Garden Spot Seed at 10c a packet and Camera is yours. Send no money. Write now.
Lancaster Co. Seed Co. Sta. 99 PARADISE, PA.

PLAYS

Dialogs, Monologs, Musical Comedies and Revues, Minstrel Opening Choruses, Darky Plays. Catalog Free. Vaudeville Acts, How to Stage a Play, Make-up Goods
T. S. DENISON & CO., 623 So. Wabash, Dept. 6 CHICAGO

FREE BOYS AIR RIFLE



This fine Rifle for selling only 15 packages Colored Post Cards at 10cts. a pckg. Write for Postcards today.
Columbia Novelty Co., Dept. 31, East Boston, Mass.

CARDS

Send 5 cents for large Sample Album of Hidden Name, Silk Fringe, Envelope, Friendship, Joker's, Lover's and all other Kinds of Cards, Post Cards and Premiums. Star Bean Catcher and list 980 Songs given Free. No trash. OHIO CARD CO., B-14 Columbus, Ohio.

FREE

American Watch or choice from premium list. Sell 30 pkgs. NEEDLES at 10c.
SenecaSupplyCo., D-12, Oneonta, N.Y.

HERB BOOK 10c

tells how to make medicine from Herbs for all diseases; over 240 recipes and valuable herb secrets worth $$.
Calumet Herb Co., Desk 6, South Holland, Illinois

"Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

Through the columns of this department free information pertaining to Etiquette, Personal Appearance and kindred subjects will be given in answer to questions by our subscribers, but not more than two questions the same month by any one subscriber. Address Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and give your own full name and address. Name will not be published.

TENNESSEE SUNBEAM, Stanton, Tenn.—It is correct that you should thank anyone—boy or girl, man or woman—for any great or small attention which may be shown you. You may ask into your home your escort who has brought you home. If he does not accept the invitation—which is his best course if the hour be a late or inconvenient one—you may then say "good night" and thank him in simple and direct fashion for having brought you back. If it has been at his invitation you have attended the evening's entertainment, you should include in your farewell thanks a word concerning the pleasant time you have had. (2) Somehow one thinks of a book on "developing personality" as having been written for and being most useful to an enterprising young salesman or business man. We could not say how much this sort of a work might help a Tennessee Sunbeam to shine brighter, unless we had a glimpse of its pages and saw exactly how the author planned his developing advice. Too much personality might easily not be an attractive thing in a young girl—just as some sunbeams can shine too warmly at times for the comfort of all concerned.

PURITY PEARL, Trenton, Ill.—We do not think you should say one word to your sister regarding her husband's flirtation with another woman during this two weeks' absence of his wife. How do you know that the affair will go further or result in the "ruination"—which is a strong word—of your sister's two children? We think your letter sounds over-excited. We advise you to keep your own counsel and await events. If your brother-in-law's misconduct continues, your sister will find it out soon enough and can decide her own course of action. At present you would be only making accusations. To interfere between husband and wife is a serious matter. We believe "hands off" is the best rule for relatives of a young couple to follow—unless their advice and help is seriously asked. (2) Your parents are wise and right in their counseling you to not "stop speaking" or to take other action which would "disturb things" in the home of your brother-in-law. If you like, you may treat him coolly and tell him exactly why you do this. But even this is a dangerous and perhaps unnecessary course in punishing what may have been only a short and fickle fancy on his part. Your loyalty to your sister does you credit, but fighting comes from too intense partisanship, and happy homes are those freest from quarrels, accusations and recriminations. Think this over and be calmer.

M. T., West Virginia.—In the seating of a party at a hotel or restaurant dinner table the convenience and pleasure of all should be considered. In such a seating, whether a gentleman is brought at a lady's right or left hand makes absolutely no difference so far as etiquette is concerned. We regard your question as referring to ordinary informal dining of mixed parties and have so answered it.

BROWN EYES, Arkansas.—The interrogative phrase, "how do you do?" has come to be regarded not as a question to be answered, but as a greeting of the same sort as "good morning" or "good evening." It may be responded to as conventionally as made. The greeting, "How are you?" must be regarded, however, as a distinct inquiry and needs acknowledgment and reply. You are lucky if you can respond promptly: "Fine, thank you; how are you?" Happiness and good manners are thus both correctly exhibited! (2) A girl should not "keep company" with any boy before she has finished her schooling. This does not rule out boy and girl parties or other entertainments. Be guided by your parents and their wishes. To wait until you are eighteen is a simple and safe plan to follow.

IRISH, Wisconsin.—To the vacation acquaintances who, on saying farewell, expressed pleasure at having met you, you could have correctly answered: "Thank you; I hope we may have the pleasure of seeing each other again."

W. M. G., Sesser, Ill.—A boy may offer his arm to a girl to assist her when this may seem necessary; or he may more simply and informally hold her arm to aid her safety in any short crossing or dangerous bit of going when they may be walking together. Girls are independent creatures nowadays—and do not have to hang upon a man's arm in the fashion of fifty years back.

MORNING GLORY, Stanton, Tenn.—If a boy asks to be your escort upon any occasion, thank him and say "Yes"—if you wish to accept his invitation. Nothing else is necessary and no set answer or "full reply" is required. (2) Most assuredly you could gain help and information from a good book on etiquette. Such books are not written—as you think—entirely for the use of "society people." No, indeed; these gilded creatures are supposed to be always correctly informed concerning the proper thing to say, do or wear.

ORPHA, Winchester, Oregon.—When you dropped your fork at this restaurant party, it would have been correct for you to allow it to remain where it fell. The waiter could then have been summoned to bring you a clean bit of silver. But to have retrieved the fork yourself was no great blunder, and you were foolishly sensitive if you allowed this simple and most natural error to spoil your evening. (2) At a home dinner where no servants were present, it would be correct for you to pick up any dropped table article yourself—unless some man in the party was rapidly courteous enough to regain it for you first. In any case of such awkwardness on your part, you should properly say a simple word of apology to your hostess.

WEST VIRGINIA ROSEBUD.—Eighteen is an early enough age for a girl to begin "going" with boys. (2) At Christmas, or any other time, a man does not properly present any gift more elaborate than books, candy or flowers to a girl who is not his fiancee. Nothing need be given in return by a girl except a note of thanks, although she may if she wishes, and friendship permits, give a book or some little article of her own handiwork to a young man whom she likes and who has remembered her at Christmas.

BLUE EYES, Crowville, La.—Accidents, like necessity, cannot be governed by law nor by any rules of etiquette. If your buggy was stuck in the middle of a cold and knee-deep creek, it was decidedly correct for you to allow your escort to carry you to dry land and for you to thank him for the rescue. You should be glad he was a young man in whom you could "put confidence." Any other sort might have dropped you in mid-stream.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16.

I find the old-fashioned cat stitch to be far superior to any other I have used for patching knit underwear. It is less noticeable and leaves no raw edges and one doesn't have to watch her work so closely.

If one is fond of lemon pie and cannot get lemons, use one tablespoon lemon extract and two tablespoons vinegar instead of juice and rind of lemon, using favorite recipe for remainder.—MRS. ZEDDA JACOBS, Rockford, Iowa.

A little baking powder added to whites of eggs will make the meringue stand up better and not get watery when cold.—NAOMI.

Those who have large families and small purses, like myself, try knitting stockings for the children of common twine, such as merchants use for tying up packages. They are warmer than the cotton ones sold in stores and wear much longer. I dye them black and they look almost as good as store stockings.—MRS. ADA CORNELISON, Diggins, Mo.

Requests

How to make "Nigger Head Pudding."

Lois Neville, Meredosia, Ill., wants to buy the March, April, May and June, 1921, issues of COMFORT. Write first.

Wanted.—Poem, "The Drummer of Shiloh."—MRS. CHARLES H. CHURCH, New London, 191 Hempstead St., Conn.

Mrs. Emma A. Field, Babylon, Box 326, N. Y., would like the poem, "The Cuckoo," published in a school reader years ago.

Wanted.—The old song containing the words, "Oh, it's g-l-o-r-y to know that I am s-a-v-e-d. I'm h-a-p-p-y to tell that I am f-r-e-e."

Mrs. S. E. Clifford, Los Angeles, 5320 Holmes Ave., California, an invalid from neuritis and rheumatism, would like to have letters and cards sent her.

There were fourteen requests for information from anyone who had used the Auto Knitter. Would suggest that this be taken up with the company selling the machine. Doubtless they are in a position to furnish reference list.

If any sister has the July, August and September issues of COMFORT for 1921, that they will lend me, I wish they would write. I wish only one copy of each. Will pay postage.—MRS. WILL SHOCK, Elma, R. R. 4, Box 64, Iowa.

Will some reader please send me August, 1920, COMFORT. I have every copy of COMFORT for twelve years back but this one and I want it very much. Will return favor any way I can.—MRS. EURIE BARFIELD, Okolona, Box 126, Ark.

Remedies

If nipples are sore, bathe in alum water after baby nurses, being sure to wash well before next nursing.—NURSE, Indiana.

Use salty butter on caked breasts. Massage well with this for ten minutes. Relieves pain and if repeated the breasts will not have to be lanced.

RINGWORM.—Apply the juice of a green walnut to affected parts once or twice a day for two or three days. This is a sure cure but will cause severe burning and smarting for a few minutes.—MRS. J. Y. BASTICK, Elora, Tenn.

WORMS.—An old neighbor told me of this remedy which I have used successfully with my children. Steep the inside bark from witch-hazel limbs, and let the children drink all they will during the day. Give castor oil at night.

Contributors to Sisters' Corner

The following list contains the names of those who have written for the Sisters' Corner. Lack of space prevents printing the letters.

Stella Cockrell, Ark. Hazel I. Black, Calif. Florence M. Lawrence, N. Y. Mrs. Etta Sacher, Ark. Mrs. Ray Beekman, Mont. Mrs. W. Hoskins, Ohio. Mrs. Freeman E. Dye, Kans. Mrs. H. I. Lawrence, Kans. Effie O. Taylor, Tenn. Clara Ferguson, Miss. Mrs. John H. King, Ohio. Mrs. Peter J. Shinick, Maine. Betty Jo Williams, Tenn. Lula Noblitt, N. C. Beryl Zirbel, N. Y. Grace Somers, N. C. Mrs. Harry C. Martin, Va. Maude Lee Dunnbar, Tenn. Mrs. Emma O. Bryant, Ala. Mrs. Arthur Harmon, Mo. Mrs. Allie Crowley, Calif. Mrs. Julia Noel, W. Va. Mrs. N. Y. Olinger, Mo. Mrs. Cliff Bell, Ga. Mrs. Maud Crowson Stone, Ala. Lusetta E. Whitney, Ky. Mrs. Ella Griffin, Va. Mrs. Charles A. Jones, Ohio. Mrs. Jesse C. Miller, Ala. May Shinn, Ark. Leila Beckett, Wyo. Mrs. Hewitt A. Rushing, Ala. Alma Anderson, Minn. Mrs. John Beneze, Ind. Mrs. Clara Soneless, Ark. Emma C. Neff, Mo. Mrs. Owen Gray, Texas. Mrs. G. L. Sabdridge, Va. Miss Conchita Chase, Ga. Mrs. W. E. Gren, S. C. Mrs. Bessie Hinson, N. C. Mrs. J. W. Gifford, Wyo. Mrs Edna Moore, Mich. Mrs. M. Dayton, Ind. Mrs. Laura Leddon, Fla. Mrs. Ella Patterson, Maine. Hallie Maye Sumner, Miss. LuVera Smith, Tenn. Miss Lillia Richardson, Mo. Miss Winnie Pearl Grant, Ark. Miss Ida English, Fla. Mrs. C. A. Deal, Ind. Irene Briggs, S. Dak. Mrs. Henry Wells, Nebr. Mrs. S. E. Clifford, Calif. Mrs. Emma Elbert, Ill. Mrs. Edith Jeter, La. Mrs. R. Merle Abbott, Iowa. Mrs. C. S. Blake, Okla. Mrs. Minnie Greene, N. C. Mrs. H. F. Jumper, Miss. Mrs. C. Hamilton, Pa. Marie Goldie Horn, Ohio. Mrs. Rose Beene, Texas. Mrs. Mamie Smallwood, Ga. Virginia Williams, Tallahassee, Fla. Katie Mae Jones, Tallahassee, Fla. Mrs. Cleveland Turnage, Tenn. Mrs. Bertha Cook, Wisc. Mrs. Pearl Williams Harris, N. C. Mrs. Sue Putnam, Ark. Mrs. J. T. Bastick, Tenn. Mrs. Lewis Stadler, N. C. Mrs. Raymond Green, N. Y. Mrs. J. F. Blakley, N. C. Beth Walker, Texas. Alvis Jones, Ark. Marguerite Middleton, Mich. Juliette Williams, Okla. Flossie Kendall, W. Va. Mrs. Maud Moore, Texas. Mrs. Will Ricketts, Tenn. Miss Maggie Fraley, Okla. Nellie Owens, Va. Mrs. Margaret Victor, Iowa. Ella Bella Haskins, N. C. Mabel Stratem Velva, N. Dak. Mrs. Alice Roberts, Texas. Mrs. E. Melborn, S. C. Mrs. Esta Shieler, W. Va. Mrs. W. R. Almon, Colo. Mrs. N. Kelley, Va. Mrs. Ophelia M. Alvis, Tenn. Birtie Wallace, Tenn. Thula Sheffield, Ark. Elsie Bray, Okla. Bessie Newman, Okla. Mrs. Charles Keefer, Ind. Miss Emma Gouldman, Mo. Ella Florence Krown, Ky. Cleo Coran, Okla. Rilla Harris, Texas. Fred Bizzell, N. C. Mrs. R. C. Lambert, W. Va. Susan Otis, Kans. Mrs. R. H. Fleenor, Ore. Belle Mayfield, Texas. Mrs. H. Griswold, Wash. Nettie Loud, N. Y. Mrs. C. L. Fandren, Texas. Miss Claressa C. Harris, Va. Miss Ethel Farmer, W. Va. Mrs. Clarence Tigner, Ohio. Winnie Grant, Ark. Mrs. W. E. Baker, Wash. Mrs. Julia Peratt, Ky. Mrs. Achsa B. Murphy, Kans. Clara L. McKamie, Tenn. Kathryn Weber, Wisc. Mrs. Edna Daves, Okla. Edna J. Vawter, Kans. Mae McClendon, Ala. Anna Lee Dean, Ark. Ina Jean Johnson, Ohio. Lois Ballard, N. M. Lula Holmes, Ky. Mrs. J. T. Jacobson, Wash. Gillie F. Johnson, Va. Mrs. Harvey L. Caracofe, Va. Mrs. Charles H. Church, Conn. Mrs. P. C. Armstrong, Nebr. Mrs. Will Shock, Iowa. Ruby Stonecipher, Texas. Christine Goad, Tenn. Mrs. Anna Rawlins, Ohio. Mrs. Myrtle W. DeGeer, Mich. Miss Golda Price, N. C. Ella Beggs, Ark. Eva Skelton, Tenn.

The Remarkable Story of "Eva Dean"

NOTE—This is a story of "Eva Dean." In its brief way it presents the story of hundreds of other women who, in the fascinating manner described, have been able to provide themselves with the extra money which slender incomes so often cannot afford. If it shall have shown the way to happiness to but one woman, instead of hundreds who will respond, it will have served its purpose.

How One Woman Solved the Money Problem

Was this Eva Dean? I could scarcely believe my eyes. A miracle had happened in only a few short months. The prosperous looking, handsomely gowned woman before me was indeed my friend, Eva Dean. But what a transformation!

I knew that she had been very hard up and with only her husband's limited earnings on which to depend. Then, too, I had heard about some serious financial trouble the Dean's had while I was away. Yet, here she was, at a time when work was scarce and wages getting lower and lower, well dressed, happy as a lark, and with a smile of contentment on a face which showed not a trace of the hardship I knew she had endured.

She must have read the question in my eyes and, as we entered her beautifully furnished home, she had told me the whole story.

"This is it," she said with pride, "the Gearhart Knitter which has helped me out of my trouble and made me one of the happiest women on earth. Every day I devote a little of my time to knitting the Famous Allwear Standard Hosiery.

You know my circumstances a few months back. I was almost desperate. I thought of sewing, washing, working out,—anything to overcome that terrible need for money. Finally I learned that the Gearhart Company of Clearfield, Pa., wanted women to do machine knitting at home. They said the work was easy and that they would pay me generously for every pair of standard Allwear Hosiery I could send them. They offered me a three year contract and as I found them to be a very reliable, long established company with bank references and hundreds of satisfied home workers, I promptly decided to send the moderate amount required to secure the knitter and start in making money.

It has proved a really delightful and restful occupation for me. It has turned my spare moments into golden hours. You see for yourself what I have gained, happiness at home, new clothes, things for the children, and money in the bank.

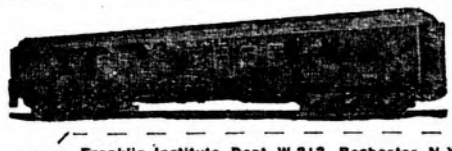
The Gearhart Knitter and the wool to make the hosiery came together and I got busy right away,—nothing difficult about it, no special training necessary,—so easy in fact that my husband and the children often help me.

Let me tell you, those checks from the Gearhart people came in mighty handy. One after another they arrived, as fast as I could send them the beautiful knitted Allwear Hosiery."

The story of Eva Dean was finished and then I was treated to the surprise of my life. With a few simple movements she had the Gearhart Knitter started and at the bottom there appeared a lovely knitted sock of wonderful quality.

No wonder the Gearhart Knitter is known as the standard knitter, the fastest, most complete and reliable knitter made! No wonder the Gearhart home industry has so many happy, contented women!

My heart goes out to the woman struggling to make ends meet and to her I say, "Write to the Gearhart Knitting Machine Company of Clearfield, Pa., right away. Get a Gearhart Knitter, knit all the Allwear Hosiery you have time for and accept the liberal pay checks which they will send you for the pleasantest, nicest home work imaginable."



Free Booklet

Particulars of the Gearhart Knitting Company's Allwear Hosiery Home Industry Plan will be sent on request. Write for their Profit Guide Book and samples of Knitting free. Gearhart Knitting Maching Co., Dept. C O 628, Clearfield, Pa.

WANTED

Railway Mail Clerks
$1600 to $2300 Year.
Hundreds Needed
MEN—BOYS OVER 16
SHOULD WRITE IMMEDIATELY
Steady work
No Layoffs
Paid Vacations
Common education sufficient.
Send coupon today—SURE.

Franklin Institute, Dept. W 212, Rochester, N.Y.
Sirs: Send me, without charge. (1) sample Railway Mail Clerk Examination Questions; (2) schedule showing places of all coming U. S. Government examinations; (3) list of many Government jobs now open.
Name .....
Address .....

Infantile Paralysis

Blanche Nicholson's heel was drawn up and her foot deformed from Infantile Paralysis for 5 years. Exactly 4 months' treatment at McLain Sanitarium resulted as father tells below:

We took our daughter, Blanche, to the Sanitarium May 9, 1921, for Infantile Paralysis in the right limb. We brought her home September 9th, with a nice straight foot. We feel proud of her improvement. Our neighbors are surprised at results she got in four months.

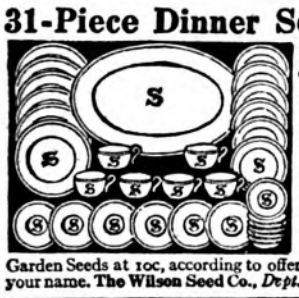
W. J. NICHOLSON,
R. R. 2, Box 27, Bristol, West Virginia

For Crippled Children

The McLain Sanitarium is a thoroughly equipped private institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Deformities, Hip Disease, Wry Neck, etc., especially as found in children and young adults. Our book, "Deformities and Paralysis," also "Book of References," free. Write today.

L. C. McLain
Orthopedic Sanitarium
990 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

Deafness



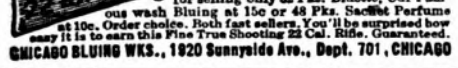
Perfect hearing is now being restored in every condition of deafness or defective hearing from causes such as Catarrhal Deafness, Relaxed or Sunken Drums, Thickened Drums, Roaring and Hissing Sounds, Perforated, Wholly or Partially Destroyed Drums, Discharge from Ears, etc.

Wilson Common-Sense Ear Drums

"Little Wireless Phones for the Ears" require no medicine but effectively replace what is lacking or defective in the natural ear drums. They are simple devices, which the wearer easily fits into the ears where they are invisible. Soft, safe and comfortable. Write today for our 168 page FREE book on DEAFNESS, giving you full particulars and testimonials.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO., Incorporated
325 Inter-Southern Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.

31-Piece Dinner Set Given



Full size dinner china, guaranteed against crazing; pure white color. Every piece decorated with royal blue band and your initial stamped in pure coin gold — just the set for a family of six. Simply sell 40 packets Garden Seeds at 10c, according to offer in catalog. Send your name. The Wilson Seed Co., Dept. D107 Tyrone, Pa.

3 Piece Toilet Set Free for selling only 8 boxes of our famous ROSEBUD at 25c a box; a home necessity. EASY TO SELL. WE TRUST YOU. Big catalogue sent with goods. Order today. Write to this firm.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO., Dept. A, Woodsboro, Md.

A REAL .22 RIFLE ACTUALLY GIVEN AWAY HAMILTON for selling only 32 Pkgs. Bluette, Our Famous wash Bluing at 15c or 48 Pkgs. Sachet Perfume at 10c. Order choice. Both fast sellers. You'll be surprised how easy it is to earn this Fine True Shooting 22 Cal. Rifle. Guaranteed.

CHICAGO BLUING WKS., 1920 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 701, CHICAGO

Our Scientific Method will stop that

STAMMER

Send for free 200 page book. It tells how to permanently stop stammering or stuttering in a few weeks' time. A natural guaranteed method.

The Lewis School for Stammerers
12 Lewis Bldg., 71-77 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

Light Fibre Legs and Arms

657 Dean Bldg.
RAY TRAUTMAN Minneapolis, Minn.

"FIBRE-LITE" LIMBS

Easy Payments — Do Nature's Work.
AGENTS WANTED who wear Leg. Good Pay. FREE Fibre Sample. DESCRIBE STUMP TO WORMAN CO., 252-C Hennepin, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Don't Wear a Truss

We Guarantee Your Comfort

with every Brooks' Appliance. New discovery. Wonderful. No obnoxious springs or pads. Automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No plasters. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Full information and booklet free.

C. E. BROOKS
167 R State St., Marshall, Mich.

The Bee Cell Supporter
A BOON TO WOMANKIND

Made from the purest, softest rubber. Six cups or faces render misplacement absolutely impossible. Endorsed by the medical profession. Send us $2.50 and we will mail you one postpaid in plain package. Money back if not entirely satisfactory. Write for descriptive circular. It's FREE.

The Bee Cell Co., Dept. 168 White Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

LOOK YOUR BEST. Make sure of smooth white arms, face and neck in spite of sallowness, blotches, freckles, blackheads etc. If you want to be charming and attractive—Don't pay 50c but send 10c at once for sealed Package, which will transform your appearance instantly. Warranted. TOILET COMPOUND CO. Box 1927A, Boston, Mass.

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

pretty in the morning as they are at night or any other time. I am speaking about beauty that is natural. Here in America most—or many—of our girls have to make up their faces a-fresh each day, but in France true beauty is found in all its many and various forms without any special make-up. Every standard of real, true, pure beauty is represented, and there one sees style and genuine beauty combined. There are all types: the sylph-like brunette with her tantalizing aloe dark eyes and irresistible manner, and the pink-white golden blonde, with her pretty round face and pretty violet sky-blue eyes. You could not resist them even if you would. These girls are not generally of the aristocracy, either, but are generally they are of the bourgeoisie, and believe me, they are pretty in lines of face. I will guarantee that most of them have natural red lips. Yes, real red, and not paint or lip-stick but genuine color. Of course, we have a few pretty women in the United States, at Hollywood and on the high-priced stage, but there are not a great many of them at that. The average American girl or woman is totally, hopelessly plain. Whether this state of affairs comes about through a lack of care and knowledge in "self-adornment" or through circumstances more deeply rooted, I do not know and wish you could tell me. One thing is true: a pleasant woman is almost always pretty—as pleaasnt thoughts make pleasant faces. Most of the girls in France are full of sunshine and free from worry. They are care-free in a way, even though they have some care and are thoughtful of others.

Really, Uncle, it would do anybody good to get away from the camouflaged faces here in America. Indeed, it would be a great relief for you and Billy to get away from our ugly, cranky women here and visit France for a while. There you can find women who are noted for their beauty and cheerfulness the wide world over. Indeed, the stay of a fortnight in the trenches was well-repaid by the beautiful dream-visions which greeted the boys' eyes when they retired for a rest in back of the lines. Say, Uncle, if there is any real beauty in America, I guess I have been blind. I don't think it exists except on the stage and in the movies. Of course, our women are the most, most wonderful in other ways of any in the world, but when it comes to a question of beauty—well, they are not in it with the French girls. I am,

Lovingly your nephew,
JACK WILCOX (ex-soldier).

You don't want anyone to "back you up," Jack; what you are going to need, and need badly, is someone to "stand in front" of you with a fence of six-inch armor plate. If there is any bomb-proof shelter in Allston or any of the nearby Boston suburbs, I strongly advise you to take cover at once. For you will certainly receive the bombardment your poor judgment and bad eyes deserve. Because I really feel sorry for the dreadful fate you have coming to you, I will make my own critical jolt a mild one. I don't have to bring up any particular verbal arguments to prove you dead wrong, Jack. All I have to do is open Bill's album and look over his carefully arranged photos of cousins from the North, South, East and West—but not a one from France! And these cousins, Jack, are not Hollywood stars nor highlights of musical comedy. They are not "aristocracy" or "bourgeoisie." (That last is an awful word to spell, Jackie boy, and I'll bet you had to look it up in your French dictionary!) They are the sweet, simple, entirely charming faces of healthy American-bred girlhood. And I'll back 'em in any beauty exhibit, at any time, against all of those aloe-eyed sylphs and pink, white, violet, sky-blue, variegated Parisian charmers you are boosting so wildly. And, Jack, your argument for the non-painted and non-lip-sticked beauty of your French girls is made shaky by the fact that France is greatest producer of cosmetic and toilet preparations in the world, and the highest-priced articles of this sort sold in this country (to your Hollywood girls, for instance) are those bearing French labels. I'm afraid you didn't look close enough at those "red lips"!

Jack, I think your guess about being "blind" may be a right one, after all. I advise you to open up your eyes and wipe out of 'em any "dream visions" of beauty formed on moving-picture or stage standards. The beauty of American girlhood and womanhood exists just where the "wonderful ways" you write about also dwell—and that is right in the homes of the forty-eight states that make up the greatest country in the world. There are mighty few things Americans have to go abroad to find better than they can get in our own broad land. And certainly feminine beauty is not one of the things we need to voyage to gain. Finally, Jack, you tell a very different tale from the stories told by most of the "ex-soldiers" that Billy and I know. If there are too many "camouflaged faces" in Allston to suit your simple tastes, why not pack your old kit bag and start south or west?

League Shut-in and Mercy Work for January

"Inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these you have done it unto Me."

Written references from doctor and postmaster must positively accompany all appeals from shut-ins. Every month brings to me many letters which disregard this simple and necessary rule. Appeals unaccompanied by the references required will be destroyed.

Lancelot G. Reaves, Toney Creek, Anderson Co., S. C. The crippled son of a widow. Money is needed to help him prepare for an operation which may enable him to walk. Here is where greenbacks can work a real miracle. Carrie Hall, Strieby, N. C. A girl of fifteen who has been a cripple since infancy. Clothing is needed and money to buy crutches. Luther Eslinger, Crosby, Tenn. A shut-in for sixteen years. Lives under lonely conditions and asks for letters and reading matter to help him pass the long winter days. Genelie Watts, Taylorsville, N. C. An almost totally helpless shut-in. Send cheer and a shower of dimes to this poor creature. Mrs. Agnes Freeman, Spencer, Va. Struggling with ill health to support herself and children. Money and second-hand clothing will give her a much-needed boost. Mrs. Leona Reed, Laurel Fork, Va. A widow with five girls of ages from four to seventeen, and a little boy of two. A worthy and well-recommended case. Clothing will be of great help, but dimes and dollars will aid most. Elmer D. Hagelberg, Charles City, Iowa, sends earnest thanks for all who have remembered him in his need.

It is the New Year. Another twelve months stretch before these stricken and needy ones. You can help make the year brighter for them if you will. We have a command telling us to let our light shine before men. Cousins, it is your light of "good works" which can throw cheer into dark shut-in corners of these sad lives. Your own lives will be made brighter by the light of reflected love.

Lovingly,

Uncle Lisha

Comfort's League of Cousins

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of COMFORT'S immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers.

Membership is restricted to COMFORT subscribers and costs fifty-five cents, only five cents more than the regular subscription to COMFORT which is included. The fifty-five cents makes you a member of the League and gives you an attractive League button with the letters "C. L. O. C." a handsome certificate of membership with your name engrossed thereon, and the privilege of having your name in the letter list, also a paid-in-advance subscription to COMFORT. You continue a League member as long as you keep up your subscription to COMFORT. There are no annual dues, so after you have once joined all you have to do to keep in good standing is to keep your subscription to COMFORT paid up.

How to become a Member

Send fifty-five cents to COMFORT'S Subscription Department, Augusta, Maine, with your request to be admitted into COMFORT'S LEAGUE OF COUSINS, and you will at once receive the League button and your membership certificate and number; you will also receive COMFORT for one year if you are a new subscriber; but if you are already a subscriber your subscription will be renewed or extended one full year beyond date of expiration.

The League numbering over forty thousand members, undoubtedly is the greatest society of young people on earth.

Address all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and they will promptly reach the head of the department for which they are intended.

Love Will Find the Way

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20.)

Some of them were professional gamblers, others gentlemen about town, others profligates of the worst stamp, and a few even thieves, but there was not one among them whose heart was not touched; there was not one among them who did not feel that Paul Reade was a scoundrel too deep to merit any name.

And, singularly enough, there was not a word spoken. One or two of them who had been playing billiards had left their coats behind. They secured them silently, and in solemn procession they left the house.

Paul Reade, alone, deserted, still stood there, apparently unconscious of his position. For the first time in his life, he was bitterly ashamed. For the first time in his life, he genuinely suffered. He raised his head at last and looked about him.

Even Dick Gresham, the gambler, the thief, both in one, had abandoned him.

* * * * * * *

A clock had just sounded the last stroke of three, when softly, noiselessly the front door opened, and a little, darkly-clad figure emerged from the dimly-lighted hall. She stood there for a moment as if meditating upon what she should do. The electric light from across the way fell aslant upon her ghastly countenance. It was dreary and desolate and bleak with a despair that knows no name. Her face was lifted as if in half-unconscious prayer, and then slowly, wearily, she descended the steps that led to the street.

She walked onward, staggering under her weight of mental anguish, but had proceeded less than half a block when a hand was placed lightly upon her shoulder.

"Where are you going?"

The voice startled her, and she glanced up with a little inarticulate cry:

"I don't—know you!" she gasped.

"Yes, you do," he answered kindly but firmly. "I am Underwood, and I am your friend."

"You were—there?"

"Yes. I heard everything, and I have been standing outside your door ever since, because something told me that you would need me. I should not have gone until I had seen you if it had been next week or next month. Where are you going?"

He asked his question with authority, and she shivered and glanced away.

"I—I don't know," she stammered.

"Yes, you do, or if you don't, shall I tell you? You were going to do the first thing which comes into every woman's head when she gets into trouble. You were going to—the river. I don't ask you if that is true, because I know it. I saw it in your face as you passed through the hall and up the stairs. That is the reason that I waited for you."

"But why have you done it? What is it to you?" she cried desperately. "There is nothing else for me. You heard what he said. My own father has disgraced me. My name is upon the tongue of every profligate in New York. Tomorrow my shame will be heralded in every paper in the land. Let me go! My life is my own!"

"There is where you are wrong again. It is not your own. You have no more right to it than you would have to money that was intrusted to your keeping. You have no more right to take the life which God has loaned you than you would have to take mine. You are not going there. You are coming with me."

"But——"

"I don't ask you to go back there to that home which can be a home to you no longer. I don't ask you to sleep again beneath the roof of a father who has proven himself more your enemy than a ravenous beast could be. I am going to take you with me."

"I don't know you!"

"But I know myself, and that is quite enough. You need not be alarmed. I never yet betrayed any one who trusted me, and I am not going to begin on a girl who needs friendship as you do. I did you a wrong once, and I am going to save you now, even against your will, as a sort of atonement."

"You did me a wrong?"

"Yes. A great and grievous one. But now is not the time to tell you of it. It is enough to say that I believed of you what Elliott Dwight believed—what half New York believed—and yet, at the same moment, I doubted. It was that which took me to your house; it was that psychic influence. But the middle of the street is not the place for a conversation at this hour of the night. Come with me."

"I cannot."

"You can and shall. Do you think I would leave you at your command now. Listen to me, little one: I am the friend of—Junius Beckwith."

She shrank from that name as from a blow. Her head fell, and a low, gasping moan issued through her white lips.

"And he—believes me——"

She could not finish the tortured sentence. Underwood took her hand and drew it through his arm with a protecting gesture.

"Never mind what he believes," he said, more gently than he had yet spoken. "You may be sure that you will be safe with me, because—June loves you."

TO BE CONTINUED.

Don't give the baby patent medicine. If you feel you must use advertised remedies try them on yourself or, better still, on the dog. Let your family doctor attend to the baby.

OH BOYS-GIRLS GREAT SPORT! THROW YOUR VOICE

Into a Barrel, under the Table, Back of a Door, Into a TRUNK, DESK in SCHOOL, Any Old Place. Great FUN fooling the TEACHER, Friends, EVERYBODY with Our CLAXOPHONE

Which Sets On your Tongue Unseen, it NEVER FAILS Anybody Imt. Birds etc. The CLAXOPHONE, with Full Instructions, a Set of SECRET-WRITING TRICK, (beats Invs., Ink) a MAGIC-DIAL Trick, (a Great Money maker) ALSO, This Marvelous Novelty-

NEW SCIENTIFIC WONDER "X-RAY" CURIO

With IT you Apparently See thru Clothes, See the bones in your fingers, Lead in Pencil, etc. No end of fun

3 FOR 25c. BIG FUN

WE SEND ALL ABOVE Novelties by pre-paid Mail for 10c. 3 For 25 cts. A nice Souvenir Free with each 25 ct. order.

CLAXO TRICK CO. DEP. X-C. NEW HAVEN, CT.
WE GIVE The BEST and MOST for The MONEY.

1000 SHOT ALL STEEL MAGAZINE AIR RIFLE GIVEN

WE GIVE TO BOYS Choice of Six Guns (on four easy plans) for selling our Magic Healing Wav-o-lena at 25c Box. WE TRUST YOU! Order Seven Boxes Today On Postal Card—we send promptly, Prepaid. Easy to sell—used in every home. Return money as instructed, choosing your Gun according to one of the plans shown in our Big Premium List. Also 200 other Gifts or Big Cash Commission if you prefer. If you are prompt—a special Free Gift.

WAVERLY CO. 202 Tenny Bldg., Monongahela, Pa.

HAMILTON 22 CAL. HUNTING RIFLE WITHOUT COST

350 SHOT REPEATER SEND ORDER TODAY. FREE!

10 YEAR GUARANTEE Watch and Ring GIVEN

Prepaid

We positively give a genuine Stem Wind, Stem Set Watch, Beautifully Engraved Case, guaranteed time-keeper, for selling only 25 of our Large, Beautifully Colored Art and Religious Pictures at 10c each. Order 25 pictures. We trust you. When sold, return money collected, and this Watch and Handsome Stone Set Ring are yours. It's easy our way.

GAIR MFG. CO. 1920 Sunnyside Ave. Dept. 101 CHICAGO

BLANKETS GIVEN

Full size pair, snug warm blankets. Real quality, genuine comfort. Sell 40 packets Garden Spot Seeds at 10c a packet and blankets are yours. Send no money. We trust you. Write today for seeds and catalog.

Lancaster Co. Seed Co., Sta. 7, PARADISE, PA.

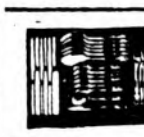
FLASHLIGHT GIVEN

Everybody wants seeds.



OR CHOICE WATCH, CAMERA OR RIFLE

for selling only 40 packs assrtd. Vegetable Seeds at 10c per large pack. Easy to sell. EARN BIG MONEY or premiums. We trust you with seeds until sold. Address;

Send No Money

AMERICAN SEED COMPANY
Lancaster, Pa.
Box 32

SILVEROID SET GIVEN 26-piece, full size table set in popular Daisy pattern. Given for selling 40 packets of Garden Seed at 10c. We trust you with seed. Big Premium List. Write today for seed, stating varieties wanted. DuVernet Seed Co., Dept. 32, Albany, Ga.

Wrestling Book FREE

Be an expert wrestler. Learn at home by mail. Wonderful lessons prepared by world's champions Farmer Burns and Frank Gotch. Free book tells you how. Secret holds, blocks and tricks revealed. Don't delay. Be strong healthy. Handle big men with ease. Write for free book. State age. Farmer Burns, 3041 Range Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

Boys-Girls Many useful premiums sent without cost-flash light, watch, ring, jewelry sets, etc.-for selling 30 pkgs of our assorted flower and vegetable seeds at 10c a package. Send no money, just name and address. KIDNEY SEED CO., Box 563, Monongahela, Penna.

BOYS SELL SCHOOL SUPPLIES and earn big Premiums Free. Box 851-C, Portland, Me.

CIVIL SERVICE Courses for Clerk-Carrier, Rural Carrier, Ry. Mail Clerk, P. M. etc. Unexcelled $15 courses only $5. Sample lesson, illus. catalog FREE.

CIVIL SERVICE CORRES. SCHOOL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

100 neatly printed envelopes, 55c; 500, $1.75, postpaid. WOMBLE PRESS, C, BEARCREEK, N. C.

CARDS, Dice, Magic Goods, Novelties, Catalog Free. D. M. SMYTHE Co., Newark, Mo.

MONEY $ For Wise Men. Key for stamp. E. KERSTE, Box 280, Ottawa, Illinois.

Get The Book FREE! If you would like to read the whole of this wonderful story at once and learn its thrilling conclusion, rather than wait for the monthly installments as they appear in COMFORT, we will be glad to make you a present of the complete story in book form. Send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, and we will send you a copy of the book free and postpaid.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

DOES YOUR STOMACH LET YOU SLEEP

If you toss from side to side and cannot sleep, if you awake frequently, if you are nervous and have a restless, "fluttery" feeling—your trouble is very likely due to gas on the stomach.

Gas on the stomach is caused by undigested food. It is usually the result of eating too much or the wrong kind of food. The way to overcome it is to find out the right kind and the right amount of food which your stomach can handle without allowing it to form gas, and to cleanse the stomach and intestines of all old accumulated poisons and destroy the harmful toxins and bacilli.

There is now offered to the public a preparation having the double action of an intestinal antiseptic and a COMPLETE system cleanser. This preparation, known as Adlerika, acts as follows:

It tends to destroy harmful germs and colon bacilli in the intestinal canal, thus guarding against diseases having their start there.

It is a COMPLETE system cleanser, acting on BOTH upper and lower bowel and removing matter which poisoned the system for months. Adlerika brings out all gases, thus immediately relieving pressure on the heart.

In slight disorders, such as occasional constipation, sour stomach, gas on the stomach and sick headache, ONE spoonful of Adlerika always brings relief. A longer treatment, however, is necessary in cases of obstinate constipation and long standing stomach trouble, preferably under direction of your physician.

Adlerika is sold by leading druggists everywhere. Send for free diet suggestions for "gas on the stomach," and booklet "How to Guard Against Appendicitis." Adlerika Co., Dep. COM., St. Paul, Minn.

The Emporium of Bargains and Opportunities

Pithy Little Advertisements that are Interesting, Instructive and Profitable to Read, for they put you wise to the newest and best in the market and keep you in touch with the world's progress.

AGENTS WANTED

Agents—Sell Necessities like Tea, Coffee, Baking Powder, Flavors, Soaps, Perfumes and other products. Used every day in the year. Repeat over and over again. Every home a customer and regular user. The smart and experienced agents handle this line, why not you. Write today for Money-Making Plan. Don't delay. Territory going fast. American Products Co., 5701 American Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

We Start You In Business, furnishing everything; men and women, $30 to $100 weekly operating our "New System Candy Factories" home anywhere. Booklet free. W. Hillyer Ragsdale, Drawer 5, East Orange, N. J.

Crew Managers—Agents. Opaline paintings are a knock-out. Make old territory new. Seasoned picture men double their sale. Beginners make $1.00 an hour and more with rigs. Greatest hit ever made. Samples and expense money furnished. Write today. Consolidated Portrait Co., Desk A-14, 1029 W. Adams St., Chicago.

Agents—Write for big soap offer. Quick Seller, Big Money Maker. Ho-Ro-Co, 131 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo.

We Start You without a Dollar. Soaps, Extracts, Perfumes—Toilet Goods. Experience unnecessary. Carnation Co., 131 Olive, St. Louis.

Agents—Make a Dollar an Hour. Sell Mendets, a patent patch for instantly mending leaks in all utensils. Sample package free. Collette Mfg. Co., Dept. 452-B, Amsterdam, N. Y.

Sell Necessities. Everybody needs and buys the "Business Guide." Bryant cleared $800.00 in July. Send for sample. It's Free. Nichols Co., Dept. 6B, Naperville, Ill.

Large Shirt Manufacturer wants Agents to sell complete line of shirts direct to wearer. Exclusive patterns. Big values. Free samples. Madison Mills, 503 Broadway, New York.

Agents: $40 a week selling guaranteed hosiery for men, women and children. Must wear 12 months or replaced free. Write for sample outfit. Thomas Mfg. Co., Class 119, Dayton, O.

Agents! 1921's Greatest Sensation. 11-piece toilet article set selling like blazes at $1.75 with $1.00 dressmaker's shears free to each customer. Get lined up for Christmas rush. E. M. Davis Co., Dept. 505, Chicago.

350% Profit. Quick Seller. Klean-Rite Magic Washing Compound. Washes Clothes Without Rubbing. Samples Free. Bestever Products Co., 1943-M Irving Park Blvd. Chicago

Agents:—$100 Weekly. Automobile owners wild with enthusiasm. Marvelous invention doubles power, mileage, efficiency. Saves cost first day. Sensational sales everywhere. Territory going like wildfire. $26 sample outfit and Ford Car free. Write quick. Ovee Co., Dept. 113, Louisville, Ky.

Men and women make $100 upwards weekly selling greatest labor and money saving household necessity. Big repeater. Good Crew Managers proposition. Free sample and particulars. Rolly Co., L-3 Hastings, Nebraska.

Everybody uses Extracts. Sell Duo Double Strength Extracts. Complete line Necessities. Big repeaters. Write today. Duo Co., Dept. E 41, Attica, N. Y.

Agents—Steady Income. Large manufacturer of Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods, etc., wishes representative in each locality. Big profits, honest goods. Whole or spare time. Credit given. Send for particulars. Freeport Mfg. Co., 60 Main St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Agents! A sale in every home for our beautiful Dress Goods, Silks and General Yard Goods. Quick sales! Big profits! Large book of 1000 handsome fabric samples. Write today. National Importing & Mfg. Co., Dept. 24X, 573 Broadway, New York.

Bring Home The Bacon selling stain remover. Removes ink, iron rust, grass and fruit stains. Write for free samples today. C. H. Stuart & Co., 47 Broadway, Newark, New York.

Agents $7 a day taking orders for New Stove Transformer for home use. Substitutes kerosene for coal, and generates gas for cooking, baking and heating. Used year around. Sample furnished. Parker Mfg. Co., 317 Mat St., Dayton, Ohio.

Agents, Specialty Men, sell "presto" polishing cloth on demonstration, every housewife buys at sight, profits big, repeat orders, sample free. Premier Products Corp., 1451 Broadway, New York City.

Ford cover for carburetor and intake pipe, patented. Adds 25% more mileage and power. Put on any Ford motor in 2 minutes. Price $1.50. Special price in quantities. Air Friction Carburetor Co., 9108 Madison St., Dayton, Ohio.

We Pay $200 monthly salary, furnish rig and expenses to all who qualify introducing guaranteed poultry and stock powders. Bigler Company, X314, Springfield, Illinois.

Sells like hot cakes. Big profits. New ironing wax pad and asbestos iron rest. Clamps board. Perfumes clothes. Working outfit 10c. Yankee Manufacturers, 380 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED

Be successful Agent! Free sample outfit—worth $2.25. "Quality" beauty preparations. Make big money. Extensive line. Established 50 years. Lynas Co., 200 Logansport, Ind.

General Agents. Something new. Whirlwind seller. "Repeat" washing powder. Washes clothes without rubbing. Women throw away washboards. Big profits. Exclusive territory. Write today free package. Kittredge Co., 2 Putnam St., Tunkhannock, Pa.

Sell washing tablets that are different. They work quicker, sell easier and at a greater profit. Get our proposition. Newton & Co., 4 Main St., Newark, New York.

Agents—New Invention. Harper's Ten-Use brush set and fibre broom. It sweeps, washes and dries upstairs windows, scrubs and mops floors and does 5 other things. Big profits; easy seller. Free trial offer. Harper Brush Works, Dept. A, Fairfield, Iowa.

Agents—Big money $8 to $16 a day. Aluminum handle cutlery set. Brand new. You display and take orders. We deliver and collect. Pay you daily. Sample free. Try it out. Jennings Mfg. Co., Dept. 1623, Dayton, Ohio.

Wonderful Seller. 96c profit every dollar sales. Deliver on spot. License unnecessary. Sample Free. Mission Bead Factory C, 2421 Smith St., Detroit, Mich.

We Pay $36 a Week and expenses and give a Ford Auto to men to introduce poultry and stock compounds. Imperial Co., D 1, Parsons, Kan.

Agents—Fast-selling household specialty; big profits; liberal terms. Write H. E. Bishop Co., St. Louis, Mo. Dept. 2.

$10.00 A Day Easily Earned; Seven Bar Boxes Assorted Soaps, Perfumes, Combination Boxes; Selling Like Hot Cakes. Men, Women, 100% profit. Old Established firm. Crofts & Reed Co., Dept. 172, Chicago.

Agents: $8 a day taking orders for Empire Tire repair. Absolutely guaranteed. Build up a big permanent business. Biggest opportunity ever offered to our Representatives. Write for territory and free sample. Parker Mfg. Co., 317 Bark St., Dayton, Ohio.

Women Wanted—Reliable firm wants earnest, refined women to introduce Priscilla Fabrics, Underwear, Hosiery, etc. Good pay. Samples, instructions furnished. Write today. Fitzcharles Co., 121 Fitzcharles Bldg., Trenton, N. J.

Agents—Get our wonderful big swatch Tailoring line—119 samples at $23.00, $28.00, $32.00, $38.00 per suit, $15.00 cheaper than store prices. $5.00 profit and up per suit. We deliver and collect. Hustlers write D. A. Kennedy, 202AA, S. Green, Chicago, Ill.

Sales Agents. Year round employment. No layoffs. Newest hosiery. Written guarantee of satisfaction or new hose free. Liberal pay. Write for samples. Jennings Mfg. Co., Dept. 623, Dayton, Ohio.

Agents, Sell Wolverine Laundry Soap; 150 Other household necessities. Big line. Big profits. Quick repeaters. Free instruction. Write quick for terms. Wolverine Soap Co., 293 Water St., Portland, Mich.

Sell Minitmend For Tires And Tubes—cost 2c. repair; surpasses vulcanizing, saves 500%. Every auto and accessory dealer buys. Profits amazing. Shaw made $21 first day. Hart $155 first week. Particulars and free sample. The Continental Rubber Co., Dept. 96, Philadelphia, Pa.

Gold Sign Letters for stores and office windows. Photo Pillow Tops, Portraits, Frames, Sheet Pictures, Medalions, Waterproof Aprons, Novelties. Samples, catalogue free. Thirty days credit. Jas. C. Bailey Co., Desk A-1, Chicago, Ill.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS

Used Correspondence Courses at less than half original price. Any school, any subject, for men or women. Send for free price list of 1000 courses. Students' Exchange, 1966 Broadway, New York. Courses bought.

FEMALE HELP WANTED

$6-$18 a dozen decorating pillow tops at home; pleasant work; experience unnecessary; particulars for stamp. Tapestry Paint Co., 104, LaGrange, Ind.

Become Dress Designers. $135 month. Sample lessons free. Write immediately. Franklin Institute, Dept. W 501, Rochester, N. Y.

Women—Girls—Get Government Jobs. $90 month. List positions—free. Franklin Institute, Dept. W9, Rochester, N. Y.

Be Expert Milliners. $125 month. Learn while earning. Sample lessons free. Franklin Institute, Dept. W800, Rochester, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE PLAYS

Photoplay Ideas Wanted By 48 Companies. $25-$500 paid. Experience unnecessary; details Free. Producers League, 311, St. Louis.

MISCELLANEOUS

Remnant Store, 1510 Vine St., Cincinnati, O. Greatest Dry Goods Bargains on Earth. Agents and Storekeepers supplied.

Switches made from combings. The new way. Write me. Mrs. E. Vandervoort, Davenport, Iowa.

Don't buy a Bicycle Motor Attachment until you get our catalogue and prices. Shaw Mfg. Co., Dept. 3, Galesburg, Kansas.

OLD MONEY WANTED

$2 to $500 Each paid for hundreds of Old & Odd coins. Send 10cts. for Ill'st Coin Value Book, 4x6. You may have valuable coins. Get Posted. We pay cash. Clarke Coin Co., Ave 20, Le Roy, N. Y.

SALESMEN WANTED

Salesmen: Make extra money easily. Sell our Accident & Sickness policies in your spare time. $5000 death, $25 weekly benefit for $10 yearly. Address Underwriters, Dept. F-27, Newark, N. J.

INVENTIONS

Inventions Wanted. Cash or royalty for ideas. Adam Fisher Mfg. Co., 91, St. Louis, Mo.

FARMS FOR SALE

$500 Gets Farm With 5 Cows. Team; 125 acres; 6-room house, barn, all $2500. Details page 23 Catalog 1100 Bargains. Free. Strout Farm Agency, 150 BG, Nassau St., N. Y. City.

The State Land Settlement Board of California has a number of desirable irrigated farms of twenty and forty acres in San Joaquin Valley for sale to bona fide homeseekers on 36½ years' time. 5 per cent interest annually. Your opportunity to acquire a farm in winterless California. All deciduous fruits profitably grown; alfalfa is a paying crop. Ideal conditions for stock and poultry. Good schools and unsurpassed roads. Fruit associations market your crops, relieving you of marketing problems. You can farm all year in California. Go this fall and see. State Board's booklet, also Santa Fe folder describing San Joaquin Valley, mailed free on request. C. L. Seagraves, Gen. Colonization Ag't, Santa Fe Ry., 913 Ry. Ex., Chicago.

Want to hear from owner having farm for sale; give particulars and lowest price. John J. Black, Comfort St., Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Ladies—Earn Money Crocheting, Sewing, tatting, making aprons and caps. Patterns and plans 35c. Send remittance now. Returned if desired. Kenwood Pattern Co., 6238 So. Park Ave., Chicago.

HELP—MALE & FEMALE

Earn $25 Weekly, writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary; details Free. Press Syndicate, 451, St. Louis, Mo.

Government Positions Are Fine: $1400, $1600, $1800 at start, up to $2300 and $2600. Exams everywhere. Write Today for full information. Patterson Civil Service School, Box K, Rochester, N. Y.

Clerks, for Postal Mail and Government Field Service. $125 month. Experience unnecessary. For free particulars of examinations, write J. Leonard, (former Civil Service examiner) 7 Equitable Bldg., Washington, D. C.

FARM LANDS

Own Your Own Orange Grove In Fruitland Park, Florida's finest lake-jeweled highland section, way above sea level. A few dollars a month will buy it. Plant peaches, a quick money crop, with oranges, and the peaches may be made to pay not only for your land and orange grove but yield a profit besides. We can produce you a better orange grove for less money than anyone in the State and in Florida's greatest section. Fruitland Park is best. We can prove it. Write for a book of actual photographs, the interesting story of a Fruitland Park farm and why peaches may for it. Lake County Land Owner's Association, 298 Palm Ave., Fruitland Park, Lake County, Florida.

Productive Lands. Crop Payment or easy terms—along the Northern Pacific Ry., in Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. Free literature. Say what state interests you. H. W. Byerly, 14 Northern Pacific Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

PATENT ATTORNEYS

Patents—Write for free Guide Book, and Evidence of Conception Blank. Send model or sketch and description for free opinion of its patentable nature. Highest References. Prompt Service. Reasonable Terms. Victor J. Evans & Co., 641 Ninth, Washington, D. C.

Inventors—Desiring to secure patent should write for our book, "How To Get Your Patent." Send model or sketch and description for opinion of its patentable nature. Randolph & Co., Dept. 112, Washington, D. C.

Patents—Send for free book. Contains valuable information for inventors. Send sketch of your invention for Free Opinion of its patentable nature. Prompt service. (Twenty years' experience). Talbert & Talbert, 402 Talbert Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Patents Promptly procured. Moderate Fees. Best References. Send Sketch or Model. George P. Kimmel, Master of Patent Law, 27-D, Loan & Trust Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Patents Secured. Submit sketch or model of your invention for examination. Write for Record of Invention blank and valuable book, Free. J. L. Jackson & Co., 230 Ouray Building, Washington, D. C.

Inventors. Send sketch or model of invention for advice. Write for Evidence of Disclosure form and Book on Patents, Free. Prompt Service. Merton-Roberts & Company, 169 Mather Building, Washington, D. C.

MALE HELP WANTED

All men, women, boys, girls, over 18, willing to accept Government Positions, $133, write immediately, Ozment, 104, St. Louis.

Be a Railway Traffic Inspector! $110 to $250 monthly, expenses paid after 3 months' spare-time study. Splendid opportunities. Position guaranteed or money refunded. Write for Free Booklet G-5. Stand. Business Training Inst., Buffalo, N. Y.

Government needs Railway Mail Clerks, $133-$192 month. Write for free specimen questions. Columbus Institute, A-2 Columbus, O.

Boys—Men. Become automobile experts. $45 week. Learn while earning. Write Franklin Institute, Dept. W 410, Rochester, N. Y.

Be an Expert Penman; Wonderful Device guides your hand; corrects your writing in few days. Complete Outline Free. Write C. J. Ozment, 53, St. Louis, Mo.

Firemen, Brakemen, Baggagemen, $140—$200, Colored Porters by Railroads everywhere. Experience unnecessary. 828 Ry. Bureau, East St. Louis, Ills.

Firemen, Brakemen, for railroads nearest their homes—Everywhere, beginners $150, later $250 monthly (which position?). Railway Association, Desk M-17, Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOOKS

Free Book. Prophet Elijah must first come said Jesus. Convincing Bible Evidence. Send at once. C. Megiddo Mission, Rochester, N. Y.

4 Books, stigmatized, ecstatic Seer Emmerich, Nativity, Egypt, Cana; for 20c, postpaid. Klein Co., Brandon, Minn.

HELP WANTED

U. S. Government wants Railway Mail Clerks, Commence $135 month. Steady positions. Common education sufficient. Sample examination questions free. Write immediately. Franklin Institute, Dept. W12, Rochester, N. Y.

Wanted—Men, Women, age 17 to 65, for U. S. Govt. positions. Experience unnecessary. Information free. Chicago Civil Service College, Dept. K, Chicago, Ill.

Government Positions. Men, Women, 18, over. Railway Mail, Postoffice. Examination soon. $1400—$1800 year. Experience unnecessary. Particulars free. Write Columbia School of Civil Service, 464 Pope Bldg., Washington, D. C.

MAGAZINES

Ambitious Writers send today for Free copy, America's leading magazine for writers of Photoplays, Stories, Poems, Songs. Instructive, helpful. Writer's Digest, 609 Butler Bldg., Cincinnati.

6 Different Business Publications covering Accounting, Advertising, Administration, Merchandising, Salesmanship and Taxation all prepaid only 25c. Value $1.50. Instructive, educational, practical. Walhamore Company, LaFayette Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHOTOPLAYS, STORIES

Wanted—Men and women ambitious to make money writing Stories and Movie Plays. Send for wonderful Free Book that tells how. Address Authors' Press, Dept. 31, Auburn, N Y.

PHOTO FINISHING

Special Trial Offer. Your next Kodak film developed 5c. Prints 2c each. Moser & Son, 2122 St. James Ave., Cincinnati, O.

World's Finest kodak photo new art style. Entirely different, never seen before. Roll dev. 5c, prints 2c each. Malden Art Co., 5 Cin., O.

Old Tintypes, Daguerreotypes or Faded Pictures of loved ones can be restored so as to produce beautiful enlargements and perfect likenesses under our new process. Individual pictures may also be produced out of groups. Satisfactory results guaranteed. Prompt work. Fair prices. Roanoke Photo Finishing Co., 502 Bell Ave., Roanoke, Va.

Better Pictures—Your kodak film developed 4c—prints 4c each. Cameron Photo Co., C 3418 Burch Ave., Cincinnati, O.

MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS

$35.00 Profit Nightly. Small capital starts you. No experience needed. Our machines are used, endorsed by Govt. institutions. Cat. free. Atlas Moving Picture, 471 Morton Bldg., Chicago.

America's Greatest Fortunes have been made in the moving picture business. Small investment needed. We furnish complete theatre equipment. Easy payments. Openings everywhere. Catalog free. Dept. 800 Monarch Theatre Supply Co., 724 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

HONEY FOR SALE

For Sale Select quality Clover and Basswood honey. 1921 crop. Sample 15c. Price List free. M. V. Facey, Preston, Minn.

Honey and Cheese of Superior Quality packed in family size packages, write today for Free price list. E. F. Rosa, Monroe, Wis.

Honey—Buy the best and save money. Send for price list A. Sample postpaid for 15c. Wilfred Schaefer, Box 259, Hicksville, New York.

AUTOMOBILES

Automobile Owners, Garagemen, Mechanics, Repairmen, send for free copy of our current issue. It contains helpful, instructive information on overhauling, ignition troubles, wiring, carburetors, storage batteries, etc. Over 120 pages, illustrated. Send for free copy today. Automobile Digest, 525 Butler Bldg., Cincinnati.

HOME WEAVING

Looms—Only $9.90—Big Money in Weaving Rugs, Carpets, portieres, etc., at home; from rags and waste material. Weavers are rushed with orders. Send for free loom book, it tells all about the weaving business and our wonderful $9.90 and other low-priced, easily-operated looms. Union Loom Works, 272 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

FOR PHOTOGRAPHERS

Have You a Camera? Write for Free sample of our big magazine, showing how to make better pictures and earn money. American Photography, 230 Camera House, Boston, 17, Mass.

MAIL ORDER BUSINESS

I Made $25,000 with small Mail Order Business. Sample article & plan 25c. Free Booklet. Tells How For Stamp. AC Scott, Cohoes, N. Y.

STORY WRITERS WANTED

Authors:—Stories, poems, photo plays etc. are wanted for publication. Submit Mss. Literary Bureau, C4, Hannibal, Mo.

FARM WANTED

Wanted To hear from owner of good farm for sale. State cash price, full description. D. F. Bush, Minneapolis, Minn.

STAMPING NAMES

Stamp Names on key checks. Make $19 per 100. Send 25c for sample and inst. Either Sex. C. Keytag Co., Cohoes, N. Y.

Four Wheel Chairs in December

621 Is COMFORT'S Total to Date

The four December wheel chairs go to Abner Van Buren Garrison, Dabney, Ark. 117; Henry W. Kreger, 144 East Webster St., Portland, Oregon, 93; Kenneth Rose, Guthrie Center, Iowa, 92; Glen G Grogan, R. R. 1, Wanette, Okla., 63. The figures following their respective names indicate the number of subscriptions sent in by them or by their friends for them.

Abner Van Buren Garrison, age 25, has been helpless from birth, never able to walk, has very little use of his hands and is dumb. His height is 5 feet and his weight only 77 pounds. His mother writes that a wheel chair, which was given him some time ago, was much enjoyed by him and was a great help to her in caring for him, but it is broken beyond repair, and so the COMFORT wheel chair that I am sending this unfortunate cripple will be a blessing to both.

Henry W. Kreger, age 32, has been slightly crippled from birth, but was able to earn his own living until about six years ago when rheumatism of the joints set in and has progressed to the degree that, although he now suffers but little pain, his joints have become enlarged and so stiffened that he is almost helpless, his knees, feet and hands being badly crippled. He is dependent on his father and brother, at present living in his brother's home. During the past two years has been confined to his bed most of the time. Mrs. Jessie Eisenhardt became interested in his behalf and sent in a club of 87 subscriptions toward his COMFORT wheel chair which, as she writes me, will be a great help to him.

CATHERINE DENTINGER ENJOYING HER COMFORT WHEEL CHAIR.

Kenneth Rose, age 6, has been crippled from birth and suffers from weak spine and nervous trouble; has never walked.

Glen G. Grogan, age 8, is entirely helpless and unable even to talk, caused by injury to spine suffered at birth.

I hope these December wheel chairs will reach their destinations in time to bring a ray of Christmas cheer into the dreary lives of these four afflicted shutins; and surely it must be with a sense of joyful satisfaction that you, who have helped them to obtain these much needed comforts, will learn of the beneficent results of your efforts.

Begin the new year right by doing your utmost to help the many unfortunate cripples on our waiting list to obtain the wheel chairs for need of which they are suffering but have no hope of relief except through the assistance of COMFORT'S Wheel-Chair Club.

With very best wishes for a happy and prosperous new year, I am,

Sincerely yours,
W. H. GANNETT,
Publisher of COMFORT.

P. S. For the information of our many new subscribers let me explain that for each and every 150 one-year subscriptions to COMFORT, at 50 cents each, sent in either singly or in clubs by persons who direct that they are to be credited to COMFORT'S WHEEL-CHAIR CLUB instead of claiming the premiums to which they would be entitled, I give a FIRST-CLASS INVALID WHEEL CHAIR to some needy crippled Shut-in and pay the freight, too. It is a large and expensive premium for me to give for that number of subscriptions, but I am always glad to do my part a little faster each month than you do yours.

Enjoys Her Wheel Chair Very Much

Republic, R. 2, Ohio.

Dear M. Gannett:

I am sending you a picture of Catherine in her COMFORT wheel chair. She enjoys her chair very much. I am thanking you and every one who was so kind to help her get her chair.

Yours truly,
Mrs. Theo C. Dentinger.

COMFORT'S Roll of Honor

The Roll of Honor comprises the names of those who have sent five or more subscriptions, or a dollar or more in money, to credit of the Wheel-Chair Club during the month previous. Following each name is the number of subscriptions or amount of cash sent.

Mrs. Jessie Eisenhardt, Wash., for Henry Kreger, 87 subs; Mrs. Robert I. Grogan, Okla., for Glen Gordon Grogan, 63; Mrs. Maggie Nissen, Del., for Russell Harry Williams, 42; Mrs. John D. Sparks, Calif., for Lennie Olene Sorelle, 34; Mrs. John Blalock, N. C., for John Blalock, Jr., 32; Mrs. Julia Wyatt, Ark., for Ina Smithson, 20; Mrs. R. H. Haddock, Fla., for Margaret Ward, 10; Mrs. H. E. Mantooth, Okla., for G. A. Cole, 9; Mrs. T. F. Melton, Tenn., for Johnie E. Melton, 9; Mrs. Chas. Siegel, Oregon, for Henry Kreger, 6; Mrs. Forrest Little, Ohio, for Annie Matlock, 5; Mrs. T. E. Peacock, Ala., for Clydics Lonease Peacock, 5; Frankie M. Norton, Okla., for Ira M. Norton, 5; Harriet A. Bates, Iowa, for Kenneth Rose, 5 subs and $5.00; Mrs. M. J. Garrison, Ark., for Abner Garrison, $10.00; Country Culture Club, Mo., for general, $2.50; Mrs. Josie Stewart, Minn., for general, $1.00; Lulu O. Snead, N. C., for general, 1.00; Mrs. Lillian Cram, N. Y., for general, $1.00.

Every great war has left a country with three great armies; an army of mourners, an army of cripples, and an army of thieves.

$1 Brings HARTMAN'S Richly Upholstered 7-Piece Suite

Quarter-Sawed and Solid Oak Throughout

Send only $1.00 for this complete suite of library, parlor or living room furniture—seven splendid massive pieces—so gracefully tapered in design. Use it 30 days, on free trial; then, if you don't say that it is even more than you expected, ship it back and we return your $1 and pay transportation charges both ways.

Important!

Do not confuse this fine Hartman suite with furniture which may look like it in pictures, but is inferior in construction and finish. Every Hartman piece is made to give lasting service as well as to have an elegant appearance. Note also the handsome upholstering, spring seats, ornamented backs, rounded arms and quarter-sawed oak in this special suite.

A Full Year to Pay

Only by seeing this splendid quarter-sawed and solid oak suite can you realize how it will add to the appearance of your home. Only by examining it can you appreciate what a record-breaking bargain it is at our smashed price. Furniture like this—elegant, comfortable, massive—can be bought nowhere else at anywhere near the price nor on such liberal terms.

Handsome Fumed Finish!

ARM ROCKER, solid oak with quarter-sawed top panel and rounded arm rests; seat 18x19 inches. Width over all, 25¾ inches. Height of back from seat, 21½ inches. Bent elm runners. SIDE ROCKER, solid oak with quarter-sawed oak top rail; seat 16x14 inches. Width over all, 17 inches. Height, 33½ inches. ARM CHAIR, 37 inches high, and SIDE CHAIR, 36 inches high, with seat 16x14 inches. Table and chairs stand on noiseless glides. Backs and seats upholstered in durable imitation Spanish brown leather. Comfortable spring seats. TABOURETTE, 16½ inches high with 10-inch top, is solid oak. BOOK BLOCKS, heavy enough to support a liberal number of volumes. Shipped (fully boxed, "knocked down" to lessen freight charges) from factory in Central Indiana, Western New York State or Chicago warehouse. TABLE, solid oak with top 24x36 inches. Has a shelf 7 inches wide. Height from floor, 29 inches.

Order by No. 112DMA7. Reduced Bargain Price, $37.95. Send $1 now. Balance $3 monthly.

FREE Bargain Catalog

368 pages of the world's greatest smashed price bargains. Everything you need for the home—the pick of the markets in Furniture, rugs, linoleum, stoves, watches, silverware, dishes, washing machines, sewing machines, aluminum ware, phonographs, gas engines, cream separators, etc. Everything sold on our easy monthly payment plan and 30 days' Free Trial. Post card or letter brings this 368-page Bargain Book by return mail FREE.

"Let Hartman Feather YOUR Nest"

HARTMAN
Furniture & Carpet Co.
Dept. 4212 Chicago, Illinois

Copyright, 1922, by Hartman's, Chicago

Hartman Furniture & Carpet Co.
Dept. 4212 Chicago, Illinois

Enclosed find $1. Send the 7-Piece Living Room Suite No. 112DMA7 as described. I am to have 30 days' free trial. If not satisfied, will ship it back and you will refund my $1 and pay freight both ways. If I keep it, I will pay $3 per month until the full price, $37.95, is paid. Title remains with you until final payment is made.

Name.....

Street Address.....

R. F. D..... Box No.....

Town..... State.....

State Your Occupation..... Color.....

VOL. XXXIV
NO. 4

PEACE NUMBER

COMFORT

The Key to Happiness and Success in over a Million and a Quarter Homes

Published at Augusta Maine

FEBRUARY
1922

The Nations Gather at Uncle Sam's Round Table to Limit Armaments and Promote Peace.

See Editorial, page 2, also Illustrated Sketches of Delegates, page 10

Copyright 1921 (Trade-Mark Registered), by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Incorporated.

Table of Contents on Page 8.

COMFORT EDITORIAL

THOUGHTS THAT BREATHE AND WORDS THAT BURN

What the Armament Conference Is Doing to Avert War through International Understanding

THE importance of the Conference on Limitation of Armament, now in session at Washington, cannot be overestimated. The war-scathed, debt-ridden, tax-oppressed peoples look to it with hope akin to despair for early amelioration of their condition, and to avert the threatened cataclysm of another world war already foreshadowed by the storm clouds that are brooding over the western shores of the Pacific Ocean. International jealousies due to bitter rivalry in attempted territorial and trade expansion, such as held Europe at hair-trigger nervous tension until it exploded into the World War, are rife in far eastern Asia where the conflicting interests of the East and the West are contending for mastery.

Although, excepting two sporadic instances of success on the American continent, all previous efforts to bring about a reduction or limitation of military and naval establishments by international agreement have failed dismally, the present Conference at Washington bids fair to pass into history as memorable for its world-wide beneficent achievement.

Why Previous Armament and Peace Conferences Have Failed

Passing without mention the many older parleys, and coming down to the famous conference of the powers that fought and finally crushed Napoleon, known as The Congress of Vienna, which assembled in 1814, after the great French Emperor's defeat and banishment, and made over the map of Europe, the record shows that on its program was a proposition to limit armaments in the interest of economy and peace, but although the victors divided the spoils of war they were too mistrustful of each other to agree on any plan to reduce or restrict armaments. The consequence was that armaments increased as national fears and jealousies grew, and the history of Europe has continued to be a shameful record of a succession of land-grabbing wars.

In 1818, three years after the adjournment of the Congress of Vienna, the world saw the first instance of an international agreement for limitation of armament in the treaty between the United States and Great Britian limiting their respective naval forces on the American lakes to a total of four small vessels not to exceed a hundred tons each, to be assigned for service, one vessel each on Lakes Champlain and Ontario, and the other two on the upper lakes. This treaty, the product of amity and mutual confidence, is still in force and has not only saved the United States and Canada many millions of dollars in expensive naval armament, but its spirit has been carried further without formal agreement so that these two countries present the unique spectacle of three thousand miles of international boundary totally devoid of any form of fortification on either side. Instead of forts and garrisons to guard the border the United States and Canada have a permanent joint Boundary Commission to settle all questions that may arise in regard to the boundary, while the frontiers of European countries bristle with extensive fortifications and big guns at every strategic point.

The only other successful armament conference was 84 years later, in 1902, when Chile and Argentine Republic, after settling their boundary dispute by arbitration instead of by war, agreed to reduce their respective navies to specified proportions by selling certain of their ships of war, and not to increase their naval forces during the next five years. As in the case of the United States and Canada, the treaty was lived up to and has been productive of permanent cordiality and mutual confidence between these two South American republics.

Europe meanwhile developed into an armed camp, and the expense of maintaining its continually increasing armies and navies grew to be so intolerably burdensome that in 1899 Czar Nicholas II of Russia summoned the nations to "A Conference on Disarmament" (the name was afterwards changed to "Peace Conference") to be held at The Hague in Holland, the purpose of which, as stated in the Czar's invitation, was "to put an end to these incessant armaments and to seek the means of warding off the calamities which are threatening the whole world; such is the supreme duty imposed on all states." Representatives of twenty-six nations, including the United States, met, debated, and did some research work through committees, but accomplished little or nothing of practical value. For the prevention of war they proposed nothing other than general arbitration treaties the utter futility of which was painfully demonstrated by the outbreak of the World War. As to limitation of armaments, the chief object for which the Conference was called, they were unable to agree on anything except to recommend that the governments "take up the study" of the subject.

Due largely to Germany's gigantic military and rapidly growing naval establishments in connection with her inordinate ambition for territorial and trade expansion, the mental atmosphere of Europe had become, by 1907, so charged with apprehension of the imminence of a great war that the call, issued in that year, for the "Second Hague Conference" expressly stated that limitation of armament was not to be considered or discussed at the meeting. Nevertheless the American delegation brought up the subject, but the Conference refused to act on it otherwise than by repeating the useless recommendation of the previous Hague Conference. Seven years later Germany, having completed her preparations and matured her plan, sprung the World War, confidently expecting that, with the help of Austria, she would win a speedy victory. Prior to the war the attitude of Germany was enough to render general limitation of armament impossible. And since the war, although general limitation of armament is one of the stated purposes of the League of Nations, that international alliance has neither made any effort, nor proposed any plan, for accomplishing this object.

Important Factors Favorable to Success of the Washington Conference

The defeat of Germany, resulting in the loss of her navy and the enforced reduction of her military equipment to proportions that are no longer formidable, has eliminated the one insuperable obstacle that previously barred the possibility of general limitation of armament. Before the war Germany's navy was second to that of Great Britain, and growing so rapidly that it was straining the resources of the latter country to pursue her policy of maintaining her naval strength at double that of any other country—meaning, of course, Germany, whose aims she feared, and with good reason as was proved by the World War which Germany would have won but for the vast superiority of the British navy. Since the war Britain has abandoned her former two-to-one naval program, as she has no suspicion of any hostile designs on the part of the United States whose naval strength now ranks second in the world. Japan ranks third with a navy which, since the elimination of the German menace from the Far East, is larger than is warranted by her resources or required for protection of her legitimate interests. Yet she is building ships in accordance with a plan for naval increase so large as to raise a suspicion that she has ambitious designs that conflict with the proper interests of the United States.

Fortunately our country is so located geographically that it can regulate the size of its standing army without much regard to the military establishments of other nations, and as only the sea powers can reach us to do much harm the direct interest of the United States in limitation of armament applies chiefly to naval armament. Great Britain, the United States and Japan are the only important sea powers, and as an armed conflict between these two great English-speaking nations, which would be ruinous to both and destructive of the white man's civilization, is unthinkable, Japan's ambitious naval program with her attitude as to our interests in the Pacific and her aggressive policy in China constituted the outstanding bar to reduction of naval armament on the part of the United States. Such was the situation when the Armament Conference assembled in Washington on November 12th at President Harding's invitation.

At the opening session Secretary of State Hughes, head of the American delegation, made a direct hit, and a strong one, at the pivotal problem by proposing that the United States, Great Britain and Japan consent to an immediate reduction of their naval armaments by scrapping some of their largest battleships, and accept for the next ten years a limitation that will bring the British and American navies down to a specified equal strength and restrict the Japanese navy to three-fifths the strength of either of the other two, and that they agree to a cessation of naval construction through that period except for replacement within the allotted strength. The British consented willingly and promptly, and the Japanese, after holding out a while in an ineffectual effort to get the ratio changed in their behalf from three-five to seven-ten, finally agreed to the original proposal. This arrangement is productive of two highly beneficial results; it very largely reduces the naval expenses of these three nations and at the same time operates as a practical guaranty against war between them, for it allows each a naval force sufficient for defence but inadequate for offensive operations.

In view of what has been said it does not need to be explained that this limitation of naval armament would not have been agreed to by these three powers without also arranging an adjustment of their conflicting interests in China and in the Pacific, and thereby removing the conditions there (especially the strained relations between Japan and the United States) which were as surely fomenting a World War as were the previous conditions in Europe—but with this difference, that in the case of the Pacific the United States in all probability would be the first, instead of the last, to receive the shock of battle. Aside from the menace to the Panama canal and to our important island possessions, the United States never can allow any nation, singly or in combination with others, to assume mastery over the Pacific Ocean, or to extort from China exclusive or preferential commercial privileges, as Japan has been doing by successive encroachments in defiance of what is known as the "Open Door" policy of the United States in insisting on equal rights for all nations to trade with China.

The delegates representing the United States, Great Britain, France and Japan in the Conference have agreed on a four-party treaty designed to smooth out the causes of irritation in the Pacific; and it is expected that this treaty will receive the approval of the U. S. Senate, which is necessary to make it effective. The Conference is making progress with encouraging prospects of ultimate success in the direction of rehabilitating the rights of China as a sovereign nation, including the recognition of the "Open Door" policy. Thus it appears that all the matters which most deeply concern the interests of the United States have a most favorable standing in the Conference. The problems involved in the limitation of European military armaments are being earnestly considered by the delegates of the nations most interested. They must cut down their armies or face the alternative of national bankruptcy. The Conference now expects to finish its work before February, and the final results will be discussed in our March number.

COMFORT'S EDITOR.

COMFORT, PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY W. H. GANNETT, PUB., INC., AT AUGUSTA, MAINE.

Subscription price in United States and United States Possessions 50c a year; Canadian subscriptions 65c a year, foreign countries $1.00 a year. No premiums or prizes will be given on Canadian or foreign subscriptions. Please send your renewal just as soon as your subscription expires. We can not send you even one copy of COMFORT, after expiration, until your subscription is Renewed. If you do not get your magazine by the 25th of the month write us and we will send you another copy free. Please notify us immediately in case you move, so that we can change your address and see that you do not miss a single copy. Remember that we must have your former address, as well as your new address to make the change. Be sure to send both. We do not supply back numbers.

Entered at the post office at Augusta, Maine as second-class mail matter. Copyright, 1922 (Trade-Mark Registered), by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

1922 is richly rewarding Chicago Mail Order Customers

Be Sure to State Size

Money's Worth or Money Back

~~$15.00~~ Value for Only

$8.95

Delivered FREE

All Silk Canton Crepe Dress,

Embroidered in Oriental Colorings

Look at the low price! Look at the style! Have you ever in your life seen anything to equal this fascinating model? Has your money ever served you so well or saved you so much? Get one of these dresses. You can't afford to miss this bargain.

Colors—New Copenhagen Blue, Rich Oriental Brown or Mohawk (New Golden Brown), also Black. Women's sizes, 32 to 44 bust. Misses' sizes, 14 to 20 years, 32 to 38 bust. Correct, fashionable skirt length. Order size and color.

130SD301—Price, delivered free $8.95

Money's Worth or Money Back!

You run no risk buying from us. If you are dissatisfied, for any reason whatever, return the goods at OUR expense and we will return your money—in full to the last penny. We pay return charges if the goods don't meet with your high expectations.

~~$1.50~~ Value for Only

99¢

Delivered FREE

Oh, Girls!

Here's the Sweetest Little Dress you ever saw. Just like Mother's.

Child's Jumper Dress, Complete with Waist

Think of it! You get this stylish, becoming Jumper Dress of fine quality Chambray Gingham, trimmed with Checked Gingham and a white lawn waist and Patent Leather Belt to go with it, all for 99c. Colors—Blue, Rose or Green. 6 to 14 year sizes. State size and color.

130SD303—Delivered free.... 99c

We Prepay Postage!

The catalog price you pay is the total cost—no added postage. We prepay delivery charges right to your door, no matter where you live. Another important saving to you.

Boys and Girls will find the Catalog interesting

The Catalog Explains All

FREE

298-Page Catalog

Send for our wonderful 298-page Catalog. 5000 real styles. 5000 real bargains. Hundreds illustrated in full colors. Our catalog explains how we have cut our profits in order to give you lower prices than ever.

More than 5000 Bargains, Selected from more than One Million Samples by America's Most Expert Buyers. Send for this FREE BOOK and you'll never buy "Old Styles" nor Spend Too Much Money.

WE PAY ALL DELIVERY CHARGES

Jumper Bargain!

~~$1.29~~ Value only 77¢

Delivered FREE

Smart Jumper Dress

Waist not included

Here's the biggest bargain sensation ever. Just imagine! A popular, stylish dress made of good quality Linene, for 77c. It's almost unbelievable—yet here it is. Neatly piped in white on pockets and collar. Imitation patent leather belt. Comes in Copenhagen Blue, Rose or Green. Women's sizes, 32 to 44 bust measure. Misses' sizes, 14 to 20 years, 32 to 38 bust. Correct, fashionable skirt length. Order color and size you want.

130SD300—Delivered free..... 77c

~~$5.00~~ Value for Only

$2.99

Delivered FREE

Amazing Dress Value!

Lovely Organdie and Batiste Dress

$2.99 Delivered FREE

This dainty and charming new dress is a combination of figured batiste and filmy organdie, made more lovely by the addition of organdie pleatings and sash. Priced at less than a gingham frock would cost you. Colors—Copenhagen Blue, Rose or Lavender. Women's sizes, 32 to 44 bust. Misses' sizes, 14 to 20 years, 32 to 38 bust. Mention size and color wanted.

130SD302—Delivered free $2.99

Jumper Dress, 77¢ Delivered FREE

Postage Always Prepaid

~~$1.75~~ Value for Only

$1.00 Delivered FREE

Biggest Bargain in Blue Bird Table Cloth in America

The biggest bargain in a table cover in America! One you will be proud of. One that your company will admire; for it will dress your table so prettily, and will add to your good cooking a suitable setting. This is a real Blue Bird cover. Size about 60 x 60 inches. Fast color. Beautiful Japanese design. Good wearing material. ORDER QUICK!

130SD305—Postage prepaid $1.00

Send for the Catalog—See Its Thousands of Bargains

Chicago Mail Order Co.

DEPT. 130 CHICAGO INDIANA AVE. AND 26TH ST

~~$8.95~~ Value for Only

$5.94

Delivered FREE

All Wool Embroidered Polo Coat

An All-Wool, Tuxedo Style Sports or Polo Coat, heavily silk embroidered. Have you ever in your life seen such value? Length, 34 inches. Colors—Copenhagen Blue, Tan, Green, Red or Burnt Orange. 32 to 44 bust, for Women and Misses. State size and color.

130SD304—Price, delivered free..... $5.94

Your Money Back If Not Satisfied

You run no risk buying from us. You can have your money back—in full to the last penny—if for any reason you are not satisfied. We always pay return charges on goods that do not meet your requirements.

4,999 More Bargains in the Catalog

Curtain Scrim—10 Yards for 69¢ PREPAID

worth ~~$1.00~~

Imagine such a bargain! Ten yards of wonderful scrim, in the popular Blue Bird pattern. Enough to freshen up your home this Spring cleaning time, and make it look spick-and-span new. Splendid quality at a price unheard of. Comes in a pretty Blue pattern on a white background. Width about 24 inches. Actual $1.00 value.

130SD306—10 yards, delivered FREE, only..... 69c

Send for our great Catalog and Book of Bargains. It shows all the lovely Madame Merrick 1922 styles, the most beautiful and becoming fashions you ever saw. Send for this catalog NOW. Use the coupon.

MAIL COUPON TODAY

CHICAGO MAIL ORDER CO. Dept. 130
26th St. and Indiana Ave., Chicago

Please mail me AT ONCE, FREE and postage prepaid, your BOOK OF BARGAINS and Style Guide, with Madame Merrick's fashion suggestions.

Name .....

Address .....

P. O. .....

State .....

Stella Rosevelt

by Mrs. Georgie Sheldon

"Young lady, pardon me the Liberty I take."

"This is the picture I particularly wish to show you."

"Star, I love you."

Copyright, 1883, 1902 and 1903 by Street & Smith.
Renewal granted to Mrs. Georgie Sheldown Downs, for 28 years from March 20, 1911.
Serial rights by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A terrible storm at sea and from a steamer running between Liverpool and New York only five escape seasickness. Among them is Stella Rosevelt Gladstone, an orphan and on her way to some distant relatives in New York. She is befriended by an elderly man, Jacob Rosevelt, who is startled when he learns her mother called her "Star," her grandmother giving her the name. A fire breaks out and she saves valuable papers. The boats are rapidly filled. Stella refuses to go unless room is made for Mr. Rosevelt, who the next day suffers from an ill turn and is carefully nursed by Stella. The sixth day they are rescued. Mr. Rosevelt is told of the care Stella gave him during his illness and while thanking her a young man approaches and Mr. Rosevelt introduces Archibald Sherbrooke, whose home is in Derbyshire where Star's father preached. Star's shawl becomes loosened and not finding the pin, Mr. Sherbrooke draws one, an exquisitely carved stone, from his necktie, and Stella pins the shawl and then tells the story of the wreck and her endeavor to save Mr. Rosevelt's life. Arriving in New York, Mr. Sherbrooke regrets the loss of her address—he would call before his return to England. He hopes they will meet again and will she always consider him her friend. He places a card in her hand with his address upon it. Stella, remembering the pin, passes it to him. He begs her to keep it as a souvenir. Wishing she had something to give, he will accept a lock of her hair. Stella is met by Mrs. Blunt, Mrs. Richards' housekeeper, who hurries her away, much to Mr. Rosevelt's disappointment. Stella receives a cool reception from her aunt who had written she would befriend and educate Stella until able to care for herself and learns she is to take the place of Maggie Flynn and to be degraded to the level of a common servant. Resenting it, she asks her aunt if her father, from what she wrote him, had any idea she was to come into the family as a servant. Mrs. Richards does not relent, and insists she fills Maggie Flynn's place or none. Stella appeals to Mr. Richards, giving him the letter written by her father to Mrs. Richards and her reply. Stella's father is anxious to provide a home and begs Mrs. Richards to have the care and education of his daughter, since she once professed friendship for Stella's mother in saving her life from drowning. Stella has one hundred pounds. Could she not use it and then teach, relieving his wife of all responsibility? Mrs. Richards is surprised at Stella's suggestion and Mr. Richards makes arrangements for her to attend a select school, she giving a part of each day to household work. By close application Stella wins, at commencement, a part in the class exercises and surprises Mr. Richards, who is present, by her instrumental music, essay and promotion to the senior class. He tells his wife she has done the last day's work in the house. Josephine, admiring the cameo worn by Stella, suggests she give it to her, as her wardrobe does not correspond with it. Going to Stella's room and finding the cameo, Josephine takes it and discovers the initials "A. S." Stella misses the cameo and is suspicious who has it. In the meanwhile Mr. Richards receives a letter from Mrs. Richards' Uncle Jacob. He has lost all, is penniless and will accept the home that was offered him when rich. Mrs. Richards refuses to receive him, the house is full, and Mr. Richards is left troubled. Upon his arrival he is taken to the Lodge to sleep, Mr. Rosevelt meets Star who offers her room to him and does all she can to brighten his life. Mrs. Richards receives him coldly, and Josephine ignores her uncle. Mrs. Richards and Josephine go to Long Branch where they meet Lord Carroll, of Carrolton, Derbyshire, England, who appears pleased with Josephine and requests permission of her mother to call. Noticing a ring Josephine wears and examining it he sees the initials "A. S". Josephine claims it is given by a relative. Lord Carrol cannot understand it. The next day he leaves for New York.

CHAPTER XIII.

A GLAD MEETING.

BACK and forth every day from Yonkers, patiently and uncomplainingly, went Star Gladstone to her school, glad to pursue her studies and music at any cost or sacrifice.

One day, after school, Star had an errand at a music store, and was detained so long that she was obliged to hurry with all her strength to catch her train.

She entered the station breathless, just as the last bell rang and the train began to move.

Hoping to overtake it even then, she ran for it, her small feet barely touching the ground as she sped over it. She reached the last car, put forth her hand to lay hold upon the railing and spring upon the steps, when a firm grasp upon her arms from behind rendered her efforts fruitless, and a deep, rich voice said:

"Young lady, pardon me the liberty I take, but that is a very dangerous experiment."

The train was gone. Mr. Rosevelt would look for her in vain when it came in, but Star could not regret it, although she had exerted every nerve to catch it, for she would know that voice no matter where she heard it; and, with a vivid flush leaping to her cheeks, her pulses thrilling with excitement and delight, she turned quickly to find herself face to face with her whilom compagnon de voyage—Archibald Sherbrooke!

His face lighted brilliantly in an instant as he recognized her, for, although she had changed somewhat during the past year, growing lovelier than ever, he had never forgotten those starlike eyes, those waves of soft, golden hair shading her forehead, nor that sweetly smiling, scarlet mouth.

"Miss Gladstone!" he cried, putting out his hand to her. "I had no idea whom I was saving from committing such an act of imprudence when I saw you about to leap upon that moving train; but I am doubly glad now that my presumption prevented you from doing anything so rash, and gave me this unexpected pleasure."

"I am glad, too, for I am delighted to see you again, Mr. Sherbrooke," Star said, heartily and frankly, as she gave him her neatly-gloved hand, and looking straight up into his handsome eyes in a way that testified to the sincerity of her words.

"I know it was imprudent to try to leap upon a moving train," she continued; "but there is some one at home who is always disappointed if I do not return at a certain hour, and so I was anxious to catch it. However, another leaves in half an hour; and, indeed, I am very glad to have met you."

She was the same, and yet not the same; she had developed wonderfully since that morning when he had parted from her on the steamer.

Her hair was still of the same beautiful golden hue as the lock which she had severed for him, and which he still treasured: her eyes were the same heavenly blue, her smile as bright and sweet, but there was an added, indescribable charm about her that made her tenfold more lovely in his sight.

"Thank you," he said, in reply to her hearty greeting; "and now, if you have only half an hour before another train goes, let us make the most of it, and find a seat in the waiting-room, where we can compare notes on the last ten months."

He led the way to the ladies' room, found a comfortable chair in a corner for her, where they could talk undisturbed, and the half hour slipped by before they had any idea that it was time for Star to go.

"There is my train," she said, suddenly starting up as the first bell rang; "I must not miss this one, or Mr. Rosevelt will surely think something dreadful has happened to me."

"Mr. Rosevelt!" repeated young Sherbrooke, in surprise.

"Yes; is it not singular? We met as strangers on board the steamer, and, after all, we were coming to be inmates of the same house, and did not know it"

"Yes, it is strange. He was a fine-appearing old gentleman. I trust that he has recovered from the effects of his exposure at sea."

"Not entirely, and I fear he never will," Star answered, with a sigh. "His health is not very good, and his eyes trouble him exceedingly at times. They were injured by the reflection of the glaring sun in the water while we were in that open boat. We are excellent friends, and he watches anxiously for my return every day."

"Do you come to New York every day?" her companion questioned.

"Yes; I am attending a seminary in Brooklyn, and for the present go back and forth every day. But see," she added, pointing to the clock; "there is only one minute more, and I must find a seat."

He assisted her to enter and conducted her to a seat; then, extending his hand, he said, smiling:

"If you come to the city every day, I shall hope to see you again."

The ever ready color leaped to her cheeks again, more at the look he gave her than at his words.

She was upon the point of giving him her address and asking him to come out to Yonkers to see her and Mr. Rosevelt, but the train started, and she was obliged to leave her invitation unspoken.

He had only time to lift his hat, dart away and leap upon the platform, before the train was under way.

Archibald Sherbrooke not only hoped to see her again, he did see her many times after that, for he contrived to be at the station on some pretext or other, or overtake her on the way thither, every day for nearly a week, and he was always greeted with a glad look and smile. Every day she grew more beautiful in his sight; every day his eyes told her so, and these chance(?) meetings grew very sweet to them both.

"You must come out to Yonkers, some day, and see Mr. Rosevelt," Star said, upon one of these occasions.

"There, I declare, we have found so much else to talk about that I have not even told you where I live," she said, laughing.

"And I am invited out to see Mr. Rosevelt, am I?" he asked, with a twinkle of mischief in his fine eyes.

"Yes," Star returned, demurely. "I know he will be very much pleased to see you—indeed, he said so when I told him of our meeting. He remembers how good to him you were after his rescue."

"Thanks. Then I shall certainly avail myself of your invitation, and go out to see Mr. Rosevelt some day very soon," he said, with a grave bow; but his eyes told her that she would be the star to attract him thither.

"You say he remembers what transpired on the steamer. Do you remember, too, Miss Star, how you told me at parting that I should always be your friend—that you would never forget me?"

Star's glorious eyes drooped, and the quick color rushing upward, stained all her fair face to those soft yellow curls on her forehead.

"I have not forgotten," she murmured, softly.

"Neither have I, as perhaps this will prove to you," said the young man, lifting a tiny locket which hung from his watchchain, and, touching a spring, held it up before her.

It contained nothing save a tress of shining hair, and Star knew in an instant to whom it had once belonged.

Like a flash she remembered the cameo that he had given her as a souvenir, and a choking sensation came into her throat.

She knew by the way he was looking at her—by the way he had asked her if she "remembered"—that he was wondering if she had kept his gift as he had treasured that lock of silken hair.

There was not a piece of jewelry about her person, and he had remarked that fact the first time he met her there at the station.

"You have kept it all this time," she said, scarce knowing what to say from embarrassment, while she wondered what she ought to tell him about the cameo.

"Certainly I have kept it all this time. I urged you to give it to me, and you do not suppose I was going to cast it lightly aside, do you?"

"Perhaps not," she answered, with downcast eyes; "but I hardly thought you would keep it in—in such a way; and—oh! Mr. Sherbrooke, I have lost that lovely little cameo that you gave to me."

She looked up at him now, and he noted the troubled, even pained, expression that was in her eyes.

"Lost it!" he repeated; and, although he did not intend it, his face clouded, whether from disappointment or some other feeling she could not tell.

She could not bear that he should know how she had lost it, and she felt that she was guilty of no untruth when she explained its absence thus.

"Yes," she returned. "Please do not think that I did not prize it, for I did more than I can tell you, and I hope even yet to be able to recover it."

He did not reply, but his face had grown grave, almost severe, and she imagined there was something of constraint in his manner at parting with her.

She felt that he was hurt by her seeming carelessness or indifference for his costly little gift, and bitter tears kept welling to her eyes all the way home.

This was Thursday—she had first met young Sherbrooke the previous Friday, and there had not been the slightest cloud to mar their intercourse until now, though they had met almost every day—and Star went home feeling somewhat sad and depressed.

But the next morning her sadness disappeared when Mr. Rosevelt told her that he was feeling so strong and well that he would like a change, and he proposed to go to New York and call upon their young friend.

He had given Star his address, and when she left for school on Friday morning, it was arranged that Mr. Rosevelt should go to town that afternoon, and she would meet him at Mr. Sherbrooke's studio after school and they would return together.

It seemed, however, as if everything went wrong for our young friend that day. Her thoughts were playing truant, and half the time were far away in that artist studio where Mr. Rosevelt was visiting.

When the hour came for her to join them she was her own bright self once more; and when, in answer to her gentle knock upon his door, Archibald Sherbrooke opened it to admit her, he thought she had never seemed so lovely before.

He had begun to realize that he loved her more dearly than any other object on earth, and that his heart had not really been his own, if the truth were known, since that day when they had parted on the steamer; and he had that morning come to the conclusion that the time should not be far distant when he should tell her in words of the emotions she had awakened in his heart.

"This is a pleasure that I had not anticipated until about an hour ago," he said, with a brilliant smile, as he took her by the hand and led her into the room, where she found Mr. Rosevelt reclining comfortably in a luxurious chair.

"And this," Star said, looking around her with a long-drawn breath of delight, as she noted the many beautiful paintings hanging on the walls, "is a pleasure which I had not anticipated."

"Ah! then it is my work which shall give you pleasure, rather than my society, as I had presumed to flatter myself," the young man said, ruefully, and making a comical grimace, although his eyes were looking down into hers with an expression which made her tremble.

She laughed, while a lovely color leaped to her face. But she tried to hide her embarrassment by retorting, archly:

"I suppose I must be polite, and affirm that I expect to enjoy both; but really, Mr. Sherbrooke, although I knew you were an artist, I had no idea that you painted such delightful things."

"You give me more credit than belongs to me," he answered, smiling; "but wait until you are rested, and then I have something in particular to show you."

"Oh, I am not weary. Let me look now, if you please; we have only an hour, you know;" and she began to move about the room, examining with no uncritical eye the works upon the walls.

At length they came to a corner where there stood an easel, upon which there was a picture covered with a green cloth.

Mr. Sherbrooke removed the covering, simply saying:

"This is the picture that I particularly wished to show you."

It was quite a large painting, and represented a young man and maiden standing on board a steamer, while silver-tipped waves and a deep blue sky formed a charming background for their youthful figures.

The former stood in an eager attitude, with one hand extended, a smile on his handsome lips, a gleam of wistful admiration in his honest brown eyes, while his companion seemed to be clipping a tress from a massive braid of shining golden hair that hung over her shoulders.

The fair young girl was a faithful representation of Star as she had appeared on that day, which they both remembered so vividly, and in the act of severing that lock at his request. She stood with drooping eyes, a flush on her cheek, a half smile on her beautiful scarlet lips, a shy and modest grace in her posture, while her slender fingers daintily held braid and scissors.

Archibald Sherbrooke watched her as she gazed upon his picture, his heart in his earnest glance; while Star, although her eyes were riveted as if fascinated upon the familiar scene, could not say one word regarding it.

"What do you think of my work, Miss Gladstone?" he asked, gravely, and breaking the silence which was becoming very oppressive to him.

"It—it is very—correct, I think," she faltered, with averted eyes and deepening color.

An anxious gleam shot into his eyes at her reply.

"Have I displeased you by putting it on canvas?" he asked, earnestly.

"N-o," she returned, somewhat hesitatingly.

"I fear I have," he said, still more gravely than before. "Do not hesitate to tell me if you are offended, and I will obliterate it with one sweep of my brush."

His eye was full of pain, a deep flush burned on his cheek, while there was a thrill in his low, earnest tone that set her pulses bounding afresh.

She glanced up at him, smiling slightly:

"No, I am not offended," she said; "but I'm afraid I appeared very foolish that day to offer you a tress of my yellow hair."

"Have I made the picture appear so?" he asked quickly.

"No; you have made it altogether too beautiful," she answered, earnestly, and then was covered with confusion at having admitted so much.

"Thank you," he said, brightly, his face clearing. "I could not do that, if I had spent twice the time I did upon it, and"—bending nearer to her, and speaking in a tender tone—"it is a picture that I painted for myself alone; no one has ever seen it before, and I shall always keep it."

He covered it carefully with the cloth again as he ceased speaking.

"These are nearly all my work," he said, as she turned to look at some others; "they are the united work of an old artist, 'our master,' we call him, and of three of my friends—companion artists. We have been traveling together during the last ten months, and these pictures are some of the results of our pilgrimage. We are to return now in a couple of months, having spent our year in America both pleasantly and profitably, I trust. We had to make our headquarters somewhere, so we took this room as a sort of studio, and thus putting our work all together, we manage to make quite a respectable display."

"I am glad to have seen these pictures," Star said, "and to know they are all the work of my countrymen. I wish, however, that I was going back to England in a month or two," she concluded, with a sigh, and a tear springing to her eye.

"Do you?" her companion asked, eagerly. "Then you have not become weaned from your native land?"

"No, indeed," she said, earnestly. "I love it as dearly as ever, and if I live I shall go back some day to my home."

The young man bent toward her, an eager light in his eye; his lips parted as if he were about to speak, but Mr. Rosevelt, from the opposite side of the room, suddenly addressed some remarks to him, and he was obliged to turn his attention to him.

CHAPTER XIV.

"LET ME DEPICT YOUR FUTURE."

Before Mr. Rosevelt and Star left him, Mr. Sherbrooke arranged a little pleasure trip to Coney Island for the following day.

"I think I should enjoy the trip very much," Mr. Rosevelt said. "Yes, yes, Sherbrooke, thank you, we will accept your invitation." Star will, I think, be willing to shorten her [illegible] a trifle, so that we shall be able to leave the city by half-past ten."

Yes, Star said she would do that; and the matter once decided, her face brightened and her eyes glowed with anticipation.

As for Archibald Sherbrooke himself, he sat down after his guests had departed, and allowed his thoughts to have their own way.

"She is as lovely as a dream," he murmured, watching her from the window as she tripped lightly along by Mr. Rosevelt's side. "I did not think, when I started for America, that I was coming to meet my fate; but so it proves. Unless I can win Star Gladstone's love, the remainder of my life will not contain much that will be worth living for. And yet there is something that I cannot quite understand about her; there is a reserve, an occasional sadness, that seems strange in one so young, while once in a while she lets fall a word which makes me fear her life is not as bright as it should be. There is something of a mystery, too, about Mr. Rosevelt. How sort of 'seedy' and neglected he looked today, and I judged, when I met him before, that he was a man of abundant means, and without a care, pecuniarily."

He arose and went over to the easel, and removing the cloth, stood looking at the lovely girl with a world of affection in his handsome eyes.

"My glory-crowned Star," he murmured, "I began to love you the moment that you fell exhausted into my arms when you were rescued from the hungry jaws of death, and I will spend my life in winning you if need be. I have seen no other woman your equal during all my sojourn in America—at least, no one who has so moved

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 12.)

This Department is conducted solely for the use of COMFORT sisters, whereby they may give expression to their ideas relative to the home and home surroundings, and to all matters pertaining to themselves and families; as well as opening a way for personal correspondence between each other.

Our object is to extend a helping hand to COMFORT subscribers; to become coworkers with all who seek friendship, encouragement, sympathy or assistance through the interchange of ideas.

Any abuse of this privilege, such as inviting correspondence for the purpose of offering an article for sale, or undertaking to charge a sum of money for ideas, recipes or information mentioned in any letter appearing in this department, if reported, will result in the offender being denied the use of these columns.

Do not ask us to publish letters requesting money contributions or donations of any sort. Much as we sympathize with the suffering and unfortunate, it is impossible to do this as we would be flooded with similar requests.

Please write only on one side of the paper, and recipes on a separate sheet.

Always give your correct and full name and address, very plainly written; otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

Address MRS. WHEELER WILKINSON, CARE COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

IF a prize were to be given for the best letter and the decision left to the sisters, it is quite certain that it would be awarded to the woman whose letter follows. She doesn't tell us of an easier way of doing our housework or a better method of caring for our babies, but from the sad experience of her own life, with its bitter after-knowledge, she gives other women a clearer understanding of what is best, and strength to go on in the face of difficulties.—Ed.

LOUISIANA.

DEAR LETTER FRIENDS:

I have watched from time to time for letters on divorce in our paper and have read each one with interest, and now I beg to say a few words on that subject. If it were not that I believe my life history will help others, I would remain silent, but I hope it will be a lesson to some one.

I married nineteen years ago a man I loved and one who loved me. He was a dreamer and a man easily flattered. I handled all the practical problems of the family and until eight years ago he was a successful man and a devoted father. At that time another woman came between us. I endured it for a year and at the end of that time we separated. I kept the children but he has helped support them. Today he is a failure, a nervous wreck. He married the woman but found that he did not love her. The constant drain she made on his purse and the fact that his expenses were doubled caused him to fail in business. He lived with a divided mind, his thoughts always with his children, whom he has seen only once in seven years. All of this he told me recently under heartbreaking conditions. Our oldest son who was seventeen died and his father came to the funeral. Afterward we had a talk. His grief was sharpened by the fact that his son had died regarding his father as guilty of conduct unbecoming a man, had not known nor could know what good qualities his father possessed. Thus seven years after our divorce we agreed that it had been a mistake, that it was a crime against the boy by whose coffin we met again. In my sorrow came a flash of light. I had failed. I had taken my husband for better or worse and when the worst arrived I failed him. I was not true to my marriage vow. I discarded him, separated him from his children. He was a dreamer and responded to flattery. I should have had more patience, and I say to any mother who is tempted to divorce the father of her children, have patience, keep him in the eyes of his children upright and honorable. Remember your marriage vow and try to think that for every fault in a human being there is a contrasting virtue. May this heart-breaking confession help some one as it is too late for me. My husband has returned to his wife and I have taken up the burden of being father and mother to our two children left. They are both girls and if possible they shall be fortified against wrecking their lives as their mother has wrecked hers.

Best wishes to all, HEART-BROKEN.

WARRIOR, ALA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

Can't you hear me? Please let me come in. I look forward to the coming of COMFORT for then we all want to read it first. It surely deserves its name for could anyone wish for greater comfort than to open the paper, fall into a chair and devour its contents. The letters I find in COMFORT express my thoughts much better than I can. Send COMFORT to your friends for a Christmas or birthday present and after they have had it in their homes for a year they will never be without it.

I wonder if Mrs. Wallen is in school? I was left a widow at eighteen with one child. How was I to support myself and child? How was I to give the child an education? I wanted to enter school but how could I with a baby only a year old? Well, I went, but don't ask my classmates how many times I cried and how discouraged I became. I had a dear mother at home who cared for the baby, a dear father to give me encouragement, a very kind teacher and the best classmates in all the world, so who would not have succeeded under such surroundings? Now my child is in school and I am its teacher. If I had become discouraged I couldn't have given my child the advantages I am now able to give it, neither could I have the advantages I now enjoy.

The day before Thanksgiving I asked my pupils what they had to be thankful for. One little boy said he was thankful he had a good dog; another was thankful he did not have to stay after school and another was thankful he didn't have a broken leg. So we ought to be thankful for the things which we have and the things we have not.

I would like to correspond with readers between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five.

VIRDIE LEE JOINER.

Mrs. Joiner.—Apropos of being thankful, we are reminded of the words of Mrs. Wiggs: "Don't you go and git sorry fer yerself. That's one thing I can't stand in nobody. There's always lots of other folk you kin be sorry fer 'stead of yerself. Ain't you proud you ain't got a harelip? Why, that one thought is enough to keep me from ever gettin' sorry fer myself."—Ed.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I've been a silent reader of COMFORT for over ten years and I find it a great comforter too.

This is what I want to ask: What to do with and how to handle a jealous husband?

I do not expose my family troubles to my neighbors; in fact, I try to keep them hidden for nothing hurts my pride so much as to have anyone know that my husband and I do not get along well, and he seems to know that too. He is as good to me in some ways as any man on earth could be. He works hard and wants me to dress nicely and buys more expensive clothes for me than I buy for myself. He is always willing to help me with the cooking or washing when he is not busy, but he is always hunting for something to pout about.

If I go to a neighbor's house and stay a few minutes longer than he thinks I ought to, or go to town and don't hurry home, he will ask me if I saw such and such a man or say, "You must have found something interesting to stay so long," and he is really peeved too. He doesn't want me to go out with my women friends and can hardly stand it for me to talk

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 7.)

Comfort Sisters' Recipes

WITH so many delightful holidays to choose from, February should be the most festive of all. Whether the decorations consist of a log cabin, a cherry tree and a hatchet, or hosts of hearts and fat little Cupids, it is bound to be a success. We are all patriotic, and romance, another's if not our own, appeals to us, and if the cherries and hearts are of pasteboard and the Cupid from the ten-cent store, who shall presume to criticize? It is the spirit that counts.—Ed.

BUTTERMILK DOUGHNUTS.—One cup of granulated sugar, one cup buttermilk, one teaspoon soda, one egg, one-half teaspoon grated nutmeg, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon cream of tartar, one teaspoon baking powder, one-quarter teaspoon ground ginger and about three cups of bread flour. Beat well the sugar, egg and nutmeg, add buttermilk, leaving a tablespoon to dissolve soda in. Add other ingredients, beating smooth before adding flour. Use just enough flour to roll and handle easily. Fry in deep, hot fat.—MRS. ROBERT ALLENDER, Springfield, Ohio.

MOLASSES DROP COOKIES.—One cup sugar, two-thirds cup shortening; mix together and add one egg, one-third cup molasses, two teaspoons soda dissolved in one cup lukewarm water and pinch of ginger. Sift in four cups of flour, stir well and drop from spoon onto greased tins. Bake in quick oven. If these spread too much, add a little more flour.—MRS. L. M. B., Holden, Mo.

POTATO BISCUITS.—One and one-half cup flour, three teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon salt, one cup mashed potato, one-quarter cup shortening and about one-half cup milk. Sift together flour, baking powder, and salt. Add shortening, then mashed potatoes. Mix and turn onto floured board. Knead slightly and pat into sheet about one inch thick. Cut in rounds and bake about fifteen minutes in hot oven.—MRS. EVA HAMMON, Los Angeles, Cal.

VALENTINE CAKES.—Stir one-half teaspoon of soda into one cup of thick sour milk, add one beaten egg and one cup of sugar. Sift together two even cups of sifted flour, one and three-fourths teaspoon of baking powder and one-fourth teaspoon of salt. Beat all together and, lastly, beat in one-eighth cup of melted butter. Pour into one large or several small round tins, reserving some of the dough for a small cake to be baked in a round tin and cut up for the decorations. Bake in a moderate oven. When cake is cold, fill a paper funnel having a small opening with heavy whipped cream, and press the cream from the funnel into decorative shapes. Now onto the cream place in wing-fashion two half circles of cake cut from the upper crust of the small cake. In the center place a tiny cupid doll and under one arm place a small card which reads, "Be My Valentine."

VALENTINE CAKES.

BROWN BREAD.—Two cups of whole wheat flour, three cups of corn meal, one cup of sugar, one cup of molasses, one teaspoon each soda and salt dissolved in a little buttermilk. Make batter soft enough to drop from spoon and put in two well-greased one-pound coffee cans. Place in water almost to top of cans and let steam for two hours. Then take tops off cans and place in hot oven.—MRS. GERTIE POPE, Munford, Ala.

CINNAMON BREAD.—Beat to a smooth paste four tablespoons of sugar with an equal amount of shortening. Sift with two and one-half cups of flour, five teaspoons of baking powder, one teaspoon of cinnamon a half a teaspoon of salt. Rub the shortening mixture into the flour, mix to a soft dough with half a cup of milk and half a cup of water and stir in one cup of seeded raisins. Turn into a greased pan to the depth of one and one-half inches. Brush the top with melted butter, then sprinkle with two tablespoons of powdered sugar mixed with half a teaspoon of cinnamon. Bake twenty minutes.—MISS GLENDORA CLAPPER, Grayling, Kansas.

DIVINITY FUDGE.—Put three cups of granulated sugar, one cup of water and one cup of corn syrup, and let boil until it can be formed in a hard ball in water. Beat the whites of two eggs, and pour boiling syrup into them, beating constantly. It will require beating fifteen or twenty minutes. Beat in three fourths teaspoon salt and before hardening a large cup of English or black walnuts. Turn into a square pan and cut into squares before it hardens.—RUBY BOOTH, Washington, D. C.

PRUNE SALAD.—Wash two dozen prunes, remove pits and soak prunes over night. Mix together one and one half cups cottage cheese, one quarter teaspoon salt a little pepper and one half cup chopped walnuts and stuff the prunes with this mixture. Place three or four prunes on lettuce leaf and serve with French dressing made by beating well together one third cup salad oil, two tablespoons lemon juice, one half teaspoon salt, one quarter teaspoon pepper and paprika. Pour into bottle or jar and shake well.

LEMON PUDDING WITH VALENTINE DECORATIONS.—Soak three cups of rich milk, one heaping cup of fine bread-crumbs from the soft part of the bread, and one cup of package cocoanut for two hours. Cook ten minutes, then add three eggs and two-thirds cup of sugar well beaten together, and the grated rind of one lemon and about one-third of an orange, taking care that none of the white is used. Bake in a round deep dish in a very moderate oven about thirty minutes. When cold, cover with a frosting made as follows: One scant cup of granulated sugar, three even tablespoons of water, and the unbeaten white of one egg put all together in the upper part of a double boiler. Have rapidly-boiling water in the lower part of a boiler when the upper part is set in. Cook seven minutes, beating constantly with an egg beater. It is ready for use and will hold its shape. Decorate the frosting with candied cranberries which are prepared by dropping the cranberries into a boiling syrup made from equal parts of sugar and water. Only let them stand in the syrup a few moments, as the skins must not break. Dry on oiled paper. Repeat process if necessary.

LEMON PUDDING.

Decorate the dish by cutting hearts from cardboard, edging them with red ink and tying together with narrow red ribbon.

Let the Boy Decide

If you feel that oats don't differ much, please let the boy decide. Serve Quaker Oats and some less flavory oats.

Do what he says about it.

The mother's problem is to make the oat dish tempting. This is the children's premier food—the greatest food that grows. It supplies 16 needed elements—1810 calories per pound. It is almost the ideal food in balance and completeness.

Quaker Oats are flaked from queen grains only—just the rich, plump, flavory oats.

We get but ten pounds of such flakes from a bushel.

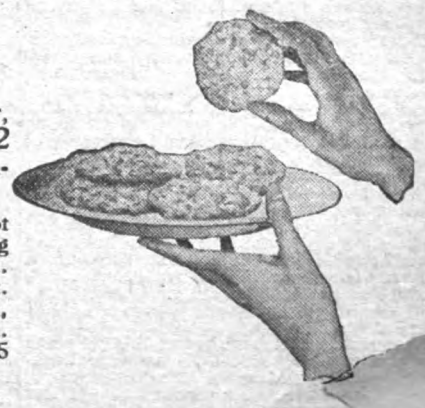
The result is a flavor which has won the world. Millions of mothers, nearly all the world over, get this brand for their children.

Your grocer will supply it if you ask for Quaker Oats. He will charge no fancy price.

The larger package—price, 30 cents—will serve 62 liberal dishes. Don't forget this when you order oats.

Quaker Oats

Flaked from flavory queen grains only



Packed in sealed round packages with removable covers

For Children's Delight

Quaker Macaroons

1 cup sugar, 1 tablespoon butter, 2 eggs, 2½ cups Quaker Oats, 2 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon vanilla.

Cream butter and sugar. Add yolks of eggs. Add Quaker Oats, to which baking powder has been added, and add vanilla. Beat whites of eggs stiff and add last. Drop on buttered tins with teaspoons, but very few on each tin, as they spread. Bake in slow oven. Makes about 65 cookies.

Love Will Find The Way

by Wenona Gilman

He leaned his head on his hand and looked down on his plate.

She turned and caught him by the arm like a tigress.

"You must not mind him. He don't know what he is saying."

Copyright, 1898, by George Monroe.
Serial Rights by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Junius Beckwith, a Westpointer, Anne Gordon, wealthy, Marian Reade, companion, friend and protegee of Anne Gordon, occupy a box at the Metropolitan Opera House. The curtain falls and Beckwith admits that "Lucia di Lammermore" has a depressing influence upon him and he cannot think of insanity without repulsion, no matter what the cause may be, and a marriage with either tainted, should be made a crime punishable by law. The next morning is Marian's birthday and deciding to go home, Anne Gordon, with a premonition that she ought to stay, exacts a promise, if any trouble comes, Marian will let her know first. Marian walks away and turning the corner meets June Beckwith and they go to the park. Remembering it is her birthday, he offers his love as a gift and asks her to be his wife. Happy in her love for June, Marian reaches home. Janet Reade, her grandmother, tells her that her mother is not dead but the inmate of a madhouse. What can she say to June? Hearing a voice, she answers to her father's call. He gives her a curious Venetian ring for a birthday gift, and questioning him where he got it he evades the answer and queries what Anne Gordon gives her. Showing the watch, her father berates Marian's friend. She might have given one thousand dollars, which he needs and will have. Marian, under the horror of all she hears, forgets all her grandmother told her, even forgets June Beckwith. Later in the night, recalling her promise to Anne Gordon, she goes to her home. A light flashed from a window opposite shows a rope hung from Anne Gordon's window, and in the window her father's face. Reaching home, Marian meets her father, tells him where he has been, and for no honest purpose, and demands that he return all he has stolen. He refuses, and only after her earnest pleading does he ask what she will do for him. Little dreaming the price she must pay, she asks for nothing but to serve him and she seals the promise upon her mother's Bible. Left alone, Paul Reade decides to keep one ring. Marian writes June she does not love him and that her soul is withered as much as the flower she encloses. Her father assures her he has obtained a position in the brokerage business and rented a house down town. June is stunned upon receiving Marian's letter and welcomes his friend, Fred Underwood, who tells him Paul Reade is a most unscrupulous villain and the house he has rented is a decoy for gamblers, that Marian is not as innocent as she appears. June cannot believe it, and Underwood will prove it to him if he cares to go. June calling upon Anne, she tells of Paul Reade's sudden wealth, and June, knowing where it comes from, as a friend, forbids Anne to go to Marian Reade's home. Going to the reception, Underwood requests Paul Reade to introduce Marian. In the meanwhile June appears with a message from Miss Gordon. He invites Marian for a waltz which she ends with Dick Gresham, the most notorious gambler in New York. The evening ended, Marian faces her father and asks who were those people. She receives no satisfaction from his answer—he expects her to receive them with courtesy, she has sworn to obey him. Anne begs Marian to come to her for a home, to divulge the secret that troubles her and she denies she has one. June Beckwith calls upon Anne, who defends Marian and with tears in her eyes pleads with him not to condemn her. If he never loved Anne before he thinks he does now and she is willing to be his wife. Marian speaks to her father of her mother and what has kept her from Marian all these years. She must see her. Her father refuses and Marian insists. There are those who will help. Paul Reade requests Ezra Morris, whose mother is hopelessly insane and confined in a house built especially for her, to allow Marian to visit her, believing she is her mother. Returning home she cries, "will the inheritance come to her?" Dick Gresham announces Anne's betrothal to Junius Beckwith, and for several days Marian remains in her room. Again mingling with her father's guests, she is introduced to Elliott Dwight, a multi-millionaire who, by his words and manner, arouses Marian's suspicions as to his motives. She demands of her father, and before his guests, to deny that she is an inmate of a gambling house, a decoy by his will for his guests, that it is not as Elliott Dwight says. Her father's silence convinces her it is true and in her anguish Marian leaves the house. She is stopped by Fred Underwood. Her heart sinks. June believes her guilty. Underwood assures her June loves her.

CHAPTER XXI.

A DEAD HOPE.

A THRILL of warmth and life passed through Marian's heart as she listened to those low-spoken words. She bowed her head, and did not resist the directing hand of the man whom she had learned to trust in those few moments, in spite of the stinging blow which her confidence in the sex had but just received. She gave herself into his hands with a blind obedience to his will that would have touched a less sensitive man than Fred Underwood.

He did not speak to her again, but called a cab when they had reached the corner, and placed her in it. She did not listen to his directions to the coachman, but shrank back into the corner, and remained there until he took her by the arm and gently lifted her out.

The massive building before which they had drawn up was elegantly lighted, but she had no difficulty in recognizing it to be a hotel. Still, she asked him no questions, but waited in the ladies' parlor until he had secured her a room. He led her to it himself.

"I shall call for you to take you to breakfast in the morning," he said gently. "Don't go down until you receive my card. Will you promise?"

She looked up at him gratefully.

"Yes," she said slowly.

"Then good night."

"Wait one moment. There is one thing I want to ask before you go. Did—did he—Mr. Beckwith—believe that—that awful thing of me?"

Underwood hesitated. He disliked to tell her that, and yet there was nothing else to do.

"We all believed it," he answered at last, "There was nothing else for us to believe. You must not be too hard on us. Did you not tell—Miss Gordon that you knew?"

"Knew what?"

"Knew you were there among gamblers—knew that your father's associates were people of that class?"

"No."

"She sent for you, did she not? She asked you to leave your home and come to live with her?"

"Yes."

"And you refused, giving as your excuse that you could not leave your father?"

"Yes."

"You told her that you knew of his disgrace."

Marian fell back with a little cry.

"And she meant—this?" she gasped. "She knew that my father was using me for an infamous purpose, and believed that I was lending myself to it? She believed me capable of that?"

"Then to what did you refer, Miss Reade?"

She hung her head, and even under that depth of misery a vivid flush colored her white cheeks.

"I cannot answer," she said hoarsely. "My disgrace and his are great enough. I cannot add to it. You have been kind to me, Mr. Underwood. You have shown me friendship when I needed friendship most, and God will bless you. Good night."'

"You will remember your promise about breakfast?"

She hesitated. All the old bitterness was burning in her passionate eyes again.

"Give the promise back to me!" she cried out. "It is much better not. You have saved me from a great sin—that of suicide. I promise that I will think of that no more; but there is that in my life which I can tell to no one. The shame of living among gamblers is not the only one that attaches to me, and I should be but a source of sorrow to those who love me."

"It can't do you any harm to give us time to talk this over," he answered, feeling that it was worse than useless to attempt to argue with her at that time. "You are tired and worn out. You are not fit to think, much less plan for the future. Let me come tomorrow and talk to you. I agree that I will not insist on your doing anything. It is much better for you to act under advice than to rush into something that may bring you only trouble in the future."

"You will say nothing to Miss Gordon of my whereabouts?"

"Not until I have received your permission."

"You are very good to me."

"You will wait?"

"I will wait."

"Good night. Go to bed and to sleep. You are exhausted. Don't try to think tonight. You may be perfectly sure that whatever plans you would make would be certain to go wrong in your present mental state. I shall do the thinking for you. God help you, little one!"

He closed the door upon himself without giving her time to reply, and she listened to his quick footfall as it went down the hall. Then she turned around with a little sigh and looked about her.

There was nothing wild or hysterical about her. She seemed to be half-stupefied under the blow that she had received. She sat down on the side of a chair for a few moments, then mechanically began to undress herself. She crept into bed, almost unconscious of her own act. The mental bewilderment made thought chaotic, and under the numbing effect of her terrible sorrow she fell asleep.

Underwood's card was brought her the following morning before she had finished dressing. She sent a message and joined him a few minutes later in the parlor. He had ordered breakfast in a private room, and led her there, looking down into the shadowed face with much earnestness.

"Did you sleep?" he asked, when the door of the breakfast-room had been closed upon them.

"Yes. It was singular, was it not?"

"No. A shock like that will often induce sleep. I thought you would. Are you feeling better?"

"I don't know. I had not thought of it. There is so much else to consider that there has not been time for reflection on that subject."

"Then you have thought of other things?"

"I don't believe I have."

"You have waited for me. That was right. Well, we are going to consider it all now. I am going to tell you a most astonishing thing."

He did not continue, though she looked at him questioningly, and she asked at last:

"What is that?"

"There is not a word of all that which occurred last night in the papers this morning. I have looked over every one carefully, and not a syllable of it all is in print."

"That is surprising."

"Surprising? It is a miracle!"

He leaned his head on his hand and looked down at his plate. For the first time Marian observed how pale and worn he was. That knowledge seemed to give her courage. She could not understand it; but his weariness seemed to act upon her like a tonic. She was silent for a little while, then she exclaimed slowly:

"What is there in the fact of its not being in the papers that affects you so seriously, Mr. Underwood?"

He rose suddenly and went to the mantelpiece. He leaned his elbow there and looked down in the empty grate for a moment in troubled silence, then he said, without glancing in her direction:

"It places me in the most uncomfortable position that I have ever been in in my life. There is no reason why I should not tell you, for I feel that I can trust you. Miss Reade, Miss Gordon is the betrothed wife of June Beckwith."

He was looking at her very straight then. He was leaning against the mantelshelf, with his hands thrust deep into the pockets of his trousers. A red spot burned in either cheek, and there was a light in the blue eyes which no one had ever seen there before.

She started, but her eyes did not wander from his.

"I know it," she answered, in a low tone.

"Well, the case is this: I am betraying no one's confidence, only giving my own. June loves you. Anne Gordon loves June, and—I love Anne Gordon."

"Mr. Underwood!"

Marian was on her feet, and would have approached him, but he waved her back.

"Not yet!" he exclaimed. "I am too weak for sympathy. Let me go on. June knows all this; but Miss Gordon is entirely ignorant of his affection for you. Now, this is my situation. How will it be possible for me to tell this story to Miss Gordon and June without—without——"

"Without being accused of doing it to gratify your own ends? You can't. You must not. I am sorry for you, Mr. Underwood, deeply sorry; but even if you did this thing it would only place you in a false position and do no good. Under no circumstances could I ever be June Beckwith's wife!"

She dropped her head before replying.

"Why?"

"Because of the shame that attaches to me. Would you want it said of your wife that——"

"Anything, if I loved her!" he answered passionately. "What is there in all the world that can count against that? There is nothing under heaven that could separate me from the woman I loved—except my honor. I told you I was coming here today to advise you, to tell you what it was right that you should do, and instead I have come to ask advice of you. What am I to do? What are we both to do?"

"Nothing. I tell you there is nothing that can be done. We are in the hands of fate. My case is hopeless. I ask you, for my sake, to say nothing. It would but make it all the harder for me. There is nothing that I would not give up for Anne Gordon's sake. I love her as no girl ever loved her sister. I should still entreat of you to be silent, if every obstacle were removed between me and—Mr. Beckwith. What is your answer? What are you going to do?"

He turned away with a little groan and hid his face on his arm.

"Somehow I felt hope strong within me last night," he answered wearily. "But it is dead this morning. I shall be silent for the present, because I must."

CHAPTER XXII.

PAUL READE'S ADMISSION.

There was some psychic influence or some presentiment of evil in the atmosphere of Paul Reade's home that evening, for it was impossible for Janet Reade to sleep. All night she tossed from side to side, fitfully dozing occasionally, but to awake with a start a moment later.

More than once it had occurred to her to get up and go to Marian's room, to see that all was well with her dear one, but then came the reflection that she would but disturb her, and she remained where she was, awaiting the morning.

But as morning broke she became more calm, and fell into a sleep from which she did not awaken until the clock was on the stroke of nine. There was a dismal oppression upon her. It seemed somehow that some horrible thing had occurred during the night, and unable to rid herself of the thought, she arose at last, dressed herself hastily, and hurried to Marian's room. The bed was undisturbed.

She could not have explained the sensation that came over her. A horror like the grip of death fastened in her throat. She stood there for a moment with dilated eyes, looking at the snowy bed as if it could give some explanation of that absence, and then, unable to endure the mute message longer, she turned and hurried down the hall in the direction of her son's room.

She had not reached the door, however, when she came upon one of the maids sitting on the stairs.

"Estelle," she said, striving to speak without excitement, "has Miss Marian gone out?"

Almost before the sentence was begun the girl was upon her feet. Something in the flushed, frightened face seemed to alarm Janet Reade anew, and she staggered slightly, catching the balustrade.

"I don't know, ma'am, anything about her," answered the maid. "I was just waiting for you to wake before going to you. Miss Marian did not sleep in her room last night."

"But she was here at nine o'clock. She kissed me good night before I went to bed."

"I know, ma'am, and it is that which frightens me. Miss Marian was here at one o'clock last night."

"How do you know?"

"I was up. I saw her go to her room. I went in this morning as usual—but she was not there."

"It is strange. Estelle, I don't know whether I dreamed it, or whether there was some excitement in the house last night. What was it?"

"An awful thing, ma'am. You did not dream it."

"What was it? Speak out."

"One of the gentlemen—offended Miss Marian. She called her father an—— Oh, ma'a… an awful thing to tell you, but—— Marian found out that this is a—a… house, and——"

"A what?"

"A gambling house!"

There was a long silence. It seemed … Reade that every drop of blood in her … suddenly grown stagnant. She could sc… lieve the evidence of her own senses.

"What is it—that you are—saying?" … manded hoarsely.

"That this is a gambling house, ma'a… was a terrible scene. I never saw any… it in all my life. Miss Marian called h… and every man in the house heard what … to him. She went to her room after … I have not seen her since."

There was another silence, a trifle lon… the first; then, as if death spoke in … tones of her voice, the old woman said f…

"Wait for me here, Estelle. I may n…"

With tottering step she walked in the … of her son's room. She opened the door … a knock, and went in.

He was sitting beside a table with a … brandy before him, his disheveled hair and … eyes telling their own story. He looke… she entered, his face growing hard and … he recognized her.

"Paul," she said faintly, "what have y… with Marian?"

"What have I done with Marian?" he … "Nothing. I have done nothing with h… her, but she has ruined me! Ruined me, … hear? I have not dared to even look at … There is not a human being that will eve… these doors again as long as I live. Cu… I have never had anything but torture f… and her infernal mother since——"

"Hush! You shall not speak like tha… presence. All the torture that you have … was of your own making. If you are ruin… it was a ruin that you have brought up… self. Paul Reade, is it true that the pla… you have taught your daughter and you… to call home is a gambling-house?"

"Yes!" he cried defiantly, and with a s… that of a rabid dog. "Yes! So she has t… Well, she told the truth. It is a gamblin… I had her here for the entertainment … friends. I had her here to attract the f… would not have been attracted by play… came because she was beautiful, and th… not refuse to play after they had acce… hospitality. Now you know. Are you bet… fied?"

She did not reply. She could not. The … old face was set and cold. She was … against the wall, looking at him as if s… scarcely believe the evidence of her own … ears. There was a long silence betwee… during which Paul Reade poured out a … brandy and drained it. She did not rem… with him. It is doubtful if she even s… though her eyes were fixed upon him.

She did not know how long she stood t… she saw that there was nothing further … gained from him. She turned away weak… tottered to the door. When she had rea… she paused with her hand on the knob, and … to him again.

"Do you know where Marian is?" she … without a word of reproach.

"Isn't she here?"

"No."

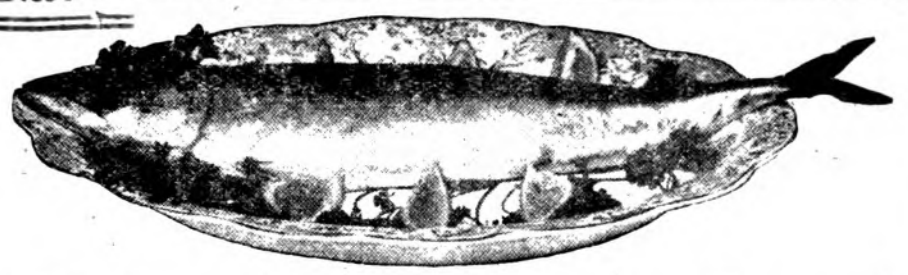
"Then I suppose she has gone to th… friend of hers who is the cause of all these … notions that she has got into her head. … pose she has gone to tell Anne Gordon … scoundrel her father is."

Janet Reade did not wait for the conclu… of the sentence. She had heard enough. … frenzy was upon the now thoroughly … man.

He got up and staggered after her. He … open the door, which she had closed behi… her, and called out with one of those laughs th… only a drunken man can produce:

"Go there and find her, old lady! G… and give her my love! And be sure, when y… get there, to tell Anne Gordon that it was … who stole all her pretty jewels. Tell her that, … she will call for it, I will give her back the … tiful ring that I kept from the lot. Tell h… that Marian, her beloved friend, was the swee… child who persuaded me to return them."

She turned and caught him by the arm … a tigress.



"What is that you are saying?" she de… anded hoarsely.

"The truth!" he cried, with another of … fiendish laughs. "She never told you? … is like her. Well, I stole the jewels, and … saw me do it. She forced me to return … but I forced her, in return, to come in… house with me. She did not know what … was, or she would not have come to have sa… me from the penitentiary. That is like her love. … I got even with her for making me give them up. … I got even with her! I got even with her!"

He turned and reentered the room, conti… to repeat the sentence, and laughing all the … like a maniac. He slammed the door behind … and she heard him still going over the words … one hears in a dream.

The horror of it all had stunned her. She … not moved, when the same maid who had spoken to her in the hall advanced and placed her hand gently on her arm.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35.)

Fish as a Winter Food

By Violet Marsh

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

IN most parts of the country, fish is a very safe food in winter as the cold weather aids materially in keeping it fresh while in transportation and in storage. Much of the fish caught in a freezing temperature is at once spread and allowed to freeze hard before it is packed for shipment, and arrives in our markets in this condition. Frozen fish, if it has been kept frozen, is uninjured, and if carefully thawed in very cold water will have all the flavor of freshly-caught fish. It must be removed from the water as soon as the frost is out of the fish, and wiped dry, for if allowed to soak the flesh loses its hard, firm consistency, will be flavorless and break to pieces while cooking.

Those who find difficulty in obtaining fresh fish in winter may safely resort to the smoked, salted and canned varieties, salmon being the most valuable among the latter. Salted mackerel is usually packed in half barrels and shipped to all parts of the country, and in this particular fish is found our most valuable preserved variety for winter use, as its high content of fat protects it against loss of nitrogenous material through salting. Fish containing little or no fat must not be relied on for nourishment when once it has been either dry salted or soaked in brine, and should be served with an egg or drawn-butter sauce made with milk. Salt fish should be soaked in fresh cold water, with the skin side up, to draw out the salt. Over night is none too long, and sometimes as long as twenty-four hours is necessary.

FISH-BALLS, TURNIPS AND BEETS.

Smoked salmon and whitefish are favorites among the cured varieties and are delicious and appetizing. To prepare the whitefish, cover with boiling water and let it remain fifteen minutes, then remove all the bones, cover again with boiling water and keep just at the boiling point for ten minutes. Salmon is prepared in the same way, except that it is sliced before soaking and should stand a little longer in the boiling water. Both kinds may then be flaked, mixed with an egg or butter sauce. It also makes a delicious dish when escalloped with bread-crumbs, or rice and strained tomato. The addition of a few left-over peas or carrots makes an appetizing combination.

FRYING FISH-BALLS IN DEEP FAT.

As the juices of all fish flesh are alkaline, it is well to use either lemon juice, tomato sauce or vinegar as a neutralizing agency. Of these three acids probably that of the lemon is the most valuable. Long before these days of dietetic research, sailors knew that lemons were an unfailing preventive of scurvy, and in some countries vessel owners were compelled by law to carry a sufficient supply of this valuable fruit for every man aboard ship. Canned tomato is also used for a like purpose when men are dependent on a diet lacking in fresh foods. Vinegar should be used sparingly, for while it contains a valuable acid, it is more or less irritating.

Recipes for Cooking Fish

TUNA LOAF.—Pick into small pieces one full-sized can of tuna fish and with a fork mix it with three tablespoons of either cream, or canned milk, one cup of soft biscuit crumbs, one tablespoon of spicy chopped pickle, one-eighth teaspoon of white pepper, one-half teaspoon of salt and two well-beaten eggs. When well blended, turn onto a lightly-floured board and shape into a loaf, then roll in fine stale bread-crumbs. Place very thin slices of salt pork or bacon in a baking tin, lay the loaf on them, dot the top with butter and bake in a moderately hot oven thirty minutes. Serve with a well-seasoned white or egg sauce.

BAKED FISH.—Use whitefish, bluefish, flounder or other fish not rich in flavor nor fat. Clean and split down the back. Wipe dry. Make a mixture of one-fourth cup of salad oil, two tablespoons of lemon juice, one-half teaspoon of scraped onion, a small pinch of poultry dressing, salt and pepper. Spread over the fish, let it stand one hour, giving it an occasional basting and turning. Dip in bread-crumbs, pour a little strained tomato over the top and bake in a hot oven. If the fish appears to be drying, add a very little hot tomato occasionally.

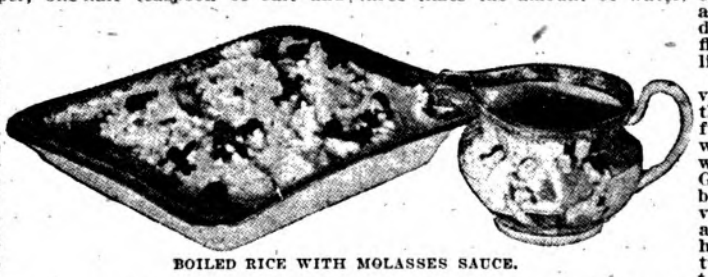
STEAMED CANNED SALMON.—Drain one large can of salmon, saving the juice. Pick into small pieces, mix with one-half cup of light cream, two well-beaten eggs, one cup of freshly-boiled and mashed potato, one-half cup of fine biscuit crumbs, one-half teaspoon of salt and a little pepper. Stir with a fork. Turn into a brown-bread tin, or small pail having a tight-fitting cover and steam one hour. Serve with a sauce made as follows: On the back of the stove in a sauce-pan melt two tablespoons of butter, smooth in three tablespoons of dry flour, and when it bubbles add one and one-half cup of hot liquid, using the fish juice and enough milk to make up the quantity. Add salt and pepper to taste, and lemon juice, chopped pickle or other acid to give a bright flavor.

SALT MACKEREL.—Soak in cold water, fish side down, from twelve to twenty-four hours, changing the water occasionally. There are three satisfactory ways of cooking salt mackerel; boiling, broiling and baking.

To boil, cover well with cold water, slowly bring to a boil and keep at a simmering heat until it flakes.

To broil, wipe dry, lay on a well-greased bread toaster, and cook over a bed of hot, bright coals, first cooking the flesh side a little, and turning frequently. Have ready some melted butter to which a little pepper has been added and pour it over the top.

To bake, lay in a baking tin that is only a little larger than the fish, sprinkle with a little pepper and bread-crumbs, cover with either milk or strained tomato and bake in a hot oven.



SALT CODFISH BALLS.—Soak one cup of raw salt fish over night in cold water. Drain and pick into inch pieces. Pare and cut into several pieces enough raw potato to make about three cupfuls. Put the potatoes and fish into a stew-pan with the fish on top, add boiling water until it reaches nearly the top of the potato, and boil until the potato is done. Drain well, mash fish and potato together and beat until light with two tablespoons of butter and a little pepper. When partly cool, add one well-beaten egg and beat hard. With the spoon, shape each ball a little and place them in a wire basket and fry in smoking hot fat until a golden brown. Only do a few at a time as they cool the fat quickly. Combined with boiled turnips cut into strips, and boiled beets, you have a "tasty" dinner.

SMOKED SALMON.—Cut into thin slices, soak several hours in cold water, drain, cover with boiling water and let stand at a simmering heat twenty minutes. Drain, pick into fine pieces and add to it a hot white sauce well seasoned with butter.

Another delicious dish is to mix four unbeaten eggs, four tablespoons of milk stirred smooth with one of dry flour and one cup of finely-picked salmon prepared as above. Beat together with a spoon, put two tablespoons of butter into a frying-pan and pour in the mixture. Stir continually over not too hot a cover until the egg is creamy. Serve on hot buttered toast or with baked potatoes.

Other Seasonable Recipes

VENISON ROASTED AND BROILED.—Venison is one of the most easily digested meats, and is highly recommended for invalids. The usual way of roasting is after the rule for roast beef, and should be cooked rare as it dries and loses its flavor from hard cooking. In Virginia, the favorite way is to wash the roast in a weak vinegar water and then thoroughly rub with warm fat. It is then covered with a well-greased paper, and over this a flour-and-water paste is spread. It is again wrapped in greased paper and allowed to stand until the following day when it is roasted between closely-fitting pans on a rack. Cover the bottom of the pan with boiling water but do not allow it to reach the rack. The oven should be hot. A ten-pound roast should cook about two and one-half hours. When about half done, baste thoroughly every fifteen minutes, and when nearly done remove the papers and baste with currant jelly that has been melted with three times the amount of water, or with cider, after first dredging with flour and a little salt.

BOILED RICE WITH MOLASSES SAUCE.

In broiling venison for the sick, carefully trim and wipe with a wet cloth. Grease the broiler with venison fat and broil over hot live coals, turning every ten seconds. The steak should be cut fully one inch thick and broiled four minutes.

BROWNED CHESTNUTS.—Large Italian chestnuts are the best for this purpose. On one side of each nut make two incisions which cross each other. Cook in boiling water to cover for thirty-five minutes, or until soft when pierced with a toothpick. Drain and remove the shells and under brown skins. Have salad oil in a sauce-pan, pour in the nuts and brown while constantly turning and moving them about. Sprinkle with salt as they are removed from the hot oil.

QUICK SALAD DRESSING.—Into the bottom of a bowl put the unbeaten yolks of two eggs. Mix together one teaspoon of dry mustard, one teaspoon of sugar, one-eighth teaspoon of black pepper, a dash of cayenne and one teaspoon of salt, and add to the egg with two tablespoons of vinegar and two tablespoons of lemon juice. Beat hard with a spoon until thoroughly blended. Now take the egg beater and gradually beat in one and one-half cup of salad oil, beating until light and stiff.

APRICOT WATER ICE.—Pour two cups of boiling water over one cup of sugar, bring to a boil, cook eight minutes and set away until cold. Mash half a can of apricots through a coarse sieve, eliminating the skins, and add to syrup. Pack and freeze the same as ice-cream.

BOILED RICE WITH MOLASSES SAUCE.—Wash one cup of rice through several waters until all the loose starch is removed, and drain it. Have five quarts of water boiling hard, add one teaspoon of salt, and slowly drop in the rice. If the water ceases to boil at any time, stir the rice gently from the bottom of stew-pan with a fork so not to break the grains. Boil rapidly for about twenty-five minutes. Drain rice through a colander, cover it with a cloth, and set the colander over hot water where the rice grains will swell and keep separate. If desired, seedless raisins that have stood in hot water twenty minutes may be added to the drained rice.

SAUCE.—One cup of good molasses, one-half cup of water and two tablespoons of vinegar cooked slowly for ten minutes. Two minutes before the sauce is done, add half a cup of small seedless raisins that have been soaked for five minutes in boiling hot water and well drained.

DATE TAPIOCA.—In a double boiler bring one cup of milk to a scald, then stir in one and one-half tablespoons of granulated tapioca and one-third teaspoon of salt, and cook twenty minutes, stirring frequently. Beat one egg, add four tablespoons of granulated sugar and stir into the tapioca. Cook three minutes then stir in one-third cup of dates that have been skinned, stoned and cut into small pieces, and pour into serving dish. Serve with a lemon sauce made as follows: Cream one-third cup of butter with three-fourths cup of sugar mixed with one and one-half level tablespoon of flour. Pour over it one and one-half cup of boiling water, stir smooth and cook eight minutes. Add one small lemon cut into thin slices without peeling. Remove the seeds. Let stand fifteen minutes without further cooking.

APPLE SLUMP.—Into the bottom of a deep sauce-pan that will cover tightly put five apples, peeled, cored and cut into eighths, adding one-half cup each of molasses and sugar, one-eighth teaspoon of salt, one-fourth teaspoon of grated nutmeg, and about half a cup of water. Cook hard without stirring until the apples are about half done, then add soft dumplings made as follows: One cup of flour, one rounding teaspoon of baking powder, a little salt and one teaspoon of butter. Mix with milk to the consistency of a soft biscuit dough. Drop in spoonfuls onto the apple mixture, cover tight and cook twenty minutes without lifting the cover. The amount of water used will somewhat depend on how juicy the apples are. Dish dumplings onto deep serving dish and pour over the apple and juice. Serve with whipped cream.

RAISIN-APRICOT PUDDING.—One cup of washed seedless raisins, one cup of drained canned apricots from which the skins have been removed, and one-half cup of water. Bring to a boil, and thicken by stirring in one-half cup of sugar which has been thoroughly mixed with two tablespoons of corn-starch. Cook five minutes, add the juice of half a lemon, one-half cup of apricot juice and a pinch of salt. Beat until smooth and set away to cool. Add more sugar if necessary. Pour the mixture into a pudding dish, and cover with a rich biscuit dough made of one cup of flour. Dot with butter. Bake in a hot oven until brown. Serve with a sauce made as follows: Into a double boiler put one cup of marshmallows, and when thoroughly softened gradually beat in one-half cup of rich milk or cream and one teaspoon of vanilla. Serve cold. Sweetened and flavored whipped cream is also delicious with this pudding.

RASPBERRY FLUFF.—Put one pint of canned raspberries through a sieve to remove the seeds. Add the juice of one orange, one tablespoon of lemon juice and one cup of sugar. Bring to a boil and simmer until thick, stirring frequently. Pour the fruit onto four stiffly-beaten egg whites, beat well together, and pour the mixture into a deep earthen baking dish. Bake fifteen minutes in a hot oven and serve at once with whipped cream.

Of the world's oyster crop, approximately five-sixths come from the Atlantic Coast of the United States.

When raw cold winds blow

DRINK

Baker's Cocoa

It imparts a cheering warmth, valuable nutrition and has a most delicious flavor. The very odor of a steaming cup is appetizing and attractive. It is absolutely pure and of high grade.

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

MADE ONLY BY

WALTER BAKER & CO., LTD.

Established 1780

DORCHESTER, MASSACHUSETTS

Booklet of Choice Recipes sent free

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 5.)

to any of the men of the neighborhood, especially if they are single, and all this in his presence even. I can't treat my neighbors and company as nice as I'd like because he gets mad, and acts so that he hurts my feelings and wounds my pride. I try not to notice it but my friends ask me why he acts that way. Now I have tried being kind and patient with him but the kinder I treat him the worse he gets. I have talked the matter over with him in a good way and told him that he was making my life miserable as well as his own. Just last night, our little boy, five years old, was invited to a children's party and asked me to go with him, but I got him ready and let him go with some children living near, just to prevent a fuss. I have been thinking of that all day for I know mothers and fathers should pal with their children and make them feel that they are interested in their pleasures. He was the sole cause of my refusal to accompany my boy. He didn't say a word but began to pout the minute the child mentioned going for he thought I was going with him. I have tried going to places whether or no but there is always a big fuss when I come home. I have even tried playing jealous and making a fuss but nothing seems to do any good. I have stood this seven years and am willing to stand it longer if any of the sisters can give me any encouragement that he can be broken of the habit. I'll do my best. He says he loves me and that I do not care for him or I would be jealous too. He is wrong, for I do love him very much but his jealous heart and lack of confidence is turning me from him. Please help me if you can. I am twenty-three years of age and he is fourteen years my senior.

LENA.

Lena.—That husband of yours is too much of a problem for me but maybe someone who has had a similar one can tell you what to do.—Ed.

KENTUCKY.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Do you, my dear friends, think it is a sin to tell a falsehood in order to keep down some great trouble?

Also what do you think of "love at first sight"? This may seem a foolish question but I would like to know if true love ever does come at first sight?

I have never had the courage to write before for I know there are many letters more interesting than mine.

I live on a small farm in Kentucky. Am five feet, six inches tall, dark brown hair and eyes and am eighteen years of age.

KENTUCKY LASSIE.

Kentucky Lassie.—My, such a lot of subjects you have given us to talk about. We'll see what the rest think about them.—Ed.

LORAIN, 1307 Eighth St., OHIO.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

This is my first attempt to get into the corner and I truly hope someone will hear me knocking and open the door. I've taken COMFORT for years; that is, I've read it for years as someone in my family has taken it when I haven't. The Sisters' Corner is my favorite. I am at present corresponding with two of the sisters and enjoy their letters so much that I catch myself watching the mailman closely when it is time to hear from them.

I have come for help. I've seen many helpful ideas in COMFORT but don't remember anything about the sisters entertaining their club. I belong to a club of young married women, none over thirty years, and there are eight of us. We are known as the "Daisy Club" and meet once every two weeks, on Friday night. We meet at night because our Johns, Bobs and Freds take care of the youngsters for us. We look forward to an evening free from household duties and care of children. We always have contests, two of them, play a game or two, then have lunch of not over two eatables and a drink. It doesn't cost very much that way and we aren't allowed to go beyond one dollar for the four contest prizes. Fifty cents for first and ten cents for second and twenty-five cents for one and five cents for another. We are getting to be great bargain hunters, trying to get something nice for the money we are allowed to spend. It is fun, trying to get a better bargain than someone else. I won a box of writing paper at the last club meeting, and a small crocheted doily.

I would like to have the sisters tell me of any contest, not too hard, and games that we might play at our meetings. We have had all the books in our Public Library treating on the same and we are slowly but surely running out of contests and games.

To change the subject, I wonder if anything can be done to cure my two boys of fighting. One is eight and the other six and from the time they get up in the morning until they go to bed at night it's nothing but quarrel. I hate to have them grow up with a habit of that kind and they are also setting a bad example for their little two-year-old brother. Will some of the sisters that have had experience in breaking their children of this habit, write and tell me how it was done? Don't tell me your children never fought; I hate to think that mine are the only ones that never do that. But wouldn't it be heavenly if none of us ever quarreled.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 16.)

Cubby Bear's Pride

By Lena B. Ellingwood

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

CUBBY Bear was on a visit to his little cousins, Bonniebelle and Jackie Bear, and one evening they all went out for a walk with Uncle Bear, to see Silver Waterfall by moonlight.

On their way home, they were crossing a broad, smooth road, when Cubby exclaimed:

"What is that I hear? Oh, oh, I believe it is one of those awful creatures I saw once before—yes, I can see its great eyes of fire now, coming this way along the road!"

"Yes, yes!" cried Uncle Bear, "it is a frightful monster-o'-squeal! Quick, quick, hide here among the bushes!"

"Honk, honk, ho-o-onk!" shrieked the monster, as it rushed toward them.

They were nearly blinded by the bright light, but were all out of its way as it sped past.

"We can leave the road now," said Uncle Bear, as they stood watching the red light disappearing down the road, "our way lies back through the good, safe woods again." He crossed the road leading Jackie and Bonniebelle, then turned to see if Cubby followed.

But Cubby was looking at something in the road which the others had not noticed.

"Come and see what I have found," he said. "The monster must have thrown it out here. What can it be?"

They turned it over and looked at it on all sides, but could not tell what it was.

"We will carry it home, anyway," said Uncle Bear. "Perhaps it could be used for a chair, or a footstool."

In the morning, they showed the object Cubby had found, to Auntie Bear.

"What can it be?" she asked. "It is pretty—so smooth and brown, just the color of the leaves on the ground when the snow goes off in spring."

"It's something for me to jump over," said Jackie, who liked to boast. "I will set it up on end, the highest way, and show you how I can jump. Watch me!"

He tried, but instead of clearing it, his hind paws struck against the top, and over it tumbled, Jackie with it.

He started to scream, but stopped in the midst of a howl, for in the fall, the fastening which held the cover of Cubby's new "footstool" had burst apart. The suitcase, for that is what it really was, lay open on the floor. The bears all gazed in wonder at its contents.

"Oh, the pretty, pretty things!" cried Bonnibelle.

Together they examined the treasures, filled with delight and amazement, and spent a happy morning dividing them.

Uncle Bear had a fine coat, Auntie Bear a quantity of handkerchiefs, Bonniebelle was overjoyed with a silver-backed mirror, and Jackie had stockings and a necktie.

They insisted that Cubby Bear should keep more than the others, because he was the one who found them. He had a beautiful yellow gold wrist-watch, a pair of shiny black shoes, four high, stiff white collars, a red-covered book, a magazine with pictures inside, some kid gloves which were too small for his paws, a hair brush, a pair of dark-colored goggles, a white vest and a straw hat with a blue band.

Two days later, his visit ended, Cubby started for home.

"Have you seen Cubby Bear since he came home from his visit?" asked Chirpy Chipmunk of Shinyblack Crow.

"No," answered Shinyblack Crow. "Why do you ask?"

"He is so changed!" said Chirpy solemnly. "And he has such fine things to wear! He will not play with his friends any more—perhaps for fear of spoiling them, but I suspect it is because he has grown proud."

"But that is not like Cubby Bear," objected Shinyblack Crow.

"Ah, but wait till you see him all stylished up so grandly!"

Just then Bunny Rabbit came along, wiping a tear from his round right eye with the tip of his long left ear.

"What is the trouble?" asked Chirpy.

"Oh, faltered Bunny Rabbit, "I just met Cubby Bear, and he—he was not kind to me. We have been friends for always, but now, he looks through his dark goggles and will hardly speak."

"Did you say he wore goggles?" asked Shinyblack Crow. "Perhaps he cannot see well with them, and did not know who you were."

"Hush!" whispered Chirpy. "He is coming this way now."

"Then I shall go," said Bunny Rabbit, and hopped off rapidly.

Shinyblack Crow watched Cubby curiously as he came along. He was certainly changed. He hobbled along painfully in the stiff, shiny shoes, holding his head carefully erect to keep his new hat, which did not fit him, from falling off. He stopped, and anxiously brushed a spot of dirt from his white vest. Under one arm he carried a red-covered book.

TOGETHER THEY EXAMINED THE TREASURES, FILLED WITH DELIGHT AND AMAZEMENT.

"Good morning, Cubby," greeted Shinyblack Crow.

"Ah—how do you do?" replied Cubby, and walked slowly past them, holding up his wrist so they would be sure to see his new watch.

"You see?" said Chirpy.

Little was talked of in the Pleasant Forest for the next few days but Cubby Bear's new possessions, and his pride.

"I asked him to play with me," said Racky Coon to a mournful group of the little forest people, "but he only said, 'It might take the shine off my shoes.'"

"I know what we will do," said Minnie Mink; "I invite you all to a jolly play-party near Mamma Bruin's house, right now! I shall not invite Cubby Bear. Let him be stuck-up with his fine new things if he wants to—we will not let it spoil all our fun. Come!" and Minnie started for her party, beckoning them all to follow.

They missed Cubby's help in their games, but kept at them, nevertheless, with much noisy laughter.

Shinyblack Crow, watching closely, saw the curtain at Mamma Bruin's window move a little, and Cubby's face peeping out wistfully from behind it. He hopped away from the others, and going to Mamma Bruin's door, tapped gently.

Cubby Bear opened the door.

"I have come to talk to you," said Shinyblack Crow, and stepped inside.

"Minnie Mink is having a party," he began, "and you are not there. Were you invited?"

"N-no," faltered Cubby.

"Do you know why?" asked Shinyblack Crow.

"N-no," said Cubby again.

"Well, then, I will tell you," said his caller. "First, let me ask you a question. Am I your friend, or not?"

"Oh, yes, indeed!" cried Cubby heartily. "You have helped me many and many a time when I needed a friend."

"Well, then," went on Shinyblack Crow, "I want to help you now, for you need a friend worse than you ever did before."

"What do you mean?" asked Cubby.

"You are in danger of losing all your friends," said Shinyblack Crow solemnly. "You have hurt and grieved them all, and for what? Because you have some fine new clothes, and it makes you look down on the rest of us. I am surprised at you, Cubby Bear. Do your new clothes make you happy? You do not look so!"

In truth, he did not. He stood looking down at the floor, and his lower lip was trembling.

Suddenly he threw out both his paws.

"No," he cried, "I am not happy! At first I was, and felt very grand walking past you all, showing off my new things. But now—now I would rather be out here playing with the others than to own so many fine things and be alone."

Old Grandma Bear, in the next room, had been listening. "I can tell you how to be happy again," she said. "Divide with your friends, and let them see that you still love them."

A great wave of shame rolled over Cubby Bear. He had not given even Grandma Bear anything from his treasures! He had not thought of it.

"I want to give you something first," he said, running into her room. "What would you like best?"

"The magazine," Grandma Bear told him promptly. "I love to look at pictures."

So Cubby gave it to her, with a kiss, then turned to Shinyblack Crow.

"Now let me give you something," he offered. "Come and look the things over."

"I need nothing," said Shinyblack Crow. "My feathers are all I want to wear. I could not fly so freely up in the sky if I had to carry any of these things about with me."

Cubby Bear brushed his hair carefully, put on his white vest, and fastened on his wrist-watch. Then he gathered up his arms full of treasures, and went out, Shinyblack Crow following.

"I am going to Minnie's party," he said.

Cubby was wearing his old-time smile of friendliness as he went toward the group of little woods people.

"I have some presents for you," he told them. "Here, Minnie Mink, is a book with a pretty red cover, for you."

They crowded eagerly around him.

"And you may have these shiny shoes, Mollie Woodchuck."

Wollie pulled on the shoes, and walked back and forth in great delight.

"Nicest things I ever owned!" he cried. "I shall polish them every day with soft moss."

Cubby gave the dark goggles to Wise Owl, and the gloves to Racky Coon, whose paws are much like hands. He had just finished giving something to everyone there, when Dr. Squilly Porcupine joined the group. They all showed him their gifts, chattering excitedly.

"Now something for Squilly!" they cried.

Dear, dear, what should he give? The white vest would be too large, and the straw hat Squilly could not possibly wear. Surely he could not part with his beautiful wrist watch!

Squilly Porcupine stood looking at him, smiling hopefully.

"Something for Squilly Porcupine, "said Minnie Mink.

"Yes," said Cubby Bear at last. "yes, I have just the gift for Dr. Squilly—this shining, beautiful thing on my wrist. He needs it to look at when he counts the pulse of his patients. Hear it talk—it will tell him how fast their hearts are beating. Hold out your wrist, Squilly, and I will fasten it on for you."

They all thanked Cubby Bear joyously for their gifts, and as he smiled upon them he felt a warm glow in his heart.

No more was he alone—shut off from the others—they were all his friends, and life was happy once more.

CONTENTS

	Page
Editorial	2
Stella Rosevelt (continued)	4
Comfort Sisters' Corner and Recipes	5
Love Will Find the Way (continued)	6
Fish as a Winter Food	7
Cubby Bear's Pride	8
Crumbs of Comfort	8
Comfort's League of Cousins	9
Big Men of the Armament Conference	10
The Spellbinders	13
The Pretty Girls' Club	14
Mother and Baby	16
St. Valentine's Afterglow	18
The Boy Who Had Never Seen an Indian	20
Things for Baby Wear	22
Yokes in Plain Crochet	23
Scouting as an Eye-Opener	24
The Patchwork Prize Contest	25
The Modern Farmer	26
Automobile and Gas Engine Helps	27
Poultry Farming for Women	28
Saffron Rose—A Slave Girl (concluded)	29
A Cobweb Party for Valentine Day	30
St Valentine's Day	30
Manners and Looks	31
Home Lawyer	32
Veterinary Information	33
Family Doctor	36
Information Bureau	39
Talks with Girls	39
How to Clean a Steel Knife.	39
Six Wheel Chairs in January	42
The Emporium of Bargains and Opportunities	43

All Subscriptions Cut Off At Expiration

All subscriptions will be cut short off on date of expiration, unless the subscriptions are renewed and paid for. Not even one copy will be sent, after expiration, until the subscription is renewed. If the number over your name on the wrapper on this magazine is 400, it means that this is the last copy of COMFORT you will receive until you renew your subscription. DO IT TODAY.

MARCH COMFORT

Our Household Number, as usual for that month, will be largely devoted to the interests of the mistress of the household, lightening her tasks and improving the home for the health, comfort and welfare of all its inmates. The following are some of the Special Features for March

"Give the Housewife a Chance" Tells how by proper arrangement of the kitchen and equipment with suitable appliances much time and labor may be saved to the housewife for needed rest and recreation.

"Making Home Attractive" This depends more on knowing how than on the amount of money expended.

"Marriage" A fine story, by Maud Mary Brown, that exposes some of the causes that wreck the happiness of married life.

"Fine Laundering at Home" How the most delicate fabrics can be laundered perfectly.

"Busybodies" An interesttng article on various kinds of mischief-makers and how to deal with them.

"Corn Meal as a Food" Gives a large variety of ways of cooking and serving this valuable food.

"Correcting Cross Eyes" Cross eyes endanger the vision. No child need grow up with this affliction.

"Cubby Bear Umpires the Frogs' Jumping Contest" and has a hard time of it.

If the number over your name on the wrapper on this magazine is 400 it means that your subscription expires with this present issue and that you will not receive March COMFORT unless you renew your subscription at once—we can not send you a single copy, after expiration, until you have renewed. Don't miss March COMFORT.

Save money by renewing and extending your subscription two or three years. Use coupon below and do it today.

Please send bills or silver carefully wrapped in paper and securely sealed, or post-office money order. If obliged to send postage-stamps, send two-cent stamps.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: 50 cents a year, $1.00 for three years, 75 cents for a TWO-YEAR renewal. in U. S. and Cuba. (In Canada 65 cents a year.)

SUBSCRIPTION COUPON FOR RENEWAL OR EXTENSION

Publisher of COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

I enclose ..... cents for renewal and extension of my subscription ..... full years from date of expiration.

Date..... Name.....

Post Office..... Street and No......

R. F. D. No...... Box No...... State.....

February, 1922

Crumbs of Comfort

Work today.
Wrong makes wrong.
Love is the test of life.
Death reaps unweariedly.
Who thinks evil, does evil.
Time is the surest conqueror.
To be useful is man's first duty.
Learn something new every day.
Few men are criminals by choice.
The voice is an index of the mind.
Much ignorance is but lack of opportunity.
Labor is the best thing to make us love life.
The best time to acquire knowledge is Now.
Uprightness is a creed that can be universal.
They are too wise who never stop to wonder.
He is the best served who can wait on himself.
What we call years are but moments of Time.
A wealthy man is a man who has saved money.
Try to keep an open mind and an even temper.
To behold suffering without pity is a great offense.
We may be neither wise nor great, but we may be kind.

One truth a man lives is worth a thousand he only utters.

Men who have the least experience often give the most advice.

Genius is the working of the fully-emancipated spirit of man.

Kindness is more than righteousness and tenderness more than duty.

If we despise our fellows we are sure to misapprehend their conduct.

Rough hands grow gentle when they touch the heads of little children.

Yesterday is for contemplation, today for action, tomorrow for anticipation.

Injury to one should concern all, for whoever harms a brother, harms brotherhood.

The mother of the useful arts is necessity; and that of the fine arts is superfluity.

Our business in life is not to get ahead of other people, but to get ahead of ourselves.

There are so many voices in this world that it is not always easy to hear the voice of God.

None who have ever bowed before the newly dead have regretted that they have loved so much.

Let two things stand like stone: kindness in the trouble of another and courage in your own difficulties.

It is in the open country that we can best read and contemplate the power, wisdom and goodness of God.

Use law and medicine only in cases of necessity. They are good remedies, bad recreations and ruinous habits.

Do not scorn the commonplace: the commonplace sun in the commonplace sky makes up the commonplace day.

The destiny of any nation at any given time depends upon the opinions of its young men under five and twenty.

Jesus was convinced that love alone was the master law of the world, and he based his whole life upon this conviction.

LEAGUE RULES: To be a comfort to one's parents. To protect the weak and aged. To be kind to dumb animals. To love our country and protect its flag.

CONDUCTED BY UNCLE LISHA

COMFORT for one year and admittance to the League of Cousins for only 55 cents. Join at once. Everybody welcome.
ADDRESS all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. See Instructions at the close of this Department.

LET us snuggle up closer as we talk this month, for there is a sleet-laden wind blowing over Brooklyn, headed in from the sea, and the Weather Bureau cheerfully remarks that the mercury is to crowd deeper into the thermometer tonight, with a heavy snowfall to follow. It is surely February and midwinter. Billy, who has a bit of a cold, has just sneezed loudly. He has a rug over his lame leg, and he is sitting close to our lukewarm radiator, drinking a cup of hot ginger tea and trying to keep warm by reading six Florida letters at one time. Bill always picks out Southern letters to read and nibble when the weather is coldest. It is fun to watch him shiver these days when his nose touches a letter from Duluth, St. Paul or Medicine Hat.

But as the wind howls and the snow blows, these indoor hours grant us more time for reading and thinking. An old English proverb says: "Winter for the study and summer for the field." Now when the meadows are perhaps leg-deep with white drifts, and stone walls and fences are almost blotted out, we can cure and garner a crop of thoughts that may nourish us in any future days of short fodder and long snows. But we must be careful to gather in the right sort of harvest free from weeds and mold. Moldy and weedy thoughts make stale brain-food and can only satisfy stale minds. Right thinking furnishes the motive power of the world's progress. It is the nourishing impetus of all man's growth upward from the start made from racial infancy thousands of years ago. As nations and individuals we move forward only according to the quality of our mental nourishment. How carefully then should we watch the sort of thoughts we stow away for use and keeping! From this store we have ourselves and others to feed. From it we must choose our seed for the plantings of later years.

According to present-day standards, Washington and Lincoln—the two great men we honor this month—were both of small education. They were largely self-taught. Yet they succeeded in richly filling the storehouses of their brains by hard study and diligent self-training. How well they managed in gaining a harvest of character from their seedtime of thought their lives tell us. Washington's letters and state papers, Lincoln's inaugural addresses and Gettysburg speech, have become classics of our country and of the world's literature. Through Washington's two terms, his eight troublous years when our Republic was like a squalling teething infant, he truly fathered the young nation and taught it to take its first footsteps in paths that our leaders of later years have found it always best to follow. In his Farewell Address, he left us a heritage of wise statesmanship that has many times proved its value in swinging the course of our foreign policy to the side of justice, righteousness and safety.

To Lincoln came the heavy task of holding our nation united when delays and futilities of his predecessors in office had let the slavery question breed hot dissension in a country grown strong and lusty since Washington had taught it the new ways of self-government. It is no reflection upon Washington's glory to say that as the years pass the fame of Abraham Lincoln seems to rise in a luster shining perhaps brighter than even that of the Father of our Country. This may be because Lincoln is closer to our own times and we can know him better and feel nearer to his great humanity and his tender heart. The preservation of the Union, the freeing of the slaves, the doing of that justice which is only justice when tempered by mercy, these were all passionate instincts with Lincoln and the well-springs of the fine utterances which passed so often from his lips in public speeches and papers, and in private letters and talk. Throughout all ages Lincoln will stand as the true and perfect leader of the common folks he loved so well. He was the perfect exemplar of that government of the people, by the people and for the people of which he spoke, which he labored successfully to save, and which he died in the task of keeping united and imperishable.

What Washington and Lincoln gave to us of heart and brain was only that which they had first gathered of themselves. Because their harvest had been free from tares, the seed-thoughts they were able to sow were of the kind destined to yield a thousand fold. I want you all to read again sometime during this month the story of the lives of Washington and Lincoln—particularly of their early days when they were perhaps of the same ages as many of you who will read what I am writing here. Then read Washington's Farewell Address and Lincoln's first and second inaugural speeches, and the twenty-line Gettysburg utterance which will endure for twenty centuries, or for as long as men live banded together in communal effort for fraternal ends. From the lives and words of these two great ones of the earth we can win great thoughts for our own; we can light our own feeble candles of inspiration from their brilliant shining; we can take new love for our country and new faith for the future of a form of government which can breed such men to lead it. I like to think that if Washington was the Father of our Country, so Lincoln may be considered its Great Brother. A love of human kind was the very fiber of his being and not a matter of abstract phrases or a demagogue's attitudes. He never thought of himself as apart from the nation he led or of any of its people whom he loved—either of the North or South. He was comrade and captain. Because he understood much, he found it easy to forgive. If he had any pride, it was that of the humble; and all his life he was glad to know himself one of the "common folks" of whom he said, with tender humor, that God must love them because he had made so many. To me in all history there is no man whose life and lips so often speak the spirit of Christ.

So as we sit by the fire these days and nights of long February storms, let us read, and think as we read, of these two men that this month of winter gave to our country for its birth and saving, and who were great enough to be a gift of our nation to the world. At Washington, a mighty and historic gathering has been working to bring in a dawn that may see a stilling of war drums and a cessation of the horrors and destruction of war. Both Washington and Lincoln well knew the fearful pain and loss of wars which were the more terrible by being struggles in which brother can be truthfully said to have fought against brother. If they could speak at any Conference for the Limitation of Armaments, we can know the advice they would give. It would be well for us if their voices could be heard; but in their silence we can think of them as bending above the councils of the fretted and war-bankrupt nations and saying with one voice: Let us have Peace.

And now for the letters:

TOCCOA, BOX K, GEORGIA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

It's a long, long way to Tipperary—from Georgia to Maine, from Maine all over the United States, but that is where I go this afternoon when I come for a chat with you and the cousins.

On the Southern Railroad, five miles from the South Carolina line, is a town called Toccoa. It is located in that part of the state known as "Cherokee Georgia"—so called because it was once inhabited by the Cherokee Indians. That was long, long ago and there is left to us only the names they gave some of our mountains, rivers and valleys. Some of the names are: Toccoa, meaning "beautiful"; Tallulah, "terrible"; Hiawassee, "pretty flower"; Nacoochee, "evening star"; Cohutta, "frog mountain"; Chattahoochee, "flowered rock". There are some very pretty legends connected with these places.

I wish you all could have spent your vacations last summer in the North Georgia mountains with me. I have always stood proudly by our North Georgia scenery as being the prettiest in the world, but when an artist (famous in both Europe and America) said that he had painted in many countries but loved above all "the exquisite wildness of the mountains of North Georgia"—why then I was sure that our country really is the prettiest.

I had one of the most enjoyable summers I ever spent, and it was all because I have been on more fishing trips than ever before in one season. I'm a faithful follower of Izaak Walton, and some of my happiest hours have been spent on the banks of a lake, just fishing. I am a great lover of all outdoor life. I have always wished I could live on a ranch and have a horse all my own, to ride when and where I pleased and just as much as I wanted to. I wouldn't care if I lived forty miles from a town. Now, somebody laugh, and tell me there isn't any such place nowadays! I'm quite used to hearing that when I talk about living in such a far-off spot.

You are all going to think I am a perfect tomboy if I do not inform you better. Ever since I can remember I have been making my own clothes. I know how to keep all the house spic and span, and I like to do it, too. I especially like the kitchen and can cook fried chicken to tempt the palate of an epicure, but I can cook other things equally well.

I am a ————, but I will let you guess for yourself what kind of work I do, also what my age is. I like the cousins to describe their personal appearance as this makes them more real when I know something about how they look. This letter is too long for me to put my description in it and I'll have to wait till next time—if there is a next time. There may not be, for if Billy gets this I'll never have the nerve to try again.

I would like to have any of you cousins write to me. I wish most that some who live on ranches and farms would write, but I'll be happy to hear from any.

Just one thing more: I have had the most fun the past summer telling stories to the children in our own neighborhood. All the boys and girls from five years up to seventeen are in my audiences. I felt quite complimented when the older boys began to come. Sometimes they would not let me stop until almost midnight. Now, Uncle Lisha, don't you go and pretend you do not understand what kind of stories I tell them: for they are all good stories and some are Bible stories.

I am sending my love to Uncle, but want it divided up among the cousins.

Your niece, RUBY WATKINS.

Ruby, I wouldn't be a bit surprised to hear that you spoke pretty intelligible Cherokee—after reading the words you scattered through the pages of your good letter. About all one would seem to need for a Cherokee dictionary or phrase-book would be a few time-tables of your North Georgia railroads. Your Injun language is very intriguing, Ruby. As I read about your mountain scenery I commenced to think to myself: "How I would love to stand on tallulah cohutta, gathering the sweet hiawasses and watching the rise of the toccoa nacoochee!" It is certainly a charming tongue, and I hope the next letter you write will be entirely in Cherokee so I can have more practice in learning to speak. Billy says it sounds much more melodious than either Russian or Yiddish.

I am sure your mountains are beautiful, Ruby, even if I have not seen them. They doubtless have the deep shadows and the softly-curved outlines of all heavily wooded highlands. It is these which, to my way of thinking, offer the most beautiful sort of mountain scenery. Not much remains save strange and barren grandeur in those granitic and dentated summits that mark peaks of more Alpine heights. Beauty stays below the timber line. Give me for choice the gulfs and coves of your lower and deeply-forested mountains. I want my hills to have their fur left on!

You mustn't be too sure, Ruby, that a ranch might not be found for you situated "forty miles from a town." Why, I have a letter this month from a cousin in Nevada who tells of living a hundred miles from a Main Street! There's lots of space left yet in the West—particularly in Nevada and Utah, but the trouble is that where this space is thickest, there is not much else but emptiness. It's sure you will receive letters from cousins out on some of the big ranches of the big West, and you will be able to write to them and swap Cherokee words for Sioux nouns and adjectives.

You seem to be pretty much of an all-round sport, Ruby, and can manage a fish in a lake as well as in a frying-pan. You can kick up the dust outdoors and can keep out the dust indoors. As to your work in life, I'm going to guess that you teach a school. You write such a good hand and number the pages of your letter so carefully, that from these hints I am willing to risk my reputation as an Uncle-guesser.

When you gather a group around you and tell them stories, Ruby, you are pursuing an ancient occupation, and one of the oldest and most popular in the world. Much of what we treasure as literature of the early days of earth's beginning started down the centuries to us on the tongues of minstrels and tellers of tales. It was on oral history and romance that man had to depend for thousands of years before the written and printed word was known or had become plentiful. Everyone loves to be told stories, and we are all little children and listeners when it comes to this. So

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35)

Montgomery Ward & Co.

The Oldest Mail Order House is Today the Most Progressive

This 50th Anniversary Catalogue Is Yours Free for the Asking

THIS new and complete 50th Anniversary Catalogue will bring you the full advantage of all our Fifty Years' experience in creating low prices on goods of standard serviceable quality. For every reader of this paper one copy of this book is ready—waiting here to be mailed to you. Simply fill in the coupon below and one copy of this complete Golden Anniversary Book will be sent you Free.

Today the price you pay for goods is a matter of where you buy.

There is no standard for prices since the war. You must compare prices now.

People in large cities compare prices by shopping from store to store. You, too, should compare prices—by having in your home this 50th Anniversary Catalogue.

Every price this book quotes is based upon the new low costs of raw materials.

It is filled with new merchandise bought at the new low prices and puts before the public the right price—the lowest price you need pay for anything you buy.

Everything for the home, the Farm and the Family

Everything that goes into the home to make it more modern and complete from wall paper to curtains, lighting fixtures to rugs—everything at Money-Saving Prices.

For Women: All the newest and best New York Fashions—selected by Ward's own fashion experts.

For Men: Everything a man needs from clothing to tools—everything for the farm and farmer's use. Everything at guaranteed, lowest prices of the year.

Montgomery Ward & Co.
Chicago Kansas City St. Paul
Fort Worth Portland, Ore.

We picture above your copy of our Golden Jubilee Catalogue.

And on this picture you may read the policy that has been Montgomery Ward's for Fifty Years.

Today this great new-old institution of Montgomery Ward & Co. marches in the lead among all the alert, progressive, low-price-making business houses of America.

It is a house of experts searching the markets with ready cash, buying at today's lowest prices for YOU.

Every page in this great new 50th Anniversary Catalogue breathes the spirit of Ward's—that of progress in service and saving for you.

H 19

Mail this coupon to the one of our five houses that is nearest you.

To: MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
Chicago, Kansas City, St. Paul, Fort Worth, Portland, Ore.
(Mail this coupon to the house nearest you.)

Please mail my free copy of Ward's 50th Anniversary Catalogue.

Name .....

Address .....

Big Men of the Armament Conference

See front cover design.

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

IN marked contrast with previous international conferences the present Armament Conference is dominated by broad-minded statesmen instead of subtle diplomats. Another notable feature of its personnel is the conspicuous absence of the men who formulated the Paris peace treaty and wove into it the League of Nations monstrosity. From this and the further fact that the administration of every government, except that of David Lloyd George in England, that had any part in bringing forth the League of Nations pact has since been voted out of office it may be fairly inferred that the nations of Europe, after a test of more than two years, are not enthusiastic over the work of their representatives at Paris and for this reason have sent to Washington a different set of men hoped to be auspicious of better results.

Recognizing the immense importance of the opportunity the principal nations represented at the Armament Conference have selected their biggest men for this job. Yet the four American delegates measure up creditably with any of them and have so conducted themselves as to gain the confidence and respect of all.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

ARTHUR J. BALFOUR—BRITAIN.

The nine nations allegorically pictured on our front cover are represented by thirty-two delegates entitled to sit in the Conference and speak and act for their respective governments, and the delegations from countries having major interests at stake are accompanied by a host of expert advisers, assistants, clerks, stenographers and interpreters.

America's Big Four

Doubtless all our readers retain a vivid recollection that President Wilson, contrary to all American precedents, attended the long-drawn session of the Paris Peace Conference as self-constituted representative of the United States, and that his colleagues and advisers who accompanied him on that mission he chose exclusively from his own political party. Although President Harding conceived the idea of the Conference for Limitation of Armament and developed it into a living and fruitful reality, he has maintained a dignified aloofness from all meetings of the Conference except the first which he opened with an address of welcome in behalf of the Government and people of the United States. Nevertheless he has kept in close touch with its deliberations, and without intruding his personality has rendered helpful assistance in its work through frequent consultations with our four delegates.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

CARLO SCHANZER—ITALY.

Viewed from any angle or judged by any criterion the four men appointed by President Harding to serve as delegates for the United States are of such distinguished ability, so eminently qualified and of such high character that they have been generally acclaimed as individually above criticism and exceptionally strong collectively as a working team. Their choice is the more acceptable from the fact that they were selected with a view to giving representation to the important constituent elements of the nation and Government.

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES, Secretary of State, heads the American delegation and represents the President, the executive head of the nation. The Conference did Mr. Hughes the honor of choosing him for chairman. Mr. Hughes is one of the most eminent lawyers in this country; was Governor of New York State from 1907 to 1910, Judge of U. S. Supreme Court from 1910 until he resigned in 1916 to run as the Republican candidate for President; being defeated by President Wilson he resumed the practice of law in which he continued until appointed Secretary of State last March by President Harding.

ELIHU ROOT, of New York, distinguished the world over as one of the most eminent and highly respected of jurists and especially as an authority on international rights and obligations, represents the general public. Mr. Root has the exceptional honor of being the only American member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, Holland, a world tribunal to decide claims and disputes between nations. He has rendered the country notable service as member of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal; as Secretary of War, 1899 to 1904; Secretary of State, 1905 to 1909; U. S. Senator, 1909 to 1915, and as Senior Counsel for the United States in the North Atlantic Fisheries Arbitration in 1910.

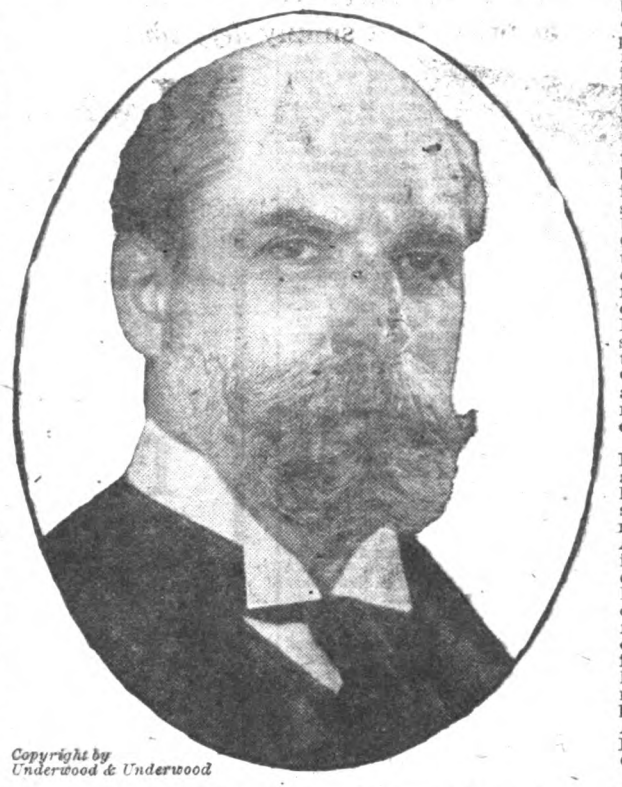

Photo from Underwood & Underwood

H. A. VAN KARNEBEEK—HOLLAND.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, senior Senator from Massachusetts and Republican party leader in U. S. Senate, represents the majority political party of the Senate. During his remarkable public career of thirty-five years continuous service in Congress (from 1887 to 1893 as Representative and since then as Senator) he has served on the most important committees and manifested a high degree of statesmanship in dealing with national and international problems. He has also attained fame in the literary field as the author of a large number of books and magazine articles, mostly historical.

OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, Senator from Alabama and Democratic party leader in U. S. Senate, represents the minority party of the Senate. Mr. Underwood has risen to prominence through a long and creditable career in Congress, having served from 1895 to 1915 as Representative and since then as Senator. As Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the most important committee of the House, in 1914 he was largely instrumental in framing the tariff bill which bore his name and embodied the revenue policy of his party, then in power. He is an able, broad-minded man of large experience in public affairs and ranks high as a Senator as well as a party leader. He is well qualified to do his part of the big job to which President Harding has appointed him and his three associates.

As any treaty stipulations worked out and agreed to by the Conference, even though accepted by our delegates, have to be approved by a two-to-one majority of the U. S. Senate before they become binding on the United States, it is fitting that the Senate should be thus represented on our delegation, although in this as well as in appointing a representative of the opposition political party to participate in the work and share the responsibility President Harding has reversed the policy of his predecessor.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES—UNITED STATES.

British Delegation

The importance that Great Britain attaches to the possibilities of the Armament Conference is revealed in the large caliber of the men she has chosen to represent her. David Lloyd George, the responsible head of the government (under the King), was to have come as head of the British delegation and even went so far in his arrangements as to engage his passage for that purpose, but at the last moment had to change his plans because a critical turn in the negotiations for the pacification of Ireland required his presence in England.

ARTHUR J. BALFOUR, whose picture, taken in the railway station at Washington on his arrival to attend the Armament Conference, appears on this page, is generally considered, next to Lloyd George, the greatest living English statesman. He now occupies the high office of Lord President of the Council, and among other important offices that he has held were Secretary for Scotland, Chief Secretary for Ireland, First Lord of the Admiralty, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and he has also been Prime Minister, the position now held by Lloyd George. He is the author of several books on philosophical and economic subjects and has been active in promoting educational work.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

V. K. WELLINGTON KOO—CHINA.

AUCKLAND GEDDES, British Ambassador at Washington, acts as delegate in the absence of Lloyd George or of any other British delegate. He is a physician by profession and has been Professor of Anatomy at the Royal College of Surgeons, Dublin, and Principal of McGill University in Montreal, Canada. He served in the South African War, and in the World War from 1914 to 1916. Later he was Director of Recruiting, Minister of National Service, President of the Local Government Board, Minister of Reconstruction and President of the national Board of Trade of Great Britain.

LORD LEE OF FAREHAM, First Lord of the Admiralty, was in the military service until 1900, when he retired from the army, but reentered in 1914 for service in the World War. He was British Military Attache with the U. S. Army during the Spanish-American War, and later Military Attache of the British Embassy at Washington, where he married Miss Ruth Moore, of New York. Among the high civil offices that he has held were Director-General of Food Production, and Minister of Agriculture. He has traveled far and wide over Asia and North America and, having spent much time in the United States and Canada, at one time having been Professor of Strategy and Tactics in the Royal Military College of Canada, he has acquired a sympathetic understanding of the mutual interests that should draw the English speaking nations of the earth ever more closely together in a perpetual bond of friendship and cooperation for the peace of the world.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

CARTIER DE MARCHIENNE—BELGIUM.

The other four British delegates are Colonials, representing the respective interests of the colonial Dominions that sent them to the Conference.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN, former Prime Minister of Canada, who represents "Our Neighbor on the North," is recognized as one of the Dominion's ablest statesmen. He is a strong man and exercises a harmonizing influence in the Conference. He is said to advocate the "general principle that in foreign relations in which one or other of the Dominions has a paramount interest, the view of the Dominion in question shall be not merely heard and considered but shall prevail." It is understood that, while loyal to the British Empire, he recognizes that "Canada and the United States are in the same boat when it comes to world politics," and it is reported that he influenced the British delegation to consent to abrogate the British-Japanese treaty of alliance by showing that in case Japan should attack the United States Canada's vital interests would compel her to fight on the side of America. Mr. Borden represented Canada in the Imperial War Cabinet in 1917, and in the Imperial War Conference of 1918.

GEORGE F. PEARCE, Australian Minister of Defense, represents the Commonwealth of Australia which is deeply interested in Far Eastern and Pacific questions before the Conference as well as in the proposed limitation of armament. In 1911 he represented Australia in the British Imperial Conference.

V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI, Member of the Vice-Regal Council of the Government of India, is at the Armament Conference to represent Britain's great Indian Empire which has a population of two hundred and fifty million souls. He is a native Hindu and prominent leader of the Moderate Party. He represented India in the British Imperial Conference at London in 1921.

SIR J. W. SALMOND, Judge of the Supreme Court of New Zealand, represents that thriving and enterprising Dominion. He has been Professor of Law in the University of Adelaide, and Solicitor-General for New Zealand, and is an author of books on law and legal history.

French Delegation

France has sent a very strong delegation headed by her Prime Minister and seconded by a former Prime Minister, both celebrated for their wonderful oratorical talents.

ARISTIDE BRIAND, Prime Minister of France, came as the head of the French delegation and took an active part in the work of the Conference during the first five weeks of its sessions. He then returned to France to attend to official duties that required his presence in Europe. He is one of the few public speakers whose superb oratory is so compelling as apparently to cast a hypnotic spell over an audience. The day before leaving for home he carried his efforts in behalf of France to their climax in a speech of impassioned eloquence that thrilled the delegates to the Conference, level-headed and experienced men of affairs that they are.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

VISCOUNT D'AITE—PORTUGAL.

RENE VIVIANI, former Prime Minister of France, head of the French delegation since the departure of Briand, is a man of great ability and long experience in public affairs, and as an orator is a good second to Briand. When, in 1917, Viviani as head of the French War Mission to the United States visited America his captivating speeches gained him the sobriquet "The Eloquent Voice of France."

ALBERT SARRAUT, Minister of Colonies, is a prominent Member of the Chamber of Deputies (corresponding to Member of Congress in America). He was formerly Under Secretary of State for the Interior, and has written a number of books on political subjects.

JULES JUSSERAND, French Ambassador to the United States, is last, but by no means least, of the French delegation. He has held his present post at Washington continuously since 1902, and is exceedingly popular in America. He speaks and writes perfect English and is a noted French authority on English literature; he is the author of numerous books and magazine articles.

Italian Delegation

MARCHESE DELLA POMETTA, Minister of Foreign Affairs since July, 1921, heads the Italian delegation. He has a thorough knowledge of the Near East, and especially of those turbulent trouble-makers, the Balkan States and Russia, having spent many years in the latter country as diplomatic representative of Italy.

Photo from Underwood & Underwood

ARISTIDE BRIAND—FRANCE.

CARLO SCHANZER, Senator and formerly Minister of the Treasury, is one of Italy's foremost authorities on international law, Professor of Constitutional Law in the University of Naples, and author of many books on subjects pertaining to law and science of government.

LUIGI ALBERTINI, Senator and editor of the Milan Corriere della Sera, the most important paper in Italy, was one of the principal leaders of the movement that brought Italy into the World War on the side of the Allies.

Japanese Delegation

PRINCE TOKUGAWA, President of the House of Peers (the upper branch of the Japanese parliament), is in all respects capable and worthy to head the delegation from that wonderful island empire. He is a prince of royal blood and but for a caprice of Fortune might now be wearing a crown and wielding imperial powers. He is heir to the throne occupied by a long succession of Tycoons whose regal power and splendor rivaled, and at times eclipsed, those of the Mikado until the revolution of 1867 deposed the last of the Tycoons and left the Mikado sole and undisputed monarch. However, Prince Tokugawa is too big a man to have any of the weaknesses and obnoxious traits that sometimes mar an aristocrat; on the contrary he is democratic in his views and in his intercourse with men. He has traveled the world over, speaks English fluently, and is one of Japan's ablest and most progressive statesmen.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

PRINCE TOKUGAWA—JAPAN.

VICE-ADMIRAL KATO, Minister of the Navy, was chosen to serve as a delegate because of his expert knowledge of matters pertaining to the Pacific that are to be considered by the Conference, and in which Japan is especially interested. He also speaks English.

BARON KIJURO SHIDEHARA, has been connected with the diplomatic service and has represented Japan at the capitals of various countries, finally rising to the position of Japanese Ambassador to the United States. His experience, and especially that as Ambassador at Washington, qualifies him to render useful service at the Armament Conference. Japan has sent a strong delegation.

Chinese Delegation

The former vast empire of China, with its four hundred million inhabitants constituting nearly a fourth of the world's population, since the revolution that overthrew the monarchy has been, and still is, in the throes of civil war. On the abolish-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 32.)

2000 Challenge Bargains In Our Great FREE Spring Catalog!

No Other House in America Can Equal Them!

Here's the supreme achievement in our 32 years' service to America's mail order shoppers!

Two thousand Challenge Bargains—the pick of the world's latest and best styles—absolutely unbeatable values—all offered at sensationally low prices in PHILIPSBORN'S 312-page Spring and Summer Style Book.

We searched the Style Centers and Textile Markets of the World to find these supreme values in stylish, dependable wearing apparel and accessories. Our buyers, backed by PHILIPSBORN'S millions of dollars, hammered the prices down to the lowest possible point—then bought in tremendous quantities. We are selling this fine merchandise at prices that simply defy competition. In fact, we guarantee our prices to be the lowest in the U. S. A.!

A National Service!

In times like these, when every dollar must do double duty, PHILIPSBORN'S are glad to go the limit to help their customers save money. Our 2,000 Challenge Bargains will save them millions of dollars.

3 Million Customers!

What greater tribute to PHILIPSBORN'S supremacy than the fact that 3,000,000 customers buy from us, year after year! Why not you? We PREPAY everything and GUARANTEE everything!

Charming NEYSA McMEIN

Popular Society Leader, Famous Artist and Ultra-Fashionable Designer, Pays a Wonderful Tribute to Philipsborn's Style Book

Charming Neysa McMein—(everybody knows Neysa)—whose beautiful paintings adorn the covers of America's foremost magazines, says:

"Nothing I saw at the famous dressmakers of Paris excels the wonderful display assembled in Philipsborn's Spring and Summer Style Book. It is truly a work of art."

REAL PARIS MODELS
Gowns, Suits & Coats

The very latest and loveliest Paris models, the originals costing as high as 5,000 francs in France—purchased direct from famous French dressmakers. We sell actual reproductions of these beautiful Paris importations for as little as $14.98.

Send for Your Copy—NOW!

To the millions of women who have eagerly awaited the announcement of PHILIPSBORN'S Style Book for Spring and Summer 1922, we send this word of warning:

We have only printed 3,000,000 copies. This we fear is at least 2,000,000 short of the demand. Copies of the Style Book are supplied—FREE OF CHARGE—as long as they last. Requests are even now coming in at a rate unparalleled in our 32 years' history. The only way to make SURE of your copy of the Style Book is to send for your copy NOW!

Fill out and mail the Coupon or send a Postal for PHILIPSBORN'S 312-page, Color-Illustrated Spring and Summer Style Book—with its 2,000 Challenge Bargains—right this minute. Remember, the edition is limited!

PHILIPSBORN'S
DEPARTMENT 364 CHICAGO

PHILIPSBORN'S, Dept. 364, Chicago.

Please send copy of Philipsborn's Spring and Summer Style Book, free, postpaid, to

Name .....

Address .....

Town ..... State .....

Be More Careful

of your teeth—combat the film

If you are brushing your teeth in a wrong way, learn what this new way means.

Authorities now advise it. Leading dentists everywhere are urging its daily use. Millions of people employ it.

Make this ten-day test and let the results show you what really clean teeth mean.

That dingy film

Film is what clouds the teeth's beauty. It causes most tooth troubles. Countless teeth discolor and decay because the old ways of brushing do not effectively fight film.

Film is that viscous coat you feel. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. That is what discolors—not the teeth.

Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Ways to end it

Dental science has in late years found two ways to fight film. It has proved them by careful tests. Now they are embodied in a new-day tooth-paste—called Pepsodent—for daily application.

Dentists here and abroad now advise it. It is now bringing a new dental era to some 40 races of people.

Other new effects

Pepsodent brings three other effects, natural and very important.

It multiplies the salivary flow—Nature's great tooth-protecting agent. It multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva, to digest starch deposits. They may otherwise cling and form acids.

It multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva, to neutralize the acids which cause tooth decay.

Thus every use does five things which dental authorities now regard as essential.

You'll quickly see

A 10-Day tube of Pepsodent is sent to all who ask. That shows the delightful effects. In a week you will realize that this method means much to you and yours.

Send the coupon for it. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coats disappear.

Watch all the effects, then read the reasons in our book. That test may lead to life-long benefits. Cut out the coupon now.

771

10-Day Tube Free

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 627, 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

.....

.....

Only one tube to a family.

Pepsodent PAT. OFF. REG. U.S.

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant, whose every application brings five desired effects. Approved by highest authorities, and now advised by leading dentists everywhere. All druggists supply the large tubes.

Stella Rosevelt

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4.)

my heart—and I know of no one in all England whom I should care to win for my bride."

Saturday came, and at an early hour Star awoke and arose to see what the morning promised and to prepare for the anticipated pleasure of the day.

She ran downstairs to practice for an hour, after which she went to her breakfast, and confided to Mrs. Blunt the fact that "she and Uncle Jacob" were going to have a holiday—her throbbing pulses warned her not to mention the third member of the party, lest she should betray more than she cared to.

This duty over, she returned to her room to give her attention to that, for once with her, very important subject for consideration—her toilet.

She arranged her shining hair with great care. It was her glory, and Archibald Sherbrooke had made it appear such in that picture which he had shown her yesterday, and which she now remembered with crimson cheeks and glowing eyes, as she brushed those shining strands until they gleamed like burnished gold. She then wove it into one massive braid, as she had worn it that day which neither of them would ever forget, and tied it a little way from the end with a fresh, delicate blue ribbon.

This done, she donned the spotless white dress, with a broad belt of blue, and its great bow on one side, and fastened a simple knot of the same at her throat, but heaving a regretful sigh as she thought of her precious cameo, and wished she could have had it to wear today. Then she tied a pretty chip hat, with its mull trimmings and bunch of forget-me-nots over her golden head, and blushed rosy red at the vision of loveliness that looked out at her from her small mirror.

Taking her roll of music, and throwing a fleecy shawl over her arm, she ran downstairs with a light, springing step, intending to go to the lodge for a word with Mr. Rosevelt before she went to the station.

"Where are you going, miss, rigged out in that style?" was the rude query that saluted her ears, as she came out upon the veranda, and stopped for a moment to fasten her gloves.

Looking up, she saw Josephine sitting at one end of the porch, and half hidden by the luxuriant growth of vines climbing the trellis.

Her radiant face clouded; it seemed almost like an omen of evil to have her anticipations of pleasure broken in upon thus.

"I am going to New York to take my music lesson," she answered, touching the roll underneath her arm.

"Do you always dress yourself out like that to take your music lesson? Perhaps you are trying to strike up a flirtation with Professor What's-his-name," sneered the haughty beauty.

Poor Star glanced down at her offending dress, an indignant flush rising to her cheek.

The entire cost of it had been less than what Josephine was accustomed to pay for even a pair of shoes; and yet she knew, without being told, that the gay belle, with all her expensive trappings, had never looked half so fresh and lovely as she did at that moment.

Josephine realized it also, and her heart was filled with bitter envy and malice.

"Go back upstairs and change your gown," she continued, angrily, without giving Star an opportunity to reply to her taunting remarks. "You have no business to go to the city, dressed as if you were going to a party."

Star's small head came up like a flash of light; her eyes darkened and glowed with a sense of wounded pride and injustice.

She stood still a moment, her scarlet lips compressed until only a narrow line of red was visible; then, in a calm, clear, but very decided tone, she said:

"You have no right to lay such commands upon me, Miss Richards, and I shall not obey you."

"You insolent beggar; what do you mean by answering me in this way?" began the astonished girl; but Star had glided down the steps, and was walking with a proud, elastic step down the avenue; consequently her rage was expended upon the empty air.

Mr. Rosevelt was standing on the porch of the lodge when Star came along, and he, too, marveled at her exceeding beauty, saying to himself that he had never seen her so brilliant and spirited before.

"Good morning, Uncle Jacob," she said, brightly, as she saw him standing there, and her indignation immediately began to subside.

"How well you are looking," she said, gayly. "I just ran down to see if you were all right, and to jog your memory about our little celebration today."

"You did not need to do that, Starling. I am as eager as a schoolboy for my day of pleasure," he returned, with a fond smile, adding: "But how dainty you are this morning. I shouldn't wonder if our artist friend would be wanting to paint the picture of a 'star' one of these days, eh?"

Star blushed and laughed lightly.

She could have told him, had she chosen, that it was already painted.

But she only charged him playfully to make himself look as young and charming as possible if he intended to be her escort to Coney Island; then, waving him a farewell, she tripped away with a smile on her lips, a song in her heart.

When Star reached the place appointed as the rendezvous by Mr. Rosevelt and Mr. Sherbrooke, this latter gentleman also thought her the fairest object he had ever seen, and knew that, as he clasped her small hand, his eyes were betraying that old, old story of which his heart was so full.

The sail down the river was even more charming than they had anticipated. The day was perfect, the air being just cool enough to be exhilarating, while our trio of friends were in a mood to enjoy everything in the way of pleasure that might present itself.

After several hours of pleasure, Mr. Rosevelt said that he should be obliged to give up and take a rest.

So Mr. Sherbrooke ordered a room for him at the hotel, and he went to "take a nap," while the young man, with a feeling of exultation that now he should have Star all to himself, took a carriage for a long drive upon the beach.

For miles and miles they drove over the smooth, hard road, both in their happiest mood, and giving themselves up to the enjoyment of the hour.

Every moment spent in Star's society only served to entangle our young English friend more securely in the meshes of love's net; while she began to realize that the world would never be quite the same again to her when he should be gone, and no prospect of their meeting again.

"He is going away next week," she kept saying again and again to herself, while a chill pain gnawed at her heart. "How can I bear to have him go, and feel that I may never see him again? Oh, England, my home! my home! would that I also could go back to you!"

So intense was her longing for her home, so keenly did she regret this parting, which she felt was inevitable, that the tears sprang into her eyes, and a deep sigh came welling up from her burdened heart.

"Miss Star, why that doleful sigh?" exclaimed Archibald Sherbrooke, in surprise.

Star started, and looking up, found her companion's eyes fixed upon her with grave questioning.

She colored vividly, fearing he had read something of her thoughts.

"Did I sigh?" she asked, evasively.

"Yes; and I did not like the sound of it, either. Are you tired of driving? Shall we go back and try something else?" he asked, only anxious to give her pleasure.

"Oh, no; this is delightful," she answered, quietly. "I fear I have been guilty of rudeness if I have given you the impression that I am not enjoying every moment of this lovely day. Do you know, Mr. Sherbrooke," she asked, with a smile that had a tinge of sadness in it, "that I am indebted to you for the only real holiday that I have had since I came to America?"

He regarded her with surprise.

"Is it possible?" he asked. "I fear, then, that you have not had a very happy life during the last year, or else you are working too hard over your books."

She feared she had betrayed more than she ought. She did not want him to know how hard life had been made for her. She was too proud to complain of the ill-treatment, the coldness, and even dislike which had been her lot, where she had expected to find only kindness, love and sympathy.

"I have been working pretty busily," she answered, as if that were all. "I am anxious to graduate this year, and I have to apply myself rather closely with my music and other duties."

"Why are you so anxious to graduate this year? Why not take more time, rather than run the risk of injuring your health?" he questioned, gravely.

"I am going back to England sometime," she said, her eyes kindling, and the sooner I can complete my education, the earlier I can go. I have my own future to carve out, Mr. Sherbrooke, and my aim is to prepare myself for a teacher."

"Your own future to carve out!" he cried, greatly surprised. "I thought you had friends here who were to care for you always."

She colored, but answered, gravely:

"I should not be content to pass my life here. I shall stay only long enough to complete my education; then I shall go back to my own country to teach."

He understood her; he saw, even though she would not confess it, that her life since coming to America had not been a happy one.

She was going to be a teacher, she said; she was bending all her energies in that direction, and was working, he felt assured, far beyond her strength.

She did not look fit to fight the battle of life alone; she was slender and delicate, although he felt that, in spite of her fragile appearance, there was an element of strength in her character which would overcome every obstacle which it was possible for a human being in her position to overcome.

She had "her future to carve out," she had told him. What did she intend that future to be?—what were her hopes, her aims, her plans? Surely not to teach always.

Ah, if she would but learn to love him—if he could win her, it would be very different from the wearying, dragging life of a teacher.

Before he was hardly aware of his intention, his heart had overleaped every barrier, he bent toward her and said, in a low, earnest tone:

"Star, I love you. Let me depict your future for you."

CHAPTER XV.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

The beautiful maiden cast one startled glance up at her handsome lover, and then grew colorless as the dress she wore.

But when he softly laid his hand upon hers, saying, gently, "Darling, I have frightened you with my abruptness," her whole being thrilled beneath his touch, and the rich crimson swept swiftly up over neck, face and brow, until it lost itself in the fluffy masses of sunny hair which lay upon her forehead.

"I could not help it," he went on, a glad light leaping to his eyes as he saw her blushes; "and I have known that I love you, my beautiful one, for a long time. Do you remember that it was I who received you into my arms when you were lifted to the deck of our steamer from that frail boat in which you so nearly perished? Do you know that your fair face lay upon my breast, and as I looked down upon you, I knew that no other had ever moved me so strangely and so deeply, despite its pallor and the tale of suffering that I read there? Its power grew upon me during the few days which followed, and while we were so much together, and when at last we were obliged to part, and I begged a tress of this sunshine"—touching the massive braid which lay over her shoulder almost reverently—"the picture that you made, with your shy grace and modest beauty as you unhesitatingly clipped it for me, stamped itself indelibly upon my heart, where I have carried it ever since, growing to love it more and more, until I determined to make it always mine by putting it on canvas. I did not know as I should ever see you again, and yet I have been haunted by a feeling that some magnetic influence or strange power of attraction would eventually draw us together again; and so it has proved. Star, I know that I love you as deeply and truly as it is possible for one human being to love another. You say you love England; you wish to go back and make your home there. Tell me that, some day, I may take you there—that my home shall become your home, and you will be my cherished wife. My darling, you have made yourself very fair today—so like the picture I have painted, and which I showed you yesterday, that something has whispered to me that a thought of me prompted it; that there was something of tenderness in your heart which made you put those shining locks, which you have been wearing in another fashion of late, into this massive braid again, and tie it with this lovely blue, so like your eyes. Raise them, dear, and let me look into them, to see if I can read anything of the story I wish to know. Tell me, Star, that when I come to America again, I may come to claim this hand and call its owner my wife."

His hand had rested lightly upon hers all the time he had been speaking. She had not attempted to withdraw it, and now his fingers closed over it in a firm, loving clasp.

It still lay trembling but unresistingly there; and when, as he bent to look into those drooping eyes, she lifted them to his with one shy glance of answering tenderness, he knew that he had not sued in vain.

"My own darling!" he whispered, passionately, his face flushing with happiness; "you do love me; I read it in your eyes, and the world was never so bright to me as at this moment; but tell me, shall I have what I want—will you give me your promise that, next year, when you have completed your education, instead of going back to England as a teacher, you will go with me as my wife?"

She grew suddenly grave, and lifting an earnest look to his face, said:

"I have told you that I am only a poor girl, with my own fortune to carve out. You have no idea how poor I am, how dependent, how friendless. You, perhaps, have proud relatives; you may occupy a place far above me socially, and your friends might object to your claiming one in my position as your wife."

"I care nothing for your poverty or dependence, dear," he returned, tenderly; "it cannot alter the fact that you are the only woman whom I shall ever love well enough to make my wife. But," he added, with a thoughtful look, "I forget that I am almost a stranger to you—that you know nothing of me, that I have told you nothing——"

"I have not given it a thought," Star interrupted, earnestly. "I can trust you; I know you are true."

His face grew radiant.

"You will never regret your trust, my darling," he said. "I—am an artist, Star, but I believe I can take care of you, and promise you that you shall never know the meaning of the words poor and dependent again. Of course I have friends, and—but I will tell you all about them some other time. I want my promise now—you will give yourself to me, dear?"

"Yes," she breathed, her scarlet lips parting slightly with a tremulous smile, "by and by, when I am better fitted to be your—wife."

He longed to take her in his arms and draw her to his heart, and kiss the lips that had promised him the greatest joy he had ever known; but there were other carriages near, and curious eyes all about them; so he could only clasp that small hand more fondly, and murmur low and tender words to tell of the deep, true love of which his heart was full.

"You shall indeed go back to England now, my darling," he said, "but never to teach. You shall remain here until you have completed your course of study if you wish; then I shall come, before this time next year, and take you to my—our home. I shall return with a happy heart now, for I shall have an object to work for and something to look forward to. Ah, my dear, my dear, do you realize what is in store for us?—a long life of joy and love together, with brightest hopes and congenial tastes. Star, my beloved—my star, indeed!"

Who can wonder that she gave herself up to the bliss of loving and being loved, when wooed in this tender manner?

Who could chide this heart-hungry maiden, who had been starving for affection and sympathy, for feeling that she had never known happiness before?

And she loved him with all her soul. He had won all the passion of her young heart, and she gave herself up to him wholly, unreservedly, trusting him without a suspicion or thought that he could be anything save truth and honor itself.

Twilight was beginning to gather when they returned to the hotel where they had left Mr. Rosevelt, but it was not yet so dark but that that gentleman remarked the glorified expression of the young man's face, and the brilliant light which gleamed in Star's radiant eyes.

"May I tell our dear old friend, Star?" Archibald Sherbrooke whispered, as he assisted her to alight from the carriage.

She started, and grew crimson.

"Oh, Mr. Sherbrooke, not tonight, please."

"To whom are you speaking, my Star?" he interrupted, with assumed sternness and reproach.

She glanced up questioningly, yet with burning cheeks, for she knew what he meant, but was not quite sure yet what he wished her to call him.

"My mother calls me Archie," he said, with a meaning smile.

"Must I call you that?" she asked, her heart thrilling at the name, yet instinctively shrinking from addressing him quite so familiarly yet.

"There is no 'must' about it, nor about anything else that you do not like, my darling," he said, very gently, but looking a trifle grave, she thought.

"Then please let me go—Archie, for I know Uncle Jacob is wondering why it takes me so long to get out of the carriage, and—ever so many people are looking at us," Star said, wishing she could hide her hot cheeks, and realizing, if he did not, that he was holding her hands a great deal longer than there was any need of doing.

A brilliant smile parted his lips as he released her, and she darted away, just as a servant came forward to take the horse, he following more leisurely to give her time to recover herself a little.

"You have enjoyed your drive, little one?" Mr. Rosevelt asserted, questioningly, as she came and stood beside his chair, while he regarded her with a keen glance.

"Very much, Uncle Jacob; and you—are you rested?" Star asked, eager to turn his attention from herself.

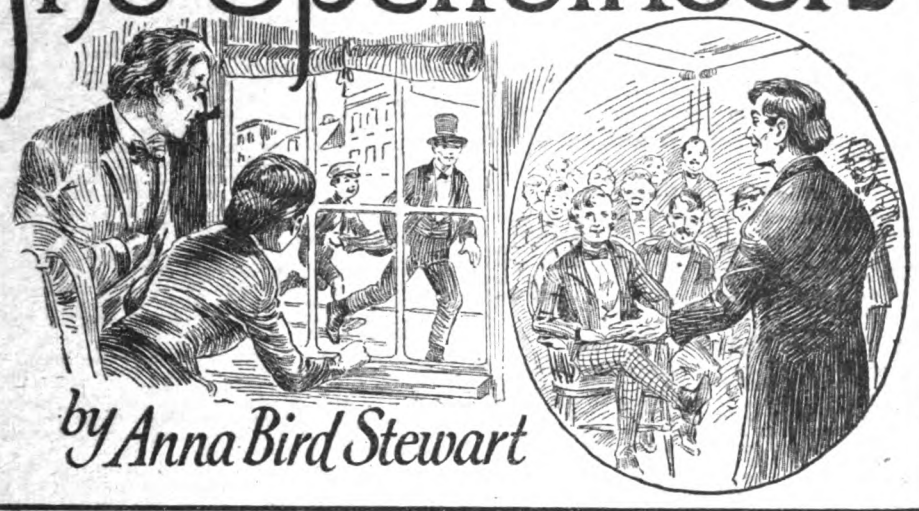
"Entirely, and am as hungry as an old bear, too."

"I am delighted to hear it," young Sherbrooke said, now joining them.

They went in to an inviting meal, spread in a private room for them. The young man had given an order to this effect before going to ride, as he had noticed that Star was annoyed at dinner by the attention which her lovely face had attracted.

When the steamer arrived, Archibald found a sheltered seat for Mr. Rosevelt, and then drawing Star a little apart, wrapped her shawl carefully about her and sat down beside her, her hand clasped in his under cover of its soft folds.

"He will not mind, and I want you to myself," he whispered. "I cannot see you tomorrow, love, for it will be Sunday, but Monday or Tuesday I shall come to you. I cannot wait longer."



Star glanced at him somewhat anxiously.

She knew what that coming would entail upon her—sneers and taunts, and perhaps more unkindness than she had ever yet received from Mrs. Richards or Josephine.

Mr. Richards, she felt assured, would be more

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 13.)

The Spellbinders

by Anna Bird Stewart

The ten-year-old boy, who figures in this episode in President Lincoln's early career as a rising young lawyer, lived to realize his inborn ambition to become "famous" as an actor. This "little Joe Jefferson" grew up to be the great Joe Jefferson, famous in the title role of Rip Van Winkle, and one of America's most popular, highly respected and best beloved actors. He was a cultured gentleman and a good man; his fair fame was never sullied by a suspicion of scandal. Like Washington and Lincoln, he was born in February, the short month that has given the world so many celebrities. He died April 23, 1905, at the ripe age of seventy-six. He was on terms of personal intimacy with many prominent men of his time, among them President Cleveland who took pleasure in Jefferson's companionship. President Lincoln's fondness for a good play well acted is well known.—EDITOR.

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

"WELL," said the homely man, "where did you come from?" He had been standing inside the narrow hall of the building looking at the small stranger on the stoop.

Quite unaware of the scrutiny, the boy was apparently, though silently, making an impassioned address to an invisible multitude in the unpaved street before him. The interruption brought him back rudely into the commonplace present. What had seemed, in the vivid imagination of childish make-believe, to be the Roman Forum, was, after all, only the unkempt, straggling aspect of an Illinois town, and the glory of the last days of the Republic had degenerated into the mediocrity of the year 1839.

"Well, well," repeated the ugly man.

Something in his smile made the youngster laugh in return. The words of his response rolled out with quaint, grown-up effect.

"Did you mean whence did we come originally, sir, or immediately?"

The man chuckled. "Both, if you are inclined to be generous."

"We have been touring the West, mostly in Illinois, for some time," the child told him. "But we are natives of New York."

"And may I ask who 'we' are?"

"The Jeffersons." The boy's voice took on a tone of surprise and reproach at the inquirer's ignorance.

"Oh, to be sure! Your father is the actor."

"So am I an actor," the child declared proudly. "We all are. Why, I began when I was a baby. I have Grand father's name, too, just like Father's, so I have to be the best of us young ones. Mother calls that 'tradition'."

"Then you must be little Joe Jefferson."

"Well, I won't always be little." Joe looked at the man with the direct, searching glance of childhood. Apparently satisfied, he went on. "Some day I'll be big Joe, when I'm a man. You know, I'm going to be famous. Aren't you?"

"I'm afraid not, Joe."

The child's sunny face clouded. Hope and ambition had been his training for so long that he almost distrusted a man not acknowledging them. With intuitive feeling his companion understood.

"I tell you what, Joe," he said quickly. "See the window up there in this building, the one with the books on the sill? Well, that's my office. You come up there sometime and we'll talk it over. I have a great big Shakespeare book I'll show you."

"Are you an actor, too?"

"No, I am a lawyer."

"I'll come, but I can't come now. There's my Father going toward our new theater. Whenever I see him, that's my cue, so Mother told me this morning. I'm to remain close to him in expectation and anticipation of the immediate advent of a rehearsal." The lad quoted his mother, with mischievous imitation of that formality of manner and diction which her stage experience unconsciously taught her to assume in all serious situations.

At this they both laughed merrily, the child who could talk like a grown person, and the man who could think like a child. A moment later, when the little fellow ran to join his father, in obedience to the maternal precept and to his sense of professional obligation as well, it was with the unspoken though firm conviction that in this man he had found a friend.

Joe met his father standing before the new theater. Standing there had become a habit with J. Jefferson. That small square building represented his entire fortune. Furthermore, it represented more money than he had before owned in several seasons, the profits of eight phenomenally successful weeks with his repertoire company through the West. He was building hopes upon the result of a long season here in Springfield during the session of the state legislature. A poor actor with a wife and family all in the same business has need of hopes; it is seldom that he has anything else.

The new opera house was not a thing of beauty. It covered a small, narrow lot with a plain, straight board structure, bare of ornament or paint.

"Looks something like a dry goods box with a roof, father," was the youngster's comment. "But it's the only thing you and I ever owned with a roof, so we're sort of proud of it."

"Yes," said his father cheerily, "a poor thing, but mine own.' And then, it might be worse. It might be like those playhouses of old Shakespeare's time, and not have any roof at all."

A newcomer drew near the father and son with a too obvious intention of making friends. Little Joe looked at him suspiciously.

"I take it, sir," began the stranger, "that you are not from the West."

Mr. Jefferson bowed low. "No, sir—New York, like Melancholy, 'claims me for her own!'"

"I, too, am only a sojourner. I come from Chicago."

Mr. Jefferson bowed again, sympathetically. He had often played to empty benches in Chicago.

The stranger continued. "I shall be here for some time, and shall be glad to see more of you. You will find me every evening at the revival services in the big tent. Come join us. We have," and the revival leader swelled up noticeably, "we have exceptional singing."

"Thank you, sir, I should be pleased to attend your performances, but unfortunately from now on my evenings will be occupied."

"Might I be permitted the liberty of asking your name?"

"Assuredly, sir. I am called Joseph Jefferson, from an illustrious father."

"Ah," said the inquirer, to whom the name meant a long line of noble statesmen. "And what, my dear little boy, might you be called?"

The youngster cleared his throat and took his father's pose as he answered in the identical manner, "I am called Joseph Jefferson, from an illustrious father."

The father laughed.

The man from Chicago gave an angry snort at the exactness of the imitation. Such impudence! Life was too serious for anyone to make sport of him. "Children should be seen and not heard!" he said with severity as he passed on. The child's clear voice followed him down the grassy path.

"Say, father, he must be an actor, too, because he quotes Shakespeare"

It was the last straw. When the angry gentleman met the chairman of the city council further down the street, he stopped, turning back toward the new building. "What is that man doing here?" he demanded.

"Who? The fellow standing in front of the new theayter?"

"What?"

"What did you think it was in your Chicago innocence, a meetin' house?"

Photo from Underwood & Underwood

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

"Brother, joke no further about the hall of sin."

"You talk like a real gospel minister ought to, more than any one I ever heard," said the committee man. "Yet you're only the fellow that 'raises the hymns' and does some of the talking at a tent revival. Not much difference between you and a play-actor. Guess there ain't much real religion in you. What about it?"

"Brother," began the revivalist in protest. Then he suddenly changed his tone into one of extreme practicality. "Look here, if that theayter starts working it's going to interfere with our business."

"Shouldn't be surprised," the councilman agreed laconically.

"Have the show people much money?"

"They leased that lot, and have put up their own building. Wasn't any place in town fit for a real show."

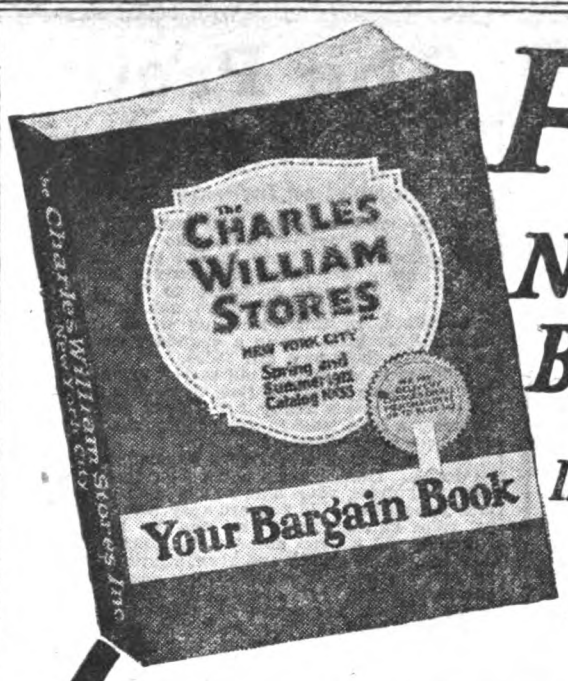
"I see. Well, have they paid a license?"

"Not as I heard tell. And I calculate I'd know if any money was coming in our way."

"Ah!" said the holy gentleman from Chicago. He looked keenly at the shrewd face of the local politician, and apparently satisfied, suggested that the requirement for a license would settle things up all around.

The city councilman was puzzled. Politics he knew. The church, however, he had unthinkingly held in the veneration accorded by a small town where religion is kept clean of corruption, greed and wire pulling. Yet he was a shrewd man and his scruples had never overburdened him.

"Just what do you mean?" he demanded.



"Let the city insist upon a license. They had money enough to put up a building so they ought to be able to pay. If they can't, Springfield has a new building without cost. The revival gains fame for driving sinners from our midst, and removes competition at the same time. See?"

"Suppose they pay?"

"Better still. The city is apparently richer by so much. You gain popularity, and election is coming, that's one of its peculiarities. Moreover, the revival has a subject for sermons ready-made."

"What do you get out of it?"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 34.)

FREE

New Spring Bargain Book

Including Complete Selection of New York Styles

788 pages filled with splendid bargains from cover to cover—bargains you cannot afford to overlook. Never before have styles been more beautiful — styles selected by our experts from among the best New York has to offer—styles which maintain the long established reputation of the Charles William Stores—and not in years have prices been so low.

Not only will you find the latest New York styles for women, misses, and children, men and boys, but there are hundreds of pages crowded with everything imaginable for the home, the farm; the city dweller or the suburbanite—all at prices made possible only by our enormous buying facilities. Send for your FREE copy of the book—mail the coupon TODAY.

We pay delivery charges on all style merchandise.

SAVE ON EVERYTHING!

Wearing Apparel for Women, Children and Men. Shoes for all, and Piece Goods.

Household Goods, Furniture, Draperies, Carpets, Beds and Bedding.

Farm and Garden Implements, Sporting Goods, Bicycles.

Automobile Tires and Accessories.

Household Remedies, Toilet Articles, Toys, Jewelry Novelties.

Carpenters', Machinists', Painters', and Plumbers' Supplies and Tools.

Lovely frocks for daytime or evening wear, developed in all the newest silk, cotton and woolen fabrics and depicting the smartest lines, the latest trimmings, from $5.98 to $28.75.

Mail Coupon Today

Make these big savings yours—the coupon brings the book by return mail.

Smart Suits of All-Wool Velours, Serges, Tricotines, all showing Fashion's newest trend. Splendidly tailored and expertly finished. Prices ranging from $10.50 to $35.00.

The CHARLES WILLIAM STORES INC.
New York City

MAIL THIS OR SEND POSTAL TODAY

THE CHARLES WILLIAM STORES,
822 Stores Building, New York City.

Please send me Free your New Spring Bargain Book including New York Styles.

Name .....

Rural Route or Street No. .....

City and State .....

Please Write Name and Address Plainly

Don't let him count the gray hairs

No One Need Have Gray Hair

No man admires gray hair, and no woman need have it, at any age. The gray streaks and silver threads can be restored, surely and safely.

Send for the free trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer and test as directed on a single lock. In from 4 to 8 days the gray will disappear and the natural color return.

This restoration is natural—no streaking or discoloration. Mary T. Goldman's is a scientific laboratory preparation, every bottle uniform, efficient and reliable. Its use insures the future of your hair.

Safe and Easy

Mary T. Goldman's is applied by combing through the hair. No skill is required, the process is easy, results certain.

There is nothing to wash or rub off—Mary T. Goldman's is a clear, colorless liquid which leaves the hair soft and fluffy. It won't discolor or look dyed in the sun.

Mail Coupon for Trial Bottle

Fill in carefully and if possible enclose lock in your letter. By return mail we will send trial bottle.

When the package comes, test as directed on a single lock and let results tell their own story. Then, when you know that your gray hair can be restored easily, safely and surely, get the full-sized bottle from your druggist or order direct from us.

Mary T. Goldman, 1165 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

MARY T. GOLDMAN'S Hair Color Restorer

Mary T. Goldman, 1165 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.
Please send me your FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. The natural color of my hair is black..... jet black..... dark brown..... medium brown..... light brown.....

Name .....

Address.....

Please print your name and address.

It is Natural to be Lovely

Charm, health, beauty are not fairy gifts. Every woman may acquire them. The Arden method, simple but effective, is the guide, and the Venetian preparations the aid, of Nature. The clear radiance of the skin is frequently blemished by coarse pores, lines and wrinkles, and after extensive research and study, I have perfected preparations to correct these prevalent difficulties.

Anti-Wrinkle Cream—I have recently brought this Cream from Paris. It keeps the skin youthfully smooth and unlined—$2.

Venetian Pore Cream—To reduce coarsened pores and refine the texture of the skin—$1.

Write me a frank description of your skin and I will Send my booklet "The Quest of the Beautiful" with personal advice.

ELIZABETH ARDEN

Salon d'Oro, 681-D Fifth Avenue, New York
25 Old Bond St., London 255 Rue St. Honore, Paris

A Clear Skin

and a better complexion

Or Your Money Back

20 DAYS' TRIAL

Your friends will think more of you. Your own people will be more proud of you, if you have a nice, clear, healthy skin. To introduce Young's Victoria Cream, guaranteed to improve every one's complexion and remove pimples, blackheads, freckles or brown patches, we will send enough for 20 days' trial for this adv. and ten cents in silver to cover cost of mailing. Good Agents Wanted.

F. H. Young & Co., 32 Dorr St., Toledo, Ohio.

RUBS OUT WRINKLES

Don't let wrinkles and hideous crow feet destroy your beauty. They make you look years older than you really are. Under the magic urge of wrinkles disappear. Absorbed by the dry skin and shrunken tissues beneath, it fills hollows and replaces that aged, tired look with one of youthful freshness. You're a new woman and can see it! Send name, address and ten cents for Sample Box and Beauty Book. Agents Wanted.

PARISIAN FLESH FOOD

Mme. M. FOULAIRE, 83 Parisian Bldg., CLEVELAND, O.

Kill The Hair Root

My method is the only way to prevent the hair from growing again. Easy, painless, harmless. No scars. Booklet free. Write today enclosing 3 stamps. We teach beauty culture.

D. J. MAHLER, 348-X, Mahler Park, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Pretty Girls' Club

Conducted by Katherine Booth

Formal or Informal Hair

WITH bobbed hair half "in" and half "out"—those who have bobbed their hair in the past reforming and laboring to coax it back to the length necessary to "do up"; and those who have not bobbed their hair before, rushing feverishly to do it now—many of my girls are in a quandary as to what to do with their own fair locks.

Well, girls, don't bob, unless you are about sixteen and have plenty of time to grow a new crop before you are a really full-fledged young lady. It takes a long time to grow hair, so treat what you have with respect.

But there is a much more important question to decide. Hair forms a setting for the face, and how you dress your hair reacts upon your general appearance. If you are very prim and tight in your hairdressing, who can be blamed for thinking you a prim and prudish young woman? And if you are untidy and always falling to pieces as to your hair, who can avoid jumping to the conclusion that you are untidy in every other way? If you are marceled stiffly and properly and your hair is "just so," you give the impression of a very formal and correct young woman. Well, if that is what you would like to be, stick to marcelles and oddles of invisible hairpins, so no single hair may stray from the path of perfection. But if you think you would rather be and seem to be a jolly, good-natured girl or woman, a lover of innocent good times and a good companion, then be a little less formal in your hairdressing.

THIS GIRL'S HAIR IS INFORMALLY BUT BECOMINGLY ARRANGED.

Of course the secret of all good hairdressing is perfectly clean hair—hair that has had the day's dust brushed out of it before going to bed, and hair that has been aired over night, and hair that is shampooed every two weeks—or at least every three weeks. It should be full of life, and willing to stand out from the head in becoming fluffiness. Hair which is not washed frequently slinks close to the scalp and will take on no becoming curves or fluffiness. So, first of all, see that your hair is clean.

Then make up your mind that you will not strain your hair back from your forehead, but will see that you have a graceful "hair-line," by arranging the hair so that it falls loosely and softly down on the forehead, either side of the part. Invisible hairpins will enable you to arrange the hair in the most becoming lines.

I say do not strain your hair away from the forehead, but on the other hand do not brush the hair in great "gobs" over the ears, leaving the back of the head scant of hair. Sometimes I think girls forget to look into their hand mirrors, or I am sure some of the hairdressing I see would not be existent. I am sure the girls look only at their front face, and never give a glance to the back or sides of their hair, or they would see how out of proportion the enormous ear-muffs are compared to the little wisp of hair which too often is all that is left for the back of the head. See that you do not make this mistake, but portion your hair out so that your head is symmetrical and well-shaped after the hair is dressed.

You will find it comparatively simple to dress your hair any way you desire, if you part it here and there and handle only a portion of the hair at a time. And if when you have just the droop of hair you desire on the forehead, you fasten it securely in place with pins which cannot be seen. Avoid the appearance of skewered hair—let your pins be truly invisible.

Some girls part off the front half of the hair and after adding another part, either side or middle, but usually to one side of the middle, arrange this front half of the hair first, pinning it at the sides where needed, then pinning the ends against the back of the head half way down, doing up the back half of the hair over these ends. Others do up the back half of the hair first, combing it up and turning the ends under, pinning it more than half way up the back of the head, then arranging the front half of the hair, tucking its ends under, and pinning it to the back of the hair. The thing for you to keep in mind, however, is that you can fix your hair anyway you like—there are no set rules. Just experiment and make a pretty picture of it, but try not to have it look too considered—that is, as if you had spent a lot of time on it.

Answers to Questions

JESSIE.—All kinds of bleaches we want, do we? Well, one of the best for the face is as follows, but it isn't anything you can have "put up" at the druggist's. You can get the ingredients, but the real value on the bleach lies in what you do with them. Buy a jar of theatrical cream and a pound of almond meal. For your first application take a heaping teaspoonful of the cream and to this keep adding meal until you have about all the meal the cream will hold: to this stiff mixture add just enough hot water to make a paste thin enough to spread. Have ready two masks of cheese-cloth—squares with a hole for your nose—and after dampening them spread the paste on one and lay the other over the paste-spread side of the first one. The face should have been bathed in very hot soapy water. Rub gently with the flats of the fingers to speed up the circulation and stimulate the pores to action; then apply the pack, patting it close to the facial skin. Over this place two hot wet Turkish towels of small size—one folded over the upper half of the face, the other over the lower half, leaving only the nostrils uncovered. Have a bowl of very hot water at your side with two more towels, and as the first ones cool replace them with hot ones. Keep this up for fifteen minutes, then remove the pack, wash the face in warm water gently, then in cool water and finally in cold water. Take six of these treatments, three days apart, and you will find your skin appreciably beautified. For a neck bleach, the following is good, though you may, if you wish, use the almond meal bleach on a cheese-cloth strip long enough to go around the throat and wide enough to come well down over the shoulders.

Bleach for the Neck

Mix one teaspoonful of lemon juice with an ounce of strained honey, add six drops of bitter almonds (this is poison, so be careful) and the unbeaten whites of two eggs. Into this stir fine oatmeal to make a paste. Spread on a cotton bandage and tie around the throat.

For the hands, bathe thoroughly, then apply the following lotion:

To Whiten the Hands

Rosewater, four ounces; orange-flower water, four ounces; borate of soda (borax), one-half dram; spirits of benzoin, one dram; bruised almonds, one ounce.

Add the almonds to the first two ingredients and let stand 24 hours, then filter, add the soda, shake gently until all dissolved, then add the benzoin a drop at a time, shaking as you do so. Your druggist can put this up for you. You can apply this lotion several times in one evening, letting it dry on. Then before going to bed coat the hands with lanoline, draw on rubber gloves or thick cotton gloves and go to bed secure in the thought that you have improved the appearance of your hands most decidedly. For wrinkles in the forehead, first find the cause. Do your eyes bother you, so that you involuntarily crease the brow in using them? Then get glasses at once. Do you fret over trifles? Stop it! In other words, get rid of the facial expression which is causing the wrinkles. Cultivate a smooth brow, with the temples "loose"—turn up the corners of the mouth and you will see how the temples loosen—and you will go a long way toward avoiding wrinkles. In the meantime massage the wrinkles you already have, night and morning and any other time that is convenient, dipping the finger-tips in cold cream and with the first two fingers of each hand rubbing across the wrinkles. If they are horizontal your massage movements should be up and down; if they are vertical, your movements should be from left to right, and vice versa.

HAZEL EYES.—You weren't in time for the December COMFORT, my dear. This is the first issue after your letters. You see, magazines of such a big circulation as COMFORT have to be gotten ready for printing a long time in advance. Now about the various troubles of which you write. You do not weigh too much, and should be perfectly satisfied when you gain some more. As to whitening the hands, see my answer to "Jessie." This will fix you up. Your experience helping your mother will show you that she does not have an entirely pleasant time of it and that she needs her daughter's help. You can help without ruining your hands if you buy some rubber gloves for the dishwashing, and some heavy cotton gloves—like garden gloves—for dusting and sweeping. You will have to remove them occasionally for certain kinds of work, but not often. For peeling potatoes, put a kid finger on the finger you cut against; also rub a cut lemon on the hands afterwards. It is perfectly all right to take a reasonable care of one's hands and it should not at all interfere with doing one's work well. Of course you can's wear the gloves when washing, but after washing, rub some cold cream into the hands at night and sleep with gloves on. This replaces some of the oil the laundry work has used up. You can rub on some of the Whitening Lotion I recommend to "Jessie," as soon as you are through with the washing. If the cuticle is, as you say, rough and hard around the nails, keep it softened with vaseline rubbed on at night. The dandruff may come from not frequent enough shampooing. How about it? Try shampooing once in two weeks, but be careful not to rub soap on the hair or scalp. Dissolve white soap in hot water, and use the liquid, being sure to rinse thoroughly after you have given the hair and scalp two or three thorough applications of the liquid with rubbing and rinsing. Certainly your hair will break if you "rough" it. Don't do that. Keep it well shampooed and you will find it gains in fluffiness. Drink lots of water daily—eight or ten glasses, so that the body elimination will be aided. This will help all body conditions. And eat sensible foods, chewing each mouthful until it is liquid. All these things help, my dear. About the eyes, you may need glasses, though I hope not. Be careful never to read except in a very good light. Have the light fall over your left shoulder, never falling on your book from in front. Never read when the light begins to grow dim; never read lying down. And the moment your eyes begin to feel tired stop reading! Better not read at night—that is, by artificial light—for a time. Read only in the daytime when the light is bright and good.

THIS GIRL, CHOOSING FORMAL HAIR DRESSING, MUST BE FORMAL IN MANNER.

MRS. R. L.—Of course, the first thing for dandruff is to see that the scalp is kept clean with frequent shampoos, and that the brushes and combs are thoroughly washed at the time of the shampoo so that the scalp may not be reinfected. With this preliminary disposed of, suppose you try the following remedy for dandruff, highly recommended:

Remedy for Dandruff

Beef marrow, five and one-half ounces; black balsam of Peru, 150 grains; acetate of lead, 30 grains; rectified alcohol, one fluid ounce; cantharides powder, 12½ grains; essence of clover, five drops; essence of cinnamon, five drops.

The two latter ingredients may be omitted and some other essence added, if desired. Mix well, then, with a pad of cotton dipped into the mixture, apply to the scalp by rubbing it along the part. Part again about half an inch away, and from forehead to nape of neck, and rub that part, and so continue until you feel you have rubbed every portion of the scalp. Do this every night for a week, then shampoo and omit the treatment for a week, after which resume for another week, and so continue until the dandruff has disappeared.

KITTY OF WEST VIRGINIA.—See answer to "Jessie" for face bleach, but I imagine you do not need anything of the kind. I should be inclined to believe that you were not eating just the right kinds of food—a little too concentrated, or too many sweet and fat things. Cut out sweets, such as candy, pie, cake; also hot biscuits and griddle cakes, etc., and gravies, rich desserts. See what happens when you eat custards, blanc manges, apple sauce, baked apples, stewed prunes, rice pudding, etc., instead; and cereals and soft-boiled eggs and toast for breakfast; no pork or veal, no rich gravies, and nothing between meals but water and plenty of that. To keep your face free from shine, try rubbing it with corn meal after washing. Or use the little beauty bags made of two squares of cheese-cloth, and half filled with rolled oats. Use instead of a washcloth, washing the face first with clear water, then dipping the bag into the bowl quickly and applying to the face. A milky substance will ooze from the bag. Do not rinse the face but let it dry with gentle pattings. It will not be shiny. Dry the bag, as you can use it more than once.

VIRGINIA.—So you are one of those who bobbed their hair and now wish they hadn't. There is no way to help you to have it "grow out at once". You will have to put up with it until little by little it adds inches to its length. Massaging the scalp nightly will help to stimulate growth, and keeping the entire body well fed and nourished will also help.

CHICKENPOX.—I am sorry it is against the rules of this department to answer letters by mail, and I am even more sorry that I cannot help you out about the scars. Massaging with a good cold cream sometimes helps. Using cold cream before applying powder also aids slightly in concealment.

MOTHER.—You must make that small boy of yours sit up straight. Perhaps he is not very strong and so he just naturally slumps down when he is seated. See that he eats plenty of nourishing food. You do not tell me his age, but any child should drink several glasses of milk each day, and if he is over four, as I suppose he is, he should have a good bowl of cereal with cream and sugar in the morning—but not too much sugar. Give him soft-boiled eggs, also. Do not let him eat any fried foods, nor too much meat. Be sparing of cake, never let him have pie. Do not let him eat except at regular hours. You can give him milk between your regular meal hours, but do so regularly, so that this constitutes another meal for him. If he eats candy, let it be following a meal, not between meals. Encourage him to eat apples and other fruit, except bananas. If you increase his strength, you will increase his ability to hold himself erect without effort. Not sufficient strength may be where the trouble lies. Weigh him every week and see if you are making him gain as he should. Write either to the Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C., or to the Elizabeth McCormick Memorial Fund, Child Welfare Department, Chicago, Illinois, and ask for a weight chart showing just what your child should weigh year by year. Then have him practice arm-and-shoulder exercises, also breathing exercises daily. It takes time, but it is really essential. Make a game of it. Offer a small prize when he can bend forward and touch the floor with his finger-tips without bending his knees and then bend backwards and touch the floor with his finger-tips that way. Whatever you do, do not use braces; that only takes all the work off the muscles and makes them lazier and more inadequate than ever.

Straightening Exercise

Have the boy stand erect, with heels together, toes slightly turned out, chin up, chest out, shoulders dropped. Now have him breathe in through the nose slowly, counting five or six, or as much as he can stand without losing his breath at once, for the point of the exercise is to have him hold the breath for a moment and then let it out again, through his nose, to the same number of counts as it took him to breathe it in. Repeat this ten or twelve times. Now have him raise his arms to shoulder height, extending them straight out in front of him, back of hand to back of hand. Now have him throw his arms back without letting them fall below the level of the shoulders, and without bending the elbows. He is to throw them back as if they were going to meet behind his back. Of course they won't meet—they can't—but he can throw them with as much force as if he were trying to make them meet. Be sure they are kept shoulder high, and that he is standing straight as he exercises. Bring the arms back, without bending or lowering, and repeat several times. This is an excellent exercise. Then have him practice the floor-touching exercise, being sure that the knees do not bend. He

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31.)

Hair Often Ruined By Careless Washing

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls of Mulsified will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.

Hair Nets—Half Price

18 FOR $1

is less than half the price you usually pay for them. We are offering them at this price as a special proposition.

Our hair-nets are of genuine Human Hair and come in all standard shades—invisible cap-shape style.

It pays to lay in a stock of these. ORDER NOW! One dollar (1.00), cash or money order, will bring these nets to you postpaid, anywhere in the U. S.

FAVORETTE HAIR NET CO.,
126 W. 22nd St. New York

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR

LET EJECTHAIR destroy yours. No PAIN, NO HARM, cannot fail. Cheapest and only GUARANTEED Treatment of its kind. Different from others, which only remove the hair over night. Send 25c for a sample to J. E. M. Co., 487 University Av., ST. PAUL, MINN.

For the Housekeeper

who dreads putting the hands in water during this cold windy weather is not a "Cure-all!" —here is your soothing and best friend SANA-BALM, the new, great antiseptic balm that will sooth, heal and protect tender irritated skin. It is not for Colds, Catarrh or Headaches. It But it is an excellent antiseptic, scientifically compounded and should be used on burns, cuts; bruises and chapped skin. Try SANA-BALM at our expense, then buy it at your druggist's. Send for FREE sample today—a card will do. Address

FREE SANA-CUTIS CHEMICAL CO., Box 691, SEDALIA, MO.

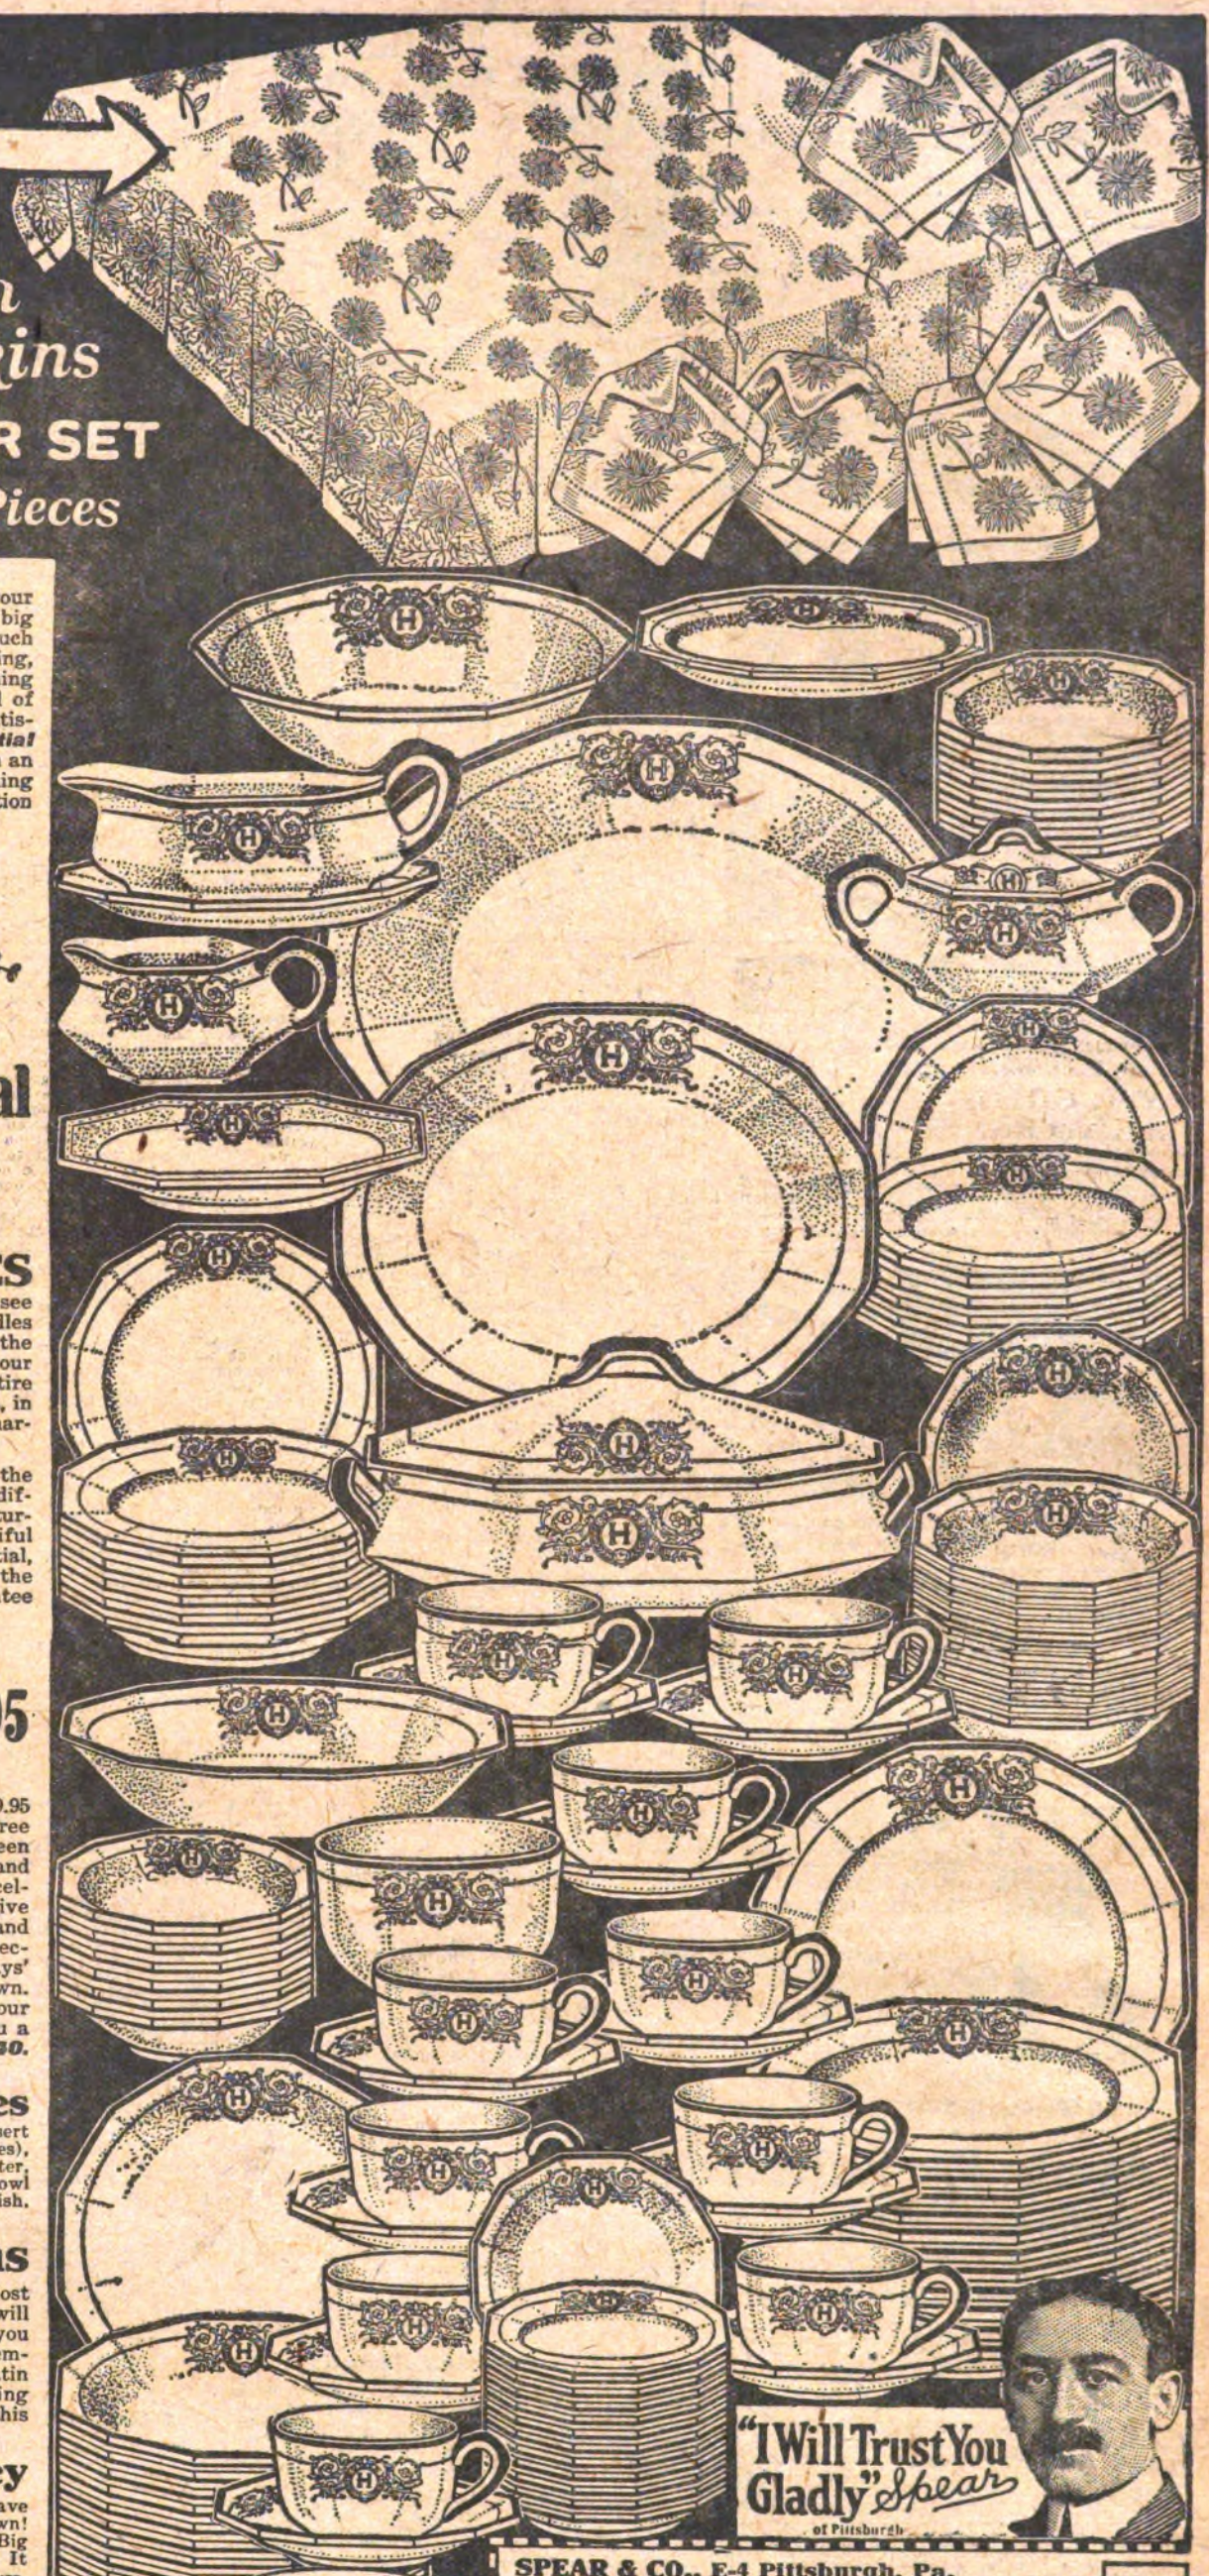
RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.—Advertisement.

Skin Tortured Babies Sleep Mothers Rest After Cuticura



Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c everywhere For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. D Malden Mass

FREE

1 Damask Table Cloth and 6 Damask Napkins

WITH THIS HIGH GRADE DINNER SET

Your Own Initial on 110 Pieces

$1 With Order

There are big days, and happy days when your family and your friends sit down to your fine big dinners. Picture your pleasure in having for such occasions a Dinner Set like this: pure, gleaming, flawless white, edged with a smooth, bright, shining gold line, gold handles, and a dainty inner band of colorful orange. Then think of the added satisfaction of this distinctive feature: Your Own Initial on Each and Every Piece. Each initial set in an artistic wreath which is banked by a charming scroll of roses in beautiful colors This illustration does not begin to do it justice

Martha Washington Colonial Shape Initial Dinner Set

110 PIECES

No picture, no description can do justice to this exceedingly beautiful dinner set. I want you to see it on your own table. I want you to know the Attractiveness of its Aristocratic Martha Washington Colonial Shape, the Beauty of its Gold and Orange Border. I want you to see with your own eyes how the big, wide, gorgeously brilliant gold handles enliven, enrich and beautify the set. Then I want you to know the Pride of Possessing a big, fine, high-class dinner set that has your initial on each and every piece. So, I will gladly send you the entire set, 110 Pieces, on 30 Days' Free Trial. The picture above shows, in reduced size, the attractive initial design. This design is in 6 harmoniously blended colors.

SUPREME QUALITY. Only the very best materials are used in the manufacture of these dishes. Extreme care is taken in all of the different operations. Everything that high class materials, manufacturing skill, art and design can do, has been done to make this beautiful Dinnerware a Remarkable Bargain. All of the decorations: the initial, the wreath, the scroll of roses in natural colors, the gold edge, and the inner line of orange are absolutely put on to stay. We guarantee against breakage in shipment.

Former Price, $39.95

Special Slashed Price $28.95

EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS

30 Days' FREE TRIAL Only a short time ago this dinner set sold for $39.95 — practically forty dollars — and without the Free Table Cloth and Napkins. You would have been satisfied to pay this price for the High Quality and Exquisite Design alone. To these points of excellence I have added these additional attractive features: The exclusiveness of your own initial on every piece, and the glorious, cheerful, lavish beauty of Six colors and Gold in the decorations. I want to send you the complete set, 110 pieces, on 30 Days' Free Trial. I want you to use the dinnerware as if it were your own. If your satisfaction is not complete, return the set. I will refund your first payment and all freight charges. The trial will not cost you a penny. Be careful to state the Initial you desire. Order No. MA2940. Terms: $1 with order, $2 Monthly. Price, $28.95.

The 110 Pieces

12 9¼-in. Dinner Plates, 12 7¼-in. Pie or Lunch Plates, 12 6¼-in. Bread and Butter Plates, 12 7¼-in. Soup Plates, 12 Cups, 12 Saucers, 12 5½-in. Dessert Dishes, 12 6-in. Oatmeal Dishes, 1 Covered Vegetable Dish (2 Pieces), 1 8-in. Open Vegetable Dish, 1 10½-in. Meat Platter, 1 13½-in. Meat Platter, 1 9¼-in. Round Salad Dish, 1 Sauce Boat, 1 Sauce Boat Stand, 1 Gravy Bowl 1 Covered Sugar Bowl (2 Pieces). 1 Cream Pitcher. 1 6-inch Pickle Dish. 1 7-in. Butter Dish

FREE Table Cloth and Napkins

To show that my Bargains are always the Biggest, the Best, the Most Liberal—I make, for a limited time, this Wonderful Offer:—If you will BE PROMPT; if you will send your order QUICKLY, I will send you Absolutely Free 1 Table Cloth and 6 Napkins all hemmed and hemstitched. These articles are made of High Class Full Bleached Satin Finish Cotton Damask. The design is most attractive and the wearing quality of a kind that will thoroughly satisfy. Don't forget that this offer is a Prize to the Prompt. To be safe send your order today

This FREE Book Will Save You Money

This Dinner Set is only one of my Sensational Slashed Price Bargains. I have Thousands. All my prices are Down—Away Down! My Big Free Catalog is jammed with these Big Bargains. Write for it Today without fail. It shows Reductions of 30 to 50% on Furniture, Bedding, Springs, Mattresses, Bed Spreads, Rugs, Carpets, Linoleum, Lace Curtains, Portieres, Dishes, Baby Carriages, Glassware, Stoves, Ranges, Lamps, Enamel Cooking Sets, Aluminum Ware, Refrigerators, Washing Machines, Sewing Machines, Guns, Silverware, Clocks, Cameras, Victrolas, Paints, etc.

Nathaniel Spear
President

→SPEAR & CO.←

E-4 Pittsburgh, Pa.

Home Furnishers for the People of America

SPEAR & CO., E-4 Pittsburgh, Pa.

Send me the 110 piece, Initial Dinner Set and Free Table Cloth and 6 Napkins. I enclose $1.00 first payment. It is understood that if at the end of the 30 days' trial I am satisfied, I will send you $2 Monthly. Order No. MA2940. Terms: $1 with order, $2 Monthly. Price $28.95. (Send me your Big Free Catalog also.

Print plainly in box the initial you desire

(Write or print name and address plainly.)

Name.....

R. F. D., Box No. or Street and No.....

Post Office..... State.....

If your shipping point is different from your post office fill in line below

Send Shipment to.....

FREE CATALOG — If you want the Catalog Only, Send No Money, put an X here ☐ and write your name and address plainly on the above lines.

Vapo Cresolene 1879

The Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds

The time for Vapo-Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat, which are so often the warnings of dangerous complications.

Simple to use; you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed at night.

The soothing antiseptic vapor is breathed all night, making breathing easy, relieving the cough and easing the sore throat and congested chest.

Cresolene is recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs and Nasal Catarrh. Its germicidal qualities make it a protection when these diseases are epidemic. It gives great relief in Asthma.

Cresolene has been recommended and used for the past 42 years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

Sold by druggists. Send for descriptive booklet 24. THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada.

Women! Corset Comfort Guaranteed!

This Corset Sent on Trial

Have better health—perfect corset comfort—an ideal figure without tight lacing by wearing the wonderful

M & K Uplift Corset

Its patented, scientifically constructed Uplift belt gently lifts and supports the abdomen in its natural position. Stops backaches, headaches, bearing down pains and tired-out feeling. Reduces stout figures—supports the slender. Thousands of women would wear no other. Doctors prescribe it. Dressmakers like it. Write for Trial Offer, illustrated description and expert confidential advice. Address

KATHERINE KELLOGG
M & K CORSET CO.
308 Kellogg Bldg., Jackson, Mich.

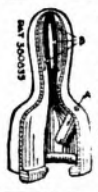
Be a Nurse

Learn in spare time at home
Earn $30—$35 a week

Every woman should learn. We train Beginners, Practical Nurses, Mothers and Religious Workers by our Fascinating Home-study Method. Leading Chicago System. Endorsed by physicians. Established 22 years.

Earn while learning

If you are over 18 and under 55 years of age write for illustrated catalog and 32 Sample Lesson Pages with FREE details of Money-Back Guarantee and FREE NURSES EQUIPMENT.



Chicago School of Nursing, Dept. 282, 421 Ashland Blvd. Chicago

YARN 100% VIRGIN WOOL

Big skeins—big savings. Full weight. Many colors. Make beautiful sweaters, scarfs, shawls, gloves, stockings, etc., from Homewool 100% virgin wool yarns. Send today for Homewool Catalog and free sample cards.

Home-wool Catalog FREE on request Home Woolen Mills, *Est. 1876 248 Main St., Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Mizpah" Baby Nipples

Do not collapse—Prevent much colic
Free to Mothers and Doctors

Valve (A) prevents vacuum. Inside ribs (B) prevent collapsing when child bites nipple. Rim is made so nipple cannot be pulled off bottle. Guard your baby's health. Send no money! We send you a sample nipple free, postpaid on request. Write now to taking orders for guaranteed hosiery for men, women, children. All styles, colors, including finest line silk hose.

THE WALTER F. WARE CO., Dept. A Philadelphia, Pa.

We pay $8 a Day

Guaranteed To Give Satisfaction or New Hose Free

Often take orders for dozen pairs in one family. Repeat orders make you steady income. Devote spare time or full time. It will pay any man or woman to handle this guaranteed line. No experience necessary. Get started at once. Best season of the year. Write for samples.

Thomas Mfg. Co., H- 4730 Dayton, Ohio

Agents: 90c an Hour

Introduce "Soderese." A new wonder. A pure solder in paste form. Works like magic. Stops all leaks. For mending water buckets, cooking utensils, milk pails, water tanks, tin roofs—everything including granite ware, agate ware, tin, iron, copper, zinc, etc.

Quick Sales—Nice Profit

Everybody buys. Housewive, mechanics, electricians, jewelers, plumbers, tourists, automobilists, etc. No leak too bad to repair. Just apply a little "Soderese," light a match and that's all. Put up in handy metal tubes. Carry quantity right with you. Write for sample and special proposition to agents.

AMERICAN PRODUCTS CO., 5391 American Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio

SILK REMNANTS, LARGEST Packages yet offered. Square of Stamped Satin free with every package. MFRS. AGENCY, X, Portland, Maine 20c

Women Make Money Taking Orders for our famous no-button rompers, children's dresses and specialties. Large profits. Quick sales. Write GOFTON-RAND CO., Dept. H, Stoughton, Mass.

Dress Designing Lessons FREE

Women—Girls—15 or over, can easily learn Dress and Costume Designing during their spare moments IN TEN WEEKS

Dress and Costume Designers Frequently Earn $45 to $100 a Week Many Start Parlors in Their Own Homes.

Hundreds Learn Millinery By Mail.

Every woman who now does plain sewing should take up Designing.

Cut and Mail to Franklin Institute, Dept. A 648, Rochester, N. Y.

Send me AT ONCE, free sample lessons in the subject here checked.

☐ Dress Designing ☐ Millinery

Name.....

Address.....

Through the columns of this department our Doctor's advice regarding maternity and child welfare will be given free in answer to questions by our subscribers. Address Mother and Baby Department, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and be sure to give your full name and address. Names will not be published.

Winter Coughs and Colds of Children —Continued

IN our last month's talk we were discussing croup and its treatment, and suggested the hot bath if symptoms were severe. You should use some mild emetic, syrup of ipecac in one-half to one teaspoonful doses, every two hours until relieved. If you have not the ipecac, dissolve a little mustard in lukewarm water, as this is a simple emetic available in most homes. Tickling the upper part of throat will often cause vomiting and relief. If none of these simple things relieve, get a physician and he will give hypodermic of apomorphine, one-tenth gr., which rarely fails to cause vomiting. If possible, moisten the air in the room by vapors of steam from kettles. Have child inhale steam from pitcher of steaming hot water to which has been added a teaspoonful of cooking soda. Have seen cases relieved at once by covering mother and baby with large sheet, and then slaking lime under the sheet, as they get the moist fumes from the slaking lime.

These cases are not serious, and the only precaution to follow is to be sure that you have a case of simple croup and not the fatal membranous croup or diphtheria.

MEMBRANOUS CROUP is classified by most boards of health as laryngeal diphtheria, and is a disease of childhood, very fatal in character,—the danger is great in proportion to the youth and feebleness of child. There is intense swelling of larynx which is soon covered with thick membrane that quickly spreads to the vocal organs and inner surface of the epiglottis. There is huskiness of the voice, harsh, croupy, metallic cough, which may change to a husky sound. With simple croup there is a high-pitched or crowing sound, and this is one of the points of distinguishing the two conditions. Breathing is difficult and the child cannot rest lying down; if exhausted it lies quiet for a moment, then starts up in fright, breathing heavily, with whistling sound as it takes in its breath. This is a serious disease, and if you suspect that your baby has it get a competent physician at once. There are a few simple things that you can do before the physician arrives; syrup of ipecac in one-half teaspoonful doses, but you have to use emetics with caution, as the patient's strength is to be considered. Inhaling vapors of slaked lime under sheet will help to dissolve membrane or at least detach it so that it can be coughed up. Hot compresses around the throat and the upper chest are helpful. To maintain baby's strength you may give liquid nourishment and brandy or whiskey in doses of ten drops to one teaspoonful according to age.

I know of no more serious condition to contend with than membranous croup in a baby, and often it puzzles the physician to know what to do first as you must do the right thing and do it quickly. The most important thing is to loosen the membrane that is slowly but certainly choking the baby, and during the meantime you must keep up the baby's strength. If antitoxin is available and the symptoms seem serious it would be good treatment for the physician to give a moderately large dose of antitoxin. The favorable symptoms are looseness of cough, changing of the whispering voice to hoarseness, and fever moderating. The unfavorable symptoms are loud breathing with prolonged expiration, whispering voice, or no voice at all, and congestion of face and neck, nosebleed, cold feet, clammy perspiration, lips blue, all of which show baby is struggling to get oxygen into its lungs.

In our last two talks we have tried to offer some simple suggestions as to treatment of coughs, colds and the different kinds of croup, but we wish to impress upon the mothers this fact: the best treatment in the world is preventive treatment, and what we mean by this is to avoid the colds. Dress the baby warmly, avoid drafts and try and keep it in the same temperature. Cold weather will not make a baby take cold if it is only dressed properly; it is the sudden changes, drafts, wet clothes, especially wet feet.

Keep the child's digestion in good condition, for it is a well-known fact that if the digestion is upset the child is more susceptible to colds.

Don't take chances by dosing a child with any of the cough medicines that are put up and for sale all over the country. If a cold gets beyond your treatment with syrup of ipecac, hen's oil, goose oil and camphorated oil, locally, get a competent physician and have him intelligently prepare medicine and prescribe treatment for the baby.

In our Question and Answer Department we often answer the same question over and over, and while we are willing to do this it would be more helpful to all interested if you would cut out these questions and answers and paste them in a scrap-book for future reference. Our subject next month will be Indigestion of Babies.

Questions and Answers

DIET AND WORK DURING PREGNANCY, BABY'S WARDROBE, ETC.—I am an expectant mother, four months pregnant, and am writing for advice in regard to baby's wardrobe, what clothing, material, etc. What things will I need to get myself, diet during pregnancy, about working, and will it do any harm to wear corsets?

MRS. A. T. E., Ind.

A.—For baby, flannel receiving blanket, three flannel abdominal bands, 18 inches long and five inches wide, pinked, not hemmed; three shirts, pinning blanket of outing flannel, three nightdresses of outing flannel, three dozen diapers made out of cheese-cloth or cotton diaper cloth. For yourself, clean sheets, nightdresses, abdominal band made out of cotton flannel. There should be two basins for hot water, bed-pan, rubber sheeting large enough to cover bed and a small piece one yard square, one pound of antiseptic absorbent cotton, four ounces of powdered boric acid, bottle of olive oil and vaseline. Keep yourself in as near a normal condition as possible, regular diet, being especially careful to have kidneys and bowels performing their functions in a proper manner. You may do your work, in fact work in moderation will take up your time and help your digestion, but avoid getting overtired, or heavy lifting, avoid jolts and jars and do not run a sewing-machine, avoid excitement of all kinds, have clothing comfortable, but hanging from shoulders; maternity corsets are helpful as they give more or less abdominal support.

VARICOSE VEINS, BROWN SPOTS.—I am an expectant mother and am troubled with varicose veins. Can you suggest treatment? Also what can I do for brown spots on face? MRS. G. W., Carrol, Iowa.

A.—For the varicose veins, bandage the legs with three-inch flannel bandage (cut on the bias) from toes up to and above the veins involved.

For the brown spots get the following recipe filled, and if this lotion is patiently and persistently used as directed you will get relief:

RECIPE.—Hydrargyri Chloridi Corros, grs, 6. Acidi Aceticum, Dil, drams, 2. Boric acid, scruples, 2. Aqua Rosae, Qs, ad, ounces, 4

M, Sig. Apply on spots, night and morning, until they are removed.

Caution: This should bear a Poison label.

The brown spots, which occur in young mothers, are simply a discoloration of skin, unattended with alteration of surface, and are caused by the physiological changes of the circulation to the skin at this time.

The foregoing recipe and explanation that follows it appeared in this department in our last August number. Since then we have received so many requests to furnish it by mail or reprint it in COMFORT that we here suggest that our women readers clip it now and paste it in their scrap-books for future reference.—Editor.

FOOD AND SLEEP, TEETH.—My baby, 13 months old, has but four teeth, and I am writing for information. Also, will you give list of foods to give her, and tell me how much sleep she should have?

MRS. L. W. H., Coolidge, Texas.

A.—I should not be alarmed about baby's teeth, as in healthy children they are sometimes delayed in coming. The baby's diet should be largely milk, and if you add a tablespoonful of lime-water to each six ounces of milk, it will aid in the development of the teeth and bones. A baby thirteen months old should go to bed at 7 P. M. and sleep all night and have a two-hour nap in forenoon and the same in the afternoon, taking care that the child has fresh air.

COLOR OF STOOLS, ETC.—What is the cause of stools of baby turning diapers pink? Will external piles get well of their own accord, or what can be done for them? Is there any danger of taking douches during monthly period?

MRS. L. S., Ohio.

A.—I know of but two things that will cause diaper to be pink or red; baby or the mother taking, internally, phenolphthalien, as a laxative, or if there was a little blood in the stools this would become pink if diaper was wet.

Sometimes piles dry up if cause is removed; if not, have them removed under cocaine.

Yes, there is danger of suppression if douches are taken during monthly period.

BED-WETTING.—I have a girl, five years old, that wets the bed every night, and, as I have had her treated for four months without relief, I come to you for help. MRS. G. B., Elizabethtown.

A.—Bedwetting sometimes is an obstinate condition to treat as you must first remove the cause. This may be a highly nervous condition, malnutrition, relaxed muscles, impaired health from diseased tonsils, or adenoids, or from constipation. Would suggest that you get her general health in the best possible condition, remove tonsils and adenoids, if need be, or if they affect breathing. Keep bowels regular, give dry supper, no liquids before going to bed, and make a practice of getting her up when you retire, and you will soon establish a habit.

PEDICULOSIS.—One of my children has head lice and I have tried castor oil, also coal oil, without relief. Please tell me what will relieve this condition, also what will kill the eggs, as I am thirty miles from a physician. MRS. R., Colorado.

A.—Should apply kerosene oil to head freely, wrap head in cloth and leave all night, then shampoo head thoroughly with soap and warm water, comb out hair with fine-tooth comb, then apply a little mercurial ointment (blue ointment) all over head; leave three hours then shampoo head with soap and warm water. One or two treatments will get rid of them.

CONDENSED MILK, AMOUNT AND FREQUENCY OF FEEDINGS, LOOSE BOWELS, IRRITATED BUTTOCKS, COLD IN BABY THREE MONTHS OLD.—Mrs. J. R., Pennsylvania; Mrs. R. E. M, Commus, Mich.; Mrs. W. S. K., Bow Island, Alta., Canada.

A.—The ideal food for baby is mother's milk, if healthy; next best, cow's milk, modified; if neither is available, we then have to use condensed milk, malted milk, etc. In any of these you can safely use lime-water, tablespoonful to six ounces of food. It cannot do harm, and most certainly is good, to neutralize acidity of stomach, also good for bones and teeth. Equal parts of lime-water and milk, in teaspoonful doses, will often relieve acid vomiting in babies and adults.

A baby six months old should be given six ounces of food every three hours during day.

For a cold, in baby three months old, should grease sides of nose with hen's oil, one or two drops in each nostril, for head cold. Warm camphorated oil on chest, if chest cold, with fifteen drops of syrup of ipecac, every three hours, as an expectorant.

COLIC.—My baby, six weeks old, has colic badly and is badly constipated. I nurse him but he cries awfully after nursing. Have tried milk of magnesia, catnip and fennel, and have to give him tablespoonful doses of castor oil to get result. How much water should I use as rectal enema for a baby of his age?

MRS. H. H., Bloomville, Ind.
MRS. T. F. P., Rockwood, Tenn.

A.—A nursing baby's digestion will be like its mother's, only worse if hers is bad. Get your own digestion in normal condition, not alone with laxatives but by diet—eat fruit, apples, one first thing in morning and last thing at night, with glass of water, prunes, figs, bran muffins, bran gruels, molasses cookies, etc.

Have baby nurse slowly; rapid nursing causes gas and colic. Teaspoonful doses of castor oil is good treatment for gas; tablespoonful doses are too large for six-weeks baby.

Four ounces is the amount of liquid used for an enema for baby, but should only be used in an emergency.

WEANING BOTTLE-FED BABY.—My bottle-fed baby will be a year old in May, and should I wean her before summer? What and when should I feed her, as she has no teeth? MRS. C. R., Cleveland, Okla.

A.—Do not hurry about weaning her as she will take more milk this way, and you can begin feeding her food with caution after she is one year old. (b) Give her oatmeal gruel, orange juice and any simple broths.

BOILS.—I have an 18-months'-old girl who has boils, or something like a boil as they start in as a white-headed pimple, then get red, and harder until they come to a head, then burst, a soft core comes out and they heal up, leaving a purple spot where the skin seems to draw in. Her health seems good aside from this. Please give cause and treatment.

MRS. A. S., Wooster, Ohio.

A.—The cause of the condition you so clearly picture is due to the condition of your little girl's blood, and, while her health may seem to be normal, this is nature's way of throwing off impurities. Give her the following internally:

RECIPE.—Tinct. Chloride of Iron, one-half ounce. Simple syrup, q.s, ad, six ounces.

M, Sig. Teaspoonful in water, after food three times a day, through glass tube if she will take it this way.

For local application, get your druggist to put you up one pint of Dakin's solution, and bind on gauze or cotton wet with this solution, night and morning, at any stage of their development, and I think you will soon clear up this condition.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7.)

Love to all and I would like to receive letters from sisters in different parts of the country. Will try and answer any that I may receive.

MRS. R. V. LONG.

Mrs. Long.—Perhaps if you had told us some of the stunts you do at your club meetings we would know better what to tell you about ours. And while you are about it, you might as well tell us about the lunches you serve and the presents you give, so we can do likewise, if your way is better than ours.—Ed.

INDIANA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

May I come into your cozy corner for a chat and a bit of advice?

Not so very many years ago, when I was a girl, I had a letter printed in the Cousins' Department and received many beautiful cards and interesting letters from all over the United States. Since that time I was married to one of the best men in the world, but he died three years ago and left me with two babies.

This is the advice for which I ask: Do the COMFORT sisters think a woman should marry again when there are children? Perhaps someone from their own experience can tell me if happiness was the result. I have a good home but it is somewhat of a struggle to keep it and the two children.

I would say to Undecided Mother, by all means give your daughter dancing lessons. Nothing gives such beauty and grace of body as dancing. It does not mean that she will ever be on the stage and actresses can and do live good lives.

Country Lassie, don't be discouraged at twenty. In ten years from now you will wonder how you thought your dreams had come to an end.

I hear someone say "description" so I'll give a short one and then go. I am twenty-eight years old, five feet, six inches tall, have dark hair and eyes and fair complexion and, best of all, a sense of humor.

I would like to hear from some of the sisters if they will send to Mrs. Wilkinson for my address.

I will close with a little rhyme that expresses my sentiments exactly:

Love to make you happy,
Health to make you blest,
That is all I wish you,
Leave to God the rest.

BLACK-EYED SUSAN.

What is the opinion of the sisters as to remarriage?—Ed.

BARLOW, OHIO.

DEAR COMFORT:

I am enclosing money for my subscription. It hasn't expired, but never in the ten or twelve years that I have taken it have I missed receiving it.

BELLE MAXINE LANE.

I have a darling baby girl, named Belle Maxine, thirteen months old and weighing twenty-four pounds. She walks and says several words. I hope to see her picture in COMFORT.

Yours respectfully, MRS. MABEL LANE.

Mrs. Lane.—Of course she is serious looking. Who wouldn't be with only one thin soda cracker for a Valentine lunch. Don't you care, Belle, in a few years you'll be eating turkey and pudding 'n' everything.—Ed.

MISHAWAKA, IND.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I am a stranger to you but you and the sisters are far from being strangers to me. I have been reading the sisters' letters so long and have received so much help, encouragement, new ideas and hearty laughs that I feel selfish. I have never forgotten when I was about seventeen (which was a long time ago) I put my name in COMFORT for postcards and received 1,300. I have them yet and my little girl is fond of them when sickness confines her to her bed.

I am married, 33 years of age, 5 feet, three inches tall, have dark brown hair and blue eyes and have one little girl (Bonnalyn Virginia), aged eight years. My occupation is cigar manufacturer. I have solved my problem at least of earning money at home as my shop is built on the rear of our home. My husband works steadily and has good habits but I like to help financially as we are buying our home. Any other sister running a "buckeye" please write to me or any others also as I like to receive letters. Mrs. Wilkinson has my address. And now to return some of the help I have had.

Do all the sisters know that a tablespoonful of vinegar will take the place of an egg in a cake?

That ladies' black stocking legs can be made into lovely underdraws for kiddies? I rip them, starch and iron them to make the work of cutting and sewing easier. Then wash again when finished.

That tailor's samples make good holders or lifters if stitched together and a garter hook on the corner to

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 17.)

MOTHER!

"California Syrup of Figs" is Best Laxative for Child

Accept "California" Syrup of Figs only—look for the name California on the package, then you are sure your child is having the best and most harmless laxative for the little stomach, liver and bowels. Children love its fruity taste. Full directions on each bottle.

Ask your Druggist for "California Syrup of Figs"

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16.)

hang it up by? Wool doesn't heat through as easily as some other materials.

That a very pleasing little gift for shower or birthday can be made from a man's three handkerchiefs? Get the white ones with dainty colored borders. The cap is made by sewing tape around about two inches from the hem and running a narrow elastic through it. The apron is made by cutting off the corner about six inches and using it for a pocket. A ribbon or India linen band finishes it. The remaining handkerchief can be easily converted into a pair of sleeve protectors. Fold this one diagonally twice and measure out from point in center the width of hand or wrist and cut, curving slightly at top or hem as top must be wider than the wrist. The remaining corners can be used for cuffs. Gift may be made more elaborate by adding rosettes of baby ribbon, harmonizing with the colors in borders.

And how many of the sisters are helping or cheering our disabled soldiers over the country? I mean personally, not through the Red Cross (for we all do that). They were cheered when they went away, why not cheer them now when they need it most? Such a large, loving, jolly family could do wonders if each sister only helped one. I have helped four, and two of them had to have help for their families, and I intend to help as long as I hear of their needs. Let's hear from some of the sisters interested in this work.

Love to all. A HOOSIER SISTER.

PICTURE BUTTE, ALTA.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I have read your letters for so long that now I must try my luck too. Would a person ever believe there were so many cheery housewives in this world? It has done me good to read their letters for I am to be married in the near future and sometimes I have wondered if I would get tired of doing housework every day when I might stay single and enjoy myself. But the COMFORT sisters seem so happy with their work and children that I think I'm safe in trying it.

COMFORT is an American paper and thus is not in many of our Canadian homes around here.

I will describe myself before closing. Nineteen years old, five feet, three inches tall, weigh 112 pounds, have dark brown hair and greyish brown eyes. I have one sister married also four married brothers and one brother with me at home. We live on a farm. Our nearest neighbor is half a mile away. It is lonesome in the winter. I would like to hear from some of the girl members.

Sincerely your sister, ILA F. MCNABB.

KOSSUTH, MISS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I must stop long enough to tell that "love and kindness" rule the whole world, whether it be to a gray-headed man and woman or tiny baby tots.

South Carolina Sister, sometimes I have as many as 14 youngsters whose ages range from two years to thirteen all rippling with fun and playing. What do I do when I feel nervous and need my own two kiddies to help me? Tell all of the children to help sweep, brush, wash dishes, draw water or whatever I need and then off to their play again. Treat the neighbor's child as you do your own and if it dislikes to help you will soon see the little feet going in a hurry toward home and no harm done. I don't mean to keep the neighbor's child busy all the time; it's the child that wants to stay with you, like your own, and then it needs the training. Every neighbor I have had since I have been housekeeping says I could take their children away from them, and some even beg their parents to let them come and live with me. I have the first child to scold for ever coming. I have been unable to see after them many a time, and then I would quietly say, "honey, mama might need you, and you go now and see," and not even the child, let alone the mother, was the least bit hurt. This rule will work every day and seventy times seventy each day. I am 36 years old and been married 15 and these years have proved it to me. Don't make your child work all the time its company is there; give them a chance to enjoy themselves for a child is a child. But when the child of your neighbor just wants to stay with you all the time let them help you for many children will try to get away from mama and go visiting just to keep from helping her and when you find it out let them learn that we all have to work.

Sure enough dear "Mollie Joe" I will give you my ideas how I would play. Treat your stepmother as you would your own mother and try to love her, for love hides a multitude of sins. Do the home errands as you always did, let her help and when it comes to buying buy for her and yourself the same priced goods and if she should get a little nervous sometimes allow for that for I imagine a stepmother has a handful the same as the stepchild and when she is in a pleasing mood talk over the ways of the home and let her have one job and you another. Should one wash one week, or scrub or bake, let the other do it the next, try it time about or day about. I had the experience of this "time about" plan when I was a girl. There were nine of us children and I was the oldest girl and one orphan boy older than either of us nine children. Mother was not well so I cooked the breakfasts with the help of one of the little boys. Each one of the boys helped us when his turn came around and never a word did I hear from either one for each knew when his time came. The same way when the supper dishes were washed. Now each one of the nine has a home of his own and the orphan boy has, too. And dear old dad and mother still live and keep house and have an orphan girl with them. Always find room to help the children without parents and never impose on them. Many will give them a home as a slave and not as a child.

I believe in each one doing his bit. I earn my own spending money every year and I don't have to "fuss" over the pocketbook. I can fruits and vegetables for the market and sold, last season, seventy dollars' worth. I save all in the home I can. I make my own laundry soap, also my toilet soap, no grease nor lye used and it doesn't cost over two cents a pound to make the laundry soap. I use any color and any perfume in my toilet soap. I make over many pieces of clothing, cut down dresses for the girl and there are many things to be made over to save the cost of buying. I color her school dresses; when she gets tired of one I color it another and she loves it like a real new one. Don't buy costly clothing for the growing child unless you make it with larger seams and hem so as to let it out and nine times out of ten when it is let out it shows signs of wear and will have to be colored over to hide this.

I make my own garden. Raise many thoroughbred Brown Leghorns as it doesn't cost any more to raise a pure-bred fowl than it does a mixed. When I want to buy anything and haven't the money I buy on the installment plan as I then can have time to make my own money to pay for it. I bought my sewing machine this way, and when I got it paid for I bought my organ, and then I bought my typewriter. I don't know what I will buy next.

Don't think I have to buy things this way or not get them for my husband buys for me and is as good as any man ever was, but I always wanted to help win the battle and am succeeding and hope my experience will help others.

I am a real flower lover and spend many hours among the plants. I draw my water in the afternoon and let it warm in the sun before watering plants. I use equal parts of chip dirt or woods earth, sand and good garden loam for all pot plants. I didn't have much luck with my pot plants until I began to use an insect destroyer on the leaves as little insects would gather under them and take away the nourishment or coloring and soon the leaves would drop off.

I wish, Mrs. Wilkinson, that you could come and spend the day with me, for life on the farm is not in the least as it is in the city. There is "big" room in the fields, meadows, and the long highways where fast speeding autos travel and enjoy the pleasant breezes of summer. Nature's way seems beautiful, no hand of art can ever be compared with our Creator's hand, every vine, tree or river is just a picture; if we always tried to find the "beautiful" every thing would be different. I always try to picture the "beauties" of everything, the setting sun, a fleecy cloud, a bird on the wing, the grazing cattle, a playing child and hundreds of others too numerous to mention are all living pictures. When the blues overtake you sisters call to remembrance what I have said and stop a minute to take in pictures of reality.

A long-time COMFORT Sister,
MRS. F. T. MULLIKIN.

TEXAS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND FOLKS:

This is my third attempt to enter the corner but I shall keep on trying until I succeed. However, by my past failures I lost the only potted plant I had, a wee fern. My neighbor said the "Corner" was a fake and I told her it wasn't and that I would write a letter and if it was not published within two months I would give her my fern. It was not published. Then she told me to try again and if successful she would return my poor little fern. I failed that time also but here I am again. Please Mrs. Wilkinson, print this for I am a lover of house plants and that was the only one I had. That's a dear, I knew you would.

I am going to mention a subject I would like to hear discussed by both sexes. "Can a woman of the streets be uplifted?" I say, "Yes," that by the right treatment the majority of them can be. Some women do not care for the good, pure life while others are longing deep down in their hearts for friends, husband, home and babies.

Another question, Is it fair to scorn a girl gone wrong through love of a man? Now mothers and fathers, think of that innocent girl of yours, loving to distraction a man she thinks is all that is good and true. He makes her think he loves her. The courtship ends with the disgrace of the little girl, besides the mental and physical suffering she must undergo. What of the man? He goes free without a sign of disgrace or suffering. The girl is scorned by all, even those who were once her dearest friends and unless she has a strong will power and friends to aid her she will end by becoming a woman of the street.

Let every person remember what Christ said, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." I have given this subject much attention of late years, since the dearest friend I ever had was betrayed by the man she loved. Thank God, that with my encouragement she is now a happy wife of a good husband. Another case in town of an orphan girl who got a wrong start and kept going down until she was a horrible creature, smoked, drank and used morphine. I saw her one day as I was waiting in the station for a train, and asked her what pleasure and happiness she found in such a life. She told me how she longed for a home, some place where no one knew her past and how she always dreamed of a dear baby to care for, and a good husband. I talked to her and persuaded her to go to a hospital and be cured of the drug habit and to hold up her head and try to do what was right, and when people saw she was doing right they would forget. She took my advice. That was three years ago. Two years ago she married a soldier; they have adopted a baby boy and now she is living a clean life.

I will give you a description of myself and then go. I am five feet, two inches tall, weigh one hundred and ten pounds, have brown hair, blue eyes and am twenty-four years old. Have an average good husband and two boys, one seven and the other two. A little baby girl passed away three years ago.

TEXAS BLUE BONNET.

PARLIN, COLORADO.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND FRIENDS:

This is "Happy Mother from Colorado" coming in again for a little chat. I want to tell you how I solved those perplexing questions in the February issue of COMFORT, 1921. First, though, let me say Mrs. Wilkinson must be one of those lovely but heartless housekeepers I spoke about, for she sent me a stack of nice letters sympathizing with me but printed those in COMFORT which were more criticizing—all of which were for the good of the soul.

Now I've taken a fifteen-year-old orphan girl out of an orphanage to be company for me on the lonely ranch and also to help care for baby. She is such a treasure it would be hard to do without her.

Also I finally got courage enough to tell my unwelcome neighbor to stay home during the day so she has not bothered me much since but, folks, she is not my mother-in-law as some of you supposed in your letters. Since then my health has improved and life looks bright and sunny to me again. It seems to me if we would each try hard to love more and criticize less, life would be summer for all.

MARY ELLEN MCDONOUGH AND HER MOTHER.

Our ranch is twelve miles from Gunnison, where the State Normal is located. The streams around here are filled with native trout, and every summer are lined with fishing tourists. The climate is very cool and delightful in summer, but winters are long and severe. The summer season is comparatively short and hay is the principal crop raised.

Am enclosing a picture of our baby, Mary Ellen, taken last August with her mother—which we would like to see printed in COMFORT.

Why don't the mothers write more letters to our corner, telling of their experiences with children? I am sure there are many hearts hungry for just those kind of letters, offering friendly counsel.

I would especially like to hear from some of the ranch mothers.

MRS. CLARIBEL MCDONOUGH.

Claribel.—If you could see my house sometimes you'd know—but there, I'm not even going to make any damaging confessions. The letters of criticism had to be printed to make things interesting. Who ever heard of an entirely affirmative or entirely negative debate? It would have been possible to have printed just Mary Ellen's picture but why do that when everyone is interested in Mary Ellen's mother? Your reference to loving more and critcizing less makes me believe that you will like this poem of Strickland Gillilan's, long a favorite of mine. I'd give credit to the paper I clipped it from years ago but I've forgotten. Thanks just the same.—Ed.

"Folks need a lot of loving in the morning;
The day is all before, with cares beset—
The cares we know and they that give no warning;
For love is God's own antidote for fret.

"Folks need a heap of loving at the noontime—
In the battle lull, the moment snatched from strife—
Halfway between the waking and the croontime,
While bickering and worriment are rife.

"Folks hunger so for loving at the night-time,
When wearily they take them home to rest—
At slumber-song and turning-out-the-light time—
Of all the times for loving, that's the best!

"Folks want a lot of loving every minute—
The sympathy of others and their smile!
Till life's end from the moment they begin it,
Folks need a lot of loving all the while."

DURANGO, COLO.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I have had several mothers ask me how I cured my two-year-old girl from sucking her finger, so I decided to submit the answer to you for publication in COMFORT if you see fit. While I do not say that every child can be cured in the same way, it worked with mine, but every mother has to learn what appeals to her own child the most.

By the time my baby was two years old, the habit of sucking her finger had become so constant and annoying that I could hardly bear it, besides she was deforming her finger. I knew I had to do something. We lived in the country where my little girl didn't get to see many toy displays as town children do, but she enjoyed pictures and books. One day I picked up a catalogue and showed her some pictures of pretty dolls and not having any idea my plan would work I said to her, "Now if you won't ever suck your finger any more, mamma will send and get you one of these pretty dolls with hair like yours and slippers on its feet." She was too young to know how to make me a promise, but I could see she was thinking, wide-eyed and sober. She knew what I meant. About three days passed and she had not sucked her finger, then one night she woke up beside me and I noticed she was very restless so, thinking she would go right back to sleep, I didn't say anything to her. But she turned and twisted for quite a while, when in the dark I heard the little tongue lisp in a whisper, "Doll would come," so I knew then that she was trying to go to sleep without sucking her finger. I will say the doll wasn't long in arriving, and I never, not even once, ever caught her with her finger in her mouth again. She loved that doll better than any toy she has ever had.

If people could only realize the explicit faith a little child puts in the words of older folks, how very careful they would be to keep every promise made to a little one. 'Tis a terrible thing to destroy a little child's confidence. We can all learn so very much from babies. I like this little verse:

"Speak gently to the little child,
Its love be sure to gain.
Teach it in accents soft and mild,
It may not long remain."

MRS. C. MOXLEY.

NEBO, N. CAROLINA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I feel like an intruder to call so often but you have asked me to come again and many of the sisters have written me requesting me to write again to our corner so here I am. Since my letter was printed in June COMFORT I have received so many letters I couldn't answer all but I want to thank each and every one of you who wrote me nice chatty letters without getting an answer,—all except the ones who send endless chain prayers, and there were not a few of those. I burned them soon as I received them and think I did right.

First I must express my appreciation of COMFORT as I think more of it than any of my magazines. One of COMFORT'S chief virtues is that there is always something as an incentive to better living, especially in the Sisters' Corner. I most truly appreciate the good things you shower upon us from the printed page.

I enjoy all the letters but especially those telling of ways of doing things, the common everyday tasks which fall to most of us. Each of us has some way of doing our work that is different from others; many prefer to have a routine for their work. That is, washing on Monday, ironing on Tuesday, baking on Wednesday, and so on. I don't think there is any harm in this but there is harm in the absolutely senseless manner in which so many rigidly adhere to this routine. It doesn't matter if their heads are splitting, if their backs are aching and they feel scarcely able to stand, they have an insane belief that the washing has got to be done on Monday and so on. I believe in routine as long as it is reasonable and not at the expense of our health. I have washed a lot of times on Thursday or Friday and it did just as well. Here is an idea on which many will not agree with me I'm quite sure. Instead of putting baby to bed at six as most all of you do, I find it far more convenient to put him to bed at eight. Therefore he sleeps until eight in the morning, giving me plenty of time to get the morning work done before he awakes, and that is my busiest time. By eight I'm through with the work and have ample time for his bath, etc. I also have time at night to cuddle him in my arms and sing snatches of little songs to him. He looks for this every night and I wouldn't have him miss the joy of being cuddled in my arms for anything. Being up until eight doesn't affect his health in the least. I'm sending in a little poem I'd like to see in COMFORT.

I have a few ideas to pass on that I hope will be helpful to other mothers. For making pin money at home I have had success in making dainty baby clothes for mothers. Here is a novel idea for a cover for baby's carriage. Take four fine embroidered linen handkerchiefs, join together with Baby Irish insertion. Finish edge with Baby Irish lace and place a bow of blue satin ribbon in center. Partly worn table linen makes ideal soft towels and wash-cloths for baby. To make an unusual creeping rug for baby, take an old grey blanket and all over its surface sew funny animals cut from bright colored materials. These may have flat button eyes if desired. I am making my baby boy a nice story book from the Cubby Bear stories.

Will someone please tell me how to acquire swiftness? I am like the tortoise, slow. I can't be fast like some. It is a natural characteristic; however, I always try to be sure if I am slow and heed the motto, "All that you do, do with your might, things done by halves are never done right." For instance, I never think of washing dishes without rinsing the soap from them, while a great many people leave soap on dishes, pots and pans. These same people keep clean floors,—I prefer clean dishes first.

Thank you Mrs. Wilkinson for baby's picture appearing in COMFORT.

I'm ashamed to have talked so long and said so little, one of my failings.

MRS. CLARENCE MASON.

Two Little Pairs of Boots

"Two little pairs of boots tonight
Before the fire are drying,
Two little pairs of tired feet
In a trundle-bed are lying;
The tracks they left upon the floor
Make me feel much like sighing.

"Those little boots with copper toes,
They run the livelong day!
And oftentimes I almost wish
That they were miles away,
So tired am I to hear so oft
Their heavy tramp at play.

"They walk about the new-ploughed ground
Where mud in plenty lies;
They roll it up in marbles round,
And bake it into pies;
And then at night, upon the floor,
In every shape it dries.

Today I was disposed to scold,
But when I see tonight
These little boots before the fire,
With copper toes so bright,
I think how sad my heart would be
To put them out of sight.

"For in a trunk upstairs I've laid
Two socks of white and blue;
If called to put those boots away,
O God, what should I do?
I mourn that there are not tonight
Three pairs instead of two.

"I mourn because I thought how nice
My neighbor ' 'cross the way'
Could keep her carpets all the year
From getting worn or gray;
Yet well I know she'd smile to own
Those little boots today.

"We mothers weary get and worn
Over our load of care,
But how we speak of little ones
Let each of us beware.
What would our fireside be at night
If no small boots were there?"

POINT, TEXAS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I have been a silent reader of COMFORT since I was a wee lassie and now that I have a family of my own I enjoy its helpful pages more and more.

I am a great lover of good reading and a subscriber to several magazines but find none so near perfect as COMFORT.

I am sure there are more sisters than myself who enjoy reading what the opposite sex has to say of us, but remember, men, you can't judge all women by what you see and find in a few. Being one myself, I know there is as much difference in women as to their individualities, as there is in darkness and daylight. I think the greatest fault to be found with our sex is knocking the other woman. I have learned this from experience and know whereof I speak. If one can seemingly dress nice and be a little free from the burden of a large family, because their less fortunate sister or neighbor cannot know just how the family purse is handled or know the private affairs of the other, they start their tongues wagging to injure that party's good name. This is done because they are jealous of their tact and economy. They never stop to think of the harm they are doing or the example they are putting before their children. Neither do they think that they are rearing girls of their own and perhaps some day someone will misjudge them and cause their lives to be miserable.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 29.)

For Sick or Well

JELL-O

is equally delightful. Its delicacy, its goodness and its beauty appeal alike to young and old.

Made in a Minute

JELL-O is made by adding the contents of the package to a pint of boiling water. There is no fussing or bother about it. Jell-O is made from the choicest materials that can be secured. Write for a free booklet.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD COMPANY, Le Roy, N. Y.

St. Valentine's Afterglow

By Joseph F. Novak

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

A WHIRLING blizzard with its dust-like, stinging snow, made the down-town district seem veritable valleys filled with innocuous bullets, and as Maclyn Townshend left the club where he had been in attendance at a directors' meeting, he threw up his arm to shield his face from the onslaught.

He had come to the meeting in a taxi-cab, but the storm, which had commenced early in the morning, had grown to such violent proportions that the taxi companies had suspended operation temporarily, and he now had to rely on the street car.

He careened along like a drunken man, the wind ever catching at the skirts of his coat and trying its best to make him aviate.

"Confound this!" he muttered, "why hadn't I sense enough to wait and have one of the boys take me home in his machine?"

Sliding, slipping, struggling, he finally reached the street corner where he was to get his car, but none being in sight, he scudded to the shelter of the store on the corner, a fashionable candy-shop.

Inside the door, he brushed his snow-frosted person and called the girl in attendance to wait upon him.

"A hot chocolate, Miss, if you please, and make it snappy, for my car may come at any minute," he said.

The girl smiled in a superior sort of way and soon had the smoking drink before him.

He sipped it, all the while his ears pricked expectantly for the clang of a car bell, for the plate-glass windows were completely snow-covered and he could not see outside.

"What a fool I am to keep up that immense house on the North Shore, when I could rent bachelor quarters at the club and be comfortable. I think I'll sell the blamed place."

A faint, muffled clang started him to his feet and to the door, but it was only a car on the cross-line wearily making its way along, and he subsided.

The minutes passed; he finished the chocolate and then, there being nothing else to do, he examined the window-display.

It was an extravagant lay-out. There were candy boxes, heart-shaped, in brilliant red or satiny-white. Plaster Cupids perched at vantage points, or danced atop the various conceits of belles and beaux.

"Valentine Day must be coming," he mused, then mentally noting what day it was, he continued to himself: "Sure enough; in a little more than a week. Lovers still send Valentines, though the style is more to candy and flowers, evidently. In my day, it was the thing to send a big paper creation, full of love-darts and sentimental rubbish and the more mushy the verses and the more gaudy the colors, the more it was appreciated. Well, let the youngsters of today be as foolish as we were. I thought, in those days, that I was very blase, but as I reminisce I realize that I was just as crazy as the rest." From which soliloquy one might have thought Maclyn Townshend was at least sixty, though as a matter of fact he was only forty and at that one would have doubted that he had already reached twoscore.

The street car finally came and he made a dash for it. He found he had his choice of seats and sank into one of them. The vehicle droned along and finally, after what seemed an interminable time, he reached the corner a few blocks from his home. He covered the short distance as fast as the snowdrifts permitted and hurried into the house.

Everything was in perfect order, for his housekeeper was a jewel. What a contrast the place was to the wild night outside!

He threw off his wraps, and then walked briskly up and down until the chill left his body, and then went to his comfortable library.

As he gave himself up to the comfort of the room, he found his inclination to dispose of the place melt away.

"No, old shack, I think I'll keep you," he mused. "Where could I put all the truck you hold? While I'm alive, all your heavenly junk interests me and when I go, let someone else make the bonfire! One doesn't always come across so perfect a home—and you are perfect, except you lack a wife to lady it over your splendor."

Feeling no inclination to go to bed, and beset with a desire to browse a bit, he lit a cigar and then scanned the book-shelves looking for something to read.

"I wonder if there are many people who possess first issues of magazines such as I have or copies of publications long out of print. By Jove!" and he came to one shelf, "I must look at some of these old fellows."

He opened the door and picked at random, an old magazine.

"'Fletcher's Magazine'," he read, "I surely did enjoy it."

It was a periodical that had devoted its contents to romance and it had appealed to him in his romantic days.

He sat down and went through the publication, page by page, until he came to an installment of a serial:

"Heart o' Gold,"
By Octavia Green.

"Gosh! I remember that I once read this darn mush aloud to Gloria Leeds."

As the name came to his mind, he felt a little tightening in his breast. In those days, Gloria had been his goddess, his all. He really believed then that he loved her, and, dear me, no doubt he did, for he sent her flowers and candy and books in those days and quoted poetry to her.

This was not the first time that Gloria Leeds' name or thoughts of her came to him. They came and went at odd intervals; perhaps when he saw someone who reminded him of her, or when some old memory brought her back to him.

But he had been a lax lover, for though he had always been courteous, thoughtful and kind and foolish after a serious sort of fashion, his attentions were the attentions of a friend and when Gloria began to look elsewhere and at others, he had quietly stepped aside.

After a bit, their paths had separated, and he lost sight of her.

Whenever he thought of Gloria, that queer little catch would come to his breast, and the desire to see her persist, but he always construed it as a wish to have Gloria see what a really successful man he had become, for in those days he had been notorious as a man who didn't have to work if he didn't want to.

He sat down and read the installment of the story through. Yet, to save him, he could not recall what had preceded the installment he had read, nor how the story ended.

"Confound it!" he grinned, "wouldn't it kill you the way a thing like that will persist? I wonder how the blamed story did end?"

He picked up the catalogue to his own library, but failed to find the book listed. Then he took a copy of the catalogue of the city's public library but it was not listed in it, either.

He realized that the work had been ephemeral, it had appeared in the magazine, and there had probably been but one addition of it in book form, and now just because he wanted it, he couldn't get it.

At length, to get the matter from his mind, he threw the magazine aside and picked up the evening paper.

This, however, gave him an idea, for as he turned the pages, he came to "Martha Marton's Column." Martha dispensed information on all subjects from how to make soup from dishwater to how to hold a husband's love, and procured for her readers, gratis, everything from a button-hole to lost relatives.

"Wonder if she could get the book for me?" Maclyn thought, and then because the desire to get the book had become an obsession, he sat down and wrote a letter asking if the book could be procured for him.

It might have ended there, but "Martha Marton" was zealous, and in a week or so, he received a daintily written note stating that "if Mr. Townshend would kindly call at No. 500 Riverdrive Terrace, Bluefield, he could get the volume he desired."

The missive was signed "Lurene Warner."

Townshend grinned. Bluefield was a distant suburb of the city and he had whizzed through it many times. Such being the case, he could easily take his machine and dash up there—perhaps that very evening.

Having decided to make the call, it occurred to him that he ought to take something as a gift in return for the book for, from the stationery, and the neighborhood, he surmised that the writer would not take money for the volume.

What had he on for that night? He glanced at the calendar.

"February 14th."

Nothing to do!

St. Valentine's Day.

Wouldn't he feel foolish buying flowers and candy on that day of all days? Well, it had to be done, and even if he were to try and explain nobody would believe otherwise, so let them think his purchases were Valentine tokens.

So, with his day's work done, and dinner over, he stopped in at a florist's shop where he purchased a fragrant basket of flowers in which roses predominated, and then proceeded to a candy-shop where he bought a ten-pound box of candy.

"All dolled up as if I were going to make a proposal," he laughed to himself. "I hope my offering will compensate for the book."

He placed his offertory in the machine and started off, and after a rather long drive, reached Bluefield. Number 500 was an aristocratic old house suggesting family and ancestors.

He crunched over the hard snow with his burden and then rang the bell.

He waited for a while—no answer. Then suddenly the vestibule light illumined and a pert, saucy face, the prettiest thing imaginable, appeared between drawn curtains.

"Who are you?" demanded the vision, with a little shout.

"I'm Townshend," Maclyn yelled back good-humoredly, "I came for the book."

"Oh!" and the door was opened immediately.

"Good evening," he greeted. "I won't keep you long. May I have the book you wrote you had?"

"Why—why——" she hesitated. "Please come in and let me explain, first," and she threw open the door, so Townshend could do nothing less than accept her invitation.

"These are for you," he said, presenting the flowers and candy, "that is, provided you get me the book."

"Oh, how lovely! May I consider them as Valentines and tease my friends about my unknown admirer?" she bubbled.

"Aren't you just a bit of a flapper to be talking of admirers and such?" demanded Townshend virtuously, but with a twinkle in his eye.

"No, indeed," indignantly. "I received fifteen Valentines today; I'm not a child," and she took the paper from the flowers, shrieking with delight as the beautiful basket came to view.

"What about the book, Lurene?" he queried with good-humored impatience.

She looked at him, and a little dejected droop came to her lips.

"Take back your flowers and your candy, Mr. Townshend. I can't give you the book."

"Then why—why——" he started.

"Please don't explode, Mr. Townshend," she begged. "The book is in the house, but I cannot give it to you because it isn't mine. I want to tell you this, however. I can operate a typewriter and I've commenced to typewrite the story, and when it is done, I'll send it to you. You don't care about the book, do you? It's the story you want, isn't it?"

"True enough," Townshend admitted.

"Very well. That's what I thought. But I wanted you to come to make sure that I had the right book. Let me show it to you," and she danced out of the room.

She was back in a minute or two, however, bearing a volume, fresh and new as if it wasn't of a vintage of twenty years ago.

"That's it, isn't it?" she asked, placing it in his hands.

"Yes——" he stopped. For on the inside cover a plain card, on which a verse was written, was pasted. He gazed at it for a moment, then gently raised it, and underneath were written the words:

"A Valentine gift to Gloria,
From her true friend,
Maclyn."

Memories crowded upon him. For several minute he stood quite still, gazing at the book which was like a segment of the past.

The shocked voice of a woman interrupted him.

He was aware of the girl's curious scrutiny of him.

"Come here, Lurene," and then as the girl came to his side, he again raised the card.

"Did you ever see this inscription before?"

"Oh, no!" Lurene replied promptly and positively.

"Listen, Lurene, is Gloria Leeds your mother?"

"Why, yes. Did you know her? How perfectly thrilling!"

"Yes, I knew her very well and when we were youngsters a bit older than you (for I don't suppose you are more than fifteen or sixteen) we were very fond of each other. Our ways drifted apart, though, and we've not seen each other for many, many years."

"You were very fond of my mother, Mr. Townshend?" Lurene queried.

"Yes, I thought a great deal of her and I suppose in time I might have fallen in love with her," he smiled, to counteract the effect of his more serious previous tone.

"I don't believe you are a bit serious!" Lurene challenged. "You wouldn't smile if you were."

"Why not? Now that it is all over may I not smile?"

"I think it is dreadful to laugh over a dead love. I don't think my mother would. I know that she cherishes a very tender feeling for you, for many times I've caught her looking at a box of keepsakes—and it was in that box that I found the book you wanted, Mr. Townshend."

"Now Lurene, the movies have been having their effect upon you. You know very well that so noble a woman as your mother would not keep a lot of trash from former admirers to mull over. I'm sure she burned all the junk I sent her."

"Gloria Leeds did not," contradicted Lurene. "She kept it all, even your picture. Shall I show it to you to prove my words?"

"Listen, little girl," Townshend said seriously. "Do you realize that you are not acting right toward your mother? I'm sure she'd be very vexed if she knew what you contemplate."

"Oh, but see how romantic it is! Why, I always knew there was a secret in her life, but she wouldn't tell me what it was when I joshed her about it."

"Lurene, Lurene, you are hopeless, I'm afraid," he said gently. "I'm sorry that I yielded to the impulse to write for the book. I didn't know that I was, figuratively, opening a book that ought to remain closed."

"Would you rather it wouldn't be opened? Did you really love Gloria Leeds, and has the sight of the book brought regrets?"

He shouted explosively.

"Oh, Lord, child! Is your mother a widow and do you want me for a stepfather since you seem to be trying to fix it up between us?"

"No," she replied scornfully. "I've got the nicest daddy and he's very much alive, thank you. I wanted to know because I've read of men who remained true to a first love and I wanted to know whether such things really happen."

Believing it all a lot of romantic rubbish in the girl's head, he thought to tease her, and so said, seriously:

"Well, Lurene, to satisfy you, I will tell you this: I believe I did love Gloria Leeds all these years, for I never found any inclination within my heart to propose to another woman. Does that confession suit you?"

"Gloriously," she returned, and dashed from the room. In a moment, though, she was back again.

"I'm going to show you those keepsakes and see if you recognize them——" and she tumbled them out upon the floor.

"Stop, Lurene," Townshend's voice was very stern, as he saw the relics which only a woman very much in love would treasure. "Are you so utterly without principle that you pry into your mother's private affairs so ruthlessly? I cannot conceive of a child of Gloria Leed's doing such a thing. Now, put every one of those things back into that box. I shall leave at once."

"My hevins!" She grabbed me by the coat-tail. "What about the flowers and candy?"

"They're Valentines from—you don't know whom," he snapped. "Now put those things away, quick!"

"I—I—think you're just awful!" and Lurene started to cry as she sat on the floor and began to put the things away. "Here I believed you a regular hero who had remained true to—to—the memory of Gloria Leeds and—and—you're a regular brute."

Townshend could not resist the girl crying. After all, she was such a child, a youngster coming into the romantic age, and what would be in extremely bad taste in a grown-up was really, after all, excusable in the child. The whole had appealed to her romantic spirit.

He picked her up from the floor.

"There, there, little girl. I didn't mean to be harsh with you and I'm sorry I hurt you——"

"Well—well——" Lurene blubbered, "I thought you'd like to know that G-G-Gloria Leeds was remaining true to you."

"It touches my vanity, Lurene," he said, "but it is unkind and disloyal to your mother to reveal her secret to me, don't you see? I——"

"Lurene!"

The shocked voice of a woman interrupted him.

The girl looked up from Townshend's arms.

"Mother!"

And she hung herself dramatically upon the woman who had entered.

"Lurene! Who is this man?"

"Mother, don't scold! It is like a beautiful story. Mother, don't you recognize Mr. Townshend?"

Townshend was staring at the woman, and recognized Gloria Leeds immediately. There seemed to be no change in her except a maturity that had only enhanced her beauty. Never before had Townshend felt his blood riot so, and then he knew that he had always cherished a deep love for this woman.

"Mr. Townshend!" she exclaimed, and he saw a glorious light in her eyes.

"Why, darling mother! I showed Mr. Townshend all the little keepsakes he gave you years ago, and which you so treasured. I wanted to show him that you still thought of him, and he has confessed that he loved you. Let him explain, my dear Aunty! Gloria Leeds, my dear sir, is not my mother, but my mother's sister," and with the shot, Lurene dashed away.

Talk about a most embarrassing moment! But though it was embarrassing, it was most glorious embarrassment.

"I suppose I might just as well make a clean breast of it, Miss Leeds. Do you recall the time we read 'Hearts o' Gold' aloud, together? The other evening I came across an installment of it in an old magazine, and desiring to read the whole book, I asked for it through 'Martha Marton's' column. Lurene wrote to me to call for it, and here I am."

Gloria Leeds had dropped into a chair. Now she sat quietly, without speaking.

"Lurene made some interesting revelations," he hinted, for the witchery of her presence showed him how much he desired her. He saw why Lurene had spoken as she had; the child had romantically planned to bring them together.

What use was there in delaying?

"Gloria!" he began impulsively. "Squelch me if you do not wish to hear what I am going to say, but if there is any response in your heart, let me go on. I love you, Gloria, and tonight I want you. You wonderful girl, you who had never lacked for suitors, was it because of me you remained single? Was it for the same reason that I never selected a mate? Can you think of me again as your lover and consent to marry me? What a pity we wasted these most glorious years when we could have been together. But I made the rare mistake of mistaking love for friendship in those boyhood days! We stand, dear, at the end of a brilliant afternoon. Soon the sun of our lives will begin to set. May we not, then, enjoy the afterglow of our love together?"

For a few minutes longer Gloria remained silent. Then:

"You quite take my breath away, Maclyn. I never expected to see this day. I can say that I never saw a man for whom I cared enough to marry—ah, dear, why quibble? We are, as you say, at the end of a brilliant afternoon. If we have wasted the sun-time of our love, let us not waste the afterglow. I am not young, yet the years seem to have made no difference in you. I have waited, Maclyn, for you, though I only realize it now. But dear, oh, dear, what shall I do to Lurene?"

"You'll kiss her for being a most engaging little Miss Fixit, that's what you'll do," he said, and rising from his chair, he caught her in his arms, and with his heart upon his lips, he kissed her.

"I know now, why I could never bring myself to part with my home, dear. I was keeping it for you."

• • • • • • •

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 19.)

Stella Rosevelt

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 12.)

considerate of her feelings; yet, under any circumstances, this visit of her lover would be a very trying one.

She thought perhaps she ought to tell him something of her life during the past year, that he might not be wholly unprepared when he should present his suit for what she feared would be a very disagreeable interview.

But she was so supremely happy sitting there by his side in the glorious moonlight, and knowing that she was so tenderly beloved, that she could not bear to mar it by so much as a word or thought of what she had suffered in the past, or might have to endure in the future, until he should come for her to claim her as his wife. No, she would not tell him; she would wait until after he had been presented to her guardians. There would be time enough then, and it would be just as well.

But it was a fatal mistake.

Had she told him then, all the pain and anguish, all the misery and hopelessness which she afterward experienced would have been spared her; but how could she know?

So they sailed on up the river, side by side, hand clasped in hand, and thought only of the supreme happiness of the moment.

"Monday or Tuesday you are coming to Yonkers?" Star murmured, in reply to this remark of her lover's. "I thought you were to be away from New York next week?"

"And so I am; I am coming to Yonkers to see you," he answered, smiling. "My darling, do you not know that all the world is changed for me now?"

It certainly was for her, she thought, with a tender little smile, and then she said:

"Have you a card and a pencil? I must tell you where to find me, you know."

"True. How stupid of me not to have thought of it," he returned, as he searched his pockets to find what she wanted.

"I thought it better to write it than to tell you," she said, archly, "fearing you might forget."

"I own that I am not in a condition to remember anything tonight, save that you love me and that I have won you," he whispered, putting pencil and card into her hand.

She wrote the street and number of the house where she lived, and gave it back to him, and he put it away without even looking at it.

Mr. Sherbrooke accompanied Mr. Rosevelt and Star to the station where they had to take the train for Yonkers.

"I shall see you again very soon," he said to the old gentleman, as he shook his hand at parting.

"I trust so. We shall be glad to see you at any time; and many thanks for this day's pleasure," Mr. Rosevelt replied, heartily.

"The obligation is all on my side," Archie said, with a meaning glance at Star, which made the color come again and her heart to bound like a roe in her bosom.

The bell warned him that he must go, and with a lingering, loving pressure of her hand, he reluctantly bade them a final good night and went away.

CHAPTER XVI.

A GREAT SHOCK.

The next morning, on descending to her breakfast, Star found the whole house in a state of great excitement.

On asking Mrs. Blunt the meaning of it, that good but evidently much disturbed woman informed her that a "real live English lord was expected to arrive the following day, and Mrs. Richards had given orders that everything be done up in the grandest style possible."

"A lord?" Star said, smiling—she had seen many a lord, and had not been very crushingly impressed with a sense of her own inferiority and insignificance in consequence—"a lord, Mrs. Blunt?" she repeated, laughing. "You will find him simply a man, very much like the rest of mankind. He will eat, and sleep, and talk, and walk exactly like anybody else. But what may his lordship's name be, and what brings him here?" she concluded, with some curiosity.

"Lor', Miss Star, you take it pretty coolly, or I'm much mistaken," Mrs. Blunt remarked, with an admiring glance at the girl's bright face; "but I suppose it's because you're accustomed to seeing 'em, being English yourself. But a lord is considered some pumpkins on this side of the water—at least, madam appears to think so, since he was courting Miss Josephine all the time down at Long Branch, and she hopes to have him for a son-in-law one of these fine days."

Star looked surprised at this bit of information. Mrs. Richards and Josephine had been home a week, and she had heard nothing of this before, although the subject had been pretty thoroughly discussed among the servants of the household. But she had been so intent upon her studies and music, going from home so early and returning so late, and keeping her own room so much, that it was nothing strange.

"Is Miss Josephine engaged to him?" she asked.

"Couldn't say positive, Miss Star, as to that; but if she ain't, she's expecting to be, and doing her prettiest to catch him, or I'm much mistaken. She's talked of nothing else since she got home; and the beautiful dresses she's bought, and the grand things she's been planning to do when he comes, would fill a book if rightly writ up. It's a mystery to me how anybody so grand and mighty can walk on two legs like the rest of us common mortals," she concluded, with grim humor.

Star laughed merrily.

Evidently Mrs. Blunt, as a loyal subject of a democratic country, did not look forward to the advent of this young sprig of nobility with very much relish.

"You have not told me his name yet," Star said.

"Carrol—my Lord Carrol, of Carrolton, Derbyshire, England, and goodness knows what else," Mrs. Blunt replied, spitefully, but with a toss of her head so exactly in imitation of Josephine when that young lady went soaring among the clouds, that Star was infinitely amused.

"Lord Carrol, of Carrolton," she repeated, reflectively. "I have never heard of any one by that name, and we lived in Derbyshire, too; but of course there are a great many people there of whom I know nothing."

"That's true, no doubt; but his being a lord don't make him any the better worth your knowing, according to my way of thinking. But, gracious me! I mustn't stand here talking, when there are such heaps of work to be done;" and the excited woman began to bustle about the room with decidedly more of energy than grace.

"Now, Mrs. Blunt," Star said, picking up an apron and tying it around her slim waist, "since you have such 'heaps' to do, let me do something to help you."

"Blessings on you, child, for your kind heart and willing fingers, and when you're married, if I'm living, I'll make your wedding cake for you," was the answer.

"Thank you, Mrs. Blunt; I shall not forget your promise, you may be sure," laughed the happy girl.

Monday, all day, the greatest excitement prevailed, as on the preceding day, in the Richards' mansion, for its ambitious mistress had determined to make a favorable impression upon the young lord whom she was anxious to secure as a son-in-law, and accordingly spared neither pains nor expense to make her house and hospitality as imposing as possible.

Star was away, as usual, all day at school, and therefore was not mixed up in the confusion; but, upon her return, she could imagine something of what had been done, for the house was a perfect bower of beauty, and order, and cleanliness from top to bottom.

Flowers of the choicest description were everywhere; fresh draperies had been put up wherever they were needed, and most tastefully arranged; the servants were all arrayed in immaculate suits, and went tiptoeing around with that air of importance and expectancy which betrayed the interest they felt in the arrival of an English peer; while Mrs. Richards and Josephine were perfectly gorgeous in new dresses of latest fashion and most artistic design.

The coach, with its burnished trimmings and its span of spirited bays in their gold-mounted harness, was standing before the door, ready to go to the station to meet the expected guest; and with all these evidences of preparation around her, Star would have been less than human not to have experienced some curiosity regarding my Lord Carrol, of Carrolton."

"Well, it may be one of the 'good times that I can't be in,' as poor Glory McGuirk would say; but then I had my good time yesterday, and I don't know as I care very much," she thought, with a smile half sad, half tender, as she watched the carriage containing Josephine and her father whirl away in grand style to the station.

However, thinking it might be expected of her to make a good appearance in case she should happen to meet the distinguished stranger, she changed her school dress for a fresh, blue lawn, trimmed with a dainty white edging, spanned her small waist with a broad belt, and fastened a bunch of waxen snowdrops at her throat.

When her toilet was completed, she sat down by her window—which, although in the third story, was upon the front of the house, where she could look directly down upon the porch, and also commanded a view of the winding avenue which led down to the road—to watch for the return of the coach and the coming of the illustrious guest.

Sitting there, she fell to musing—to thinking of the time when she should go back to dear old England, the land of her birth, the home of her love.

Only a few months more and her course of study would be finished; a little more of faithful application to her books, a little season of patience and forbearance, then a life of brightness and happiness.

Some one would come for her then, and she would go away forever from the slights, and sneers, and malice which had made her life so cheerless and forlorn, so hard to endure during the past year.

So absorbed did she become thinking of this, that she did not hear the carriage when it turned in at the gate and came smoothly rolling up over the hard, graveled driveway, and it had almost reached the door before she was aware that at last the noted, titled stranger had arrived.

She leaned out to look as the spirited horses were reined in before the porch, and the sound of laughter and gay voices came floating up to her ears.

A tall, darkly-clad figure sprang out and held forth a hand to assist Josephine to alight; but a massive post was in the way, and she could not see his face. Mr. Richards followed the young people, and they all passed up the steps together.

It was a pretty picture that she looked down upon, for now she could see all that transpired. Mrs. Richards, handsome as any queen in her elegant black silk dress and duchesse laces, her diamonds gleaming like drops of dew in a moonlight night; Josephine, bright and sparkling in an elaborate street dress, with her jaunty hat and bright plumes, standing proudly beside the finely-formed young man as he exchanged greetings with her mother; and Mr. Richards, stout and comely, a perfect pattern of the hospitable host, with his good-natured face, which was expressive of a most cordial welcome.

But Star had grown suddenly pale as snow, and caught her breath convulsively, as a clear, manly laugh rang out on the air at some jest of Josephine's, and then the stranger turned, hat in hand, having made his bow to his hostess, to speak to Mr. Richards, and thus she could look directly into his face.

There was a look of horror in her eyes as they were fastened upon that handsome face, her lips were drawn and pinched, and the pain that was clutching at her heart betrayed itself in a low, sobbing moan.

There was no mistake—although she could scarcely credit her own senses—she knew that dark, chestnut-crowned head, that handsome, smiling face, that straight, stalwart form but too well, even though a cruel mist was creeping up before her eyes to hide him from her sight. She knew that clear, ringing voice, even though the roaring sound in her ears seemed striving to drown it. Josephine's guest—her accepted lover she had tried to make it appear—the titled stranger, Lord Carrol, of Carrolton, was no other than her betrothed, Archibald Sherbrooke!

TO BE CONTINUED.

St. Valentine's Afterglow

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18.)

Shortly after, Lurene looked into the room.

"May I have the candy, please. I suppose you'll want to give Aunt Gloria the flowers since it's St. Valentine's Day. I'd really rather she had them. I always knew auntie had a blighted romance," and picking up the box of candy she marched out, flinging over her shoulder as she did so:

"I guess I know when I ought to fade-out!"

Townshend looked at the flowers. Then he picked up the book which had brought it all about.

"I gave you this in the sunshine of St. Valentine's Day," he said, placing it in her hands. "These are my Valentine for St. Valentine's afterglow."

The Woman Who Wished She Could Play the Piano

And How She Found an Easy Way to Turn Her Wish Into a Fact

A YEAR or so ago this woman didn't know one note from another. Today she plays the piano—entirely by note—better than many who have been playing for years. Here she tells how she learned and why it was so easy. Thousands of others, from school children to men and women of 50 to 60, have also learned music in the same easy way.

FROM the time I was a child, I have always had a yearning and longing to play the piano. Often I felt that I would gladly give up half of my life if some kind fairy would only turn my wish into a fact. You see, I had begun to think I was too old to learn, that only some sort of fairy-story magic could give me the ability to play. I was 35 years old—and the mother of a small family—before I knew one note from another.

Until I learned to play, hearing music—especially the piano—always gave me almost as much pain as pleasure. My enjoyment of it was always somewhat soured by envy and regret—envy of those who could entertain and charm with their playing, regret because I myself had to be a mere listener. And I suppose it is that way with every one who has to be satisfied with hearing music instead of playing it.

Again and again, parties and other social gatherings have been all but spoiled for me. I could enjoy myself until some one suggested music or singing; then I felt "left out"—a lonesome wall flower—a mere looker-on, instead of part of the party. I was missing half the fun.

The way I have suddenly blossomed out in music (almost overnight, you might say) has been a big surprise to all who know me, and to myself as well. My friends seem to think it must be that I had a previously undiscovered genius for the piano. But if there was any genius about it it wasn't on my part, but in the lessons I took—a new and simplified method that makes it remarkably easy for anyone to add music or singing to their daily lives.

I learned entirely by home study—in my spare time—from fascinating Print-and-Picture lessons that make everything so simple and easy that one simply can't go wrong on them. I call it a short-cut way to learn—it is so much simpler and so entirely different from the old and hard-to-understand methods. I know that I made better and faster progress than I ever could by bothering with a private teacher or joining a class. In fact, while I don't like to brag, within six months after I took my first lesson, my playing was better than that of many of my friends who had studied two or three years under private teachers—not because I was any more apt than they, but simply because the wonderful Print-and-Picture lessons sent me by the U. S. School of Music were so easy to understand.

Within a year after I took my first lesson, I began teaching my two little girls to play—using exactly the same lessons I myself had studied. And I notice that both of them seem to be getting along better than any of their playmates who have private teachers. In addition I am saving the money it would cost to have a private teacher—I figure it would cost at least $3 to $5 a lesson to have a teacher whose instruction could compare with that contained in the printed lessons from the U. S. School. Yet, from the first lesson to the last, the total cost of learning the way I did averaged only a few cents a lesson.

My only regret is that I didn't know of this really wonderful method years before. The ability to play is such a great comfort. No matter how much I am alone, I never get lonesome—I can always turn to my piano for amusement. I am never at a loss for a way to entertain callers. I no longer feel that I am "out of it" at social gatherings. Do you wonder that I so gladly recommend the method that has brought me so much pleasure and satisfaction?

* * * * * * *

This woman's experience is by no means unusual. Over 250,000 others—from school children to men and women of 50 and 60—have learned to play their favorite instrument or learned to sing in the same way this woman did. Largely through the recommendations of satisfied pupils, we have built up the largest school of music in the world.

Whether for beginners or advanced pupils, our method is a revolutionary improvement of the old and hard-to-learn methods used by private teachers, and our method is as thorough as it is simple and easy. We teach you in the only right way—teach you to play or sing entirely by note. No "trick" music, no "numbers," no makeshifts of any kind. Yet it is a short-cut method, simply because every step is made so simple and clear. But we don't ask you to judge our method by what others say or by what we ourselves say. You can take any course on trial—singing or any instrument you prefer—and judge entirely by your own progress. If for any reason you are not satisfied with the course or with what you learn from it, then it won't cost you a single penny as outlined in our guarantee. On the other hand, if you are pleased with the course the total cost averages a few cents a lesson, with your music and everything included.

When learning to play or sing is so easy, why continue to confine your enjoyment of the music to mere listening? Why not at least let us send you our free book. Just now we are making a special short-time offer that cuts the cost per lesson in two—send your name now, before this special offer is withdrawn. No obligation—simply use the coupon or send your name and address in a letter or on a post-card.

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 42 Brunswick Bldg., New York

For Beginners or Advanced Pupils

Piano	Mandolin
Organ	Drums and Traps
Violin	Harmony and Composition
Banjo	Sight Singing
Clarinet	Ukulele
Flute	Piccolo
Harp	Trombone
Cornet	Saxophone
Cello	Voice and Speech Culture
Guitar	Automatic Finger Control

U. S. School of Music, 42 Brunswick Bldg., New York City.
Please send your free book, "Music Lessons in Your Own Home," and particulars of your Special Offer. I am interested in the following course:

.....
(Name of Instrument or Course)

Name .....
(Please Write Plainly)

Address .....

City..... State.....

Made In Our Own Great Factories.

Yours for 20c a Day

That's just our offer on this cozy, roomy, handsome, inviting, overstuffed, tapestry-covered Rocker. Chair and Sofa to match if you wish. Also 1227 other desirable Furnishings. All on easy-monthly payments. Just check first square below for our big FREE 128 Page Book, showing Furnishings in colors for every room.

☐ Furnishings
☐ Symphonic Pianos
☐ Symphonic Player Pianos
☐ Symphonolas
(Check offer interested in)

Symphonic Pianos, Symphonic Player Pianos and Symphonolas (the phonograph with natural tone which plays all Records) sold to tens of thousands of music lovers the past nine years. Get Book describing these musical instruments by checking above.

NO Money Down—30 Days FREE Trial—1 to 4 Years TIME.

Check offer now. Cut out this ad. Give full name and address. Mail today.

Larkin Co Inc.
Desk FCT-222 Buffalo, N. Y.

Tire Agents Wanted An auto owner in each locality to use and introduce Mellinger Extra-Ply and Cord Tires. Make big money part or full time. No capital or experience needed. Sample Sections Furnished. GUARANTEED 8,000 & 10,000 Miles (No Seconds). Hand made. Finest materials. Shipped prepaid on approval.
FREE TIRES FOR YOUR CAR to one user in each locality. Be first to write quick for special Agents Offer and Low Wholesale Prices.
MELLINGER TIRE & RUBBER CO.
923 North Oak St., Kansas City, Mo.

AGENTS 98 Cents Per Hour

Demonstrating and taking orders. No experience necessary. SEIBERT, a mechanic, made $8.00 the first day out, with new patented Moore Automatic, Self-Winding Clothes Line and Reel, approved by Good Housekeeping, prevents dirt, knots and tangles—used indoors or out. Don't overlook this—let us prove it best money maker.

UNIVERSAL APPLIANCE COMPANY,
Dept. 123, 425 Elm St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

AGENTS: $7 a Day

taking orders for new Guaranteed Hosiery for men, women, children. All styles, colors. Written guarantee—each pair to wear and satisfy or new hose free.
MEN OR WOMEN
Year-round position. No lay-offs. Big money for spare time. Write for line of samples.
JENNINGS MFG. CO.
Hose 536
Dayton, Ohio

High School Course in 2 Years You can complete this simplified High School Course at home inside of two years. Meets all requirements for entrance to college and the leading professions. This and thirty-six other practical courses are described in our Free Bulletin. Send for it TODAY.
AMERICAN SCHOOL
Dept. H 217 Drexel Ave. & 58th St. CHICAGO

10 Buys 100 Millions Billions in use to-day — Engel "Art Corners" — No Paste Needed
Use them to mount all kodak pictures, post cards, clippings in albums
Made in Square, Round, Oval, Fancy and Heart of black, gray, sepia, and red gummed paper. Slip them on corners of pictures, then wet and stick. QUICK-EASY-ARTISTIC. No muss, no fuss. At photo supply, drug and stat'y stores. Accept no substitutes; there is nothing as good. 10c brings full pkg. and samples from Engel Mfg. Co. Dept 100B, 4711 N. Clark St., Chicago

4 Weeks' Trial — Direct From Factory
NOT ONE CENT IN ADVANCE
Wing Pianos and Player Pianos shipped on 4 weeks' trial freight prepaid. Save 25 to 50 per cent. 40 year guarantee. Thousands in use everywhere. Write at once for new book showing 38 styles. Also latest factory prices and easy terms.
WING & SON (Est. 1868). Dept. 32 H, 9th Ave. & 13th St., New York

Big Band Catalog Sent FREE

Anything you need for the band—single instrument or complete equipment. Used by Army and Navy. Send for big catalog, liberally illustrated, fully descriptive. Mention what instrument interests you. Free trial. Easy payments. Sold by leading music dealers everywhere.
LYON & HEALY
68-78 Jackson Blvd., Chicago

Big Money

Made by agents selling our wonderful Facial Soap, Perfumes, Toilet Articles, Spices, Extracts, etc. Free cake of soap & agents terms mailed to any address.
Lacassian Co., Dept. 402, St. Louis, Mo.

Cooking Set, Blue gray enamel ware, best grade, 6 pieces all full size, given for selling 40 packets Garden Spot Seeds at 10c a packet. Send no money. Write today for seeds and catalog.
Lancaster Co. Seed Co.
Sta. 68 PARADISE, PA.

Get The Book FREE! If you would like to read the whole of this wonderful story at once and learn its thrilling conclusion, rather than wait for the monthly installments as they appear in COMFORT, we shall be glad to make you a present of the complete story in book form. Send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, and we will send you a copy of the book free and postpaid.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

"Iron-Wear" Serge
APRON EFFECT DRESS
With Rich Silk Floss and French Knot Embroidery ONLY
$3.98
Delivered FREE

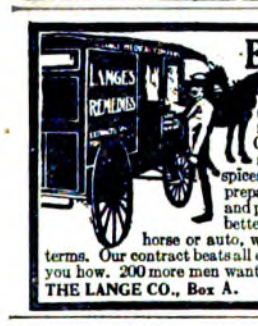
Betty Gordon offers here the very last word in fashion design—the newest Apron Effect One-Piece Dress in the always desirable Navy Blue "Iron-Wear" Serge. This dress has created a sensation—and no wonder. It's the smartest and snappiest style you ever saw. As usual, Betty Gordon leads the field both in quality and price. Here is your opportunity to be dressed in the best fashion at a price that means a real saving.

Send No Money

Betty Gordon wants every one of her customers to see this dress. She says you'll never know how pretty it is—how rich in value—until you actually see it. So you just write your name, address and size you wear on a postal and send it. The dress will be sent you by return mail. Pay postman only $3.98—we pay all delivery charges. Then, if you are not delighted with your dress and your bargain, send it back and every penny of your money will be promptly refunded. Made of good quality Navy Blue "Iron-Wear" Serge in newest apron-effect one-piece style. Latest style semi bell-shaped sleeves. Dressy buttons over left shoulder. Richly embroidered in pretty design with neck and sleeves corresponding. A real bargain that will surprise and please you. Comes in Navy Blue only. Misses' sizes, 16 and 18 years. Women's sizes, 34 to 46 inches bust measure. Order by No. 3A316. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

BETTY GORDON
Gordon Bldg. Dept. 7504, CHICAGO

Ladies' New Walking Oxfords



$1.98
We Pay Postage
Brown or Black
Money cheerfully refunded if you are not entirely satisfied.

To introduce to the readers of this magazine our Special Money-Saving Footwear Catalog we are offering these ladies' smart new walking oxfords way below their actual value and to make the offer still more attractive we will send them to you Postpaid, without one cent in advance. Just write for them.

SEND NO MONEY!

But give size and color wanted, also your name and address. When the parcel arrives pay your postman and you will receive these stylish oxfords made of selected veal calf with serviceable oak leather soles and military heels with rubber heels attached. Worth $3.50. Sizes 3 to 8. Widths D and E. Order Brown No. 6C20. Order Black No. 6C21.

Boston Store Chicago Ill.
STATE MADISON & DEARBORN STREETS

EARN MORE MONEY

selling Lange products direct from wagon to home. Old established house with a big line of tea, coffee, spices, extracts, medicines, toilet preparations, stock remedies and pure food specialties. Sales better every trip. You furnish horse or auto, we supply wagon on easy terms. Our contract beats all others 3 ways. Let us tell you how. 200 more men wanted at once. Write today.
THE LANGE CO., Box A. De Pere, Wisconsin

MUSIC TAUGHT In Your Home FREE

Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Banjo, Etc. Beginner or advanced players. One lesson weekly. Illustrations make everything plain. Only expense about 2c per day to cover cost of postage and music used. Write for FREE booklet which explains everything in full.
AMERICAN SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 15 Lakeside Building, CHICAGO

The Boy Who Had Never Seen an Indian

By Carolyn Sherwin Bailey

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

"I SAW Painted Feathers this morning," the boy said as he threw himself down on the rude log settle in front of the fire and stretched out his hands to feel the blaze. "He seemed angry about something," he went on, but he and the young braves were glad to see me. They like us, mother. Painted Feathers remembers how you took care of his little daughter, Laughing Eyes, when she strayed away from their camp up in the Blue Ridge, and he still wears the beads you gave him around his neck. Heap big chief, Painted Feathers, but I guess we've made him our friend."

The woman in homespun who bent over a savory stew brewing in a kettle that hung from the crane, smiled as she looked down in the boy's manly face. He was the counterpart of his father who had gone over the Blue Ridge hunting and never returned—lost in the trackless wilderness of the woods they feared. He wore the same kind of a rough suit of tanned skins, hide boots, and fur cap. His eyes were just as deep and fearless as his father's had been. He was his mother's mainstay now in the little cabin set so far apart from any other habitation in the depth of the wilderness. And there were Indians near, although they had been, so far, only friends to the two settlers.

"I tried to understand what Painted Feathers was angry about," the lad continued.

"What was it, Eli, nothing that we have done, I trust?" the boy's mother asked, her voice trembling a little as she peered through the window at the gathering dusk and the gloomy forest that surrounded them.

"Oh, no, mother," Eli hastened to assure her. "As nearly as I could make out, Painted Feathers and the tribe are afraid of losing their land. They pointed toward the direction the Shenandoah takes, beyond the Blue Ridge, and then flows into the Potomac. They say that the land in that valley is being measured off with strange instruments and by white men who are going to bring their own tribes and build their own camps there. You can't blame Painted Feathers, mother, for his tribe settled here first. I thought as I came home what a pity it would be to take the land away from the Indians; such lofty trees and the silver river, and the buds of the wild flowers opening everywhere. I never saw the mountains look so blue as they did in the sunshine this morning, and Painted Feathers has lived here for years and years," he said, his clear, boyish voice full of sympathy.

"I know, too, how Painted Feathers feels about this valley," Eli's mother said. "He knows every deer track, and spring, and partridge call for miles around. But I think this is all talk about surveyors being about, son. No one has marked out the lands in all this time, and they would scarcely begin now. How much longer the days are!" she added, turning toward the door to open it and let in the earth-soaked wind of the evening. It was early spring and the twilight was long and mellow.

She almost overbalanced, in opening the door, the boy who stood outside. His hand, which he had raised to knock with, went like a flash to his cap now. He pulled it off and stood, bareheaded, as he bowed like a young cavalier and smiled up at her. He was about Eli's age, she thought, between seventeen and eighteen, but a different sort of lad from her pioneer son. He was tall and slender and his long, pale face had the lines of an aristocrat; even his taper fingers showed his gentle heritage. Eli was like some sturdy oak, deep rooted in forest soil; but it seemed to Eli's mother as if this other boy who had come so unexpectedly to their door was a garden sapling, uprooted and out of place in the wilderness in which he now stood. When he spoke, the accents of his voice were those of the aristocrat.

"May I ask shelter of you for the night?" he begged courteously. As he spoke, Eli's mother noticed that he carried surveying instruments and his clothing was weather stained, and worn. "I have come all the way up the Shenandoah and over the mountains, measuring and marking the land, and making maps of its important features," he said. "I have not slept more than three or four nights in a bed, but after tramping through your wild forests all day, have lain down before a fire on a little straw or fodder or a bear's skin like some beast of the wood. And my cooking has been done on sticks over the same fire with chips of wood for plates," he smiled as he told of the hardships. "I have strayed away from my companions," he said, "and do not know where to spend the night."

Eli, crowding close to his mother, in the doorway, had been listening to the tale of the stranger lad with the greatest interest. He pushed open the door now.

"Come in," he said.

"Yes, you must come in, and share our supper, and stop with us in the cabin as long as you like," Eli's mother added. And in a few minutes the three were gathered around the rough deal table before the fire, eating bowlfuls of the steaming broth.

"My name is Eli. What is yours?" Eli asked, between mouthfuls.

"George," said the other lad. "I live at Mount Vernon. Our neighbor, Lord Fairfax, has an estate so large that it extends way over the Blue Ridge Mountains. Ever since I was a little lad I have ridden and walked with Lord Fairfax, and when he decided to have his estate surveyed even as far as this distant boundary, I gladly undertook the work. I like this wild life and the adventure of making new paths in the wilderness."

"Tell me about some of your adventures, George," Eli begged, leaning across the table, his eyes bright with excitement.

"The narrowest escape we had," George replied, "was when we made our beds on the ground from straw a few nights since and were awakened by smelling something scorched. The straw was on fire, and we were almost burned ourselves."

"Have you seen any Indians?" Eli asked.

"Not an Indian," the young surveyor replied. "Indeed, I wish that I might for I never have seen an Indian in my life. They were long ago driven out of Virginia, you know, by the Colonists. Once, though," he added, "and not so many days ago, if I remember rightly, we were setting up our stakes about a tract of land near here and we heard a sudden crackling in the bushes. There was a bit of bright color showing among the branches as we looked, like the bright feathers of a chief's head dress, but it was gone in a moment. It may have been only a scarlet tanager, though, or a red-headed woodpecker," he said carelessly.

The words had scarcely escaped his lips, though, when a sudden light flashed across the window of the cabin, lighting like day the scene outside. As scarlet and yellow leaves are whirled in a moment by a sudden gust of wind from a forest, so the thirty or more Indians who surrounded the cabin seemed to have flashed out of the woods—as swiftly, and as silently. Painted Feathers led them, dressed in fresh war paint as were all the other braves, and a scalp dangled menacingly from his belt to show that he was bent on warfare. With fierce gestures toward the cabin and the three white faces that peered in terror from the window, the Indians made their preparations. They had brought music for their war dance. One of the younger braves drummed loudly on a deer skin that he had stretched over an iron pot; another rattled a huge, dried gourd filled with shot and decorated with a horse's tail. The others built a great fire directly in front of the cabin, pulled blazing brands from it and danced in a circle with wild yells and whoops.

Eli whispered his frightened explanation to the other lad. "It's Painted Feathers and his band of braves, and they're dancing the death dance. When they finish they'll set fire to our cabin, I'm afraid. He used to be our friend, but this morning he seemed in a great rage about his land and hunting ground being taken away from the tribe by settlers," Eli's voice was only a whisper as he finished. "It wasn't a wild bird that you heard and saw in the woods when you were surveying, George. It was Painted Feathers watching you, and now he has followed you to our cabin."

The other lad's heart beat with terror, but his voice did not falter, as he spoke bravely:

"Then I am going out to give myself up to the Indians, Eli. I won't have your life and that of your mother endangered when you have been so kind as to take me, a stranger, into your house, and feed, and shelter me." He made a quick movement toward the door, but Eli intercepted him.

"Wait, George; don't! It would only satisfy their rage without really doing any good. Let us think a moment."

But as the three waited and watched, the cabin lit brightly by the fire outside, the seconds seemed hours. The shouting, excited Indians piled more logs upon the fire and fed it with pine knots until the sparks darted in a crimson cloud as high as the tops of the trees. As they danced, they circled nearer and nearer the cabin, their shrieks growing each moment more shrill and menacing. The time for action was come if the cabin and its occupants were to be saved. Before either his mother or the boy surveyor could stop him, Eli stepped out in front of the cabin, alone, and unprotected. He stood there, one hand held out in welcome to the terrible Indian chief.

The sudden apparition of the boy was a surprise to the Indians. They were silent for a moment, spellbound by the boy's bravery, and interested, as well, in something that he drew from his coat and held out in supplication toward Painted Feathers. He had grasped the object from its place on the shelf over the fireplace before he left the cabin. It was a tiny moccasin made of the softest of deerskin and embroidered with bright beads. Painted Feathers drew nearer to look, and Eli spoke to him.

"Laughing Eyes left her moccasin in the wigwam of her pale face friends. We kept the moccasin because we love Laughing Eyes. We found her when she strayed from the tribe and we gave her back to her father, Painted Feathers, the big chief."

As the boy spoke, Painted Feathers nodded his great head slowly, and a smile softened his grim face. As he loved the trackless wilderness, and the stars, and the flaming fires of the tribe, Painted Feathers loved his little brown daughter. Her laughter was his sweetest music, her slim dark arms thrown around his neck were like the clinging of a green vine to some storm-beat tree of the forest. Eli was quick to see the advantage that he had gained and he acted upon it.

"A strange pale face has come to the cabin. He measures the land in the valley, but he is the friend of the Indians. He will protect their hunting grounds, and keep away strange tribes from the west. Will Painted Feathers say 'how' to the stranger?" Eli asked, his voice trembling a little at what might be the outcome of his bold request.

Painted Feathers held the little moccasin in his hand now, the touch of it warming and softening his stony heart. Then he slowly nodded his head in assent, stalking nearer the cabin door.

"Come, George," cried Eli breathlessly. "Come out and meet your friend, Painted Feathers, the big chief."

In the flaring light of the torches, the great Indian solemnly shook hands with the boy surveyor. Then, as the two boys stood in the doorway, the chief went back to the fire and gave a quick order to the braves. In a second their fearful death dance was changed to the slow, stately steps of a dance of welcome. At its end they put out the fire, and filed silently back into the forest.

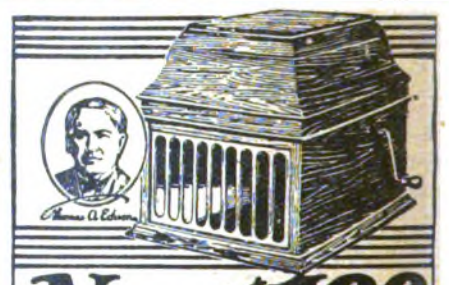
Snuggled under bearskins in front of the warm hearth, the two boys slept but little that night, and talked a great deal about their wonderful adventure.

"You needn't be afraid to go on in the morning, George," Eli assured the boy surveyor. "Painted Feathers' tribe is the only band of Indians anywhere around here, and now that he knows you are his friend, he won't harm you."

"I shall never forget you, Eli," said George. "You have taught me how to be brave."

His companions found the lad in the morning, and, with many thanks and assurances of his friendship, the young surveyor left the settlers' cabin and started away to finish his work and his trip. "I may see you on my way back, Eli," he said. But although Eli watched and waited for a glimpse of the other boy whose visit grew to seem like a dream, he did not come to the cabin again.

Over a score of years passed. Where the trees had grown there was a town now, and the cabin itself was replaced by a comfortable frame dwelling. Eli's mother was an old lady, and he a man grown; and it was a time of great stress for America, the period of the revolution.



"Great news, mother!" Eli exclaimed as he came in one day. "They say that General George Washington has taken Lord Cornwallis and all his army as prisoners. Yorktown has surrendered, and the war is over."

"General George Washington?" repeated his mother, her mind going back through the years. Then a thought came to her. "Eli," she said. "Do you remember the lad surveyor who stayed with us for a night when you were a boy? He told me his full name as he was leaving, and, all these years, I have never thought to speak of it to you. George Washington, he said he was."

The man's eyes flashed. "One and the same," he said. "The great General, and our lad who had never seen an Indian."

Exceptions to all Rules

An Ohio judge says women must stop coming into his courtroom attired in peekaboo waists. What's become of the old-time theory that justice is blind?—Indianapolis News.

Now $1.00 Down

KEEP the New Edison Amberola—Edison's great phonograph with the diamond stylus reproducer—and your choice of records, for only $1.00. Pay balance at rate of only a few cents a day. Hear it in your own home before you decide. Only $1.00 down. Seize this opportunity.

Write for Book

Get our New Edison catalog. Your name and address on a post card or letter is enough. Find out about this offer—while this offer lasts.

F. K. BABSON, Edison Phonograph Dists.
19th St. and Marshall Blvd., Dept. 3702, Chicago, Ill.

Smith's PERFECT FITTING NECK BANDS

EACH SMITH'S Neck Band is "hand-turned" and "double-stitched." Sizes are absolutely correct—shrinkage fully allowed—buttonholes properly placed. Every SMITH'S Neck Band is made of soft finish material for easy sewing and stitched thru center for extra stiffness and as a guide in sewing. To insure perfect fitting shirts:—Insist upon SMITH'S and see that SMITH'S is stamped on the Band you buy. Available at your dealers in three qualities of Cambric at 15, 18 and 20c, also Pongee at 25c and Pure Linen at 25c. Send us 10c for book "How I Make My Husband's Shirts," (fully illustrated with charts and diagrams) or for 25c we will send you the book and a SMITH'S Neck Band (20c quality.) Mention size. Gilman B. Smith Co., Inc. 131 West 17th Street, New York.

GET THIS BOOK ON HOME SHIRT MAKING

GIVEN TO YOU
as a Reward for Spare Moments

This beautiful Rocker is one of 1900 attractive Premiums given with purchases of Larkin Products. Or, you can choose from these Premiums your rewards for the pleasant, spare-time occupation of a Larkin Secretary.

Larkin Spring Catalog FREE

Our latest Catalog is brimful of money-saving offers for you, your friends and neighbors. Illustrates all the valuable Premiums given with purchases of Larkin Pure Foods, Soaps, Toilet Articles, Clothing and other things everybody has to buy every day. Tells how to make them yours without extra expense. Many new offers. More prices reduced.

YOU can make your dreams come true! Make your spare time worth more by acting as a Larkin Club Secretary in your neighborhood. Coupon quickly brings free Catalog and full information

MAIL COUPON TODAY

Larkin Co Inc. Buffalo, N.Y. Chicago, Ill. Peoria, Ill.

Please send your new Spring Catalog No. 76.

Name _____

Address _____

GP446 _____

We Give 'em Away
To Credit Mail-Order Buyers

We will mail you, postpaid and absolutely free, a sugar-shell such as you would pay fifty to seventy-five cents for. Our object is to get acquainted and show you how you can save real money by getting your home-furnishings direct from the factory on monthly payments. Enclose this advt. and give the name of a mail-order house you have been dealing with,—this is important. To married women only. The sugar-shell will be either the Oneida Community Par Plate or nickel silver. A gift you'll be proud of all your life.

No 408-1—This advt. must be enclosed

Quaker Valley Mfg. Co.
Silverware Dept. Aurora, Ill.

How I Earn $2.00 to $3.00 a Day At Home in Spare Time

A Pleasant, Profitable Occupation That Helps Us Make Both Ends Meet

By Mrs. Emile Vancoillie

"I do the knitting without neglecting my children or household duties."

Mrs. Vancoillie

NOW that I am actually earning from two to three dollars a day, right at home, in my spare time, our trials and troubles back in the Fall of 1919 seem like a dream—a nightmare that I am glad to forget.

But I can tell you there was nothing imaginary about those days, while we were struggling along trying to make both ends meet—and never quite succeeding.

My husband worked in a mill, and made good wages, but it seemed like he couldn't earn enough money to keep up with expenses. With our two little children to clothe and care for, it seemed like we were always paying bills, or planning how we could lay aside the money to pay them.

Often my husband and I would talk things over, trying to find some way out of our troubles. I was eager to help, but I couldn't leave my home and children and go to work in a factory. I didn't know any sort of work that I could do at home to make money. It began to look like there was no answer to our problem.

AND so things went along until one day late in December the express man drove up to our house and left a wooden box, addressed to Mr. Vancoillie. That night when my husband came home from work I showed him the box and asked what was in it.

"Oh, we'll call it a Christmas present for you," he laughed, and began taking the boards off the top. Pretty soon he lifted out some sort of a machine and set it on the floor.

"What in the world do you call that?" I asked.

"It is an Auto Knitter," he replied, a machine to knit wool socks. I heard about it and sent for some of their literature. It looked so good that I decided to try out their plan. So I sent for one of their machines to surprise you."

Now it isn't like my husband to make wild, reckless decisions. But for the life of me, I couldn't see the idea back of this purchase. I made up my mind that he sure had slipped up this time.

"A knitting machine!" I exclaimed. "Why, I never knit a sock in my life. I don't know the first thing about knitting."

"Of course you don't," replied that exasperating man of mine. "And you don't need to. See, we have an Instruction Book that tells just how to knit standard wool socks on the Auto Knitter. You can learn from this."

"But after the socks are knit—what then? What will we do with them?"

"Oh, that's the best part of it," my husband explained. "The Auto Knitter Hosiery Company agrees to buy every standard sock turned out on the machine. We simply bundle up the socks and send the package to them. They pay us a fixed price per dozen pairs. Also they send us yarn to take the place of that used in knitting the socks. So you see, we always have yarn to knit more socks."

WELL, I must say I felt a lot better about the Auto Knitter after he explained it that way. If I could knit socks right at home, and sell them for real money, it sure would be fine. Why it was as good as going out and working for wages—and I could do the knitting in spare time without neglecting my children or household duties.

But I still had my doubts about the Auto Knitter. I was afraid I would never learn to run it. However, when I read over the Instruction Book I found it wasn't nearly as hard as I had imagined. Then I sat down to the machine and began practicing. The machine was shipped with a piece of work already started on it, and that was a big help. It took a little time, of course, but in three days I had the machine working fine, and was making one sock after another.

Of course the neighbors soon learned about the Auto Knitter. I showed them samples of the socks, and they all wanted some right away, when they saw the fine work. So I began taking orders right away, and didn't have time, at first, to knit any for the company. I found there was a good sale for ladies' stockings, too, so I knit them as well as the socks.

ON March 12, 1920, I balanced up my little account book, and found that, after taking out the money to pay for the machine, I had a clear profit of $33.00—all earned in spare moments between my regular work.

I kept right on with my knitter during that Spring and Summer. When I didn't have any home trade, I sent the standard socks in to the Auto Knitter people, and I always got good treatment from them. I could plan every time on getting a check from them by return mail. And they always sent along the replacement yarn, just like they agreed to do.

But the real test of the Auto Knitter came late in the Fall. From November to January the mill where my husband was employed was closed down a good part of the time, and he didn't have regular work. There was nothing else he could find to do in a mill town like this, so at last he turned to the Auto Knitter. "I am going to see what I can do to make money at home," he said.

Well we both worked at the little Auto Knitter, and kept it busy during those "lean" months. And as a result they proved to be "fat" months for us. We never had to worry about "no work at the mill," as so many others were doing. If we didn't have home orders, we kept right on knitting, because we knew we could sell every standard sock to the company.

DURING this dull period the Auto Knitter just about made the living for our family of four. We hardly had to touch our little savings account. I can't imagine how in the world we would have made out without the machine, and the checks that it brought us so regularly.

After my husband went back to work at the mill full time, I kept right on knitting in my spare moments. In February, 1921, I made $59.99, and in March, $64.30. All of this was for home trade. The socks were sold to friends and neighbors without a bit of trouble.

My trade has kept growing steadily, and now I can count on making from $2.00 to $3.00 regularly every day, besides doing all my housework. And I have orders for from three to four weeks ahead. I can always knit a sock now in 10 to 12 minutes, and a lady's stocking in 15 minutes. The knitting is so easy and pleasant. It rests me from my housework. And I am making money every time I turn the handle of the Auto Knitter.

* * * * *

Make Money Right At Home Knitting Socks on the Auto Knitter

You have read here what Mrs. Vancoillie says about the Auto Knitter. There isn't a bit of guesswork in what she says. Here are actual facts, put on paper. The old problem of making both ends meet set the Vancoillies to thinking. Then came the Auto Knitter to help. And now, in her spare time, Mrs. Vancoillie is making from $2.00 to $3.00 a day. Just imagine $50.00 to $75.00 a month "extra" money!

We stand ready to make you the very same offer we made Mrs. Vancoillie. Our Home Work Plan is for you, too. You make standard wool socks in your own home in spare time, with the Auto Knitter. And we pay you for making them. That's the plan in a nutshell.

A Ready Market for Every Standard Sock

But, much as we like to receive shipments of standard socks from Auto-Knitter owners, there is nothing at all in our Work Contract to force you to send your output to us. We agree to buy every standard sock sent in to us, the year around, and to pay a fixed price. We will also send replacement yarn for each lot of standard socks sent in. But you are at perfect liberty to sell these wool socks wherever you please. Local stores are often glad to get these fine wool socks and pay good prices for them. It is very likely, too, that your friends and neighbors may want a supply.

The machine itself is thoroughly substantial. Many Auto Knitters have been operated for years with perfect satisfaction. The machine weighs about 20 pounds and may be clamped to any ordinary table. It makes a sock—top, body, heel and toe—without removing the work from the machine. And it's all done in a surprisingly short time.

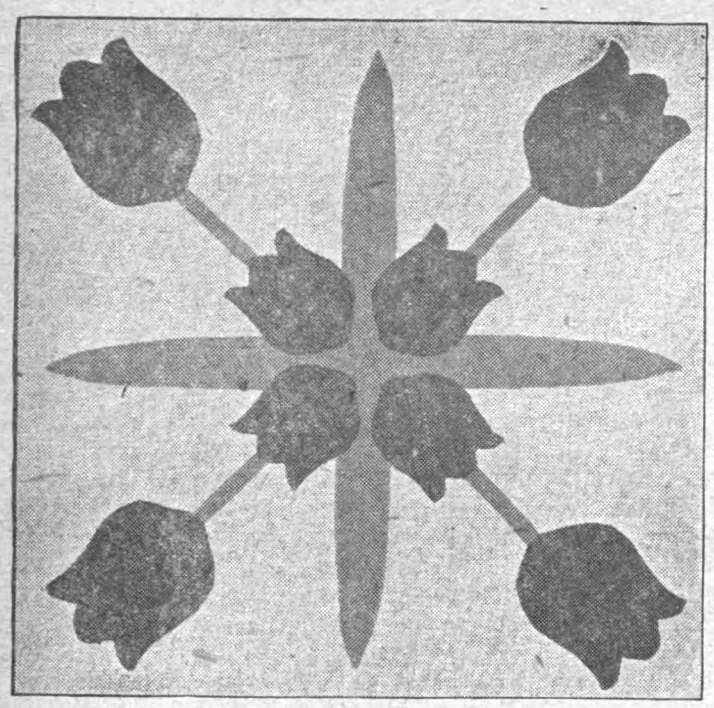
Previous experience with machinery is not necessary. Nor do you need to know how to knit by hand. The Instruction Book makes everything plain. With the Auto Knitter you can learn to turn out standard wool socks that have all the strength, warmth and quality of hand-knitted ones.

Write for Full Information About Our Home Work Plan

If you have been seeking some way to turn spare moments into money, then take this chance to get the facts about the Auto Knitter. Will you spend just two minutes now to find out all about a new, pleasant occupation that can be conducted right at home? You aren't obligating yourself at all when you sign and mail the coupon. The Auto Knitter Hosiery Company, Inc., Dept. 102, 630-32 Genesee Street, Buffalo, New York.

The Auto Knitter Hosiery Company, Inc.
Dept. 102, 630-32 Genesee Street, Buffalo, New York.

Send me full particulars about Making Money at Home with the Auto Knitter. I enclose two cents postage to cover cost of mailing literature, etc. It is understood that this does not obligate me in any way.



Name .....

Address .....

City..... State.....

Comfort 2-22

Things for Baby Wear

This conventionalized tulip design combines eight of the flowers which are of true and graceful outline, with leaves of a soft green. Whether or not the design is original we do not know, but it is a fine piece of needlework. Submitted by Annie Sue Manning, Ala.

Knitted Infant's Set

(Six months to one-year size.)

Materials required. Three to four skeins of white threefold Saxony, 1 pair No. 10 and 1 pair No. 14 steel needles. Our illustrations show hood and jacket finished with blue silk forget-me-nots, and the bootees with tiny pink rosebuds, either of which suggestion can be used on a set. Three yards of narrow white or colored ribbon will be needed and one and one-half yards of wider ribbon for ties. To work the forget-me-nots one will require three skeins of light blue twisted silk, one skein yellow and the same of light green.

For roses, four skeins pink and the same amount of yellow and green will be required.

Pink ribbons with the forget-me-nots and light blue with the rosebud decorations make a most charming combination, or white can be used if preferred.

Directions for Knitted Jacket

This little garment is worked lengthwise, beginning by casting on 110 stitches for one side of the front and working around and binding off on the opposite front.

Knit plain, back and forth, for 38 ribs, turn, bind off 32 sts easily for armholes, knit balance of row, turn. Knit one rib on these stitches. Knit next row, finishing by casting on 22 sts for back of armhole.

Knit 70 ribs for back of jacket, then bind off 32 sts, knit balance of row. Knit 1 rib and 1 row, cast on 32 sts and complete second front by knitting 38 ribs and binding off easily so as not to draw work.

For the Sleeves

Lay fronts and backs together and sew up shoulders. Turn work so seam will be inside and beginning under arm, if one prefers to knit sleeves in, pick up 62 sts and knit 40 or 42 rows with smaller needles, rib cuffs by knitting 2 and pearling 2 sts for two inches, bind off and sew up.

To make sleeve with ribs running lengthwise cast on 55 sts, knit back and forth for 46 ribs, bind off loosely. Pick up 46 sts, knit 2, purl 2 for two-inch cuff, or these can be made longer and turned back.

Collar

Pick up 70 sts for this. Work 2 ribs, knit 1 row, purl 1 row, 3 times, work 14 ribs and bind off. Run ribbon through the purled rows.

Directions for Knitted Hood

This is begun in the center of the crown by casting on 80 sts on fine needles. Knit 2, purl 3 for 14 rows, using large needles. Knit 10 ribs casting 1 st at the end of each row, then knit 30 ribs, knit 1 row, purl 1 row, knit 1 row, purl 1 row, knit 1 row, purl 1 row, knit 15 ribs for turn back and bind off loosely. The purled rows mark the turn back of the front of the hood.

Join ribbing and 10 rows of ribs together to form crown of hood, drawing up the 1st row so to leave a space about the size of a half dollar which is filled in with a crocheted wheel made as follows: Ch 4, join, fill with 15 or more d c, ch 2, 1 d c on d c, 2 d c on next, repeat, sew or crochet in place on the inside.

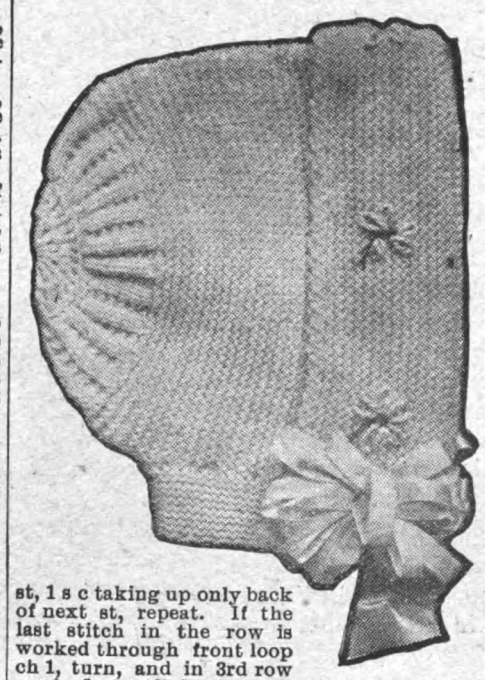
To finish the neck of the hood, turn back the front and pick up stitches and knit back and forth making 8 or 10 ribs. Bind off.

Mocassin Bootees

Casting on 60 sts on large needles, knit 2 ribs, cast 1 st on each end for next 4 rows, knit 3 ribs, cast off 1 st at end of every other row until one has 9 ribs, knit 3 ribs on these stitches.

Knit 1 row, purl 1 row, repeat twice more. Then 6 ribs, knit 1 row, purl 1 row, 7 ribs. Bind off. Sew up the bottoms and fronts of bootees and turn over tops. Run ribbons through purling, which should come on the outside.

Decorations



The little forget-me-nots are formed of five blue silk lazy-daisy stitches around three yellow French knots and one stitch of green for stem. These are placed on the front of both jacket and hood and the top of the bootees. If rosebuds are preferred, begin each wth three yellow French knots and around these form the roses with pink silk, the stitch used being really an outline stitch but worked round and round, and closely together, first binding the knots together, and then round and round, each stitch placed so as to bind and hold up the previous round. These little buds stand right out instead of being allowed to lie flat on the wooly background. Finish each with three green stitches or loops and narrow green ribon to form tiny leaves.

Apple-Seed Stitch

This is simply single crochet stitch worked as follows:

Make a ch, turn, 1 s c in each st excepting the first, ch 1, turn.

2nd row—1 s c taking up only front loop of st, 1 s c taking up only back of next st, repeat. If the last stitch in the row is worked through front loop ch 1, turn, and in 3rd row work first stitch through back loop only. Next through front loop, thus alternating in every row.

KNITTED HOOD.

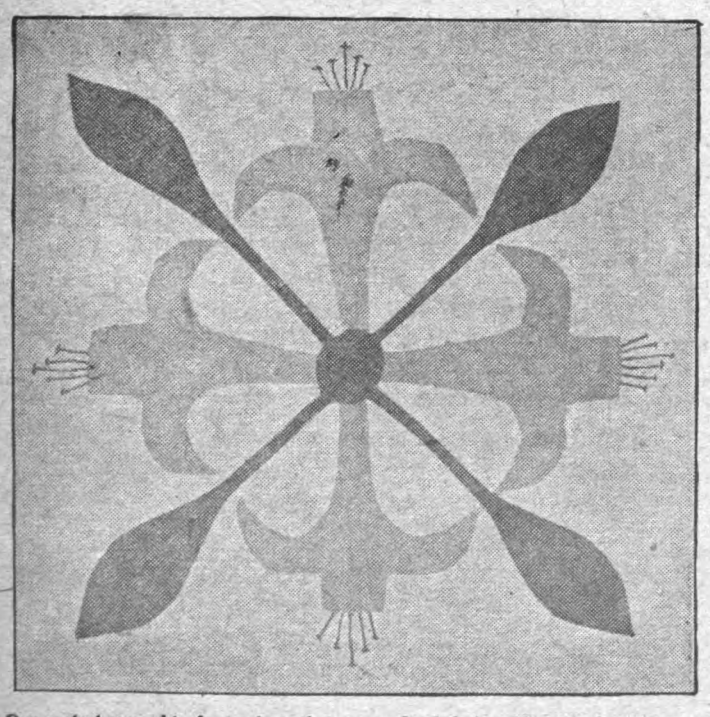
This result in an uneven surface will give no suggestion of being single crochet, and is as attractive as it is simple. All that is necessary is to be careful to start correctly, then the stitches of each row will alternate as they should.



Bye-Low Baby Blanket

This beautiful warm and cozy blanket or carriage robe may be made to complete and match the Knitted Set.

It is made of four strips of colored wool, either of baby blue or light pink and three of cream white embroidered to match the set.

Threefold Saxony, or if a carriage robe is planned, four Germantown are the best weight wools to use. The quantity needed depends upon the size of the blanket or robe required.

The apple-seed stitch is used throughout and fully described above. Each strip should measure about nine inches. For this width the number of stitches in the first chain will vary according to the wool and size of crochet hook used. Make four strips of color the length desired, then begin and end each of the three cream white strips with a square of color, thus making a border top and bottom of the blanket.

Our contest seemed to demonstrate that among floral designs lilies are almost as popular as roses and tulips. Our illustration hardly does justice to the original quilt block, as the pink of the lilies was too delicate to show up more clearly. The leaves and circle of green help to make the whole a very attractive design. Submitted by Mrs. E. V. Chavis, N. C.

Baby's Slip-On Sweater

Those who prefer a sweater to a jacket may make a cozy little slip-on of white or any dainty color of twofold Saxony on a No. 6 or 8 knitting needle. This little model is light in weight and lacy in appearance.

Cast on 50 stitches and knit 1, purl 1 across. Knit back. This forms the pattern, repeat these two rows for the entire garment. Knit six-inch piece in this way, then cast on 30 sts on each side for the sleeves. Knit three inches on these 110 sts, turn. Knit 45 sts, bind off 20 sts for the neck and across the remaining 45 sts. Knit over 45 sts back to the neck, cast on 10 sts for the front and knit three inches.

Bind off 30 sts easily for the sleeve. Slip remaining stitches on a third needle. Finish opposite side in the same way to this point. Work on remaining stitches for the front for six inches. Bind off.

KNITTED INFANT'S JACKET.

For the Cuffs

Pick up 24 sts and knit 2, purl 2, for two inches. Bind off.

Sew up sleeves and sides of sweater.

The Collar

Finish the neck with a small collar of plain knitting in contrast to body. For this pick up 40 sts at the edge of neck and knit plain, adding an extra stitch at end of every fourth row at each side until the collar is as wide as desired. Work about 18 sps in all. Bind off.

The collar may be of a different color from the sweater or a band of color may be worked in three ribs for the edge.

Filet Square for Bedspread

Ch 124 sts.

1st row.—39 sps, ch 5, turn.

2nd row.—1 sp, 37 blks, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

3rd and 4th rows.—1 sp, 1 blk, 35 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

5th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 13 sps, 1 blk, 7 sps, 1 blk, 13 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

6th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 13 sps, 2 blks, 5 sps, 2 blks, 13 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

7th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 8 sps, 3 blks, 2 sps, 3 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 2 sps, 3 blks, 8 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

8th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 9 sps, 3 blks, 2 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 2 sps, 3 blks, 9 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

9th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 10 sps, 3 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 2 blks, 10 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

10th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 1 blk, 6 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 9 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 6 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

11th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 2 blks, 6 sps, 11 blks, 6 sps, 2 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

12th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 3 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 4 sps, 3 blks, 4 sps, 2 blks, 3 sps, 3 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

13th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 5 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

14th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 8 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 3 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 2 sps, 3 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 8 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

15th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 8 sps, 1 blk, 8 sps, 1 blk, 8 sps, 1 blk, 8 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

16th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 7 sps, 1 blk, 8 sps, 3 blks, 8 sps, 1 blk, 7 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

17th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 5 sps, 5 blks, 4 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 4 sps, 5 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

18th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

19th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

20th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, 3 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

21st row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 6 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 4 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 4 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 6 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

22nd row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

23rd row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 2 sps, 3 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 3 blks, 2 blks, 5 sps, 3 blks, 5 sps, 4 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

26th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 6 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 6 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

27th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 17 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

28th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 9 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

29th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 9 sps, 4 blks, 9 sps, 4 blks, 9 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

30th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 9 sps, 3 blks, 11 sps, 3 blks, 9 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

31st row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 8 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 9 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 8 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

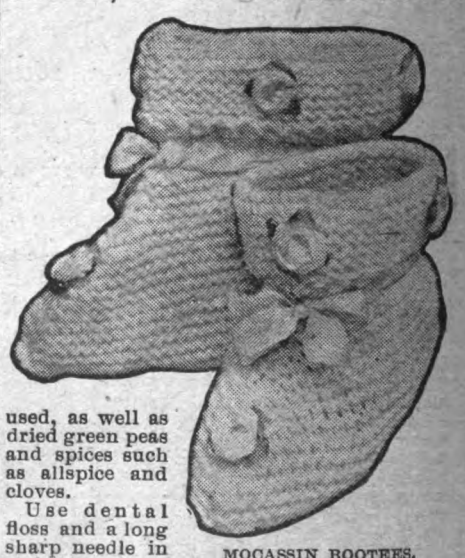
32nd row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 13 sps, 1 blk, 7 sps, 1 blk, 13 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

33rd row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 14 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 14 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

34th row.—1 sp, 1 blk, 35 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

35th row.—Same as 34th row.

36th row.—1 sp, 37 blks, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.



37th row.—39 sps.

For the Edge.—Work 2 d c into every space, 1 d c on the stitch between the sps, 6 d c into each corner space.

Some Unusual Beads

Now that necklaces are worn on all occasions and are really considered an almost indispensable accessory it is interesting to know that very effective strings can be made of some of the simplest materials.

At the grocers one will find many beans of various hues, dotted, spotted and streaked with brilliant colors, also small shiny black ones and round, fat white ones. These can all be used, as well as dried green peas and spices such as allspice and cloves.

MOCASSIN BOOTEES.

Use dental floss and a long sharp needle in making up.

The dark beans may be combined with the light ones or either sort may be strung with glass beads of contrasting colors.

The only difficulty one will encounter is in piercing them. Small holes can very easily be made with the proper needle.

After the holes are made string the beans and give them a coat of varnish. When dry they will be ready to string on the floss into necklaces. Peas colored with oil paints and then varnished may be alternated with the beans or allspice may be substituted for the peas.

Allspice and cloves combined with glass beads of different sizes are also very pretty.

To make a necklace of these one will need a fairly good-sized bead and some small ones. First string a large bead, then a clove, running the needle in at the small end and out at the head. Next a small bead of bright color, one allspice pod, one small bead, one clove, threading this one from the large end to the small, then one large bead and repeat the spices.

Yokes in Plain Crochet

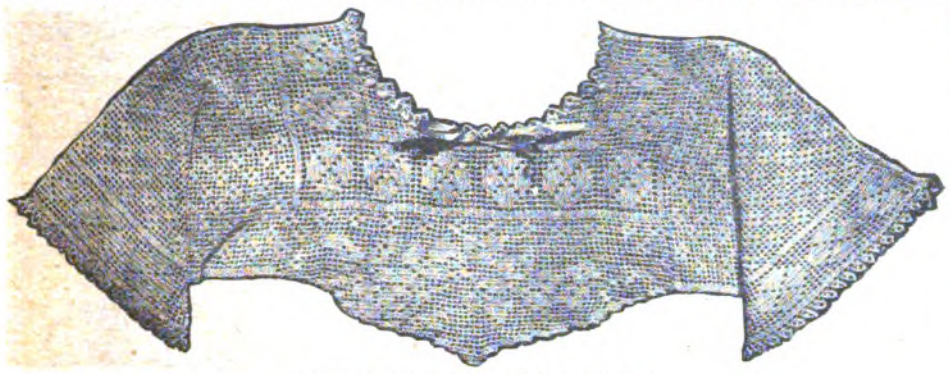
This makes up very prettily and will keep indefinitely if a coat of varnish is applied first as directed and allowed to thoroughly dry.

Ordinary pea or lima beans which are thoroughly dry will take the most vivid colors, and so may be used entirely if no other kinds can easily be procured.

These brilliantly colored beans are also most effective for trimming baskets or bags.



Rose Beads

These beads are most delicate and may be made at home at one-tenth the cost of a string of real rose beads.

To be sure they will lack the fragrance of the rose beads, but they will make up in quantity and inexpensiveness.

The following amount will make about four long chains.

Mix two tablespoons of corn-starch with just enough water to make a thin paste adding a bit of coloring to give just the rose, lilac, yellow or green which you prefer.

NIGHTGOWN YOKE WITH SLEEVES.

This coloring matter may be a bit of dye or water color, a few drops of bluing, red or purple ink. In one way or another one may secure almost any shade desired.

To this add one-half cup of fine table salt, which has been heated very hot over the fire.

The combination makes a soft paste which should be vigorously kneaded until the coloring matter and salt are evenly distributed and the whole a firm, smooth dough. Now mould into small balls, sticking a coarse pin through each while soft and then standing on a cushion to dry. These beads may be either round or oblong, graduated in sizes and smooth or marked with pin points, up and down or round and round. The surface can also be embossed by rolling over anything which will trace a pattern on it.

After hardening about a day the beads will be ready to be strung on the dental floss, which will wear better than any coarse thread.

String lavender beads with tiny gold beads, rose with silver and yellow or green with white

As gifts these chains, made to harmonize with the clothes of your friends will be sure of a welcome.

Nightgown Yoke with Sleeves

In following these directions No. 70 or 80 cotton will have to be used for a size 36 yoke, coarser cotton will result in a larger size.

First work the square which outlines the neck.

Begin with ch 45 sts, turn.

1st row—1 d c in 4th st from hook, 39 more doubles, ch 5, turn.

2nd row—1 d c on 4th d c, ch 2, sk 2, 1 d c, repeat, making 11 sps, 4 d c, ch 3, turn.

3rd row—3 d c, 4 sps, 3 blks (10 d c), 5 sps, ch 5. turn 4th row—4 sps, 5 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, ch 3, turn.

5th row—2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, ch 5, turn.

6th row—2 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, ch 3, turn.

7th row—1 blk, 1 sp, 4 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 2 sps, ch 5, turn.

8th row—Same as 6th row.

9th row—Same as 5th row.

10th row—Same as 4th row.

11th row—Same as 3rd row.

12th row—Same as 2nd row.

13th row—1 blk, 11 sps, 1 blk, ch 2, turn.

Now repeat the figure 4 times, making 1 blk on each edge Then make 1 row of 12 sps and 1 blk on lower edge only, make 1 figure same as first figure with 4 d c on 1 blk along one edge only.

For each shoulder, work on the ends 13 rows, making 1 blk, 4 sps, 3 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, repeat pattern from 4th row. Make four figures on each side. Break thread.

For back make a strip to match front and join to shoulders with thread and needle.

Next work the front which is shown below square yoke design. This is begun by working 1 d c into the 1st ch, ch 2, 1 d c into top of 1st d c, ch 2, repeat, making 1 d c in the end of each row, or 68 sps in all, ch 5, turn.

2nd row of Front—1 blk over 2nd sp, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, repeat sps and blks, ending with 1 sp after last blk, ch 3, turn.

3rd row—1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, repeat until center is reached where there will be only 2 sps before the next blk, sp, blk, then finish as row is begun, ch 5, turn. This row if correct will have 12 groups of blks and sps with 3 sps between each excepting the center two groups which have only 2 sps.

4th row—Same as center row.

5th row—4 sps, 1 blk, 24 sps, 4 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 23 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, ch 5, turn.

6th row—3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 21 sps, 2 blks, 3 sps, 6 blks, 24 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, ch 5, turn.

7th row—4 sps, 1 blk, 25 sps, 2 blks, 2 sps, 2 blks, 2 sps, 3 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 18 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, ch 5, turn.

8th row—1 sp, 1 blk, 21 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 29 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 3, turn.

9th row—1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 23 sps, 3 blks, 3 sps, 5 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 19 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, ch 5, turn.

10th row—1 sp, 1 blk, 20 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 4 blks, 1 sp, 5 blks, 8 sps, 2 blks, 13 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

11th row—4 sps, 1 blk, 10 sps, 4 blks, 6 sps, 1 blk, 2 sps, 2 blks, 7 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 17 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, ch 5, turn.

12th row—3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 17 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 6 sps, 2 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 6 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, ch 5, turn,

13th row—4 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, 4 blks, 2 sps, 4 blks, 2 sps, 3 blks, 6 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 6 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 3 sps, 3 blks, 7 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 3, turn.

14th row—2 blks, 9 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 2 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 4 blks, 4 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 2 sps, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 7 sps, 2 blks, turn, sl st over last 2 blks, ch 3.

15th row—2 blks, 9 sps, 3 blks, 2 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 3 sps, 6 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 4 sps, 8 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 2 sps, 2 blks, 6 sps, 2 blks, turn, sl st over 2 blks, ch 3.

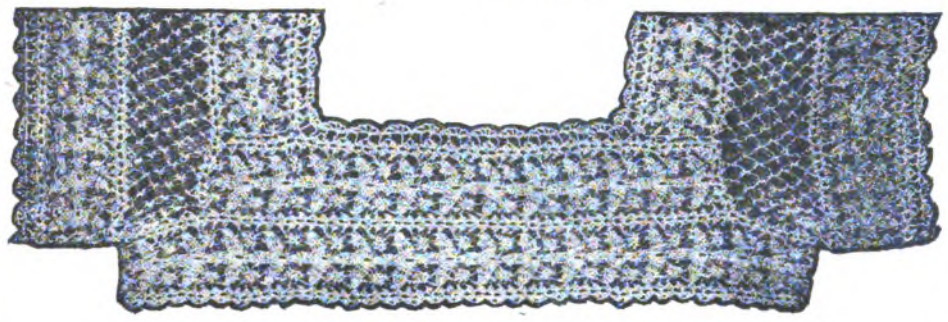
16th row—2 blks, 4 sps, 4 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 5 sps, 3 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 2 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 6 sps, 2 blks, ch 3, turn, sl st, ch 3.

17th row—2 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 2 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 5 sps, 2 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 2 sps, 2 blks, turn sl st, ch 3.

18th row—2 blks, 4 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 5 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 6 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 3 sps, 4 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 4 sps, 1 blk, 2 sps, 2 blks, turn, sl st, ch 3.

19th row—2 blks, 5 sps, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 2 sps, 4 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 6 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 2 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, 2 blks, ch 3.

20th row—2 blks on 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 8 sps, 2 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 11 sps, 2 blks, turn sl st, ch 3.



21st row—2 blks, 8 sps, 1 blk, 6 sps, 3 blks, 2 sps, 1 blk, 3 sps, 1 blk, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, ch 3.

22nd row—2 blks on blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 3 sps, 2 blks, 8 sps, 2 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 7 sps, 2 blks, sl st over 4 d c, ch 3.

23rd row—2 blks, 7 sps, 1 blk, 6 sps, 1 blk, 11 sps, 3 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, 1 sp, 2 blks, sl st, ch 3.

24th row—3 blks, 5 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 22 sps, 3 blks, sl st, ch 3.

25th row—3 blks, 19 sps, 2 blks, 5 sps, 3 blks, sl st, ch 3.

'LACE YOKE IN IVY LEAF DESIGN.

26th row—3 blks, 3 sps, 1 blk, 16 sps, 3 blks, sl st, ch 3.

27th row—3 blks, 14 sps, 3 blks, sl st, ch 3.

28th row—3 blks, 3 sps, 3 blks, sl st over 7 d c, ch 3.

29th row—4 blks, sl st over 4 d c, ch 3, 2 blks on 7 d c. This completes the point which forms the lower part of the front of the yoke.

A straight strip is next worked across the back.

Start as in the front making 67 sps in the first row below the square neck design.

2nd row—1 blk, 5 sps, repeat 10 times, finishing with 1 blk, ch 3, turn.

3rd row—1 blk over 1st sp in 2nd row, * 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, repeat from * 9 times, then 3 sps, 1 blk, 1 sp, ch 3, turn.

4th row—Same as 2nd row. This gives one ten complete figures and two unfinished ones at either end.

5th row—3 sps, 1 blk, * 5 sps, 1 blk, repeat from * 9 times, 3 sps, ch 5, turn.

6th row—2 sps, * 1 blk, 1 sp, 1 blk, 3 sps, repeat across, ending with 2 sps, ch 5, turn.

7th row—Same as 5th row.

Repeat pattern beginning with 2nd row.

This gives one four figures in width. Next row 67 sps, ch 3, turn, 1 d c on each d c, with 2 d c on each sp. This completes back.

Sleeves

These are of the all-over design just finished and may be made as long as desired.

Starting in the back, make 4 d c under the end double in the last row of doubles. Work 1 sp at end of each row or 14 sps in end of work before square yoke is reached, into the end of this work 13 sps, alongside of strip over the shoulders work 1 sp at end of each row, or 42 sps, 13 sps along the end of front square yoke, 12 sps on end of rows below this, and finish with 1 blk, ch 3, turn.

2nd row—1 blk, 6 sps, 1 blk (this last blk should be on a line with center two blocks of second figure in the front; if not, work this block so it will be), then 5 sps, 1 blk, repeat, ending with 1 blk.

3rd row—1 blk, necessary sps so as to bring two blocks in each figure in correct place, the same as in strip worked across back.

The sleeves, as shown, are ten figures deep, then blocks on each edge are omitted and spaces made instead, as the sleeve is joined together from this point on. Make five more figures follow with one row all spaces, then one row doubles.

One should have 88 spaces to have border on sleeves work on correctly. If necessary the work can be increased or decreased in the last two rows given, then follow doubles with one row of 88 sps, ch 5, turn.

Border

4 sps, 3 blks, 8 sps, 3 blks, * 8 sps, 3 blks, repeat from *, ending with 4 sps.

2nd row—3 sps, 5 blks, * 6 sps, 5 blks, repeat from * ending with 3 sps, ch 5, turn.

3rd row—2 sps, * 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 4 sps, repeat from *, ending with 2 sps, ch 5, turn.

4th row—1 sp, * 3 blks, 1 sp, 1 blk, 1 sp, 3 blks, 2 sps, repeat from *, ending with 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

5th row—1 sp, * 4 blks, 1 sp, 4 blks, 2 sps, repeat from *, ending with 1 sp, ch 5, turn.

6th row—Same as 4th row.

7th row—Same as 3rd row.

8th row—Same as 2nd row.

9th row—Same as 1st row.

10th row—All spaces.

11 row—Doubles.

12th row—All spaces.

Edging

Ch 5, 1 s c on d c between 1st and 2nd sps, ch 5, 1 s c on next d c, repeat around.

2nd row—9 s c under 1st ch 5, 5 s c under 2nd ch 5, ch 5, turn, 1 sl st in 5th s c on 1st ch, turn, 5 s c under ch just made, ch 3 for picot, 5 s c, under same ch, 4 s c under 2nd ch in 1st row. This completes one point. Work the other sleeve to match.

The neck may be finished with a beading and the same pointed edging if one likes a square neck, or the corners may be filled in as follows to form a round neck: Begin on neck side of shoulder opposite second figure and working towards the corner make 11 sps. Now on the front work 1 d c, ch 2, 1 d c, this makes 2 sps along front edge of neck, turn. Make 10 sps over sps along shoulder edge, turn, sl st over last sp, ch, 9 sps, 1 d c in front edge, ch 2, 1 d c in front edge, turn, 8 sps.

Continue in this way shortening each row and working along the front until one finishes with 1 sp only. Break thread.

After all four corners have been filled in, in this manner, add a beading of trebles with ch 2 between for running ribbon, and pointed edging to match sleeves.

MRS. M. E. LUKE.

Ivy Leaf Lace Yoke

Materials.—No. 50 crochet cotton and a proper sized steel hook. Fresh designs are always in demand for yokes, as there is no end to the fashioning of corset covers, camisoles, nightgowns, chemises and combinations.

The way in which this yoke is made is a favorite method of forming any pretty insertion pattern in a yoke, using either one or two strips for the front and back and with or without sleeves.

Begin with a ch 6, join in ring.

1st row—Shell on 3 tr c (ch 3 for 1st), ch 3, and 3 tr c in ring, 4 knot sts, each one-fourth inch in length, repeat from beginning of row, ch 6, sh in ring, turn.

2nd row—Ch 4, sh in sh, * 1 knot st, fasten in 1st knot, 1 knot st, fasten (with a d c) in next knot, ch 5, fasten in same place, 1 knot st, fasten in next knot, 1 knot st, sh in sh, repeat from *, turn.

3rd row—Ch 4, sh in sh, * 1 knot st, fasten in 1st knot, 1 knot st, 15 tr c in loop of ch 5, 1 knot st, fasten in next knot, 1 knot st, sh in sh, repeat from *, turn.

4th row—Ch 4, sh in sh, * 1 knot st, fasten in knot, 1 knot st (5 tr c in 5 tr c, 2 knot sts), repeat twice, 5 tr c in remaining 5 tr c, 1 knot st, fasten in knot, 1 knot st, sh in sh, repeat from *, turn.

5th row—Ch 4, sh in sh, * (in 5 tr c make 2 triple trebles, 2 double trebles and one treble, keeping the top loop of each on needle, work off the 6 sts, 2 at a time until 1 st remains, close with a tight ch st, 1 knot st, fasten in knot between 2 sts of previous row, 1 knot st), repeat twice, 2 triple trebles, 2 double trebles and 1 tr c in next 5 trebles, work off as before, sh in sh, repeat from *, turn.

6th row—Ch 4, sh in sh, * 1 knot st, fasten in center knot, 1 knot st, fasten in tip of 2nd leaf, ch 5, fasten in same place, 1 knot st, fasten in knot, 1 knot st, sh in sh, repeat from *, turn.

Repeat from 3rd row until you have made patterns enough for the back strip, according to the size of the yoke.

The model shown is for size 34 and has 12 patterns across upper band in the back and 12 or 13 across the front, for the lower band which can be made in one piece 32 or 33 patterns will be needed.

Shoulder Strap

Fasten thread in shell of lower row just beyond end of the upper row.

Make 1 sh, ch 3, turn, sh on sh, joining into end of upper row

Repeat making 6 shs along the end, joining the last one to the end sh of upper row, turn. 1 sh, 1 knot st, join between 1st and 2nd shells on edge of upper row. 1 knot st, 15 tr c under the ch between 3rd and 4th sh, 1 knot st, join between 5th and 6th sh, 1 knot st, 1 sh between 7th and 8th sh, turn. Work seven or more patterns for strap. Join to opposite side and then shell down the end of upper row in the same manner as work was begun.

Move the other strap in the same manner. If sleeves are not desired finish neck and armholes with beading as shell.

Sleeves

Begin by fastening thread to sh beyond work on lower row. Make 1 row of knot sts working into each sh, and joining to sh on edge of lower rows on each side. Repeat knot sts, working back and forth until space is about the width of the shoulder straps.

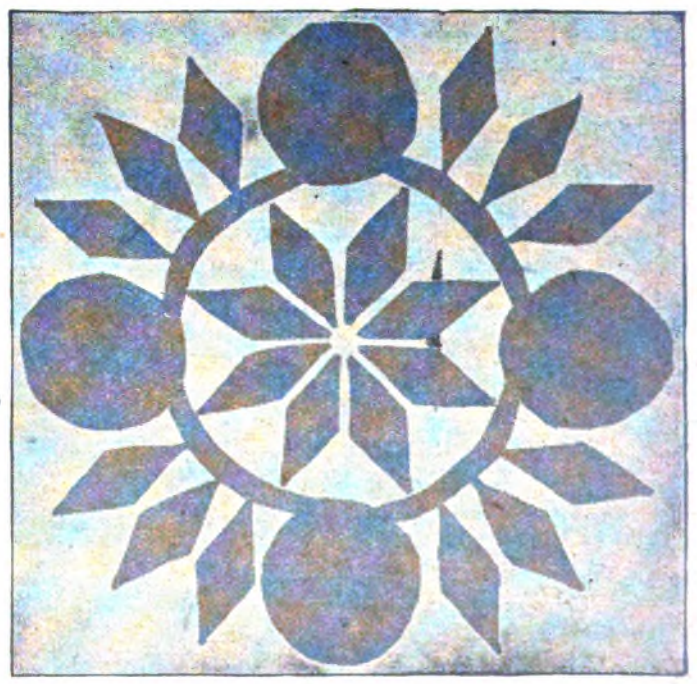
Finish with a band of 12 or more patterns, fastening the shells on the edge to the last row of knot sts.

For beading on sleeves and neck fasten into work ch 5, 1 d c, ch 2, sk 1 sh, 1 d c, repeat.

For Scallop

1 s c on d c, 3 d c, ch 3, 3 d c on next d c, 1 s c on next, repeat around.

This pattern also makes a very pretty all lace camisole by using a sufficient number of rows.



In this moss rose design, which may or may not be original, the blossoms, which are of red, are of one piece, cut as shown to produce a petal-like effect. The buds have red centers and the leaves and stems in their arrangement help to complete a graceful design. Submitted by Mrs. Vernon R. Brandburg, Pa.

Narrow Edging

Begin with ch 12 sts, 1 d c in 8th st from hook, 3 more d c in next 3 sts, ch 5, turn, 4 d c on ch 8, ch 5, turn, 4 d c in sp. Make this insertion the desired length, then turn, ch 4, 1 d c in sp, ch 4, 1 d c in same sp, 6 d c in every other sp.

Our Patchwork Contest

The interest shown in our patchwork contest was far beyond our expectations. The four designs published this month are selected from among a number of fine pieces, both in design and workmanship which we consider worthy of a special prize. Next month these entire two pages will be devoted to new designs in applique and old designs which have pleased quilt makers for many years. For other designs see page 25.

This is an example of a geometrical design in an applique quilt pattern. The parts and colors are arranged in such a way as to secure a well-balanced whole both as to form and color. The background of white has a center of eight red diamonds surrounded by a green circle overlaid with four red circles at opposite points. The spaces between these have two green and a center diamond of red. Submitted by Gertrude Fryette, Ohio.

The Wonderful ADLER Player Pianos

These superb instruments, the product of America's modern factory and expert designers, are so marvelous in tone, so splendid in construction that only by actual test can you appreciate their superiority. Therefore we ship to let you learn in your own home that the Adler is the instrument of your ideals—a perfect instrument of wonderfully sweet, singing tone. Return if not entirely satisfactory. If you buy, pay on our easy terms and save $100 to $150, because of direct shipment from factory. Guaranteed for 25 years.

Direct from Factory on 30 Days' Free Trial

FREE—Adler's famous Book of Pianos and Player Pianos tells you what points to look for in buying. Also explains how we make the Adler a piano of the highest artistic merit. The book is free. Send for it today.

C. L. Adler, Pres., Adler Mfg. Co.
2382 W. Chestnut St., Louisville, Ky.

Send No Money

7 JEWEL WATCH $6.75 POST PAID
Bracelet & Chatelaine Pin

Season's Most Startling Watch Offer.

This beautiful high grade ladies' small size, 10 year guaranteed, seven jewel watch and bracelet ($15 value) now only $6.75. Stem wind and set—beautiful case, attractive gold dial, splendid movement, accurate timekeeper. Sent in velvet and silk lined case. Excellent gift. Send no money—just send name and address. Pay postman on delivery $6.75—our low advertising price. Satisfaction guaranteed. Write today.

Standard Jewelry Co., 3842 Lake St., Dept 33, Chicago

4 LACE CURTAINS FREE
for selling only 30 packs vegetable seeds at 10c per large pack. Handsome 31-piece Blue Bird Dinner Set given according to plan in our catalog. Send quick. Send no money.

American Seed Co., Lancaster, Pa. Box M33

What 15c Will Bring You From the Nation's Capital

Only 15c gives you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a cheerful illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center for people everywhere; an independent home paper that tells the story of the world's news in an interesting, understandable way. This splendid National weekly costs but $1 a year. The Pathfinder is the Ford of the publishing world. Splendid serial and short stories and miscellany. Question Box answers your questions and is a mine of information. Send 15 cents and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15 cents does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends.

The Pathfinder, 668 Landgdon Sta., Washington, D.C.

$500 Prize Contest

The Lester Park-Edward Whiteside photoplay, "Empty Arms," inspired the song "Empty Arms". A third verse is wanted, and to the writer of the best one submitted a prize of $500.00 cash will be paid. This contest is open to everybody. You simply write the words for a third verse—it is not necessary that you see the photoplay before doing so. Send us your name and address and we shall send you a copy of the words of the song, the rules of the contest and a short synopsis of this photoplay. It will cost you nothing to enter the contest.

"EMPTY ARMS" CONTEST EDITOR.
World M. P. Corporation,
245 W. 47th St., Dept. 682, New York, N. Y.

TALKING MACHINE FREE

This Month, for selling only 12 twenty-five cent boxes of Mentho Nova Salve, greatest ointment invented for cuts, burns, catarrh, etc. Send at once, as number of Talking Machines on these terms is limited. Plays dancing, singing or instrumental music. Handsome metal case. Premium List forty other offers sent with salve. We trust you.

U. S. SUPPLY CO., Dept. B-1 Greenville, Pa.

MOTOR DRIVEN—PLAYS ANY STANDARD RECORD

4 Weeks' Trial Direct From Factory

NOT ONE CENT IN ADVANCE
Wing Pianos and Player Pianos shipped on 4 weeks' trial freight prepaid. Save 25 to 50 per cent. 40 year guarantee. Thousands in use everywhere. Write at once for new book showing 38 styles. Also latest factory prices and easy terms.

WING & SON (Est. 1868). Dept. 22 A, 9th Ave. & 13th St., New York

REMNANTS SILK, VELVET, GINGHAM, ETC.

WONDERFUL BARGAIN IN 4-POUND BUNDLES

of beautiful Silk Remnants for fancy work, quilts, portieres, pillows, etc. Send 10 cents for a big package of lovely silk, including free quilt designs and catalog describing our 4-pound silk, velvet, gingham, and other remnant bargain bundles; also instructions how to earn money at home by sewing.

AGENTS WANTED To sell our Remnant Bargain bundles

UNION S. WORKS, 207 Factory St., BOONVILLE, N. Y.

Sales Agents

wanted in every county to give all or spare time. Positions worth $750 to $1,500 yearly. We train the inexperienced. Novelty Cutlery Co., 76 Bar St., Canton, Ohio

Scouting as an Eye-Opener

By M. R. Piper

TIME was—and not so long ago, either—when small boys were regarded by us grownups as more or less a nuisance and a liability, to be tolerated because individually we were fond of them in spite of their being such a care, and we hoped some day, by the grace of God, they might outgrow the trying period of adolescence and turn out men worthy of our well-meant efforts at upbringing.

We were prepared for the worst—knew they would forever be up to some mischief or other, go off fizz-bang like a Fourth-of-July firecracker when least expected to do so. In our milder moments we murmured, "Oh, well, boys will be boys," and in harsher moods there was always the woodshed for recourse. We hoped they would understand some day.

Today we are just beginning humbly to perceive that it is we, not our sons, who did not understand, and for some of us it was Scouting that was the eye-opener. Scouting that showed us that the small boy isn't a liability at all, that if given half a chance he is an incalculable asset.

In the first place, Scouting revealed what some of us might have forgotten—that a boy is an incessant dynamo of energy. He must be doing something every waking moment or "bust". He abhors inactivity, as Nature is supposed to abhor a vacuum. It is this fearful and wonderful energy which is responsible for nine-tenths of the mischief he gets into. It took a movement like Scouting to drive it into our rather inelastic minds that this same energy conserved, directed, constructively applied, could work wonders not only for our own peace of mind and the boy's delight and well-being but also in the up-building of a man-power "physically strong, mentally awake, morally straight," developing normally out of a boy power of the same high caliber.

Given this energy, every small boy would, if he saw his way to it, prefer to use it constructively rather than aimlessly or destructively. He is infinitely happier building bird-houses and watching with proprietorial interest while his feathered tenants move in, than he ever was exercising his skill with the sling-shot. He gets ten times the satisfaction out of helping a farmer extinguish a forest fire in a valuable woodlot than he could possibly get out of robbing the same farmer's apple orchard. He would prefer being a trusted police aide helping direct traffic in a big parade than to dodge the "cop"—having smashed somebody's window or been surprised "rattling the bones" in a back alley.

SIGNALING ACROSS A RIVER.

The Scout program supplies an endless variety of interesting occupations for idle moments, occupations such as every boy naturally delights in and which incidentally serve to develop character, form good habits and rouse ambition.

What do Scouts do? What do they not do? They hike and cycle and swim and camp. They study birds and animals in their native haunts. They learn how to find their way in the woods by night or day, with or without a compass. They build shacks and shanties and set up signal towers, from which they wig-wag messages from camp to camp. They know how to tie all kinds of knots, how to identify trees by bark as well as by foliage, how to build a fire in the open and cook their own food over it. They know what to do in case of fire or panic, how to render first aid and artificial respiration, how to save life in times of emergency. These and a hundred other pursuits are open to the Scout. They are the things the boy enjoys doing and knowing, and enjoys doubly because he is doing them with his chums under the leadership of the right kind of man, the boy-hearted, red-blooded scoutmaster who as the Director of Boy Energy is holding down one of the biggest jobs in the world, and doing it for nothing, too, mind you—that is, he does it for nothing in the money sense. Every real scoutmaster will tell you he is more than repaid for all his expenditures of time and energy and thought by what he in turn gets back from his investment in boy life.

But these things, vital as they are, are only a small part of what Scouts do. The key-note of Scouting is service. Scouts not only learn to help themselves. They learn to be constantly on the watch to help others. Every Boy Scout, from the moment he receives his Tenderfoot badge from the hands of his scoutmaster, is sworn to do the Daily Good Turn which is fundamental in the movement.

Possibly the Good Turn may need a word of explanation for the uninitiated. The Scout may not count as a Good Turn any act which is in the ordinary line of duty. He may not count the home chores which he is expected to do anyway as a helpful, responsible member of the home-community, nor may he count doing his regular job as an employee of somebody else. The Good Turn is an extra act of kindness or good will for which he goes out of his way. It may consist of picking some pieces of broken glass from the highway or helping a bewildered stranger find his destination. It may be the finding of a lost child, the escorting of a blind man for his daily walk, the shoveling of snow for some manless household, the binding up of an injured dog's foot. It may be, and in hundreds of cases it has been, a big service, the rescue of a person from drowning, the putting out of an otherwise disastrous fire, the flagging of a train in season to avert disaster. But big or little, the principle is the same, an act of unselfish good will and helpfulness rendered with no thought of gain or praise simply because a Scout, according to his own law, is enjoined to the will and power to serve.

Perhaps it took the war to show us what an asset for community service Boy Scouts organized and ready, like a much-advertised beverage, for "instant use," might be. Selling Liberty bonds, operating war gardens, collecting peach pits and locating black walnut timber for government use, serving as aides and messengers at hospitals, collecting books and magazines for training camps, working with the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and scores of other organizations and institutions devoted to patriotic or humanitarian purposes, Scouts proved over and over that boys, organized for service, loyal, efficient, trained, could and would "carry on" whenever the call came.

The war ended but Boy Scout community service went on. In hundreds of towns and cities they are regularly enrolled fire aides to the fire departments, conduct annual clean-ups and safety-first campaigns, fight forest fires and tree blights, help exterminate flies and mosquitoes, co-operate with fish and game commissions in the preservation of wild life, plant shade trees, co-operate with city health departments and city planning commissions in making communities safe and beautiful to live in, patrol dangerous crossings near school buildings, remove disfiguring signs, raise and lower community flags—do, in short, a multitude of things that ten years ago we would not have dreamed boys could do or would be asked to do. Here again Scouting leads the way, shows us that boy energy constructively applied offers almost unlimited possibilities for community betterment.

Scouting has as an avowed objective the training of citizens and it applies to the project the same sound pedagogic principle—that of Learning by Doing—that it utilizes in the rest of its program. Boy Scouts learn citizenship by practicing it here and now. Working for their respective communities and for the nation, they come to feel a sense of civic loyalty and responsibility they would otherwise never know.

A small boy standing at salute very straight and very solemn, in the presence of the scoutmaster and a troop of scouts, all equally grave and ceremonious! Do you see him? Listen to what he is saying. They are great words and they are going to mean a great deal in his young life, God willing.

"On my honor I will do my best:
"To do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout Law;
"To help other people at all times;
"To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

This is the pledge the Tenderfoot must take before he has the right to wear the coveted Scout uniform and the trefoil badge, whose points serve to remind him of the threefold promise he has made. With this pledge the Scout must keep faith all along the way to the best of his ability whether he be the veriest tyro in the movement or the Eagle with his at least twenty-one merit badge to his credit.

And they do keep faith, too, marvelously, beyond our expectations. Perhaps the thing works out so remarkably because it is a self-imposed discipline, something he takes upon himself, because he wants to assume it, not because some alien-minded adult has thrust it upon him.

Let no one think Scouting is for any one type or class of boy. It is for all boys everywhere, rich or poor, privileged or underprivileged, the city boy, the town boy, the boy in the small village, even the boy in the remote rural district who may affiliate with the movement as a Pioneer Scout, practicing Scouting "by his lone" until he can connect with a patrol.

Thanks to Scouting, we are beginning to get a glimpse into the basic realities of boyhood, learning that boys will indeed be boys to the end of the chapter but that it rests with us in no small degree to determine whether they will be boys plus or boys minus, assets or liabilities.

Pointed Paragraphs

Why does a man who is really good usually look so sad?

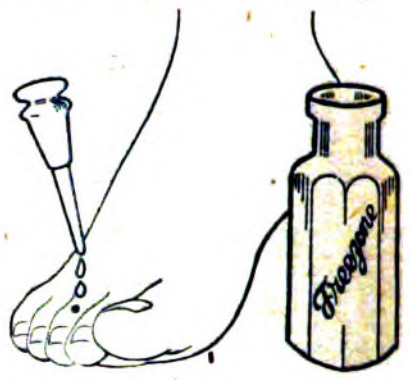
Musical directors beat their way through the world by scores.

Trousers that bag at the knees are often pressed into service.

After a man has passed the chloroform age he begins to lean toward the simple life.

The richest man in the world was born without a cent in his pocket.

Much of the milk of human kindness is adulterated beyond the cream-generating stage.



Still, a man never seems anxious to marry a woman who isn't afraid of a mouse.

Some people get so tired by doing nothing that they are never able to do anything else.

Don't judge a man by the clothes he wears. Form your opinion by the apparel of his wife. —Chicago News.

Corns

Lift Off with the Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between toes, and calluses, without pain, soreness.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract known the world over for its healing effect on membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions—and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

5 Magazines —Good— $1

Woman's World, (Monthly)
Good Stories, (Monthly)
American Woman, (Monthly)
Mother's Magazine, (Monthly)
The Farm Journal, (Monthly)
} Our Price $1.00 ALL FIVE FOR 1 YEAR

ORDER BY CLUB NUMBER 312

A Dollar Bill will do—We take the risk

Send all orders to

Whitlock & Summerhays
25 North Dearborn Street, CHICAGO

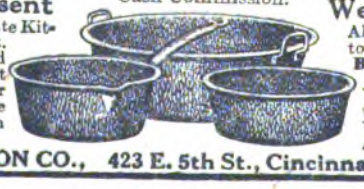
Every Quilter

Should have our book of 450 prettiest and scarcest patterns from old log cabin to star and puzzle designs. We will mail you this wonderful 25c book, also catalogue of beads and needlework materials, for 20c. No stamps. Our latest book of applique designs containing over 25 beautiful patterns for quilts, spreads, etc., and above, 25c.

LADIES' ART CO., Block 18, St. Louis, Mo.

CARDS Send 5 cents for large Sample Album of Hidden Name, Silk Fringe, Envelope, Friendship, Joker's, Lover's and all other Kinds of Cards, Post Cards and Premiums. Star Beau Catcher and flirt Book of Songs given Free. No trash. OHIO CARD CO., D-14 Columbus, Ohio.

FREE! A 42-Pc. FULL SIZE DINNER SET.



WE TRUST YOU. NO MONEY NEEDED. WE PAY FREIGHT.

SELL ONLY 12 BOXES OF SOAP,

each box containing 7 cakes fine Toilet Soap, and with every box, give as premiums to each purchaser all of the following articles: a Pound of Baking Powder, Bottle Perfume, Box Talcum Powder, 6 Teaspoons, Pair of Shears and a Package of Needles and this artistic Blue Bird Dinner Set Is Yours. Many other equally attractive offers and hundreds of useful Premiums such as Wearing Apparel, Linen Sets, Furniture, etc. We also pay large Cash Commission.

Special Extra Present

We give a High-Grade Granite Kitchen Set, consisting of a 10 qt. Dish Pan, 3 qt. Sauce Pan and 3 qt. Pudding Pan without cost or extra work if you send your order promptly. We also give Beautiful Presents and pay cash for appointing agents for us.

We Pay The Freight

Allowing plenty of time for you to examine, deliver and collect. BIG PRICE REDUCTIONS ON ALL GOODS. You advance no money. We trust you. You risk nothing. Write today for Big FREE Agents Outfit. Don't delay.

THE PERRY G. MASON CO., 423 E. 5th St., Cincinnati, O. Founded 1897.

Avoid Perils of Dyspepsia

In Place of Starving or Suffering Try the Plan of Full Meals and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Most everyone has gone through the misery of a sleepless night from dyspepsia. A host of such people found they could eat what they liked without sour risings, belching, gassiness, heaviness, palpitation or restless nervousness due to indigestion if they simply settled and soothed the stomach with a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet after eating and before retiring. If you are subject to such misery get a 60 cent box of these tablets today and you will fairly revel in the freedom from your old time enemy.

SILK HOSE FREE

LATEST and most fashionable style of women's three-strap kid slippers in extra fine quality, well-made to render greatest service and satisfaction. Has the popular, stylish military heel, with springy rubber heel attached, thus insuring great comfort and much greater wear on heel. Your satisfaction is guaranteed or your money will be refunded. In order to show the largest possible number of women the style, satisfaction and economy possible in ordering these slippers, we will give absolutely free with each pair ordered a stylish pair of fine quality silk hose to match.

$2.96

Brown or Black PREPAID

Order your size and width. Sizes 2½ to 8; widths c-d-e-ee. Remember that the low price means an enormous number of sales, so to be sure that we will be able to supply you in your size and color, send your order today, with money order for $2.96. We will send silk hose free.

MID-WEST MAIL ORDER HOUSE
1632 Clifton Park Avenue, Dept. 90, Chicago, Ill.

For Aches and Pains

Sloan's Liniment is recommended as an external application in the treatment of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, lumbago, lame back, sprains and strains, sore muscles and a host of other external aches and pains.

Don't rub Sloan's, it penetrates. At all druggists, 35c, 70c, $1.40.

Keep it handy

Sloan's Liniment Pain's enemy

The OLD RELIABLE REMEDY for Colds

BREAKS COLDS IN 24 HOURS LA GRIPPE IN 3 DAYS

WORLD'S STANDARD FOR TWO GENERATIONS

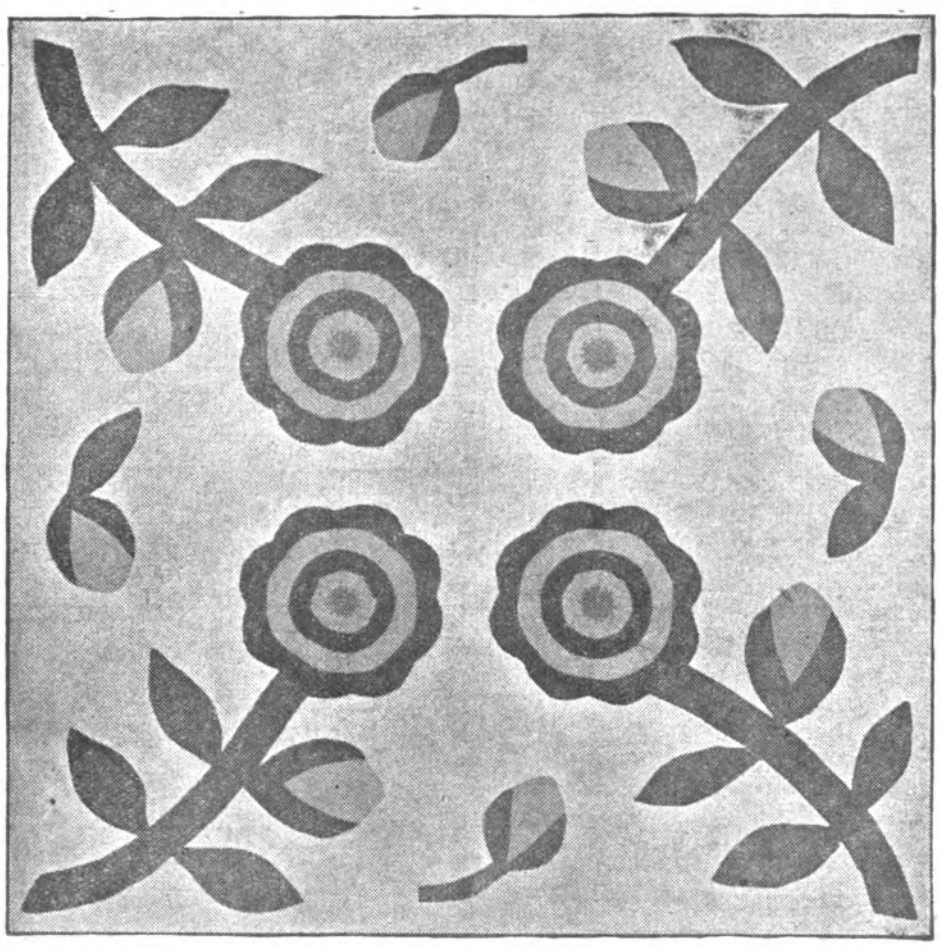
BEGINS acting within ten seconds. Safest and most dependable family remedy for Colds, Headaches and La Grippe.

Don't experiment—insist upon Hill's Cascara Bromide Quinine. World's standard Cold remedy for two generations.

Demand red box bearing Mr. Hill's portrait and signature. (203)

At All Druggists—30 Cents
W. H. HILL COMPANY, DETROIT

We Pay $7 a Day

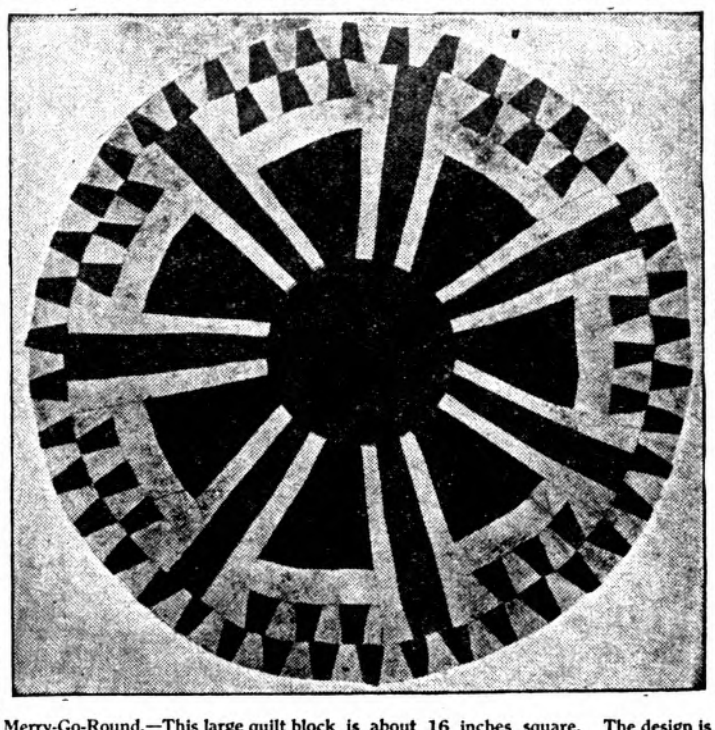


taking orders for Can't Clog Coal Oil Burner

Most perfect burner ever invented. Intense blue flame. Can't clog up. Turns any coal or wood stove into a gas stove. Heats oven to baking point in 10 minutes. Cheapest fuel known. Low priced. Sells everywhere. Nothing else like it. Not sold in stores. Write quick or sample.

PARKER MFG. CO., 817 Coal St., Dayton, Ohio

The Patchwork Prize Contest

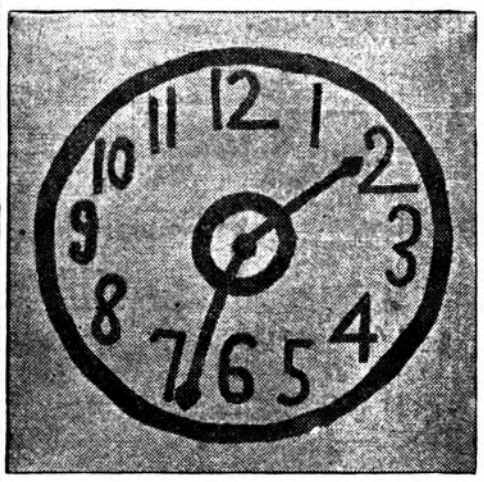


This quilt square which was submitted by Mrs. Nettie Vining, Ga., is a most striking and handsome design, it is also a pattern which makes a continuous or all-over design, due to the manner in which the rose sprays start from the corners. The completed squares measure 18 x 18 inches. Background, as usual, should be of bleached or unbleached cotton, roses have a scalloped edge of red, this is overlaid with pink, then red and pink again, with a yellow center. Stems and leaves of green, buds of pink.

Another List of Winners

The response to our recent offer was certainly great, both in quality and quantity, and was far beyond our expectations. The popularity of quilting seems to be as great if not greater than ever before. This is not confined to the country and smaller places but also exists in the cities, where women may be found in classes in the large department stores undertaking the creation of a modern applique quilt.

A beautiful basket design for a bedroom set will be shown in our next issue, as well as the lunch set designed by Mrs. Vernon, our First Prize Winner.

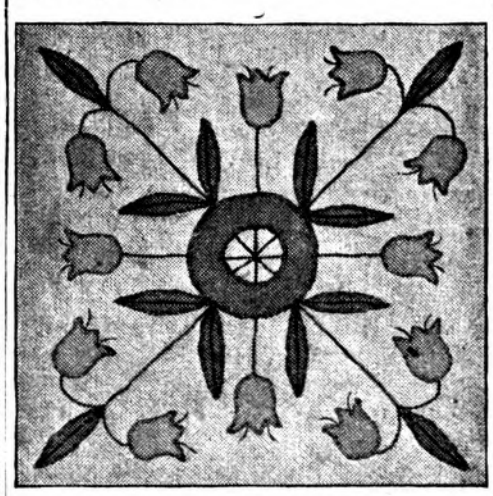


In quality much of the work received was elaborate and would compare favorably with the finest pieces of handwork. In quantity we were favored with several thousand designs, each of which had to be tagged and numbered. It was then several days' work to select the best and eliminate all duplicates; then these in turn had to be carefully considered and the prizes awarded. As letters had to be written in some cases and other delays considered it was impossible to publish our complete list last month, so we are happy to announce the following additional winners:

Merry-Go-Round.—This large quilt block is about 16 inches square. The design is pieced of red, white, blue and yellow, but it is a good pattern for using up effectively odd bits of material, if strongly contrasted. As shown, the center circle is of yellow surrounded by six spoke-like pieces of blue, between these is red set in with narrow strips of white. The edge is finished with two rows of blue and white, cut in tapering shapes, and pieced together as shown. Submitted by Miss Callie Brown, Miss.

Ind. Clara G. Fisher, Pa. Mrs. S. J. Spradlin, Tex. Bessie Stapleton, Tenn. Mrs. Wm. Stickles, Wisc. Mrs. Hulda E. Phillips, Ill. Mrs. Blanche I. Owensby, Okla. Mrs. M. E. Collins, Oregon.

Miss Edna R. Warzbach, Tex. Mrs. Henry Bursaw, Wisc. Mrs. W. J. Williams, Ala. Mrs. Alice Phillips, Tex. Bessie Liggett, Ind. Mrs. C. E. Heritage, Ohio. Mrs. S. A. Huskey, Tenn. Cora Okerson, Ill. Miss Mandie Sargent, Ala. Ida L. Southard, Mo. Agnes Shuler, Tex. Mrs. Jennie Williams, Ala. Mrs. J. J. Phillips, Colo. Mrs. Mabel Miller, N. Y. Mrs. M. E. Richardson, Ala.



Wheel of Time—Yellow background, with black figures. This interesting design is a very good example of both originality in design and fineness of workmanship. Size 15 x 15 inches. Submitted by Mrs. Rosa McVey, Iowa.

Special and Other Prize Winners

Mrs. Anna Walters, Iowa. Mrs. G. W. Searl, La. Hortense Green, Colo. Mrs. T. C. McInnis, Tex. Dollie Hicks, Nebr. Mrs. Ida Keller, Ohio. Mrs. Lottie Fields, Va. Mrs. T. C. Roetker, Ill. Mrs. Mary T. Work, Ill. Mrs. Della Byfield, Kans. Kathryn Hamer, Ohio. Mrs. F. A. Tichards, Va. Mrs. Ellen Scott, Ill. Mrs. Kallenberger, Calif. Mrs. H. W. Peterman, S. C. Mrs. Herman Grassel, Ill. Mrs. W. B. Walton, Tex. Mrs. E. P. Wheeler, Colo. Mrs. F. L. Kadlick, Kans. Mrs. Arthur Smith, Kans. Miss Eva M. Bell, Ky. Leona Hunter, N. Y. Marie Stromberger, Ill. Alice M. Coggins, N. C. Mrs. J. A. Underwood, Mo. Mrs. S. J. McElhannon, Ga. Mrs. Anna B. Weeder, Mich. Mrs. B. M. Dickey, Pa. Mrs. M. G. Henderson, Okla. Mrs. F. M. Littleton, N. Mex. Mrs. M. M. Waddell, Va. Mrs. Chas. Crossley, Pa. Mrs. Winnie Toothman,

It has occurred to us that many women would be glad to secure a book of the best of the beautiful designs which we have selected from those submitted. We have decided to publish such a book, giving illustrations, descriptions and suggestions as to colors for each design. It will not be sold, but given free as a premium. We will announce its issue as soon as published.

This beautiful design shows small bell-like blossoms of pink with green leaves, and band in the center. Stems and veins of leaves are outlined with black and all edges are finely buttonholed with black. Bleached or unbleached cloth can be used for background. Size 18 x 18 inches. Submitted by Mrs. Geo. W. Wright, Mo.

SAVE HALF

Yet Get a Brand New Oliver

This is a most remarkable typewriter offer, saving you half the usual price. A brand new Oliver, direct from the factory, now costs less than a rebuilt typewriter. Get the facts regarding our price reduction. And our liberal offer. Learn all about the famous Oliver and its superiorities. Over 950,000 sold.

Merely mail the coupon below. Learn how you can get the finest Oliver ever built at an amazing low price. Our offer includes

FREE TRIAL—EASY TERMS

Without sending a penny, you can have the Oliver for five days free trial and then pay for it like rent. You become your own salesman and save all the selling cost. You deal direct with the factory. Find out all about this astounding and liberal offer by mailing the coupon now.

NOW The Oliver Typewriter Company, 1602 Oliver Typewriter Building, Chicago.

Please send me details of your Special Price Reduction Offer.

Name.....

Street.....

City..... State.....

Reduced Prices

and THREE YEARS TO PAY for this beautiful

MEISTER PIANO

Eight exquisite styles to choose from and the one you select will be sent you on

30 DAYS FREE TRIAL—ALL FREIGHT PREPAID

A guaranteed saving of $100 to $150.

If you like the piano we will sell it to you on small monthly payments to suit your convenience as low as $8.00 per month. No cash deposit asked. No interest on payments. No extras of any kind. Stool free with piano. Write today for our catalog, illustrated in the natural colors of the wood. It's free. If you are interested in player-pianos send for free catalog. We have a fine selection. Rothschild & Co., Dept. 11-H, Chicago

WE TEACH COMMERCIAL ART

Properly Trained Artists Earn $100 a week and up Meyer Both College—a Department of the Meyer Both Company—offers you a different and practical training. If you like to draw, develop your talent. Study this practical course—taught by the largest and most widely known Commercial Art Organization in the field with 20 years' success—which each year produces and sells to advertisers in the United States and Canada over ten thousand commercial drawings. Who else could give you so wide an experience? Commercial Art is a business necessity—the demand for commercial artists is greater every year. It's a highly paid, intensely interesting profession, equally open to both men and women. Home study instruction. Get facts before you enroll in any school. Get our special booklet, "Your Opportunity"—for half the cost of mailing—4c in stamps.

MEYER BOTH COLLEGE of COMMERCIAL ART
Michigan Ave. at 20th St.
Dept. 36, CHICAGO, ILL.

LOOMS $9.90

AND UP. BIG MONEY IN WEAVING AT HOME.

No experience necessary to weave beautiful rugs, carpets, etc., on UNION LOOMS from rags and waste material. Home weaving is fascinating and highly profitable. Weavers are rushed with orders. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderfully low-priced, easily-operated looms.

UNION LOOM WORKS, 274 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

FREE Blue Bird WATER SET

Six fine shell glasses and full-sized pitcher, handsomely decorated. All given free for selling only 40 packs vegetable seeds at 10c per large pack. Sell easily. Earn Big Money on Premiums. Send no money. We trust you with seeds until sold.

American Seed Company, Box F-32, Lancaster, Pa.

3 Piece Toilet Set Free for selling only 8 boxes of our famous ROSEBUD at 25c a box; a home necessity. EASY TO SELL. WE TRUST YOU. Big catalogue sent with goods. Order today.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO., Dept. A, Woodsboro, Md.

Write to this firm.

WRIST WATCH GIVEN

Dandy Wrist Watch guaranteed 5 years given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10 cts. each. Gem Set Ring sparkling like $100.00 Diamond also given as big extra prize for promptness. Order 20, when sold send the $2.00 and choose wrist watch or other valuable prize according to big list sent with pictures. RAY ART CO., Dept. B 28, CHICAGO.

A WOMAN FLORIST

3 Hardy Roses 25c

On their own roots
ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER
Sent to any address postpaid; guaranteed to reach you in good growing condition.

GEM ROSE COLLECTION
Crimson Queen, rich velvety crimson.
Alexander Hill Gray, pure yellow.
Columbia, glowing pink.

SPECIAL BARGAINS
3 Carnations, the "Divine Flower," all colors, 25c
3 Choice Ferns - - 25c
3 Chrysanthemums, 25c
4 Beautiful Coleus, 25c
3 Flowering Cannas, 25c
2 Choice Dahlias - - - - - 25c
2 Choice Hardy Iris - - - - 25c
5 Lovely Gladioli - - - - - 25c
5 Superb Pansy Plants - - - 25c
8 Pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 25c
Any 5 Collections for $1. The Entire 11 Collections for $2. Postpaid.
Once a customer, always one. Catalog free.

MISS ELLA V BAINES, Box 117 SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

SEEDS Grand Trial Offer
$1.50 Samples for 10c

To introduce our seeds into a million homes we will mail these 24 Sample Packets Fresh, Tested Seeds for 10 cents. Money back if dissatisfied.

CABBAGE, New Glory, early, sure header, large.
CABBAGE, Danish Ball-Head, best winter sort.
CARROT, Perfect, Half-long, best table sort.
CELERY, Brittle Winter, best, crispest. Keeps well.
CUCUMBER, Emerald White Spine, great favorite.
LETTUCE, Cream Butter, tender, popular heads.
MUSKMELON, Sweetest Gem, best garden melon.
WATERMELON, Deposit Early, earliest, sweetest.
ONION, Prizetaker, weight 3 lbs., 1000 bus. per acre.
PARSLEY, Triple Curled, best, most ornamental.
PARSNIP, Improved Guernsey, white, sweet.
PEPPER, Crimson King, large, red, fine.
RADISH, White Icicle, best, early, long, tender.
SPINACH, Summer, fine for greens.
TOMATO, Greater Baltimore, best, large, smooth.
TURNIP, Yellow Rutabaga, sweet, long keeper.
ASTERS, Show mixed. PINKS, 50 Grand Sorts.
KOCHIA, Grand foliage. POPPIES, Showy Sorts.
MIGNONETTE, Sweet. ANNUALS, 500 Sorts.
WAVES OF GOLD. ORCHID SWEET PEAS.
Wholesale Prices. Book & Rebate Check Free.
DEPOSIT SEED CO., Deposit, N. Y.
10 Packets Grand Large Flowering Sweet Peas, 10c

Livingston's SEEDS
"TRUE BLUE"

Make better gardens. All are tested for purity and vitality. Have been giving satisfaction for over 50 years. Be sure and try our

5 FINE VEGETABLES, 10c
One large packet each of Bean, Beet, Lettuce, Radish and Tomato —postpaid. All are heavy yielding and exceptionally fine in quality. Try them.

Large CATALOG FREE
Gives helpful cultural directions and offers strictly high-grade seeds at fair prices. Write for your free copy to-day.
LIVINGSTON SEED CO.
Box 214 Columbus, Ohio

TREES & PLANTS THAT GROW
CATALOG FREE
Great Bargains, Standard Varieties, Best Quality, Low Prices.
Satisfaction or money refunded.
60 years in business proof of our responsibility. Write for catalog now.
PETER BOHLENDER & SONS
Spring Hill Nurseries
Box 114 Tippecanoe City (Miami County) Ohio

SPECIAL OFFER of TESTED SEEDS

If you write now for our 1922 Catalogue, we will send the famous HENDERSON Collection of seeds—one packet each of Ponderosa Tomato, Big Boston Lettuce, White Tipped Scarlet Radish, Henderson's Invincible Asters, Henderson's Brilliant Mixture Poppies, Giant Waved Spencer Sweet Peas.

HOW TO GET THEM
Simply state where you saw this advertisement, enclose ten cents for mailing the Catalogue, "Everything for the Garden," and the seeds will be sent without extra charge.
EMPTY ENVELOPE COUNTS FOR CASH
These tested seeds come in a coupon envelope which, emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order amounting to $1.00 or more. Don't delay; write at once.

1922 CATALOGUE NOW READY
Bigger and better than ever, the most beautiful and complete horticultural publication of the year, a book of 176 pages.
16 color pages. Over 1000 beautiful engravings showing actual results. A mine of valuable garden information. Send today for this helpful guide to a better garden and the special seed collection.

PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK CITY

2247 BEANS FROM 1

This is what C. H. Fuller, 30 Loomis St., Montpelier, Vt., grew from 1 of my 1200 to 1 Beans. One plant produced 358 pods. See his report in my Seed Book. It is a great Bean.

My Improved Stock is better than ever—grows strong and erect, branching freely, producing handsome well-filled pods up from the ground, which literally load the plant. Beans being pure white of the finest quality.

Plant after danger of frost only one Bean in a hill and they will mature a crop in from 70 to 80 days. The yield will surprise you. Packet 60 Beans 10c, 3 pkts. 25c.

Fancy Prolific Pickles—One of the choicest strains Cucumbers for pickles, also good for slicing. Very early, producing great quantities of fruit, bear all summer. Packet (over 100 seeds) Six Cents.

Giant Tomato—One of largest grown, vines very strong, will carry enormous weight of fruit, specimens often weighing 2 and 3 lbs. each, very solid, few seeds, crimson color. Pkt. (100 seeds) 5 cents.

27 Varieties Flower Seeds—Special Mixture for outdoor culture prepared specially for a gorgeous Flower Bed, of 20 square feet, wonderful colors. 27 kinds (over 3,000 seeds) Eight Cents.

Special Offer—I will mail one packet each, 1200 to 1 Bean, Giant Tomato, Fancy Prolific Pickles, 27 Varieties Flower Seeds, all 4 packets for 10c, or 3 packets of each for 25c.

1922 Seed Book free, 17 Novelties in colors, hundreds Best Vegetables and Flowers. Lowest Prices. Write today.

F. B. Mills, Seed Grower, Box 30, Rose Hill, N.Y.

GROW BUMPER CROPS

QUALITY yield comes only from quality seeds. Buckbee's "Full of Life" seeds are of highest quality—the best that money can buy. World-beating Prize Winners at all County and State Fairs.

Bumper Crop Collection Made to Build New Business

Radish—Earliest of All, worth 15c
Cabbage—Perfection worth 15c
Celery—Long Keeper worth 20c
Lettuce—Sensation worth 15c
Beet—Red King worth 15c
Tomato—Everbearing, worth 20c
10 Spring Flowering Bulbs, worth 25c—Full size packages

This Collection of World Beaters worth $1.25
Guaranteed to please. Write to-day; mention this paper.

SEND 10c to help pay postage and packing and receive this valuable Bumper Crop Collection of Seeds, postpaid, together with our big, instructive, beautiful Seed and Plant Book. Tells all about Buckbee's Famous "Full of Life" Seeds, Plants, Bulbs, etc.

H.W. BUCKBEE Rockford Seed Farms Farm 408 Rockford, Ill.

February Odds and Ends

FOR most of our readers February is sort of "betwixt and between." We do our chores night and morning, remark that "the back of winter is broken," wonder if the groundhog will see his shadow, sit back to rest a spell with the cord-wood cut and split. Perhaps our thoughts run to plans for the coming summer; roads none too good and the weather unsettled; even though February has only twenty-eight days, the time is likely to pass slowly. At no other time of the year does the farmer have so much time to "kill," and at no other season does he have more time for reading. The good wife adds the remark that "February is the worst month in the whole year for having the men folks everlastingly around the house where they get under foot and are a nuisance with their questions and advice!"

Cleaning Work Harness

Yes, February is a dull month, but it can be made to pass both quickly and profitably. For instance, there is sure to be repairing needed on the heavy harnesses. Why not get them down off the cobwebby pegs and give them a thorough overhauling and cleaning. Take one harness at a time, take it apart, and remove buckles and loops wherever possible. Unless you have a harness room with a work table (there are far too few of these on our farms), perhaps the machine shed or granary will give the most room. With a dampened sponge wipe off the dust and mud; do not have the sponge too wet or the leather will absorb water. Then rinse out your sponge, squeeze it almost dry, rub it on castile soap or saddle soap, and work it in the hand, squeezing it until the sponge is full of fine thick creamy lather. Take one strap at a time and rub until all traces of sweat stains and dirt are removed. Do this to each piece of harness in turn, leaving a little lather on. Then rinse out your sponge, make fresh lather as before, and work it well into the leather. Do this carefully and thoroughly, and put the parts in a moderately warm place to dry. While these parts are drying, clean and polish buckles, bits and other metal parts. By this time the leather parts will be partly dry. Rub them off with a dry cloth, and assemble. The saddle soap remaining in the leather will keep it soft and pliable for a long time. Some farmers do nothing further with it. Others oil their harness, and for this purpose nothing is better than a little neat's-foot oil. To oil harness, take a cloth moistened in oil and apply to the flesh side of the leather in long, light strokes. Do not soak the leather; two ounces will usually be all that you need to oil a whole harness. Hang newly-oiled harness in a warm, dry place for a day then rub off with a dry cloth. Occasional oiling throughout the season will be time well spent, and will counteract in a measure the ill effects of the sweat, dirt and barn fumes of ammonia which are unavoidable when harness is hung beside or behind each team in the barn.

In the Sugar Bush

In many regions the sugar bush, with its slush underfoot, its roaring fires, its sweet-smelling kettles and its raw spring winds, is just a memory—something we hear Gran'pa tell us about as we sit around the fireplace in the evening. We regret that it is so; no memory of pioneer days bears a richer tang of romance. But many are fortunate enough to have a grove of hard maples and no doubt there are a number of our readers who could spend an evening telling us about tapping trees and "sugaring off."

The sap season extends from late February through March, depending on the locality and the season. Trees are tapped with a ⅜-inch bit and spouts made of hollow elder sticks, or metal ones from the store, are driven in, one to each tree. In the old days tiny birch-bark buckets were used to catch the sap; now tin pails, covered to keep out rain and bits of bark, are used instead. Times change in everything, it seems. An average tree will yield for 10 to 12 gallons of sap, running from four to eight per cent. in sugar content. In small woodlots the sap is usually boiled down to syrup or sugar in the woods over open fires. This was the old-fashioned way; now we find more elaborate refining sheds with large vats and receiving tanks located in the best maple-sugar districts. Sap is slowly boiled until it weighs around 10 or 11 pounds to the gallon, when it is ready for syrup. The froth is skimmed off from time to time and, to keep it from boiling over, the piece of salt pork on a stick is still being poked into the bubbling liquid, just as it was in Gran'pa's time. When maple-sugar is desired, syrup is still poured upon the snow to test it, and when it makes a waxy mass (that the children relish now as then) it is "sugaring off" and ready to pour into cakes.

Odds and Ends

In many sections the hotbed is started before the end of February, but we have already given detailed instructions in the making of hotbeds and cold-frames. Besides, it is a bit late now to begin, as part of the work, such as digging pits and making compost heaps, should have been done in the fall before the ground froze.

On many farms the chickens are considered as the property of the "missus," and their care and management is her chore. Still, a bit of help in dull February may not be taken amiss. Perhaps there is the incubator to clean and repair, new trays to make, a lamp to fix. These are jobs for Dad and the boys and not for Mother. It seems only fair that all who help dispose of the fresh eggs at breakfast should take a hand in their production. Then, too, there is no time like early spring for getting the new roosters. They should be bought on merit alone from a poultryman who has made a record for both production and business integrity. They should be placed in the flock early to insure that their blood will be mingled with that of your own hens to the improvement of the offspring. Many farmers who know full well that "a sire is half the herd" overlook the value of a good rooster in the barnyard flock.

It is a bit early to speak of testing seed, whether for the garden or for the field. In most localities March is early enough. But it is not too early to think of the source of seed supply. "What will I need and where will I get it?" is a good question to ask yourself as you sit smoking your pipe by the fire in the evening. Don't wait until spring plowing starts before you give serious thought to your seed corn, seed grain, clover or garden seeds. Take your catalogues, seed circulars and lists of seed producers; list your needs, then write a few letters for latest quoted prices, etc. The time will be well spent, and you will have what you need on hand when the time comes.

Perhaps you will be planting some new trees in the orchard this spring? Maybe the orchard is to be enlarged, or new berry bushes are needed for the garden? What we have said about seed goes for the orchard and berry patch also. Decide what you will need, study your catalogues, and place your order early. The old saying that "the early bird gets the worm" does not apply to the spring robin only. It applies directly to the farmer who makes his wants known in time to have his order filled before the rush season, it lessens the danger of having shipments delayed until damaged by warm weather, it enables him to finish his planting before growth starts. For best results, it is a difficult matter to do the planting too early; the frost in the ground prevents it.

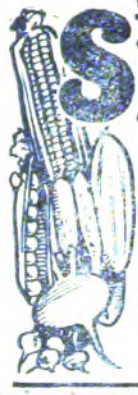
Starting an Asparagus Bed

Asparagus is always welcome on the farm table. We have never yet known a farm family to complain because it had too much asparagus to eat. From Gran'pa to Gran'ma right down to the "littlest one" the fondness for this tasty, wholesome and appetizing vegetable is never fully satisfied, it seems. For that reason, and because of the frequent inquiries received from readers of COMFORT on the subject, we offer these suggestions and instructions relative to asparagus culture.

Best Varieties and Best Soil

Seedsmen offer for sale a long list of varieties of asparagus, but in the main the difference between them is very slightly defined, and may be attributed to a large extent to environment and cultural methods. Market demand and district preference in a measure determine whether the white or the green varieties will be well received in any given region. For general use over a wide territory the standard varieties most popular are: Palmetto; Mammoth, several sorts including Columbian White; and Giants, of three kinds, Argenteuil, Reading and Bonvallet. Personal taste and preference have the final word in deciding the variety that shall be grown. If seed of any standard variety is purchased from a reputable seed house we are, at any rate, getting off to a good start.

Asparagus grows best and produces most succulent shoots when grown in fertile, well-drained soil, and thorough tilling is essential to success. A deep, rich sandy loam with an abundance of humus and underlain by a porous and friable subsoil is the ideal asparagus soil. Soil preparation consists of the application of well-rotted manure, deep plowing and repeated disking until a loose, well-worked seed-bed results.



Starting Plants from Seed

The asparagus bed may be started either from seed or with year-old roots purchased from the seedsman, but the former plan is somewhat preferable as it gives a wider selection of roots at a reduced price. In our discussion we will begin with the seed and grow into the crop.

"Buy good seed" is old advice—but it is good advice. To hasten germination it is a good plan to soak seed for a day or so in lukewarm water before planting, but be careful not to scald. Plant

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 37.)

SAMPLE OUR SEEDS

Guaranteed Fresh Tested Seeds Full of Life and Growing Power

PAKRO Seeds are the purest, strongest, freshest and most rigidly tested seeds money can buy. Absolute satisfaction or money back. To new customers we will mail three 10-cent packets of PAKRO earliest vegetables, Radish, Lettuce and Tomato for 10 cents. Write today for the PAKRO Garden Annual in four colors—a wonderful guide to better gardens—free.

American Seed & Seedtape Co.
70 Main St., Madison, N. J.

3 Glorious ROSES

Everblooming, Guaranteed True to Name. All bloom this summer. Mailed postpaid for..... 25c

Radiance—Intense pink
Alex. Hill Gray—Yellow, fine bud
Crimson Queen—Velvety crimson

5 Pkts. Flower Seeds
The following collection blooms from early summer to late fall: Aster, Petunia, Pansy, Phlox and Salvia. Generous pkts. Extra special value postpaid 10c.

I will also mail 5 packets of Daisy Seed (five colors) for 15c, or I will mail the above 3 Collections, the 3 Roses, the 5 pkts. of Flower Seeds and the 5 pkts. of Daisy Seed all for 40c.

COMPLETE NEW CATALOG
Lists 400 roses, all the newest and best. Dahlias, Ferns and everything for house and garden. Send for it.

MISS JESSIE M. GOOD, Box 324 Springfield, Ohio

"The Most Wonderful Tomato Ever Grown" That's what one of my customers says of Beebe's Early Prolific. It is a wonderful bearer, beginning to bloom when only 6 or 8 inches high. Fruit is as large as any of the early varieties, almost perfectly smooth and of superb quality. Very few seeds, making them excellent for slicing. Splendid keepers and good for shipping. Bear from 10 days to 2 weeks before any other and continue to bear until frost. Stand hot, dry weather better than any other sorts. You will make no mistake by planting some of these. Price 20c per packet. Write for Catalog of trees and seeds.

Sonderegger Nurseries & Seed House
81 Court Street, Beatrice, Neb. [22]

Wonderful BARGAINS in Fruits Shrubs and Ornamental TREES

100 Strawberry Plants For $1

My direct-from-grower, down to bedrock prices save you 50 per cent. Never before have we offered such wonderful bargains, such as 20 Red or Black Raspberries, $1. 12 Blackberries, $1. 20 Gladioli Bulbs, assorted, $1. 25 Asparagus, $1. 12 Apple Trees 4 to 5 ft., $2.95. Many others. Big catalog shows fruits and ornamentals in actual colors. A detail planting plans. Free.

EARL FERRIS NURSERY CO.
690 Bridge St. HAMPTON, IOWA

Free for Testing

A pair of mated Everbearing Strawberry Plants FREE if you will report your success with them. Will bear loads of big red strawberries from June to November of same year plants are set. We have been breeding Everbearing strawberries for the past 12 years and have counted 480 berries, blossoms and buds on a single plant in September. A postal will bring the plants and 5 kernels of Burbank's new Golden Pop Corn. Also our colored catalogue of "Blizzard Belt" Products with seed for a Silk Leaf Poppy Garter thrown in for good measure. Send 10 cents for mailing expense or not as you please. Write today and get acquainted with our Hardy "Blizzard Belt" Seeds, Trees and Plants. THE GARDNER NURSERY CO., Nurserymen and Seedsmen, Box 507, Osage, Iowa.

Five Dozen genuine Progressive Everbearing Strawberry plants mailed at proper planting time for $1.00 if ordered now direct from this advertisement.

SEEDS Grown by a Woman

Everybody is delighted with my New Early June Asters. Largest, earliest and best. Continuous bloomers.

For 10c I will send 5 liberal packages, white, pink, lavender, crimson and purple. No better seeds grown.

Guaranteed to Please

Order today, send 10c to help pay postage and packing and receive the 5 new varieties of asters and my bargain Seed Book.

Charlotte M. Haines
Dept. 103, Rockford, Illinois.

Strawberries Grown the Kellogg Way
Yield BIG Profits

Our Free Book tells how. Written by the Strawberry King. Gives his secrets for growing the Big Crops of Fancy Strawberries that won him fame and fortune. Worth its weight in gold. Costs nothing—It's FREE.

R. M. KELLOGG CO.
Box 221 Three Rivers, Mich.

125 Seeds FREE

To build new business we will send you a trial package of this Wonderful New Tomato and our big 160-page Seed and Nursery Catalog. Tells how to plan, plant and care for gardens, and the prices are fewer than ever. Condon's Seeds yield abundantly the finest Fruits, Flowers and Vegetables. Write—today.

CONDON BROS., SEEDSMEN
Rock River Valley Seed Farm
Box 49 Rockford, Illinois

STRAWBERRY PLANTS

$3.50 Per Thousand. Our strong, healthy, tremendous bearing plants guarantee big crops of luscious berries. Best varieties for all kinds of soils. Full line of Raspberries, Blackberries, Currants and Asparagus. Large stock of extra fine Grape plants. GREATLY REDUCED PRICES. Our customers are making up to $1200 per acre from small fruits. New color catalog free. Write today.

BRIDGMAN NURSERY CO., Box 17, BRIDGMAN, MICH.

The Earliest Tomato Is John Baer. Way ahead of all others in earliness.

To introduce our hardy Northern Grown Seeds, will send the following 10 pkts. for 10c: John Baer Tomato, 1200 to 1 Beans, Beet, Carrot, Cucumber, Lettuce, Onion, Parsnip, Radish and Superb Asters. Due Bill for 10c with every order. Money back if not satisfied. Big catalog of Seed Bargains free. Send today. J. W. JUNG SEED CO., Station K, RANDOLPH, WIS

STRAWBERRY PLANTS THAT GROW

Our 32 years' experience assures you the strong, healthy, heavy-rooted plants that produce biggest, surest crops. (Profits $500 to $1500 per acre). Raspberries, blackberries, etc., of same high quality. Send for beautiful colored catalog free. Write today.

C. E. WHITTEN & SON, Box 26, Bridgman, Mich.

PROTECT YOUR HOME and Earnings

With this 25 Cal. regulation blue steel AUTOMATIC REVOLVER $9.75
Regular Price $22.50
OUR PRICE
While they last

Keep one of these safety brand new revolvers in your home and be fully protected against burglars, thieves and hold up men. It's a terrible fright to wake up in the night—hear noises downstairs or in the next room—and realize your neglect has left you wholly UNPROTECTED.

Buy one of these revolvers and be always fully protected. Handsome blue steel, gun-metal finish. HAS DOUBLE SAFETY and is practically "fool-proof" against accidents. Perfect grip, accurate aim. Rifled barrel, hard rubber, checkered grips, safety lever. Holds 7 cartridges. Small, compact, lies flat and will not bulge out pocket. Shoots the Standard Auto Cartridges.

SEND NO MONEY

Order today. Just send your name and address and say which Automatic you want.

No 487 is 25-calibre, 7-shot, as illustrated, Regular price $22.50. Our price $9.75
No. 3587. Same style as above, only 32-calibre. 7 shots. Regular price $25.00. Our price only $11.00
No. 887, is larger size, 32-calibre, military model, automatic 10-shot, extra magazine FREE. Regular price $25.00. Our special price only $12.00
No. 4587, 25-calibre genuine Mauser. The only 25-calibre automatic that shoots 10 shots. Blue steel finish. Value $35. Our price only $14.50
No. 5087, 32-calibre genuine Mauser. Shoots 9 shots. Blue steel finish. Value $40. Our price only $15.50
No. 4087 30-calibre, genuine imported Luger. Don't be misled by a gun that looks like a Luger automatic. We are selling this wonderful world-famed gun at such ridiculously low prices because of our ability to purchase in quantities. The Luger shoots 9 shots. Has automatic magazine ejector. It is the latest model with safety attachment. Regular value up to $90. Our special price, while they last, only $28.50

GUARANTEED BRAND NEW GOODS

Don't wait. Absolute satisfaction guaranteed after examination, or money back. Order this bargain today. Write clearly your name, address and the number of the automatic you want to order. Send no cash. We ship by return mail. Pay Postman on arrival our price, plus postage. Send for free catalog.

Paramount Trading Co.
34 West 28th St., New York City

I Want Men!

I want 500 men—regardless of age and education—to qualify at once for interesting work at

$40 to $100 a Week

HENRY J. RAHE

Or to open garages and make $10,000 to $25,000 a year. Three Billion Dollars will be invested in motor cars this year. Thousands of Rahe-trained mechanics needed! Get into this big-money business NOW!

I Will Pay Your Railroad Fare to Chicago, Cincinnati or Kansas City

I'll pay your fare to my school nearest your home. Then a short course in my wonderful shops, under master instructors—and you'll be ready for REAL MONEY. No "book learning" needed. No tools to buy.

Special Low Rate—7-Day Guarantee

I've always given the BEST course for the LOWEST price. Now, with three schools, I can cut the price lower and pay your fare, too. And if not convinced after a week that I can make you a GOOD mechanic, withdraw from school and the week costs you NOTHING. Write today for Free Book and PROOF that easy Rahe training will get you out of the rut in a few weeks.—HENRY J. RAHE.

Address Dept. 2082 of My Nearest School

RAHE AUTO & TRACTOR SCHOOLS
CHICAGO Mich. Bl & Ontario St. | CINCINNATI 9th & Walnut Sts. | KANSAS CITY 22nd & Oak Sts.

INNER TUBE FREE
6,000 Miles Guaranteed
SEND NO MONEY

Here is the greatest tire offer ever made. Never before such low prices. Brand new Inner Tube given Free with every one of our special reconstructed tires guaranteed for 6,000 miles. We ship at once on approval. Pay only when convinced.

Less Than ½ Price

28x3	$6.40	34x4	$9.95
30x3	6.75	32x4½	10.10
30x3½	6.95	34x4½	10.95
32x3½	7.25	35x4½	11.25
31x4	8.25	36x4½	11.75
32x4	8.95	35x5	12.10
33x4	9.25	37x5	12.25

Write Today No money now—just your name and number of tires wanted. Pay on arrival. Examine and judge for yourself. If not satisfied return at our expense and your money immediately refunded. Be sure to state size and whether clincher or straight side. Don't delay—send now. Immediate shipment.

Seven Ply Tire Co., 115 E. 23th St., Dept. 315, Chicago

U.S. Army Munson Last Shoe

Made of pliable Chrome Leather. Broad, Solid Oak Leather Heels, Double Thick Soles. Dirt and Water Proof.

$2.85 Bellows Tongue. Sizes 5½ to 12.

Guarantee

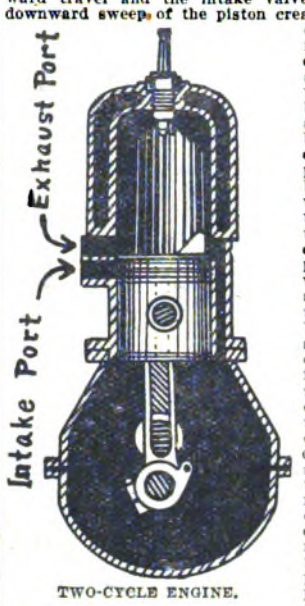
You must be entirely satisfied or we will refund your money.

Pay Postman

Send no money. Just send your name, address and size. Your shoes will be sent by return mail. Pay postman $2.85 and postage on arrival.

CIVILIAN ARMY & NAVY SHOE CO.
Dept. 359, 461 8th Ave., New York.

Automobile and Gas Engine Helps

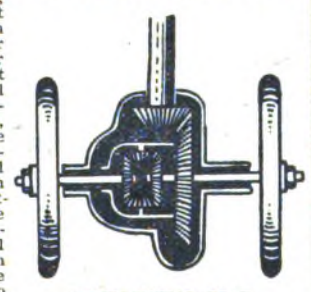


Questions relating to gasolene engines and automobiles, by our subscribers, addressed to COMFORT Auto Dept., Augusta, Maine, will be answered by our expert, free, in the columns of this department. Full name and address is required, but initials only will be printed. That we may intelligently diagnose your trouble please state the year in which your car was made.

Answers to Correspondents

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN TWO- AND FOUR-CYCLE ENGINES.—Kindly explain the meaning of "two cycle" and "four cycle" as applied to gasolene engines, and describe the difference in them.

MRS. A. R. S., Montague, Calif.



A.—Practically all present-day gasolene internal combustion motors, except small marine engines, are of the four-stroke cycle type. During the pioneer days a few two-stroke cycle motors appeared on the market but results were not sufficiently satisfactory to warrant development for general purposes. As you probably know, there is a piston in each cylinder which travels up and down the cylinder bore. You also probably are aware that each cylinder has at least two valves, one termed the intake and the other the exhaust. These valves are mechanically opened and closed and timed by gears so that they operate at the right time to accomplish certain results. To gain an understanding of the four-stroke cycle, more commonly called four cycle, consider that the piston has reached the top of its upward travel and the intake valve has opened. The downward sweep of the piston creates a vacuum which draws a combustible mixture from the carburetor. As above stated, the intake valve is open, thereby opening the passage so that gas can be drawn from the carburetor. When the piston reached the bottom of its downward stroke, the intake valve closes, thereby sealing the cylinder tightly. The piston travels upward on its next stroke and pushes the gas ahead of it. You will now understand that the piston compresses the gas into little space at the top of the cylinder. When the piston reaches the top of its upward or compression stroke, a spark takes place at the plug and ignites the tightly-compressed gas. A condition which might be compared to an explosion takes place and forces the piston down. This is the third or power stroke. When the piston completes its power stroke the exhaust valve opens and the next stroke of the piston, which is upward, pushes the burned gases out of the cylinder. The separate strokes in the cycle are suction, compression, power and exhaust. The two-cycle motor has approximately the same operating principle as described above with the exception that the work is accomplished in two strokes of the piston instead of four. The design of this type of motor is such that the upward stroke of the piston draws the combustible mixture into the crankcase and also compresses at the same time the charge of gas that was taken into a crankcase on a previous stroke. Bear in mind that on a single stroke the piston has drawn in a mixture and also compressed one. At the top of the upward stroke a spark ignites the tightly-compressed gas in the same manner as in the four-cycle type. At this point the piston is pushed down by the force of the expanding gas and delivers its power. At the same time, however, the downward sweep of the piston compresses the charge of gas in the crankcase. As the piston nears the bottom of its downward stroke it uncovers ports in the cylinder wall so that the burned gases can get away. At the same time the gas that has been compressed in the crankcase is allowed to enter the cylinder. It is common practice to use a deflector on top of the piston so as to direct the new charge to the top of the cylinder and in this manner crowd out the burned gas. It is now probably clear that the downward stroke has taken care of the power and exhaust and that in two strokes this type of motor has accomplished what the other type required two additional strokes for the same result.

TWO-CYCLE ENGINE.

FUNCTION OF DIFFERENTIAL.—Please explain why one rear wheel of an automobile will sometimes turn and the other one stand still in a slippery place. I have 1919 Stevens Six. Can I change the timing gear without taking the motor from the frame? And if I buy a new timing gear will it be marked like the one that came with the car? E. H. D., Huchinson, Ky.

A.—The differential incorporated in the rear axle permits one rear wheel to travel faster than the other or entirely independent of the other if required. The working principle of the differential has been fully explained in an earlier issue of COMFORT but for your benefit I am printing the accompanying cut from which you should be able to grasp a knowledge of the operation. A large bevel driving gear is attached to the differential housing and is independent of the shafts which drive the rear wheels. At the inner end of each axle shaft is attached a small bevel gear. The differential housing, sometimes termed the casing or drum, carries several bevel pinions which mesh with the gears attached to the axle shafts. Let us assume that one wheel is jacked free from the ground and the power is applied to the axle. Reference to the simple sketch will undoubtedly permit you to understand that it is possible for the small pinions to run around on their axles and drive the free wheel while the one on the ground will remain stationary. The studs which support the small pinions are carried by the differential casing and since the large bevel gear is attached to this casing, it will be clear that the studs, pinions, casing and large bevel gear must turn forward and in this manner the driving action is applied to the wheel offering the least resistance. When both wheels are on the ground and offer about the same resistance, the small pinions remain stationary and form a lock between the bevel gears attached to the axle shafts. In this manner both wheels are caused to turn forward at the same speed. However, just as soon as one wheel offers a greater driving resistance than the other the small pinions revolve on their axles and apply the drive to the wheel offering the least resistance. This is the reason a wheel on ice or in mud will spin around while the other wheel on dry ground will remain stationary. I have never had occasion to do any repair work on your make of car but I venture to state that the changing of timing gears does not necessitate the removal of the motor. Usually it is necessary to remove the radiator and then take off a cover from the front end of motor. I believe you will find timing instructions in your instruction book or if such is not the case a letter addressed to the car manufacturer will bring complete instructions for handling this class of work.

DIFFERENTIAL GEAR.

DRY CELLS UNSATISFACTORY SUBSTITUTE FOR STORAGE BATTERY.—I have a 1919 model Maxwell car with twelve-volt storage battery to furnish current for the ignition, lights and starter. Would it be possible to use dry cells instead of storage battery? Would they run the starter and lights? H. M. B., Oildale, Calif.

A.—Dry cells are satisfactory when used for intermittent service only. About eight dry cells would supply current for ignition for a short time while you were having the storage battery repaired or recharged but they would not furnish current for lights and starter. You could not do away with the storage battery and use dry cells all the time.

TRANSFORMER FOR FORD CAR.—I want to know how to wire my Ford car so to make the lights as bright when running in high gear as they are when running in low, and yet not affect the power of the engine. I mean without batteries and just using the magneto.

A. P., Weslaco, Texas.

A.—You should be able to purchase a transformer arrangement from an accessory store in your vicinity. Usually six-volt headlight bulbs are used in connection with this device. If you have a mail-order catalogue in your possession and will turn to the section allotted to accessories for Ford cars you will find listed a socket which will accomplish the result you desire.

SELECTING AN AUTO-TRUCK.—I intend to buy an auto-truck and would like your advice as to size suited to my use. My idea is that a two-and-a-half-ton truck is what I need for hauling hogsheads of tobacco from factory about a mile to warehouse, also to truck tomatoes from river wharf to canning factory. But at times I may use truck for other hauling. Could Ford one-ton truck be converted into one-and-one-half-ton truck by using larger springs? Does Ford make a two-ton truck? Can truck be bought with self-starter? If I buy direct from factory does local agent get commission on sale, or do I get benefit of factory price?

J. B. S., Henderson, Ky.

A.—In the arriving at a decision as to the proper class of truck to purchase you should not take into consideration maximum loads you might be called upon to haul but endeavor if possible to figure out what the average load will be. You state that in your opinion a two-and-one-half-ton job will be about right. If your average load will be two and one-half tons then you are justified in purchasing a truck of that capacity. However, if you will only be called upon to haul two-and-one-half-ton loads occasionally and at other times will carry an average of a ton then the purchase of a two-and-one-half-ton truck would be an unprofitable investment. It would be much better for you to purchase a truck rated at a ton to one and a half tons. When called upon to haul two and one-half tons you could divide the loads and with a speedy smaller truck you could make approximately the same time and at a much smaller operating cost. I understand from your letter that the hauls for the most part will be short ones, and this would indicate that the truck would be standing a great portion of the time. A high-price truck is an expensive proposition unless you can keep it moving and for this reason I believe it would be much better to invest in a smaller truck, possibly of the ton to ton and one-half class. I do not believe the Ford people would approve of your increasing the carrying capacity of their truck. I do not know of any two-ton truck manufactured by the Ford Company. There are numerous trucks on the market fitted with starters, lights, etc. I am unable to advise you regarding the commission proposition. If you are interested in a certain type of truck and cannot locate a dealer, I would suggest writing direct to the manufacturer. You will then be advised where the dealer for your territory is located or will give you a price for direct delivery from the factory.

CHANGING TRANSMISSION BANDS OF FORD.—What is the best way to change transmission bands of 1919 model Ford car? If car is going in reverse can the clutch be let in to back faster the same as in going ahead, without injuring the gear.

S. G. N., Highland Springs, Va.

A.—The removal of the bands on your make of car necessitates the removal of the upper half of the transmission case. The lining is riveted to the bands. The best method is to obtain a form that is the same shape as the band. Be careful that the lining takes the shape of the band and does not take a straight line from rivet to rivet. Regarding the operation question, I believe you would stall the motor were you to follow out the plan outlined. You could not engage high and reverse speeds at the same time. Allowing the clutch to drop in would engage the high speed.

Rain Proofing the Top

The formula given below is said to be very good for waterproofing top material:

One pint turpentine asphaltum, one pint best Japan, one-half pint good linseed oil. If necessary thin with turpentine or gasolene. Apply as sparingly as possible so that it will not soak through the material and stain the under side.

Answers to Last Month's Quiz

1. The reason that you do not feel the current when bridging the terminals of a storage battery is due to the fact that the voltage of the current is very low. Some batteries are rated at six volts while others are of 12 volts. The snapping of sparks is the result of touching a terminal of the battery with the pliers and then losing contact. The current is made to arc in this manner and is not the result of the current jumping a gap to complete a circuit through the pliers. As an illustration of the effect created by current voltage, consider the dry cell. No one takes any care in the handling of this cell as he has learned that no shock will result regardless of the terminals touched. However, let this current from the dry cell be passed through a coil and it will increase in voltage to a point where it will contract the muscles of the average person to a point where he is helpless to let go until the current is shut off or reduced in voltage. It is the pressure or voltage of the current that one feels and without outside aid it is a feature lacking in the storage battery and is the reason that no shock is experienced.

2. When a manufacturer advertises his motor as 50 horse-power he is stating the exact power which has been determined through tests. However, were you to apply for license and be taxed for only 24 horse-power, it is due to the fact that the state computes horse-power by the N. A. C. C. and S. A. E. formula. This rule takes into consideration a piston travel of 1,000 feet per minute and is as follows: the square of the bore in inches multiplied by the number of cylinders and the product divided by the constant 2.5.

3. If the motor misses when running idle you can readily determine if the condition is due to worn intake valve guides by raising the hood and squirt in gasolene at the top of the guides. If the engine commences to fire evenly it is evident that the guides are worn sufficiently to allow auxiliary air to dilute the mixture to such an extent as to render it non-combustible. The idea involved is that instead of drawing air down the worn guide, gasolene was taken in and consequently the cylinder commenced to hit. Naturally, after taking in all the gasolene around the guide, auxiliary air will again be drawn in and the cylinder will misfire as before.

4. The only correct way to determine the distance that your car will travel on a gallon of gasolene is to conduct a special test. Drain all gasolene from the carburetor and disconnect the gasolene line. Attach a tank that will hold a gallon on your windshield and connect it with a rubber hose to the carburetor. Pour in a gallon of gasolene and then start the motor. Take notice of the speedometer reading and drive your car on a straightaway and at a speed of about 25 miles per hour until the motor dies for lack of fuel. Again take notice of the speedometer reading, and the remainder obtained by subtracting the first reading from the second reading is the exact mileage your car will travel to the gallon of gasolene. The reason you do not obtain this mileage as an average for everyday driving is due to the fact that a number of stops and starts are made, and low and second gears used frequently, the car allowed to stand with motor running, etc.

5. When in doubt as to whether or not there is ice in the cooling system of the car, before starting make certain that the pump is free. If ice forms in the pump and the motor is started there is certain to be shearing off of pins and keys, etc. Many cases of overheating during cold weather can be attributed to a pump rendered inoperative by freezing.

Auto Owners WANTED!

To introduce the best automobile tires in the world. Made under our new and exclusive Internal Hydraulic Expansion Process that eliminates Blow-Out—Stone-Bruise—Rim-Cut and enables us to sell our tires under a

10,000 MILE GUARANTEE

We want an agent in every community to use and introduce these wonderful tires at our astonishingly low prices to all motor car owners.

Write for booklet fully describing this new process and explaining our amazing introductory offer to owner agents.

Hydro-United Tire Co.
Dept. 167, Chicago, San Francisco, Pottstown, Pa.

2 Tires for $11.25
FREE Tube with Each Tire

Most sensational tire offer of the year! Two tires for less than the usual cost of one—and a free tube with each tire! This is a special lot—all standard makes—selected for record-breaking sale. No double treads or sewed tires. Our big volume means best tire values! Thousands of steady customers everywhere are getting full mileage out of these slightly used tires and you, too, can get

8000 Miles

Size	1 Tire	2 Tires	Size	1 Tire	2 Tires
30 x 3	$ 7.00	$11.25	32 x 4½	$13.50	$22.95
30 x 3½	7.95	13.65	33 x 4½	13.95	23.45
32 x 3½	9.00	15.45	34 x 4½	14.45	23.90
31 x 4	10.00	16.90	35 x 4½	14.95	24.45
32 x 4	11.50	19.75	36 x 4½	15.45	25.45
33 x 4	12.25	20.90	35 x 5	15.90	26.15
34 x 4	13.25	22.48	37 x 5	16.45	26.55

SEND NO MONEY! Shipment C. O. D. Express or Parcel Post. Examine tires on arrival and if not fully satisfied return same at our expense and your money will be promptly refunded, including shipping charges. State whether Straight Side or Clincher. DON'T DELAY! ORDER NOW!

ALBANY TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY
2721 Roosevelt Road Dept. 308, Chicago, Illinois

STANDARD TIRES LESS THAN ½ Price

Send No Money

Don't miss this chance to cut your tire cost in two and get a reliner with each tire FREE. We ship at once on approval standard Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone, Mason and other adjusted tires in excellent condition and Your Money Back if you don't like them. They can readily be guaranteed for 6,000 miles. So sure are we you will like these tires that we request no deposit in advance. These are not sewed together tires known as the double tread and reconstructed tires.

SEE THESE LOW PRICES

Sizes	Tires	Tubes	Sizes	Tires	Tubes
28x3	$4.95	$1.25	34x4	$8.15	$2.35
30x3	4.75	1.35	32x4½	8.95	2.50
30x3½	5.75	1.45	34x4½	9.15	2.65
32x3½	6.45	1.60	35x4½	9.25	2.75
31x4	7.45	1.75	36x4½	9.50	2.95
32x4	7.50	2.10	35x5	9.75	3.10
33x4	7.85	2.25	37x5	9.95	3.25

Remember, a reliner Free with each tire. When cash is sent with order 5 per cent discount allowed. Examine—Judge for yourself. If not satisfied, return goods at our expense. Specify straight side, clincher, non-skid or plain wanted.

CLEVELAND TIRE AND RUBBER CO.
3154 Michigan Avenue Chicago, Illinois

12 Months to Pay

Enjoy your 1922 "Ranger" at once. Earn money for the small monthly payments on Our Easy Payment Plan. Parents often advance first small payment to help their boys along. FACTORY TO RIDER wholesale prices. Three big model factories. 44 Styles, colors and sizes in our famous Ranger line. DELIVERED FREE, express prepaid. FOR 30 DAYS TRIAL. Select bicycle and terms that suit—cash or easy payments.

Tires lamps, horns, wheels, parts and equipment, at half retail prices.

SEND NO MONEY—Simply write today for big FREE Ranger Catalog and marvelous prices and terms.

Mead Cycle Company Dept. L-3 Chicago Special Offer to Rider Agents

Make Your Bike a Motorcycle

The low cost Shaw Attachment fits any bicycle. Easily put on. No special tools or knowledge necessary. Write at once for Free Book, also about Shaw Motorbicycle, a complete power bike at big saving.

SHAW MANUFACTURING CO.
Dept. 32, Galesburg, Kansas

We Pay $8 a Day

taking orders for Insyde Tyres—inner armor for automobile tires. Positively prevent punctures and blowouts. Guaranteed to give double tire mileage.

We Want 2000 Representatives

Easy to get orders. Every auto owner a prospect. Old worn-out casings will give three to five thousand miles more service. Use over and over again. Demand enormous. Write quick and get started.

AMERICAN ACCESSORIES CO., B 1823 Cincinnati, O.

Electrical Book

I will send a valuable Electrical Book FREE to anyone who is ambitious to earn $12 to $30 a day as an Electrical Expert. Big jobs are waiting for trained men and you can qualify in your spare time to fill one. Your success is guaranteed. Write today. CHIEF ENGINEER.

Free

Dept. 382, 2150 Lawrence Avenue, Chicago

Thrifty Housewives Preserve Eggs

HOUSEWIVES know that eggs are the most costly part of cakes, pies and puddings. Don't think, though, that the high prices of eggs should keep you from having such luxuries in winter.

Women who use RUTLAND Egg Preserver serve all kinds of delicious and nourishing egg desserts in winter—at lowest cost. In spring, when eggs are low, they store them away for the winter in RUTLAND Egg Preserver. It's real economy!

The Government recommends preserving eggs in water glass. RUTLAND Egg Preserver, the perfected water glass, should be used to obtain best results. It is absolutely DEPENDABLE. A pint of RUTLAND preserves 8 dozen eggs and a quart, 17 to 20 dozen. Prepare the full solution and put the eggs in it from time to time as you get them.

RUTLAND Egg Preserver comes in pint, quart and gallon airtight cans. Sold at general stores, drug stores and poultry supply houses. If you can't get RUTLAND Egg Preserver, send us your dealer's name and we will see that you are quickly supplied.

Rutland Fire Clay Co., Rutland, Vt.

$13.95 Buys 140 Egg-Champion Belle City Incubator

Hot-Water, Copper Tank, Double Walls Fibre Board, Self-Regulated Safety Lamp, Deep Nursery. With $7.95 Hot-Water 140-Chick Brooder — Both for only $19.95

Express Prepaid

Over 911,000 Users

East of Rockies and allowed to points West

With this Guaranteed Hatching Outfit and my Guide Book for setting up and operating, your success is assured. Save time—Order now—Share in my $1000 in Prizes

Or write for Free Poultry Book, "Hatching Facts." Jim Rohan, Pres.

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 136 Racine, Wis.

150 EGG CHICK Incubator and Brooder made of California Redwood. Incubator covered with asbestos and galvanized iron, triple walls, nursery, copper tanks in incubator and brooder. 30 days' trial—money back if not O. K. FREE Catalog.

FREIGHT PAID East of the Rockies

Both for $19.75

280 EGG INCUBATOR AND BROODER $28.75

Ironclad Incubator Co. Box 21, Racine, Wis.

BROODER

For $4.96, including heater, you can build the simplest, most efficient, and most satisfactory brooder ever made. Wind-proof; fire-proof; rat-proof; fool-proof. Can be built by anyone in an hour, with saw and hammer. Plans 10c.

$4.96

I. PUTNAM, Route 276-B, ELMIRA, N. Y.

Baby Chicks

NEW LOW PRICES SEASON 1922

MILLER BABY CHICKS ARE BRED FOR HEAVY EGG PRODUCTION

Customers report pullets lay all winter. 20 varieties to select from. 1,000,000 chicks via prepaid parcel post safe delivery guaranteed. Pleased customers in every state. 19th season. Catalog FREE.

MILLER POULTRY FARMS Box 808 LANCASTER, MO.

Get My Reduced Prices on OLD TRUSTY

Find out how much I can save you on Old Trusty Incubators and Brooders. Nearly a million owners.

Quick shipment from factory at Clay Center, Neb., or warehouse at St. Joseph, Mo. Mail a postal or letter today.

H. H. JOHNSON, "Incubator Man" Clay Center, Neb.

We Pay Freight

130-Egg Incubator and Brooder Freight Paid East of Rockies Both $17.75

Made of California Redwood. Hot water; double walls; copper tank; best construction. Write for free catalog.

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Box 20 Racine, Wis.

Mankato Incubator Direct to user at lowest price. Made by experts of 28 years experience. Has triple walls, best material, hot water, copper tank, large oil tank—one filling to hatch, self regulator, safety lamp, double heating system, etc., safe, simple, set up ready to use. Big book and catalog free.

Freight Prepaid

Mankato Incubator Co., Box 748, Mankato, Minn.

Free—Conkey's Poultry Book

80 pages chock full of information about the feeding and rearing of chicks, culling of hens, etc. Tells how to keep chickens healthy and how to make them pay. Whether a beginner or a professional, Conkey's Book is worth dollars to you. Sent for 6 cents in stamps to pay postage.

THE G. E. CONKEY CO. 6545 Broadway, Cleveland, Ohio

BABY CHICKS

We furnish Pure Bred Chicks of the finest quality from high egg-producing stock. Flocks built directly from laying contest winners. We have seventeen breeds. Write for our free illustrated catalogue and price list.

J. W. OSSEGE HATCHERY, Dept. 43 Glendorf, Ohio

POULTRY AND PIGEONS FOR PROFIT

Foy's big book—an Encyclopedia of Poultry information. Many colored plates. Written by a man who knows. Low prices on Incubators, Brooders, Baby Chicks, Fowls and Eggs for Hatching. Write today. Sent for 5 cents.

FRANK FOY, BOX 6, CLINTON, IOWA.

64 BREEDS Most Profitable chickens, ducks, turkeys and geese. Choice, pure-bred, northern raised. Fowls, eggs, incubators at reduced prices. America's great poultry farm. 29th year. Valuable new 100-page book & catalog free.

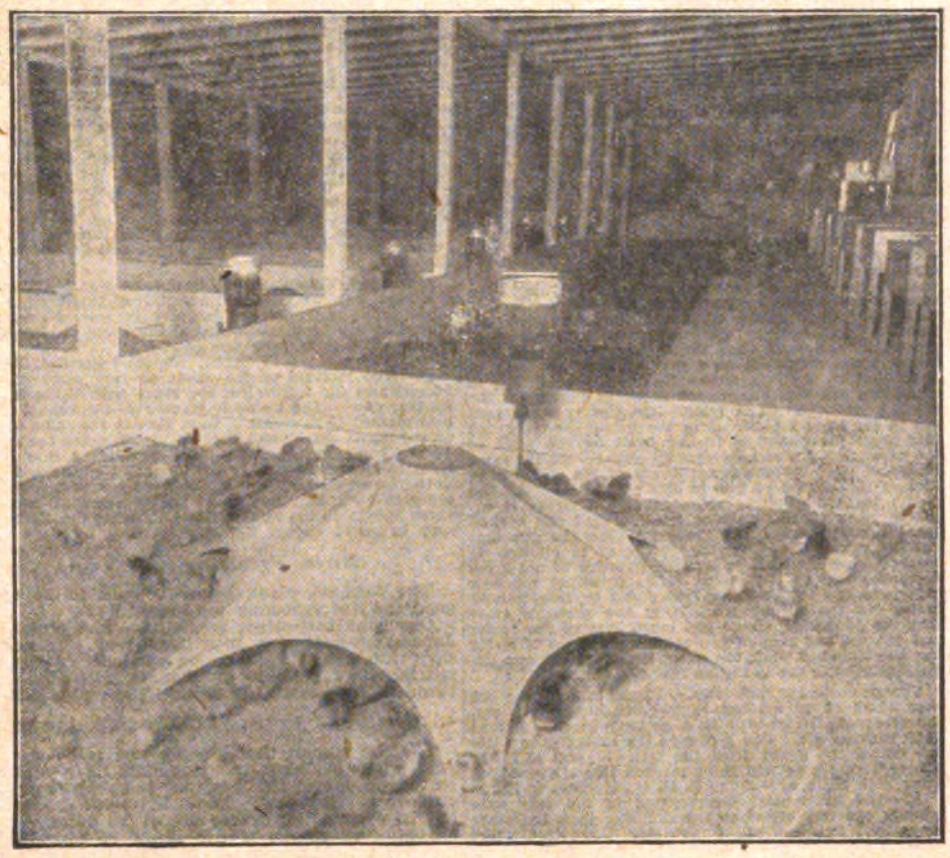
R. F. NEUBERT Co., Box 875 Mankato, Minn.

BY KATE V. SAINT MAUR.

Brooders and Baby Chicks

THE coming year's success depends largely on the number of chicks which can be carried through from hatching time to the eighth week in vigorous health. It is the chick that grows in frame and vitality during these first weeks that makes the heavy layer and the plump table bird in later life. It is estimated that not seventy-five per cent. of the chickens hatched on the general farm live to be four weeks old, even when hens are being used to do the incubating and brooding, and not more than fifty per cent. when incubators and brooders are being used, and it is due solely to the want of knowledge on the part of the person who has them in charge. Given a hundred chicks from eggs laid by healthy birds, and hatched in an incubator which has been properly operated, the losses should not exceed five per cent.

It must be understood that the first two weeks are the really critical time in a chick's life. If they get stunted or upset in that time no amount of care afterwards can counteract the damage done to their constitutions. Of course, the first consideration in caring for incubator chicks is the brooder. The continuous house, heated by hot water pipes and divided into small runs with a hover in each, is the one employed in large poultry plants, and is undoubtedly the best, but such a house is expensive to erect and not practical for a small poultry keeper. Next comes the outdoor colony brooder with two compartments, in one of which is a hover heated by a lamp. The outer, or exercise compartment, is warmed only by the air from the hover compartment, and so of course is much cooler than the hover compartment, but still warm enough for baby chicks to play in in cold weather. Such brooders are complete in themselves, being thoroughly stormproof, and can be placed in any convenient sheltered place. They cost from nine to fifteen dollars, but by that time the chicks have grown considerably and furnish a great deal more animal heat than they did at first.



After the babies are about four weeks old, it is well to take out the frame with the fringed woolen material attached, and use another frame covered with burlap, which is to keep the cotton batting in place.

Before using the brooder, give it a coat of whitewash and cover the floor with sweepings from the haymow, or finely-cut hay, to make a warm carpet for the chicks to stand on. Of course, such brooders should be well housed in a light, dry place. A good coop can be made out of a piano box or large dry goods box. A piano box can usually be got for about two dollars from any store that sells pianos, and will, with the addition of a couple of small windows and paint or roofing paper, make it waterproof. It makes a good house in which to keep two or three such small brooders, or the same number of portable lamp-heated hovers.

If the weather is still cold, the room or coop in which the fireless brooder is being used must be heated in some way, otherwise the chicks will be chilled when they run out to feed or take exercise which is necessary for their health. If the coop being used is an ordinary colony size, three by six, and not more than two and one-half feet high, a good lantern will heat it to about sixty degrees, which is the right temperature for little chicks to play in. Keep the floor of the coop covered to a depth of four or five inches with sweepings from the haymow, or finely-chopped hay. Be careful that the material used is always clean and dry. Never under any circumstances use anything that is in the least moldy or musty, for the spores which cause deadly diseases are bred in the mold.

If an outdoor brooder or portable hover is to be used, light the lamp and get the temperature under the hover up to 90 degrees with a moderate flame, at least a day before the chicks are to be put into it, so that you can be sure that the lamp is running evenly. A thermometer comes with all such brooders and hovers, so it is easy to regulate the heat. When chicks are put into the hover, the heat from their bodies will run up the temperature to 100—perhaps more—but don't alter the flame of the lamp. The chicks can push their heads out of the curtain which encloses the hover, and get cool air if they need it, so there is no danger of their being overheated if the lamp is properly adjusted to keep the empty hover at 90 degrees.

When the hatch is all over in the incubator, take out the trays, eggshells, and any moisture pans which may have been used, and leave the chicks in the machine for twenty-four hours before moving them to the brooder. If the incubator has side ventilators, they can be opened to their full extent; if not, the door of their machine can be so fixed that there is the tiniest space for ventilation if the heat goes above 101.

TWO-DAY-OLD CHICKS AND ROW OF HEATERS.

Next in order comes what is known as the portable hover—a metal, drumlike affair, heated by a lamp and which costs about six dollars, and is very convenient because it can be used in any home-made coop.

Another make on the same order is fashioned somewhat like an umbrella, and can also be used in any room or coop.

Last of all comes the fireless brooder, several makes of which are now on the market, and range in price from two and a half to five dollars, but they can be made at home for about fifty cents each, when empty cases can be had from the grocery store, or a dollar if lumber has to be bought.

The first requisite is a box two feet square and seven inches deep, with a lid at least five inches deep. Or, if you can get two strong boxes the same size, which are six or seven inches deep, take off the lids and use one of the bottoms for a lid. Put two hinges on the back, and a hook and eye at the front. Cut a hole three inches square in the center of the front for the chicks to run in and out of. At both ends of the lid or top box, make half-inch holes three inches apart, and an inch from the top. Then make a frame to fit inside the box and rest on the cleats; cover it with burlap, and then cut a long strip of felt, flannel, old blanket or any soft woolen material. It does not matter so much what it is so long as it is warm and woolly. It should be about four inches wide. Make cuts one inch apart the entire length, leaving about half an inch as a heading. Then stitch the fringed material to the burlap, commencing in the center of the frame and going round and round, the rows to be about an inch apart. At first, put the frame on to the cleats in the lower part of the brooder, with the fringed material hanging down, to make a comfortable covering for the chicks. After the babies are about two weeks old, the frame must be put on to the frame in the top part of the box, which will lift the ends of the material about three inches from the floor of the brooder.

At first, when the screen is in the lower part of the brooder, fold a piece of cotton batting and fit carefully over it, filling in the entire space to the edge of the box. In the top half, put a layer of excelsior about an inch and a half deep, then fill in with cotton batting to the edge. The burlap on the frame being porous, and the cotton batting ditto, allows a perfect system of ventilation from the front opening to the holes in the top part of the brooder. Of course, when the frame is moved to the top part of the brooder, some of the cotton batting has to be removed.

If the brooders have been used before, they should be disinfected as advised for incubators in last month's COMFORT.

Having the chicks housed, we must consider the feed and care for the tiny creatures. Always remember, in looking after chicks, that they are infants, and as sensitive to cold, neglect or improper feeding as a human baby. You know that when a baby is clean, warm and well fed, it will be contented and happy, but let anything go wrong with it, and it squirms and cries. Well, it is just the same with chicks. Go into a brooder house in the evening, when everything is settled down for the night, and if everything is all right, they will be lying stretched out and you will hear little twittering sounds of perfect content. If the brooder is not warm enough, or the day's food has contained anything irritating, they will be standing up, huddled together, and uttering sharp little sounds, which are unmistakably cries of trouble. Cultivate the habit of noticing such signs, and be guided by them, for a happy chick is a healthy chick, and a healthy chick makes a profitable bird.

Chicks must have nothing to eat for the first thirty-six hours, for just before they break their shell the remaining part of the yolk is drawn into the chick's body, and must have time to digest and be assimilated before any other food is introduced or the digestive organs will be overtaxed and bowel trouble is likely to result.

If chicks are put into a compartment brooder, shut the small door which communicates with the outer compartment and keep them confined to the compartment where the hover is for the first two days. If the portable hover is being used, stand it in a box or make a screen of cardboard or fine-mesh wire about three inches wider all round the hover so that the chicks can come from under the curtain and play in the small space yet not be able to wander off in cold corners, as they are apt to do before they have learned to accept the hover as home.

With the fireless box hover, make some sort of a small enclosure in front of the box opening and gently shoo them back into the box every hour or so, for there is no warmth to attract them to this sort of a hover, and it is wise to do some little teaching of this sort, even with a heated hover, especially at bedtime, for there is always danger of some foolish little fellows getting sleepy and forgetting which way they ought to go.

The fireless brooder of the dimensions given will accommodate fifty chicks for two weeks, and twenty-five after that age. But remember that it

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33.)

No-Cold Brooder Stove — Greatest Oil Burning Stove Ever Invented

Absolutely Wickless Blue Flame Burner, Heavy Cast Metal Top, Removable Canopy, Glass Oil Fount, Automatic Valve and Damper that holds the heat up during the night.

Plenty of heat for coldest weather. Only Fireproof Stove Built. Easiest of all to operate and will help you to raise strong, healthy chicks.

Mr. L. B. Knight, Pacific Jct., Iowa, says: I must tell you that the No-Cold Stove bought of you is everything you claim for it. No dirt, No work, simply keep oil in the tank. Once regulated it is absolutely Automatic. We have hundreds of letters similar to this.

SIX DAY TRIAL OFFER

We allow you six days to try the No-Cold before we receive your money. We want you to write us for large Circular. Write for it today.

INTER-STATE SALES COMPANY

Dept. 10, Tipton, Indiana

Prices Slashed — Wonderful Feather Bed and Pillows

Sleep on it FREE

Yours to sleep on for 30 nights—a magnificent feather bed! All new live feathers; best ticking; use it as if it were your own. If you're not amazed with the quality and the sensational price, return bed to us. No cost or obligation to you. A daring offer which we defy others to equal.

Bargains in Feather Beds

Prices Guaranteed Lowest in America. Quality finer than you ever dreamed possible. Other factories wonder how we do it. Full particulars in our free book—nothing ever like it—full of astonishing bargains. Send today for Free Book, Samples of Feathers and Ticking. Read about our free test offer and our $2,500 Guarantee Bond. Mail postal now!

Lewis Feather Bed Co., Dept. 233 Nashville, Tenn.

$5.00 Buys a New Feather Bed

Don't pay more! $5.00 will put a genuine PURITY BRAND new feather bed in your home, guaranteed full weight and full size and featherproof ticking. Biggest offering in the bedding field made direct by manufacturers who undersell the world. Money back if not satisfied. Write now for details and catalog.

PURITY BEDDING FACTORIES

Dept. 307 Nashville, Tenn.

Feather Beds Delivered To You FREE

Write at once for Free Big Bargain Book on New Sanitary Feather Beds and Pillows, also special low prices. All feather beds delivered to you express prepaid, for 10 Days Free Trial. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Before you buy, get this free book and sample of feathers. Write us today—now.

AMERICAN FEATHER & PILLOW CO., Dept 10 Nashville, Tenn.

Feather Bed Outfit NOW ONLY $13.95

Send us $13.95 and express office and we will send you One 40-pound New FEATHER BED, One Pair of 6-Pound New FEATHER PILLOWS, and One Pair of full size BED BLANKETS or BED SPREAD. All new, clean, sanitary feathers, best 8-oz. A.C.A. featherproof ticking. Biggest bargains you ever saw. About half store price. Money-back guarantee. Mail Money Order today. Catalogue FREE.

Southern Feather & Pillow Co., Dept. 51, Greensboro, N. C.

DOLLARS IN HARES

We pay $7.00 to $18.50 and up a pair and express charges. Big Profits. We furnish guaranteed high grade stock and buy all you raise. Use back yard, barn, cellar, attic. Contract and Illustrated Catalog Free.

STANDARD FOOD & FUR ASS'N

405 A. Broadway New York

PURE-BRED POULTRY Most profitable varieties. Also Eggs and BABY CHICKS. BELGIAN HARES, Incubators, Brooders, Grain Sprouters, Supplies, Highest quality, Low Cut prices. Illustrated Catalog mailed FREE. Address

Nichol's Poultry Farm, Box 21 Monmouth, Ill.

RAISE GUINEA PIGS

For us, big profits, thousands needed. We pay our raisers as high as $1.75 pair. No experience needed. Particulars, contract & book free.

LABORATORY SUPPLY CO., 2846 Ridge Ave., Phila., Pa.

WEBER'S Best laying, best paying chickens, ducks geese & turkeys. Fine pure-bred quality. Fowls, Eggs, Incubators all at cut prices. 40 years poultry experience, and my 100 page Catalog and Breeders Guide Free.

W. A. Weber, Box 45 Mankato, Minn.

57 Varieties Chickens, Ducks, Geese, Turkeys, Guineas. Stock, and Eggs for Hatching. Incubators, Brooders and Supplies. Also Holstein cattle. Catalog FREE. THEO. FRANZ, Box 50, Good Thunder, Minn.

POULTRY GUIDE MILLER'S American —tells all about raising chickens, care, feeding, etc. Quotes special low prices on eggs for hatching, poultry, baby chicks, incubators, brooders, and poultry supplies, fully illustrated, sent FREE

J. W. MILLER Co., Box 3, Rockford, Ill.

Poultry Book Latest and best yet; 144 pages, 215 beautiful pictures, hatching, rearing, feeding and disease information. Describes busy Poultry Farm handling 68 pure-bred varieties and BABY CHICKS. Tells how to choose fowls, eggs, incubators, sprouters. Mailed for 10 cents.

Berry's Poultry Farm, Box 31, Clarinda, Iowa.

Chicks and Eggs of High Record Layers. S. C White and Black Legborns, Ancona and Barred Rocks. Very reasonable. Catalogue free. Van Driest Farms, Box P, Cedar Grove, Wis.

BABY CHICKS Superlative Quality. 12 cents each and up. 17 leading breeds. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Catalog Free. Springfield Hatcheries, Box E, Springfield, Ohio

Money Making Poultry

Our specialty. Leading varieties pure bred chickens, turkeys, ducks and geese. Prize winners. Best stock and eggs. Lowest prices; oldest farm; 37th year. Fine catalog free. H. H. JONES CO., Box 22, Des Moines, Iowa.

Saffron Rose—A Slave Girl

By Yetta K. Stoddard

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

PART II.

"COME!" Li Lu followed reluctantly, shaking.

"Keep close, offspring of filth!"

A white man was approaching. Li Lu, behind Peek Noe's fat back, put out a shy hand. When she had passed, the man was reading a card.

Take this to Miss Francis Kennett, 19 Davis Street, and she will find friends for you.

Not the slightest notion had entered Li Lu's brain as to the meaning of the foreign writing, but the card had come to her from one who carried, "You can trust my kind of human being" in his eyes, and she offered it, a silent appeal, to one whose expression of face seemed to her to bear the same index of trustworthiness.

Rex Cardiff blew forth a mighty

"Whizz-ee! A slave girl, newly imported, or I'm a toothless whale!" Wheeling, he followed Peek Noe and her pathetic trailer until they stopped before a run-down three-story building in Pacific Street. Then he rushed to the nearest safe telephone, got 19 Davis Street on the wire; got Miss Kennett, the missionary, herself; told his brief story in the briefest possible time. So, he was right! There came the words:

"It's very probably Peek Noe's new slave girl. We had heard, indirectly, that she was importing one. We can't act before dawn tomorrow, but your quick action gives us time to make preparations."

That was Rex Cardiff's part in Li Lu's near-tragedy. He proved to himself that it was only frightfulness at hand for her and not yet arrived, for he went back to Pacific Street and watched before the house she had entered. No one went in there. No one passed out. A faint light in an upper window burned for a while. Then there was darkness, unbroken. Perhaps Peek Noe had not had time to advertise her acquisition. Perhaps Li Lu had taken ill; had committed suicide. Which would be a good thing, if she had.

* * * * * * *

Over housetops in the early morning hours crept the missionary, accompanied by her Chinese woman attendant and two officers from headquarters. They came to a narrow skylight.

"It is here," announced the Chinese woman.

"Are you sure of it? No mistakes this time," said one of the men, recalling many an ineffectual raid of like beginning.

"Sure," she repeated, and silently tugged at the sky-light frame. They peered into the room below. There crouched a young girl. There stood her keeper, a high-binder giant in Peek Noe's pay.

It was a fight, a quickly-finished one. Within the quarter-hour Li Lu, between Miss Kennett and the Chinese woman, was slipping over roofs, in through the window of a Christianized Chinese bric-a-brac dealer's place, down his back stairs to the side door of a Jewish cobbler's shop, thence to his cellar. They emerged later from a Greek's small fruit store and made their way, unmolested, to the safety of the mission.

* * * * * * *

But now that Li Lu had found such blank disappointment in this San-Fran that she had so gladly come to, she could no longer see kindness anywhere around her; though Miss Kennett's eyes twinkled it; though all the Chinese women and girls at the mission spoke it to her, gave it to her in gentle service.

Li Lu wept bitterly, angrily, passionately. Li Lu had a three-day fit of temper, of such reckless violence as only the placid Oriental woman, once aroused, is capable of displaying. She hated her latest captors. She declared now that Peek Noe was better to her than these white pigs who had stolen her from her rightful mistress. She had learned, she said, in the few hours of companionship with Peek Noe, just what such people as these would do to her if ever she fell into their power. She understood how they stewed young Chinese girls' brains and fried their eyeballs. When the time came to go before the white judge she would tell him that she was indeed the daughter of Hung Lung; that Peek Noe was her friend, the go-between arranging a suitable marriage for her. Peek Noe had certainly paid money for her and did not Li Lu therefore belong? Must she not go back to Peek Noe? Was Li Lu a cheater? Chinese people, even Chinese slave girls, are honest. Had these white pigs paid any money for her?

In vain Miss Kennett told the child of the dangers she had so narrowly escaped. Stubborn refusal to be helped met her, hour after hour. In a moment of inspiration the missionary asked,

"Your village, Li Lu? What is the name of the place you first came from?"

"Fochi in Kweichau," answered sullen Li Lu.

"The young man who came last Sunday, Miss Kennett, said that Kweichau was his province. He may know her people," whispered one of the Chinese women.

"We must try to communicate with him. Even if he never heard of her, he may know some one whom she knows and can thus assure her that she is safe with us." Miss Kennett at once began pulling some of the tangled strings that connected her with the Chinese population of city and surrounding farm lands.

* * * * * * *

Before the Juvenile Court went Li Lu, made ready by a thousand fears to lie herself back into Peek Noe's possession. She took the stand, fluttering, downcast lids betraying the intense emotional strain she was suffering. The answer to the first question would not come.

"What is your name?" was angrily shouted at her for the third time.

"My name Me Sang," she faltered.

"Your father is Hung Lung?"

"Hung Lung."

And she repeated the lesson learned from the lips of Hoey Wu, the lesson which the too smart Mr. Hecky McDoon had not given himself the opportunity of hearing.

Other Chinese witnesses were called and swore to the filial relationship between Chen O's daughter and Hung Lung. A superior looking Chinese youth entered the court room when the last of the perjurers was completing the destruction of the missionary's hopes. At Miss Kennett's beckoning he approached the rail, and in that moment Li Lu raised her eyes and looked around for the first time. Her surprised glances met the surprised glances of this boy.

"Take her home with you, Hung. She's yours according to this evidence," the judge was saying.

Li Lu with no understanding of the English words yet felt the finality of them, and suddenly addressing the interpreter, but with gaze still fixed on the Chinese boy, she said:

"I lied. Tell him I am Li Lu, a slave girl at the Big House on Lily Hill at the village of Fochi in Kweichau. My father, Chen O, sold me twice and Hung Lung who bought me last from Chen O, sold me again here in San-Fran."

"How does she know she was sold?" thundered the judge. Vibrant silence following the girl's sudden change of manner, her startling words, there had been the instant before. The question came booming like a cannon shot.

"Tell him," answered the clear and convincing answer of an aroused Li Lu, "that I saw the money counted into my father's hand, Chen O's hand. First it was a few small coins and some food he got for me. I was little then and the people in the village were starving and dying. The second time in Canton Hung Lung bought me and made my father rich. Hung Lung and Hoey Wu brought me on the ship. They said to tell the white pigs I am Me Sang. Me Sang married Chang Fu in Canton. The third time it was Peek Noe who bought me with gold and paper money. Much, much. Heeps, like this!"

"She lied once. How do we know she isn't lying now?" asked Hung Lung's lawyer, snarling at the notorious name, Peek Noe, which he had been trying to keep unspoken in that place.

The Chinese boy came to the judge's desk, interrupting.

"She is telling the truth. She is Li Lu, called 'Saffron Rose'. She lived in my father's house," he said, so simply that the informality of his speech and act passed unnoticed.

"What is she to you?" asked the judge.

"She would have been my wife when I finished school and went back to Fochi. My father promised it," answered the boy.

"When are you going back?"

"Next year, I hope, if it can be arranged.

"Ask the girl to give you this young man's name," directed the judge, turning to the interpreter.

"It is Hui K'ung. And here is the cap that I have mended very neatly and brought to him!" Li Lu was triumphantly drawing attention to her fine sewing, as if that proved who she was and where she came from.

"Miss Kennett, I assign her into your custody until Hui K'ung is ready to marry her," pronounced the judge.

Li Lu, somehow getting hold of his meaning, came forward at once and stood between the missionary and Hui K'ung. She had begun again to smile at the thought of the kindness of the little old gods behind the kitchens at home. She imagined that she saw her miserable and unworthy self following her lordly golden prince, Hui K'ung, up through the Street of Many Small Houses, past the beans and the good azaleas, to long-enduring happiness at the Big House.

* * * * * * *

Laughter on the dying lips of Yue Ping! You knew it all then, in that peaceful moment of your going, Yue Ping?

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 17.)

Speaking of economy, everyone has their opinion of what economy really is. For example: if the mother has only a limited amount of money to invest in the family wardrobe, which is better, to buy good material that will last more than one season and can be made over to look well or to buy cheap material and wear it only a shorter time?

Will be glad to correspond with all who care to write, and enclose stamp.

VEE VERNON.

Mrs. Vernon.—As to what constitutes economy should prove interesting for a discussion and I'm sure there will be some good letters along that line.—Ed.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

Mrs. Martha McCall's letter inspired me to send a little song which I sing to my babies, and I think it helps to keep my little girl from being timid in the dark.

Lullaby

"Sleep, little baby of mine,
For night and the darkness are near,
But Jesus looks down through the shadows that frown,
And baby has nothing to fear.

"Shut little sleepy blue eyes,
Dear little head be at rest,
For Jesus like you, was a baby once too,
And slept on his own mother's breast.

"Sleep little baby of mine,
Sleep on your pillow so white,
Jesus is here to watch over you dear,
And nothing can harm you tonight.

"Oh, little darling of mine,
What can you know of the bliss,
Of the comfort I keep, awake or asleep,
Because I am certain of this."

My little girl always says, "Jesus won't let anything hurt me in the dark." She is three and one-half years old and we have a sweet baby boy of three months. Of course we think they are both the best ever. She is still Mamma's and Daddy's baby anyway and says she's their big baby girlie while baby boy is her girlie—and Mamma's and Daddy's.

I do not believe in whipping children much, although my little girl has been several times. I find it does more harm than good. Now I put her in a room alone, the sunniest room, with all her toys. She is allowed to open the door but she knows she mustn't come out until she is "Mamma's lady baby" again. When she is ready to be good she comes out and says, "The naughty girl is gone and Mamma's lady baby come back," and she always has a kiss for me. The banishment from me and baby hurts more than anything else. I have one of the best "Daddy Mans" as she calls her daddy and we both look forward to "when daddy comes home," the whole day. Even baby boy is learning and always has a big smile for daddy.

Mothers, don't spoil your babies. Of course you love them, we all do, but it is so much better for a little baby to stay on a bed, by a window, than to be held and bounced continually. My boy spends most of his day from bath time, 8.30 A. M., until evening on the bed by the window, where the sun shines in and how happy he is. When he gets sleepy he simply shuts his eyes and is asleep. We hold him a long time every evening and of course I hold him at different times during the day, to rest him, but he is always contented on his bed. I arrange the curtains so the light and sun does not shine in his face and eyes.

I am twenty-four years old and have been married five years.

A HAPPY YOUNG MOTHER.

LYON, MISS.

DEAR COMFORT FRIENDS:

I've been helped so much through COMFORT that I'd like to give something in return.

How many study at night? Hubby and I do. We each have a small dictionary that we carry in our pockets and during our spare moments we study twenty or twenty-five words. At night we spell the words we've studied, giving pronunciation and definition. We also study history.

When I was about eight years old, our teacher organized a "Sunbeam Club." We each were supposed to be sunbeams and our task was to do a kind deed each day. We met every Friday afternoon at the home of one of the members and gave an account of our deeds. We were also taught to sew at these meetings. Maybe some mother or teacher could organize such a club in her community.

I'd be glad to hear from some of the sisters and next time I'll give a description of our home.

MRS. J. R. GOODWIN.

PEORIA, ARIZ.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I am going to ask you to please print this in the Sisters' Corner. Since my letter came out in the October issue of COMFORT I have received letters from all over the United States, asking about Arizona. I have tried to answer all who sent stamps but I find it impossible to answer all as I would like to. I receive from one to six letters every day. I wish I could correspond with every dear sister I have heard from but

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31.)

Do You Want $200 a Week?

The Amazing Story of Carl Rowe Who Rose from an Income of $50 a Week to $1000 a Month

My name is Rowe—Carl Rowe. I live in a small city in New York State.

I am going to tell you an amazing story about myself. It may seem too strange to believe, but you can easily verify everything I have to say.

Two years ago I was a baker. I was struggling along, trying to make the money in my pay envelope meet the increasing expenses of our family. There was no prospect for the future.

Today, just two years later, I am a sucessful business man. I have plenty of money for all the things we need and want. Last month I made $876 during my spare time, and was able to put $200 a week in my savings account.

I am going to tell you how it happened.

Please remember that two years ago I had no surplus cash. I was in the same fix as nine out of ten other men. Expenses were constantly mounting and my salary, although it had increased, could not keep pace with the cost of living. My wife had to do without things that I knew she ought to have. We wanted an automobile, but we couldn't afford it. We wanted to buy our own home, but we couldn't afford that.

Big Profits for Women

The Comer Manufacturing Company has an unusual opportunity open to women that will enable them to make at least $2.00 an hour in their spare time. Maggie McCoy of Georgia makes from $275 to $350 a month as a Comer Representative. Mrs. W. J. McCrary made $253 in less than two months' easy spare time work. Mrs. Goldie Nielsen earned a profit of $23 in her first three hours' work. Mrs. Jennie O'Ross made almost $50 in 5 days' spare time.

Any woman who fills out the coupon below will learn how to make her spare time pay big cash profits.

It made me desperate to think of what might happen if I became sick or lost my job. I worried about it, and so did my wife. We were living from hand to mouth, and we didn't know what calamity and hardships might be lurking just around the corner.

And yet—today—I own our nine-room house. I have an automobile. I have money for books, the theatre, or any other pleasures that I may want. I have the cash today to educate my son and send him through college.

Here is how it happened. One day in glancing through a magazine I read an advertisement. The advertisement said that any man could make from a hundred to three hundred dollars a month during his spare time.

I didn't believe it. I knew that I had worked hard eight hours a day for $50 a week, and I figured that no man could make that much during a couple of hours a day spare time.

But as I read that ad I found that it pointed to men who had made that much and more. In the last paragraph the advertiser offered to send a book without cost. I still doubted. But I thought it was worth a two-cent stamp, so I tore out the coupon and put it in my pocket and next day on my way home from work I mailed it.

When I look back to that day and realize how close I came to passing up that ad, it sends cold chills down my spine. If the book had cost me a thousand dollars instead of a two-cent stamp, it would still have been cheap. All that I have today—an automobile, my home, an established business, a contented family—all these are due to the things I learned by reading that little eight-page booklet.

There is no secret to my success. I have succeeded beyond any dream I may have had three years ago, and I consider myself an average man. I believe that I would be criminally selfish if I did not tell other people how I made my success.

All the work I have done has been pleasant and easy, and withal, amazingly simple. I am the representative in this territory for a raincoat manufacturer. The booklet that I read was one issued by that company. It tells any man or woman just what it told me. It offers to anyone the same opportunity that was offered to me. It will give to anyone the same success that it has brought to me.

The Comer Manufacturing Company is one of the largest manufacturers of high-grade raincoats on the market; but they do not sell through stores. They sell their coats through local representatives. The local representative does not have to buy a stock—he does not have to invest any money. All he does is to take orders for Comer raincoats and he gets his profit the same day the order is taken. Fully half my customers come to my house to give me their orders.

My business is growing bigger every month. I don't know how great it will grow, but there are very few business men in this city whose net profit is greater than mine, and I can see only unlimited opportunity in the future.

* * * * *

If you are interested in increasing your income from $100 to $1000 a month and can devote all your time or only an hour or so a day to this same proposition in your territory, write the Comer Manufacturing Company at Dayton, Ohio. Simply sign the attached coupon and they will send you the eight-page booklet referred to by Mr. Rowe and full details of their remarkable proposition.

Cut Out and Mail

.....

The Comer Mfg. Co,.
Dept. J-145, Dayton, Ohio.

Gentlemen: Please send me, without obligation on my part, copy of your booklet and full details of your proposition.

Name.....

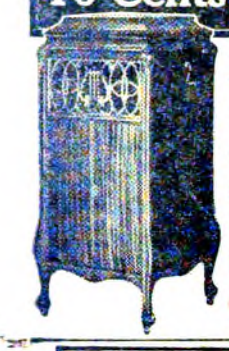
Address.....

.....

WANTED

U. S. RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS

$1600 to $2300 Yearly Work 15 days monthly—paid full time. Travel Free. Hotel expense allowance. No experience required. All men and women over 17, should mail coupon below, NOW.



C. J. Ozment, Dept. 126, St. Louis, Mo.

You may send me Free, prepaid, personally prepared instructions how I may quickly secure Railway Mail Clerk and other Government Positions.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

10 Cents a Day Pays

For smaller Symphonola. Style pictured and others 17c to 25c a day. Tens of thousands giving satisfaction.

Symphonolas

No expensive attachments needed to play all Records. Tone natural, lifelike. Well built. Highest quality equipment.

No Money Down

Shipped anywhere in U. S. 30 Days FREE Trial before you make first payment. If pleased take up to 2 years time.

Records 70c Each

Plays on all phonographs using steel needles. Latest vocal and instrumental hits. Also Sacred and Operatic. Full size 10 inch. Postpaid. Ask Today for Symphonola Booklet and Record List.

Larkin Co Inc.
Desk SCT-222 Buffalo, N. Y.

2 YEAR GUARANTEED BATTERIES. SAVE 50%

Famous "Royal" Batteries—highest quality made—now selling direct from factory to car owner. You save half. We give written 2-year guarantee—longest on any battery. Big responsible organization backs guarantee. Batteries for any car, tractor or gas engine.

Send No Money Save time. Order from this ad. Battery, fully charged, shipped immediately—by express C. O. D. You run no risk. Our location same for 8 years. References: Nat'l Bank of the Republic, Dun or Bradstreet.

FREE BOOKLET If you want descriptive matter first, send for free booklet. Gives full details of this superior battery. Get this booklet before you buy any battery. Write today! Give year and model of your car.

K-E BATTERY CO., Dept. 77, 14 E. Jackson Blvd., Chicago

SPECIMEN PRICES
Ford, Dort, Chev.	$18.80
Overland, Buick	21.85
Maxwell, Dodge	25.60

Same 60% saving on all cars

Largest Exclusive Mail Order Battery House in America
Members of Chicago Association of Commerce

5 Great Novels

By Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth

Given Away You all know Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth; her novels are the most interesting and entertaining of any published. Here is an opportunity for you to get five of her great books: The Crime and the Curse. The Wife's Victory. The Fatal Secret. John Strong's Secret and The Little Rough Cast House.

Remember, we do not send merely your choice, but all five of these books, aggregating 160 double column pages, just to introduce our publication, "Everyday Life." Send 25c to pay for a year's subscription and 10c extra to help pay postage, packing, etc., 35c in all, and we will send our paper for one year and also all five of these great Southworth books. You'll be surprised and delighted. If already a subscriber, you can have subscription extended on this offer or send that of a neighbor.

Special Offer Send 60c for 3 years' subscription and 20c extra to pay postage, etc., 70c in all, and we will send you the five Southworth novels and also five great novels by Charlotte M. Braeme—or 10 books in all and our paper 3 years for 70c. If already a subscriber send a subscription of a neighbor or extend your own.

EVERYDAY LIFE, 337 W. Madison St., Dept. S-W-8, Chicago

Beautiful Thin Watch

Send No Money Guaranteed $2.85

Men's or Boys' high grade thin model guaranteed perfect time keeper, only $2.85. Popular 16 size, solid silveroid thin model case. Open face, stem wind and set. High-grade guaranteed movement. FREE—Elegant vest chain and knife given absolutely free with each watch ordered. SEND NO MONEY—simply pay postman $2.85 on arrival and the watch, knife and chain is yours.

UNIVERSAL WATCH CO., 533 S. Peoria St., Dept. 64, Chicago, Ill.

SELL US $ YOUR SPARE TIME $

We will train you to write show cards for us. No canvassing or soliciting; we supply you with steady work; distance no object; will pay you from $15 to $50 a week.

Wilson Methods, Limited,
Dept. L, 64 East Richmond, Toronto, Canada.

WHITE FLAME

BURNERS make your old kerosene lamps and lanterns give a brilliant white light better than electricity or gas. Doubles your light. Saves oil. No Mantle to Break. Guaranteed Safe and Reliable. Delights every user. Send now for complete sample postpaid 50 cts., stamps or coin. 8 for $1.25. Money back if Not Satisfactory. Live Representatives Wanted. Exclusive Territory.

WHITE FLAME LIGHT CO. 76 Clark Bldg. Grand Rapids, Mich.

FREE Beautiful Book About Taxidermy Learn at home by mail to mount birds, animals, tan skins. Be a taxidermist. Delightful art easily learned by men and women. Decorate home and den. Make big profits. Wonderful new art. Write Today for this wonderful Free Book and our amazing offer.

N.W. Sch. of Taxidermy 3042 Elwood Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

$1000 Prize Contest.

To introduce a New Tomato worth Millions, $1000 will be paid for best lists of words formed from the letters comprising its name. Send 10 cents for trial package, catalogue, and full particulars. I. F. Tillinghast, R. 53, Santa Rosa, California.

Dialogs, Monologs, Musical Comedies and Revues, Minstrel Opening Choruses, Darky Plays. PLAYS Vaudeville Acts, How to Stage a Play, Make-up Goods. Catalog Free.

T. S. DENISON & Co. 623 So. Wabash, Dept. 8 CHICAGO

Military finish air rifle. Sell 8 Boxes Mentho-Nova at 25c.

FREE

U. S. Supply Co. Box 29, Greenville, Pa.

A Cobweb Party for Valentine Day

by Mrs. Blanche Cole Rosedale

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

A Valentine party should be a frolic. A Cobweb party is a frolic from beginning to finish and so is particularly suitable for this holiday.

TO arrange the cobweb take as many white strings (grocer twines), of uniform length as you expect guests; the length to vary with the age of your expected visitors and the size of your house. Thirty feet is a good length for young children, fifty to a hundred feet, or longer, is good for adults and joyous young folks, especially if you have a staircase to work around.

On the end of each string tie a card bearing the guest's name. These can also have numbers or flowers or quotations which will later determine supper partners. Or they may contain a fortune. Favors may be used, if you wish, thus allowing each guest to choose a string at random. The strings rolled in separate balls with the name cards at one end are now laid on a chair or table at the entrance to the room in which you expect to entertain. Tie each string to the legs of the table, to parts of the chair or more artistic in effect, to a decorated heart-shaped frame, so that the cards or favors are visible. Whatever you fasten the strings to, be sure it is solid. The newel post of the banisters is good. Take the balls one at a time and pass them back and forth through the rooms, under the tables, around the piano legs, over the curtain poles, through the banisters and finally, when the end is reached, tie to the nearest object and affix to the tip end of each string, candy, a gift, a valentine or a fortune; according to what you put on the first end and to what you wish to spend. For be it known that no matter how well provided for we may be, we all enjoy carrying home a dainty little favor, or a mirth provoking couplet or picture.

After having carried the first string through devious courses do the same with the rest. You will soon be able to pass the strings over and under one another so that the room looks as if a giant spider had spread snares. If you expect over twenty guests, better not make the strings more than seventy-five feet long, unless your rooms are large. The guests, when all are assembled, are directed to select a thread of the web and follow it up to the end. The first out receives a prize.

This is an excellent entertainment to hold in the Grange hall, or church parlors. The most diffident of persons will be jolly and friendly after giving and receiving aid from his fellow toilers in unfastening the occasional snarls.

The remainder of the evening may be spent in accordance to the age of the guests.

With crepe paper or evergreen branches it is possible to screen off one corner of the room as a Cupid's Bower or Post Office. A child dressed as a fairy or in any form of cupid outfit considered feasible (little gauze wings and a paper quiver of cardboard arrows are effective and easily-made features of such a costume), may distribute valentines. A pretty idea is to simulate a large valentine with crepe paper and have the child, or if preferred a young lady in valentine costume, give out the tokens.

With shelf paper each door and window may be made to simulate a valentine. Strings of paper, such as every house specializing in valentines carries, gives the room a festive appearance.

Games

Among the games may be considered any frolic.

DO YOU REALLY KNOW YOUR LADY? is a good game.

Supply every lady with a number, every gentleman with a paper and pencil. The ladies retire to an adjacent room which is darkened—a sheet is hung as a curtain in the connecting doorway. Two slits are cut in the upper part and one in the lower. Following their numbers, the ladies stick both hands and one foot through the curtain slits—they may shake them—they may remain but a second. The gentlemen are required to write the names of the ladies. Winner, of course, receives a prize. To avoid slitting a good sheet, three breadths of cloth may be stitched together, leaving opening in the seams.

HOW LONG?

Ten candles are stood in a direct row and lighted. The player is supposed to blow all ten out—if possible with one breath. The number of candles left standing show how many years it will be before the player marries.

ORIGINAL VALENTINES.

Supply each man with a card and pencil, allow five minutes for each to write a valentine. Then read aloud. The one voted best wins a prize.

The cobweb party is usually so lengthy an affair that by the time Cupid has given out the valentines there will remain space for but one or two games before supper.

If the guests remain after supper, a Circular Love Story is always interesting. Seat the guests; give them numbers; select a master of ceremonies. He calls any number. The person holding that number begins a love story. Just as he is nicely going, the master calls another number. The person thus called must continue the story and so on. With clever people this will result in a delightful hour.

Supper Service

Probably the entire house, except the kitchen, has already been requisitioned for the use of the guests. Supper must in some way be accommodated. With green boughs or crepe paper cover stove and sink, and transform tubs and tables with crepe-paper cloths covered with cupids and valentines into buffets and set the supper out in the kitchen. Of course, if the kitchen is large enough, you will have no trouble in setting your guests at a long table, or at many small ones. For doilies use hearts cut from red paper. In the center of the table place a valentine pie with paper ribbons reaching to each plate. The pie may be small because it is to contain only slips of paper with either verses of love poems, or jokes written on each. Love poems are fine for February, but jokes bring a laugh and the hostess who can bring enough laughs is a success. Excellent jokes are constantly printed in newspapers and magazines.

Each guest is, of course, to read his slip aloud.

A little ingenuity and skill with scissors and brush will enable one to make valentine and cupid place-cards. A moderate expenditure will buy cupid dolls, favors—anything. But never think that a party depends on expenditure. Little funny ten- or twenty-five cent prizes, statuettes, candy images, clever pictures, booklets, tiny mirrors, powder-puffs or little home-made articles are just as acceptable as the expensive prizes and favors which we all know how to buy if we wish to spend freely. A table decorated with a half-dozen candlesticks with valentine shades and with simple red hearts will conduce to merriment just as readily as one loaded with expense.

If you cannot seat the guests at table, here are two novel methods of serving. Place baskets holding refreshments for two, or one, on the table or buffet. Let each gentleman take his basket to his fair lady. Or if your menu cannot be thus served, have one girl guest and escort accountable for each course.

Suppose menu consists of Bouillon and bread sticks,

Salads and sandwich,
Ice cream and cake,
Coffee, cheese and crackers.

This is a very elaborate supper for a small party.

One girl may have a table either at the kitchen door or in the rooms, whichever fits the individual circumstance. Here, from a chafing-dish or the kitchen range—or a pitcher—she may serve the bouillon, whilst her escort with the bread-stick basket sees that everyone is cared for.

Then the next couple may dish out and pass the salad and sandwiches—so on through the menu.

Bouillon, sandwiches, cake and lemonade is a simple, reasonable menu for giving folks.

The bouillon may be clear beef broth seasoned with celery and parsley, or chicken broth. In neither case is it a great expense as the meat is still available for the family use.

The sandwiches should be cut heart shape, and may be plain bread and butter or filled with chopped chicken, seasoned with paprika, or with chopped ham, or cream cheese and chopped pickle.

Cake may be a plain cake made in jelly tins, cut in heart shape and iced. Remnants may be used for family pudding.

A large cocoanut layer cake with ring, thimble and penny in it is always enjoyed.

For salad the simplest is Rigoletto Salad: One cup chopped walnut meat, one cup chopped celery, two cups chopped apple, a little salt and mix with mayonnaise. Serve on a lettuce leaf.

For little folks serve bread and butter, sandwich and cocoa—or lady-fingers and vanilla ice cream.

Ice cream and cake seem to be universally liked.

A simpler menu would be sufficient, and the nature and variety of the refreshments must necessarily depend largely on locality and circumstances.

St. Valentine's Day

By C. L. Cheever

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

ST. Valentine's Day is the day set apart for all true lovers.

With us the day has left an influence which has been given to it by the many generations of young lovers. In these days we get a suggestion of lavender or a wave of musk that still hovers around the old, yellow, crumpled love-missives that have survived the years, and that our great-grandmothers received and opened blushingly, and read with palpitating hearts.

It seems strange that this plain little valentine of two hundred years ago should have caused a tremor; the paper is coarse and brownish, not an attempt at ornamentation, with just a few lines of crude verse written in a stiff, conventional hand. But, after all, it was written from the full heart of some seventeenth century grandfather.

With specimens of the valentines which have been circulated for hundreds of years, the date is easily told for with time grew boldness of thought and elaboration. After the heart and dove valentines—these mostly deformed and carrying in their bills scrolls and ribbons with little sentiments written upon them, and modest little hearts, very unsymmetrical,—then there came those decorated with larger hearts outlined in red ink, in some solid blood red coloring, pierced through and through with arrows.

It was many, many years before the manufactured valentine came into vogue. Everybody could have one for a price, from the plain little sheet, with its wood-cut and single sentiment, to the wonderfully frilled and belaced paper affairs which unfolded many times.

There was no necessity for the simple home-made expressions; yet, in the gaudy machine-made ones was lost that little personal touch which so expressed the heartfelt emotions of the sender.

It is strange that a day so distinctly marked in its character should have so vague an origin.

There is a story given to us of the banishment of the good priest and his connection with St. Valentine's Day.

It is said that in a Greek temple, near the palace of the Emperor Cladius, the Cruel, in Rome, there stood a high priest, whose name was Valentine. He was popular with the whole city, and so great was his popularity that his church was crowded and around the altars and fires knelt all the wise people of Rome. Old and young, rich and poor, ignorant and wise, all went to learn of Valentine.

In the midst of all this popularity, wars arose outside of Rome and the Emperor called upon all his citizens to go to battle.

But many demurred, the married men did not want to leave their families, the engaged men did not want to leave their sweethearts.

On hearing all this the Emperor declared that there should be no more weddings and that every engagement should be broken.

The Emperor was so angry, that even the pleadings of his counsellors were in vain. When the good priest heard of all this he was very sad. Young girls died of love and young men went to their work with heavy hearts. So, secretly, Valentine united a couple, then others came to him and he quietly married them. At last the Emperor heard of all this and ordered Valentine to be cast into a dungeon. "I will have no man in Rome who refuses to obey my commands."

So Valentine was dragged from the altar and taken to prison. There he languished and died. But each year, on the anniversary of his birth, the people met and honored his name. Many were married on this night.

This is all a pretty legend, and appeals to us as in keeping with the sentiment of the day, but the origin of St. Valentine's Day probably is much older, having originated in the ancient feast in honor of Pan and Juno, held by the early Romans during the month of February.

The Christian leaders persuaded their converts to allow them to substitute St. Valentine for pagan Pan and Juno, and the date of the saint's death, the fourteenth of February, as the day of celebration.

The new name and date did not disturb the people so long as the festivities remained the same.

However we may choose to observe the day of St. Valentine, its character has been stamped by generations who entered into its celebration sincerely, joyously, and no matter how indifferent we may be, we cannot escape that influence which is the inheritance of the many years gone by, and it does us no harm to partake of the old-time fragrance in the sentiments we have to express.

The custom still has its fascination for the children and not a few of the older people but it is a much degenerated festival, leaving with us all the impression that, somehow, today is the day set apart for all true lovers, when they may devote themselves to each other in the name of the good saint, Valentine.

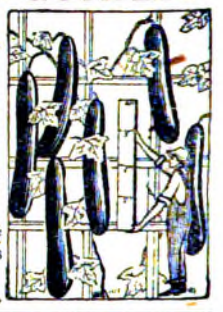
In the essays of Elia, Charles Lamb touches this day of universal love in his delicate, humorous way:

"Hail to thy returning festival, old Bishop Valentine! Great immortal go-between! Who and what manner of person art thou?

"Mysterious personage. Thou comest attended with thousands and tens of thousands of little loves, and the air is 'Brushed with the kiss of nestling wings.'

"This is the day on which those charming little missives called valentines cross and intercross each other at every turning."

Instant Bunion Relief Prove It At My Expense



Don't send me one cent—just let me prove it to you as I have done for hundreds and thousands of others in the last six months. I claim that FAIRYFOOT is a most successful treatment for bunions, and I want you to let me send it to you Free. I don't care how many so-called cures, shields or pads you ever tried without success—I don't care how disgusted you are with them all—you have not tried Fairyfoot.

FREE TREATMENT

I have such confidence in it that I will send you a sample treatment absolutely FREE. It is a wonderful remedy which relieves you almost instantly of all pain. Just send name and address and Fairyfoot will be sent at once. Write today.

FOOT REMEDY CO.
2207 Millard Ave. Dept. 31 Chicago

GIGANTIC GUINEA "BEAN"

Extensively advertised as a bean but realy of the Colocynth family. Grow to enormous size. One often weighing 10 POUNDS. W.P.Davis of Oak Grove Ky. writes "I have grown from your seed, Guinea 'Beans" FOUR FEET SIX IN long and 12 INCHES wide. Is the talk of our whole county" Delicious EATING of flavor. Grows anywhere. Pkt of 6 seeds 10 cts. 3 for 25 cts 7 for 50 cts or 15 for $1.00

RUNDLE-MURPHY CO., Dept. 72, Westport, Conn.

FREE TRIAL

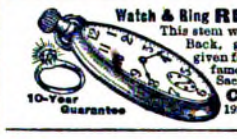
Let us send this fine Razor for 30 days free trial. When satisfied after using, send $1.85 or return razor. Order Today.

JONES MFG. CO. 160 N. Wells St. Dept. 648 Chicago

LARGE EASTMAN CAMERA FREE & MAGAZINE FOR A YEAR

Camera takes pictures 2½x3¼. Also very interesting, instructive monthly Photo Magazine, for a whole year. Camera and Magazine are yours for selling only 25 large colored Pictures or 25 packages fancy Post Cards at 10 cents. Order your choice of Pictures or Post Cards. Extra Gift for promptness so write TODAY.

GATES MFG. CO. DEPT 325 CHICAGO



THIS KNIFE FREE for selling 8 boxes

ROSEBUD Salve at 25c each and remit $2.00. Knife has best steel blades, we put your name on. Order salve at once.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO., Box 232, Woodsboro, Md.

Watch & Ring REALLY GIVEN AWAY

This stem wind and set, Handsome Engraved Back, guar. timekeeper and fine ring given for selling only 16 pks. Bluette, our famous wash bluing at 15c or 24 pks. Sachet Perfume at 10c. Order choice.

10-Year Guarantee

Chicago Bluing Works 1920 Sunnyside, Dept. 201, Chicago

Boys - Girls Earn Money or Premiums. Sell $5. school supplies. Box 851-C, Portland, Me.

SIX-ROOM HOUSE FREE

I Will Buy the Lot

This means just what it says. I don't want your money. This is a true offer and I positively mean what I say. I give the house FREE, and if you don't own a lot, I will arrange for the lot for you. This is your chance to free yourself from the landlord's clutches. Rush me your name and address quick for a big picture and full description and plans of the home. You risk nothing. PAY ME NOTHING NOW OR ANY TIME. Remember, I do not want any of your money. The house is FREE. Address C. E. MOORE, Pres., Home Builders Club, Dept. 404, Batavia, Ill.

Danderine

Stops Your Hair Coming Out, Thickens and Beautifies

35-cents buys a bottle of "Danderine" at any drug store. After one application you seldom find a particle of dandruff or a falling hair. Besides, every hair shows more life, vigor, brightness and abundance.

How to Beautify Your Complexion

Pretty Girls Everywhere Will Tell You That Stuart's Calcium Wafers is Your One Sure Way

Get a box today of Stuart's Calcium Wafers and in a few hours you won't question why they are the best known, most widely used and most successful complexion beautifier ever found. They clear your blood, they remove the sluggish impurities that gather to make pimples, boils, rash, blotches, blackheads, muddiness and such blemishes. The calcium itself is the greatest skin influence known. It causes the skin to wake up, it begins its work at once, you observe the results and in a few days there is absolutely no question as to the wonderful action of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. Get a 60 cent box today at any drug store. They are truly a complexion marvel.

Women Made Young

Bright eyes, a clear skin and a body full of youth and health may be yours if you will keep your system in order by taking

GOLD MEDAL HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES

The world's standard remedy for kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid troubles, the enemies of life and looks. In use since 1696. All druggists, three sizes.

Look for the name Gold Medal on every box and accept no imitation

RESINOL

Soothing and Healing

Thoroughly Reliable Treatment for Skin and Scalp Disorders

Stops Itching

GRAY HAIR RESTORED

Quickly and naturally to its original color and beauty, by a simple, harmless, inexpensive home method. Complete secret sent sealed for a 2c. stamp. Guaranteed. R. V. Sefton Co., Precterius Sta., Dept. 61, St. Louis, Mo.

"Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

Through the columns of this department free information pertaining to Etiquette, Personal Appearance and kindred subjects will be given in answer to questions by our subscribers, but not more than two questions the same month by any one subscriber. Address Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and give your own full name and address. Name will not be published.

ANXIOUS, West Virginia.—It would be best that when you and this boy enter church together, you do not take his arm. (2) You should not hold your caller's overcoat for him or assist him in any way in putting it on. A man is always supposed to be capable of managing his own coat. This also applies to your question concerning your escort's hat. You should not take it from him, hold it for him, or in any manner assist the management of his masculine headgear.

ANXIOUS D., Texas.—It seems most unfair that you should not be able to take any part in the dancing at your Saturday night boy and girl parties—because you always have to play the piano. Why is this? Surely there must be someone in your school crowd who would take your place occasionally, even if not so good a musician. Or some older person might be drafted or could volunteer. You are necessarily handicapped in your fun and friendly relationships with your boy chums by not being able to dance with them. We think this solves one side of your "unpopularity problem." For a girl of thirteen, your letter was unusually well expressed. It had a sense of perspective and right proportion which shows that you have profited by the fondness for books to which you confess. It is possible that it is just this intelligent brain of yours which makes you not quite so companionable to your boy friends—who quite often may be rather stupid young animals, I am sorry to say. To answer your question as to what kind of a girl a boy likes best, is to have to know the kind of boy who is to do the liking. They are as various as girls. A boy of your own grade of intelligence might not properly appreciate your young wisdom, but it is certain that he would be more apt to care for your companionship than would a more ordinary youngster. As a general rule, we think a boy as young as those you list would be most likely to care for a girl whom he would think of as a "good sport" and comrade. At thirteen or fourteen a boy is yet very much of a young barbarian and cannot be expected to look very admiringly for the finer qualities of delicacy and good-breeding which he might more fully appreciate ten years or so later on. But as for you, we are sure you will not treat your boy and girl problems too seriously. You are wise enough to know that for several years to come books will be worth much more to you than boys—and be more profitable for study and companionship. But watch out that you have a chance to dance now and then.

TWO WYOMING COWGIRLS, Wyoming.—Your meeting a boy caller at the gate would not make any rule of etiquette buck and "rare". But perhaps you might not wish to let him know you were so anxious to see him. (2) Yes; you may tell this boy friend of yours who is leaving town, that you would be glad to hear from him and know how he gets on in his new dwelling place and occupation. We are glad you have found our advice profitable and appreciate your thanks.

VERY DOUBTFUL, Haines City, Fla.—A boy would lead the way in entering a drug store or ice cream parlor, and he would see that the girl with him was properly and conveniently seated before seating himself. Practically all soda fountains have a list of drinks posted in a prominent place, or furnish printed menus containing names and prices of the various delicious concoctions on tap. (2) You should thank anyone who performs any courtesy for you—and this pleasant and correct ruling would not except your fiance. We note that you spell this "finance"—which may be a cheerful prophecy that your future husband has full pockets. (3) You have asked four times the number of questions allowed by the rules of this department. Read the heading of this column.

HEART-BROKEN, Castor, La.—If you are no longer engaged to this girl and "her love is failing," we are sorry for your sad case—particularly as you "still love her." But it is a woman's privilege to change her mind—or heart, and we do not see quite what you can do to alter the present situation. Love is not something which can be rebuilt like a collapsing house, or turned on and off like a water tap. If this girl has found someone she likes better, you had best try to do the same thing. Forget your troubles in hard work—or go to see Douglas Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers." Broken hearts are much easier mended than you might now imagine.

R. C., Centralia, Ill.—Whatever you may wish to say to a girl may be said in simple language. For instance: "Won't you let me take you to So and So's dance, next Friday night?" or, "May I take you home from church?" The asking is not hard if the girl is willing. (2) Bow and offer your hand with a simple "how do you do" when being introduced. And then let the conversation follow as it best can. A young boy is not expected to be either a Beau Brummel or a trained phrase maker.

A. P., Valley Head, Ala.—Of course it cannot be pleasant for either you or your caller to have your father always carefully present in the same room with yourself and your friend. Although your father should be rightfully present, in your motherless home, to greet your callers, we think he might under ordinary circumstances withdraw to a nearby room after a few moments' conversation with your guest or guests. Have you spoken to him concerning this and asked him to give you a little more freedom? You are right in making no apology or comment on the matter to your callers. Your father's care of you does him credit and is based on his love for you. It is a guardianship better overdone than neglected. Yet there is a happy medium in all things and we think you are justified in asking him to make some concession to your wish.

J. H., Pottsville, Pa.—Theoretically, etiquette sensibly places the man where he may be of the most assistance to the girl he may be escorting. This would mean his stepping from a trolley-car first, so that he might aid in the alighting of his companion. On the same principle, any narrow or dangerous staircase, narrow in width, might be descended first by the man so that he could guard against misstep or fall. In most ordinary cases, however, a woman would precede a man in both ascending or descending a staircase. An exception to this would be in any public gathering—such as a theater crowd or at the opera. Common sense and convenience govern in such details as these, and rules are not invariable.

E. H. S., New York.—As you are a widow at the young age of but twenty-two, we take it for granted that your husband has not long been deceased. In such a case it is considered the best form for the bride to have a home wedding and to be married in her going-away gown. She would not wear white silk or satin and the rest of the conventional bridal costume. (2) At a church wedding the music might suitably be the Wedding March from Wagner's "Lohengrin," and the justly celebrated "Serenade," by Schubert. The first would be played during the march down the aisle of the wedding party, and the second melody would have place immediately after the ceremony. At a simple home wedding such as yours should be, this same music would also be suitable. If you have a particular fondness for "The Rosary," the composition you mention, this might be played after the ceremony also. You have our best wishes for your happiness.

A. B. C., Tennessee.—Such table decorations as you might use for the dinner you mention would vary according to season, but a centerpiece of cut flowers surrounded, perhaps, by intertwined smilax, would always be correct and beautiful. Palms and other growing plants might be grouped and used to make the room festal and attractive—particularly if your dinner takes place during one of the cold months when flowers and green things become rarely charming. 2) We do not know how elaborate will be your dinner, how many will be your guests, or if you will have someone to serve. In any event, we answer your second inquiry by suggesting you do not crowd your table, and use a side table or buffet to aid in the convenient serving of your dinner. A simple list of courses, well cooked and smoothly served, will give your guests more pleasure than an elaborate and huddled meal.

Pretty Girls' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14.)

probably cannot touch the floor at first, but daily practice will finally enable him to do so and will prove that his muscles have been healthily exercised. In the meantime be sure to feed him the sort of foods that will give him strength—plenty of cooked cereals—well-cooked, too—with cream, lots of milk, soft-boiled eggs, boiled rice, baked potato, green vegetables such as spinach, string beans, peas, lettuce, asparagus, but no cabbage, turnips or other vegetables difficult of digestion. I am assuming he is not a very tiny boy, so that he is allowed meat. But do not give him pork, or veal, or corned beef. He can have bacon, rare roast beef, lamb chops (excellent for him), roast lamb, chicken, fish, etc. And give him plenty of fruit, oranges, grapefruit, apples, prunes. See that the prunes are washed, then soaked over night, and finally cooked slowly for a couple of hours. He should eat some once a day. Do not give him hot breads to eat. I think it likely that his round shoulders come from not sufficient strength. I knew a small boy with just that habit, and after a rigid course of feeding he straightened up—but it took a whole summer of outdoor activities/ swimming, tennis, rowing, and everything else, along with healthful food, to do the trick. Good luck to you!

ANNA B.—Yes, I do love "pretty folks", and I quite sympathize with your desire to stay pretty as long as you can. There is no reason why you should get "old and wrinkled" for forty years to come and by that time you will make a pretty old lady just as you made a pretty young lady. Arm and chest exercises will help to increase your bust. Practice deep breathing diligently several times a day, keep the shoulders down and the chest up. That is, do not throw the shoulders back square, which gives a very bad and ugly line, but lift the chest and drop the shoulders. Circular massage, very gentle, with cocoa butter, may also help to increase the size of your bust. I think it probable when a little more time has elapsed since you nursed your children that your breasts may come back to normal. Of course for your children's health you should nurse them as they come, and your breasts will be just as pretty as if you did not. Give yourself plenty of nourishment, especially milk. Read all I have said about large pores in the preceding answers, and use a little tincture of benzoin in the water with which you wash your face. If you live where you can have rain-water to wash in, that is what you should use. Wash the face thoroughly at night, and after rinsing and drying rub in a little cold cream. I do not mean that you should make yourself greasy and unpleasant to look upon, but that you should apply a little cold cream with your finger-tips, and rub it until all is absorbed by the skin, or if not then wipe off any that remains. You can dust a little powder on, if you desire. Do the same before going out in the daytime. Yes, indeed, you need outdoor air; if you stay in all the time, your skin will show the difference. Here is a good astringent to apply lightly to the skin after bathing and rinsing. It will help to close the pores. Be sure they are perfectly clean when you use it.

Orange-flower Astringents

Orange-flower water, one ounce; hamamelis water, 15 drops; tincture of benzoin, 15 drops.

Be sure you do not dry your skin with too frequent applications of this. Watch your skin and you can judge. Be careful what you eat, how you eat it, and don't forget that the bowels must be looked after. I am glad you have such pretty children, but quite agree with you that they need a pretty mother also, and I am sure they not only have one but will continue to have one. Be sure to take a body bath daily, even if it is only a quick rub with a cloth, while standing on a folded towel. The fact that your hair breaks off, and is dull, would indicate that your whole physical condition is a little below par. Feed yourself up, get plenty of sleep (if possible—you see, I remember those two babies), drink lots of water, eat fruit, vegetables, cereals and cream, etc. The finger-nail condition indicates the same thing. The body is not receiving the building elements it needs. In any case, keep your nails cut the length of the finger—just to the edge and rounded as the edge is, and they will not break up so easily. But your main job is to look after your general physical condition and build that up. I should bob my little girl's hair. She will have healthier hair and more of it, later, if you do.

Address all letters containing questions to
KATHERINE BOOTH, care COMFORT,
AUGUSTA, MAINE.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29.)

that is impossible. Don't think your letters were not appreciated for every one was, but there is only one of me.

The climate in Arizona is fine for T. B. in both summer and winter. The winters are wonderful I think. We had no snow last winter and it didn't rain very much but we do not have much rain here at any time. It rains more some winters than others. The land is good and most anything will grow. Work has been hard to get around Peoria but things seem to be picking up now. We have been here one year so you see I don't know everything about the country.

Peoria is a little town fourteen mils from Phoenix. We lived in the desert three months with neighbors who were homesteading a desert claim. We had to haul water a distance of three and one-half miles.

I am much better than when we came here; then I weighed 105 pounds and now I weigh 116. I was 20 years old last October, the twenty-fifth. How many have my birthday? I married young and have been happy.

To every sister who doesn't hear from me, take this as your answer.

With love and best wishes to everybody, I am,
Your friend, MARY WINEGAR.

Best Ways of Doing Things Around the Home

Keep lime-water tightly closed as it absorbs carbonic gas from the air.

To make fowl more tender, soak over night in skim-milk.—MERRYLIPS, Minn.

To remove grease spots from wash goods, rub well with lard before wetting.—MRS. C. B. BUKES, Enid, Okla.

Use paper clips for fastening back window draperies at night. This lets more air into the room and does not wrinkle the curtains.

Make wash-cloths from worn underwear, with a crocheted edge.—MRS. JOHN L. GEE, Carrier Mills, Ill.

Alcohol will remove indelible pencil marks. Soak material in small quantity of it and as it evaporates the stain will vanish.—MARIE, Spokane, Wash.

To keep frosting from becoming hard, put a teaspoon of vinegar in it just before putting it on the cake. —MRS. CHAS. BARRY, Sparta, Mich.

After frying onions, wash frying-pan and heat a handful of salt in it. Pour out while hot and the onion flavor will go with the salt.—FARMER, Bogota, Tenn.

To remove iodine stains, wet spot with cold water and hold it over a hot stove. When the heat strikes it the stain will disappear. Wash as usual.

To clean carpets when you haven't a vacuum cleaner, sprinkle a thick coating of starch over carpets and work in with broom. Let stand for two days, sprinkle with coarse salt and sweep until starch and salt are removed. You will be pleased with the result.

A white stocking makes a good cover for the sleeve board.—LEACY BUHRMAN, Lantz, Md.

Let me tell you how I keep my bread sponge warm on cold winter nights. I stand a box on end and in it put a lantern, turned down low. Set sponge on top of box and cover it. Your sponge will be warm next morning, no matter how cold the wind was during the night. Use every precaution so far as fire is concerned. —A COMFORT SISTER, Mellette Co., S. Dak.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 41.)

Have A Clear, Rosy, Velvety Complexion

ALL THE WORLD ADMIRES A PERFECT COMPLEXION

Don't doubt—because I give you a guarantee which dispels doubt. I refer you to women who testify to the most astonishing and gratifying results. Your complexion may be of the muddiest, it may be hideously disfigured with pimples, blackheads, whiteheads, red spots, enlarged pores, wrinkles and other blemishes. You may have tried a dozen remedies. I do not make an exception of any of these blemishes. I can give you a complexion, soft, clear, velvety beyond your fondest dream. And I do it in a few days. My statements are sober, serious, conscientious promises. I want you to believe, for I know what my wonderful treatment will do.

YOU HAVE NEVER HEARD OF ANOTHER METHOD LIKE MINE, SCIENTIFIC—DIFFERENT.

My method is absolutely different. It has to be to warrant my statements. You know that. I get away from all known methods of cosmetics, lotions, salves, soaps, ointments, plasters, bandages, masks, vapor sprays, massage, rollers, or any implements. There is nothing to take. No diet, fasting or any interference whatsoever with your accustomed way of life. My treatment is absolutely safe. It cannot injure the most delicate skin. It is pleasant, even delightful. No messy, greasy, inconvenient applications. Only a few minutes a day required. Yet, results are astounding.

I want to tell you in detail about this wonderful treatment. So send for my booklet. It is free. You are not obligated. Send no money. Just get the facts, the indisputable proofs. This is the one method that has restored to beauty the complexions of tens of thousands of women. Don't say your case is an exception. You have my unqualified promise. You have nothing to lose—everything to gain. Send to Dorothy Ray, 14 E. Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Illinois.

Mail This Coupon For Free Booklet Today!

DOROTHY RAY 14 E. Jackson Boulevard Suite 41, Chicago, Illinois

Free and without obligation send me your booklet "Complexion Beautiful" telling of your scientific, harmless method of cleansing and beautifying the complexion.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

Silk Embroidered

SUIT-EFFECT Dress

LESTER ROSE CO'S Exclusive Creation

"Style Always a Season Ahead"

This charming ONE-PIECE DRESS looks like a SUIT. It's the latest style-creation of America's greatest designer. Here are youthful lines for women of all ages and figures! And such a wonderful bargain, we offer it on approval, NO MONEY in advance!

Twill Weave SERGE

Dame Fashion says "wear this tuxedo style in 1922." Next season you will find this suit-dress at $25 to $50 in big city fashion shops. Nowhere else can you secure this exclusive style at our low price.

Here Is Biggest Bargain of 1922

We have smashed the price on this elegant Dress to advertise LESTER-ROSE bargains to 50,000 new customers. We positively guarantee you will find it the biggest value for the money.

$3.95 Postage FREE!

Revers, Vestee, Pockets, Sleeves and front of Skirt are all beautifully SILK EMBROIDERED in harmonious colors and gorgeous pattern shown. Silk braid edges Revers, Collar, Pockets and top of Vestee. Rich embroidery extends entirely around "coat" and skirt. Girdle defines waist line; then terminates in long streamers. Invisible closing under left Revers; snap fasteners. Sleeves are latest BELL-SHAPE.

Get Yours First!

Don't wait—write immediately while this money-saving offer remains in effect. Order by No. 5395. Misses' sizes 14, 16, 18. Women's sizes 32 to 46 inch. Navy blue only.

Full Cut Elegantly Tailored.

DON'T SEND ONE CENT!

Simply WRITE for it—SEND NO MONEY! State name, address, size. Pay $3.95 for dress when delivered. We pay the postage! A postal will do. WRITE TODAY!

LESTER-ROSE CO. Dept. 272, CHICAGO

GIVEN

Look and wear like Solid Gold. Guaranteed 5 years. All your free for selling 20 Perfumed Sachets at 10c each. Write R. MORE CO., 336 W. 63rd., Dept R27 Chicago

WARNING! Say "Bayer" when you buy Aspirin.

Unless you see the name "Bayer" on tablets, you are not getting genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians over 22 years and proved safe by millions for

Colds	Headache	Rheumatism
Toothache	Neuralgia	Neuritis
Earache	Lumbago	Pain, Pain

Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proper directions.

Handy "Bayer" boxes of 12 tablets—Also bottles of 24 and 100—Druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

When Children Cough Use Musterole

When you are wakened in the dead of night by that warning, croupy cough, get up and get the jar of Musterole.

Rub the clean, white ointment gently over the child's throat and chest, and then go back to bed.

Musterole penetrates the skin with a warming tingle and goes right to the seat of trouble.

Will not blister like the old-fashioned mustard plaster and it is not messy to apply.

Made from pure oil of mustard, Musterole takes the kink out of stiff necks, makes sore throats well, stops croupy coughs and colds.

Sold by druggists everywhere, in jars and tubes, 35c and 65c; hospita lsize, $3.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER

TALKING MACHINE FREE

A REAL MACHINE WHICH REPRODUCES TALKING, SINGING AND DANCE MUSIC PERFECTLY

This is the old reliable company—we treat you right.

Plays any size or make disc record. Strongly and durably made, will give you pleasure for years. Fully guaranteed. We give machine with record free for selling only 40 packets of Garden Spot Seeds for us at 10c per pack. No money required, WE TRUST YOU. Write for seeds today. When sold, send $4.00 collected and Talking Machine, complete, is yours.

We pay the postage on everything.

Lancaster County Seed Co., Sta. 21, PARADISE, PA.

$1.97

GUARANTEED WATCH

To advertise our business, and introduce our bargain price list of Elgin Watches, we will send this elegant guaranteed watch by Parcel Post C. O. D. $1.97 ONLY, nickel silver plated case, stem wind and stem set, genuine American lever movement, fully guaranteed a reliable timekeeper. Give your full P. O. address, box or St. No., and watch will be sent at once. Pay your Postmaster $1.97 and it is yours. Satisfaction guaranteed. Boston Jewelry Co., 29 W. Adams St. B 31, Chicago, Ill.

FREE

All this jewelry is yours for selling only 6 Boxes Mentho-Nova at 25 cts. Needed in every household. Sells easily. Order today. When sold return $1.50 and all 6 pieces are yours.

U. S. SUPPLY CO., Box 329, Greenville, Pa.

CIVIL SERVICE Courses for Clerk-Carrier, Rural Carrier, Ry. Mail Clerk, P. M., etc. Unexcelled $15 courses only $8. Sample lesson, illus. catalog FREE.

CIVIL SERVICE CORRES. SCHOOL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Comfort's Home Lawyer

Through the columns of this department subscribers may have free advice from our eminent legal adviser on all questions of law except divorce matters.

Address Home Lawyer, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Sign your true name and give your address. Name will not be published.

MRS. T. E. C., Iowa.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving a widow and children, his widow would receive all such personal property in his hands as the head of the family as would be exempt from execution and in addition thereto one-third of the real and personal estate, the balance of the estate going in equal shares to his children, the descendants of any deceased child taking their parent's share; we do not think the widow's children by a former marriage would have any interest in the estate, unless some provision was made for them by will.

R. W., Washington.—We do not think the fact, that the man you mention reversed the order of his two given names at the time of procuring his marriage license, would affect the validity of his marriage, if he had been accustomed to signing his name in this way, and if there was no fraudulent intent on his part to confuse his identity with some other person.

MRS. C. P., Minnesota.—We are of the opinion that when suit is brought upon a claim of any nature, if the same is prosecuted to judgment, such judgment will be rendered for the amount of the recovery, together with interest and taxable costs, the total of these amounts making up the amount of the judgment to be enforced against the judgment debtor, and, after collection, the judgment creditor should receive the full amount of the judgment, from which of course it will be necessary for him to pay whatever legal or other expenses he has had in connection therewith.

MRS. W. M. K., Alabama.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that a married woman is entitled to the management and control of her separate property, but she cannot alienate or mortgage her real estate without the husband's signature to the deed or mortgage; she is not entitled to compensation for her services from her husband, but is entitled to the full control of her earnings from others; she is entitled to be supported by her husband, and can enforce this right by the proper court action or proceeding; we think, however, the husband would be entitled to receive the money for the sale of his livestock or produce, even though the wife helped raise or produce the same.

MRS. A. F., Iowa.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will and leaving a surviving widow and children, the widow is entitled to homestead rights and to all such personal property which was in the husband's hands as the head of the family and exempt by law from levy under execution, and in addition thereto one-third of the real and personal estate. We think the widow is entitled to the guardianship of her minor children.

E. H., Missouri.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the consent of the parents or guardian is necessary for the marriage of females under 18 years of age.

MRS. W. W., Pennsylvania.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the real and personal estate of a decedent, whether male or female, remaining after payment of all just debts and legal charges, which shall not have been sold, or disposed of by will, or otherwise limited by marriage settlement, shall be divided where decedent leaves spouse surviving and one child only, one-half to such surviving child and one-half to the surviving spouse; we do not think a married woman can, by will, bar her husband from a share in her estate; we do not think it necessary that a will be drawn by a lawyer but it must be legally drawn and executed before two competent witnesses, the testator must possess testamentary mental capacity and must not be under undue influence.

MRS. C. E. L., Arkansas.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving no child nor descendant, his widow would be entitled to receive dower of a one-half interest for life in the real estate, and one-half of the personal estate absolutely, if the property be a new acquisition; but if the estate be ancestral, her interest is limited to one-third the personalty, and a one-third interest for life in the real estate.

MRS. J. H. C., Missouri.—We can form no opinion as to which way the court will decide a case from your statements as to the number of witnesses testifying on the one side; we think the case should be determined according to the principles of law from the best evidence presented before the court. The number of witnesses testifying on either side would not, of course, be a determining factor in the case, unless their testimony was of a convincing nature.

M. J., Virginia.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving a surviving widow and children by her, such widow, in addition to her homestead rights and certain small allowances from the personal property, would be entitled to receive dower of a one-third interest for life in his real estate, and one-third of the personal estate absolutely, after payment of debts and expenses, the balance of the estate going in equal shares to his children, the descendants of any deceased child taking their parent's share.

M. F., Kansas.—We thing the mortgagee of your property can enforce his lien upon all property covered by his mortgage and that the exemptions allowed by the bankruptcy law would only apply to such property as the bankrupt may own not subject to the mortgage.

MRS. D. E. P., New Jersey.—We do not think you are liable to punishment and arrest because the husband of the jealous woman you mention calls upon your family, unless you alienate his affections from his wife, or unless you are guilty of improper conduct with him; we think you should not take her conduct too seriously if she is of a jealous disposition.

A. B. C., North Dakota.—If, as we understand from your communication, the property you mention belongs to your mother, we think she is entitled to its management and control without any interference from your father, but that she cannot bar him from an interest in her estate in case he survives her; during her lifetime we think she should assume control of her own property and receive the income therefrom. Perhaps if she refused to support him, he would be less exacting.

C. R., Louisiana.—Under the laws of Arkansas, we think delinquent taxes are subject to a 25 percent. penalty and 10 percent. interest and costs, and that lands returned as delinquent for taxes may be redeemed within two years after such forfeiture.

T. J. D., Colorado.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that action for the recovery of lands which have been in the actual occupancy of another under a connected title deducible of record from the state, the United States or from any officer or person authorized to sell for taxes, or on execution or under order or decree of court, must be brought within seven years after the possession has been taken; but if the title is acquired after taking possession, then the limitation runs from the date of acquiring such title; but as to persons under disability, the time is extended for two years after the disability is removed.

MRS. J. F., Oklahoma.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man leaving no will and leaving no child nor descendant, his widow, in addition to her homestead rights, if any, and certain small allowance, is entitled to receive one-half of the estate, the balance going to his parents, brothers, sisters, or their descendants, depending upon who is left.

MRS. J. C. McN., Texas.—Under the laws of New Mexico, we are of the opinion that all property owned by the husband or wife before marriage, and all acquired afterwards by gift, devise or descent, is the separate property of each, respectively; and that all other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife is community property; the husband has the management and control of the personal property of the community, other than testamentary, as he has of his separate estate; the wife may also convey her separate estate, but the husband and wife must join in the deeds and mortgages affecting real estate which is community property; upon the death of either spouse, without a will, separate property descends, one-fourth to the survivor and three-fourths to the children, the descendants of any deceased child taking their parent's share; if decedent leaves no children nor descendants the entire separate estate goes to the surviving spouse, unless otherwise disproved by will; upon the death of the wife, the entire community property belongs to the husband; upon the death of the husband, one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to his testatmentary disposition; if he dies intestate, the remaining half goes one-fourth to the widow and the remaining three-eighths of the estate to his children in equal shares, the descendants of any deceased child taking their parent's share.

MRS. G. A. H., Missouri.—Under the laws of Oklahoma, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving no child nor descendant, his estate would go one-half to his surviving widow, and the remaining half to his father or mother, or if he leaves both father and mother, to them in equal shares.

J. K., Iowa.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that in order to bind the real estate of the woman who died it would be necessary to hold something in writing, as otherwise, in the absence of a will, her real estate will descend according to the intestacy laws of your state; we can form no opinion as to the advisability of your signing a correction deed of the property you mention without full knowledge of the facts in connection therewith.

W. E. D., New Mexico.—We think the law requires that the will left by the man who died be probated and his property disposed of in accordance therewith; we think it the duty of the executor appointed in the will to collect all overdue claims of the estate as soon as he qualifies.

MRS. F. I., Texas.—Under the laws of your state, and upon your statements, we are of the opinion that the man you mention can be compelled to support his wife, and if he cannot be located his property can be sold and the proceeds thereof used for her support, in the proper court action brought for that purpose.

Big Men of the Armament Conference

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 10.)

ment of the monarchy a republican government for all China was organized with its seat at Pekin, the imperial capital, but the southern provinces rebelled and set up a republican government of their own. Besides the war that is raging between these two rival governments the outlying districts of the country are being ravaged by numerous bands of brigands led by local military chieftains—much after the fashion of Mexican insurrectos—so that China is in a deplorably chaotic state.

Each of these two governments sent a delegation, but the Armament Conference, not wishing to countenance a division of China, admitted only the delegates from the older northern government and recognized them as representing China in its entirety. They are keen, interesting men well versed in world affairs, all educated in American colleges and speaking perfect English. The four northern delegates are:

W. W. YEN, Minister of Foreign Affairs, is a graduate of the University of Virginia. After returning to China he became Professor of English in St. John's University at Shanghai, and English editor of the Commercial Press. Later he served as Second Secretary of the Chinese Legation at Washington, then as Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and next as Minister to Germany and Denmark and remained at his post in Berlin until China entered the World War on the side of the Allies.

V. K. WELLINGTON KOO, former Minister to the United States, is a graduate of Columbia University, New York. He has been Secretary to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Minister to Mexico, and headed the Chinese delegation at the Paris Peace Conference. He is the youngest member of the Chinese delegation at Washington.

SAO-KE ALFRED SZE, present Minister to the United States, is a graduate of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. He has been a director of several railroads in China, and has served his government in various capacities, including Minister to Great Britain.

CHUNG-HUI WANG, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Pekin, studied law at the Yale Law School, New Haven, Conn. He has traveled widely in Europe, and has held many important public offices, among them Minister of Justice. He has been called "one of the most promising intellectual leaders of the new era in China."

Dutch Delegation

H. A. VAN KARNEBEEK, Minister of Foreign Affairs, in which office during the World War he performed the difficult task of preserving Holland's neutrality. He has been Mayor of The Hague, and was chosen President of the first session of the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva. He heads Holland's delegation to the Armament Conference.

F. BEELAERTS VAN BLOKLAND, Chief of the Department of Diplomatic Affairs in the Foreign Ministry, was formerly Minister to China.

E. MORESCO, is Vice-President of the Netherlands Indian Council, and formerly was Secretary-General of the Department of Colonial Affairs.

WILLIAM DE BEAUFORT, Minister to Greece, has served as diplomatic representative of Holland in many countries, including Japan, China, France, Belgium, and the United States to which he has had three different appointments, the last as Minister to Washington in 1918.

Holland, because of her extensive colonial possessions in the East Indies which largely exceed the mother country in area and population, is deeply interested in the Pacific policies to be acted on by the Conference.

Belgian Delegate

BARON E. DE CARTIER DE MARCHIENNE, Belgian Ambassador to the United States, represents Belgium at the Armament Conference. During his long career in the diplomatic service he has held appointments to Austria, Serbia, Brazil, Japan, China, France and Great Britain.

Portuguese Delegate

VISCOUNT D'ALTE, Portuguese Minister to the United States, represents Portugal at the Armament Conference. He is an able, though reticent and unassuming man, as may be gathered from the fact that his photograph, which is reproduced to illustrate this article, is the first he has had taken for twenty years.

Belgium and Portugal are specially interested in the program laid out for the action of the Armament Conference because of their large colonial possessions, mostly in Africa.

OH BOYS-GIRLS GREAT SPORT

THROW YOUR VOICE

Into a Barrel, under the Table, Back of a Door, Into a TRUNK, DESK in SCHOOL, Any Old Place. Great FUN fooling the TEACHER, Friends, EVERYBODY with Our

CLAXOPHONE

1919

Which Sets On your Tongue Unseen, it NEVER FAILS Anybody, Int. Birds etc. The CLAXOPHONE, with Full Instructions, a Set Of SECRET-WRITING TRICK, (beats Invs., Ink) a MAGIC-DIAL Trick, (a Great Money maker) ALSO, This Marvelous Novelty-

NEW SCIENTIFIC WONDER "X-RAY" CURIO

With IT you Apparently See thru Clothes, See the bones in your Fingers, Lead in Pencil, etc. No end of fun

3 FOR 25c. BIG FUN

WE SEND ALL ABOVE Novelties by pre-paid Mail for 10c. 3 For 25 cts. A nice Souvenir Free with each 25 ct. order.

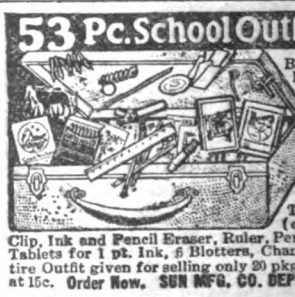
CLAXO TRICK CO. DEP. X-C, NEW HAVEN, CT.

WE GIVE The BEST and MOST for The MONEY.

FREE WRIST WATCH

Handsome, guaranteed time keeper, given for selling only 40 packs of vegetable seeds at 10c per large pack. Easily sold —EARN BIG MONEY OR PREMIUMS. Get sample lot today. Send no money. WE TRUST YOU till seeds are sold.

AMERICAN SEED CO. Box A-32, LANCASTER, PA.

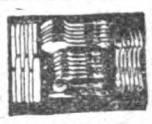


VIOLIN FREE

Beautiful Violin, richly polished wood, well finished finger board and tail piece, full set strings, fine bow, box of rosin, and Instruction Book, for selling 30 packages Colored Postcards at 10 cts a package. Write for Postcards today.

COLUMBIA NOVELTY CO., Dept. 627, EAST BOSTON, MASS.

53 Pc. School Outfit FREE



Big Outfit consists of large metal trimmed School Case, Famous Donkey Game, Nail Puzzle, Ring Puzzle, 25 fine assorted Post Cards, Box 8 colored Wax Crayons, Composition Book, Writing Tablet, three Pencils (eraser tips) Pencil Clip, Ink and Pencil Eraser, Ruler, Penholder, 6 Pens, Ink Tablets for 1 pt. Ink, 6 Blotters, Chamois Penwiper—Entire Outfit given for selling only 20 pkgs. fancy Post Cards at 15c. Order Now. SUN MFG. CO. DEPT 225 CHICAGO for selling only 32 Pkgs. Bluette, Our Famous wash Bluing at 15c or 48 Pkgs. Sachet Perfume at 10c. Order choice. Both fast sellers. You'll be surprised how easy it is to earn this Fine True Shooting 22 Cal. Rifle. Guaranteed.

A REAL .22 RIFLE HAMILTON ACTUALLY GIVEN AWAY

CHICAGO BLUING WKS., 1920 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 701, CHICAGO

SILVEROID SET GIVEN

26-piece, full size table set in popular Daisy pattern. Given for selling 40 packets of Garden Seed at 10c. We trust you with seed. Big Premium List. Write today for seed, stating varieties wanted. DuVernet Seed Co., Dept. 32, Albany, Ga.

This pretty band GIVEN for five names of your neighbors and ten cents to pay postage &c.

WEDDING RING

Gem City Supply Co., QUINCY, ILL.

WRIST WATCH GIVEN

Dandy Wrist Watch guaranteed 5 years given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10 cts. each. Order 20, when sold send the $2.00 and choose wrist watch or other valuable prize according to big list sent with pictures. RAY ART CO. Dept. 18, Chicago

CARDS, Dice, Magic Goods, Novelties, Catalog Free. D. M. SMYTHE Co., Newark, Mo.

FREE PROFESSIONAL TONE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

and lessons sent on free trial. Violin, Tenor Banjo, Hawaiian Guitar, Ukulele, Mandolin, Cornet, Banjo Mandolin, Banjo Ukulele, Guitar, Banjo Guitar or Banjo. Wonderful new copyrighted system of teaching note music by mail. Four lessons will teach you several pieces. Over 100,000 successful players. Do not miss this free trial offer. Write for booklet. No obligations.

SLINGERLAND SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Inc., 1815 Orchard Street, Dept. 121, Chicago, Illinois

ELGINS ON CREDIT

GREATEST Watch Value Since The War! A New, Genuine Elgin; Thin Model, 12 or 16 size; complete in 20-year gold-filled case. A beautiful $20 Elgin, SPECIAL This Month, ONLY

$14.95

We Have Trusted Wage Earners Everywhere for more than 20 years, and we will trust you; and that all our friends may have adv ntage of this new offer, we have made the terms Only $2 a Month.

But Write Today for full details and Big Free Catalog of hundreds of Bargains at new prices. SEND NO MONEY — just your name and address.

HARRIS-GOAR CO.
Dept. 195, KANSAS CITY, MO.

A NEW WAY TO GET YOUR CLOTHES ABSOLUTELY FREE

and Make Big Money during your spare time—something different, better, bigger, more liberal than any offer ever made. Lower prices — better clothes—bigger cash profits—express or postage paid on everything.

DOUBLE PAY

Free Clothes and Cash Profits Besides. You can easily earn $30.00 cash, extra, every week during your spare time, taking orders for our made-to-measure clothes. We don't ask you to use your cash profits for your own clothes. That's not our way of doing business. Ours is a new and better plan.

Fifty-six stylish, real cloth samples—FREE colored fashion plates; inside wholesale prices —everything FREE. Just drop us a line today and we will send complete outfit FREE.

SPENCER MEAD CO., B-215 Chicago

MAKE MONEY AT HOME

YOU can earn from $1 to $2 an hour in your spare time writing show cards. Quickly and easily learned by our new simple method. No canvassing or soliciting, we teach you how, guarantee you steady work at home and pay you cash each week. Full particulars and booklet free.

AMERICAN SHOW CARD SCHOOL
238 Ryrie Building Toronto, Canada

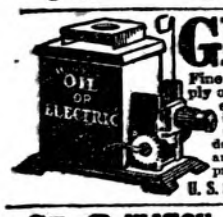
FORDS run 34 Miles on Gallon of Gasoline

Wonderful new carburetor. Guaranteed to reduce gasoline bills from one-half to one-third and increase power of motors from 30 to 50%. Start easy in coldest weather.

Sent on 30 DAYS' TRIAL

Fits any car. Attach yourself. Fords make as high as 34 miles to gallon. Other cars show proportionate saving. Send make of car and take advantage of our special 30-day trial offer. Agents Wanted.

AIR FRICTION CARBURETOR CO.
3330 Madison Street Dayton, Ohio



BIG SLEEPING DOLL AND CRADLE FREE

Doll measures 16 in. tall, has Closing Eyes, Movable Arms and Legs, Turning Head, Completely Dressed. Has Hat, Shoes and Stockings. The Cradle is made of wood, and is strong and substantial. We ship both premiums free for selling only 25 large pck. of beautiful post cards at 10c per pack.

JONES MFG. CO.,
Dept. 60, Attleboro, Mass.

GIVEN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE

Fine moving picture machine with supply of films. Easy to operate, by oil or electricity. Free for selling only 12 boxes of Mentho-Nova. Sell at 25c a box, return the $3 and receive this dandy premium. Satisfaction guaranteed. Order now. Hundreds of other premiums and big Cash Commission.

U. S. SUPPLY CO., Dept. 850, Greenville, Pa.

WATCH, RING AND CHAIN GIVEN

We positively give a genuine American Stem Wind and Set Watch, beautifully designed case, warranted time-keeper, 5-year guarantee; Sparkling Set or Plain Ring all for selling 25 of our easy to sell Jewelry articles at 10c each. When sold send $2.50 & we'll send Watch & Ring. Name Supply Co., 420 W. 59th Street, Dept. 105, Chicago

FREE

Take your choice, either RIFLE which shoots lead and toys or American Watch, stem wind and set. Either given for selling 40 packets Garden Spot Seeds at 10c a packet. Write.

Lancaster Co. Seed Co., Sta. 129, PARADISE, PA.

Wrist Watch Given

for selling 40 big packets "Best by Test" garden seed at 10c. Order 40, when sold send $4 and choose wrist watch, cash commission or other prize in catalog sent with seeds. We trust you

The Jefferson Farms, Dept. D, Albany, Ga.

VETERINARY INFORMATION

Subscribers are invited to write to this department asking for any information desired relative to the treatment of animal troubles. Questions will be answered in these columns free by an eminent veterinarian. Describe the trouble fully, sign full name and give your address; direct all correspondence to the Veterinary Department, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

No attention will be given any inquiry which lacks the sender's full name and address, but we will print only initials if so requested.

ECZEMA.—I have a poodle dog that breaks out with yellow festered blisters. The blisters run and cause the hair to mat. The dog seems well. MRS. B. B.

A.—Make the dog live out of doors so far as possible and allow only one small feed each evening. Do not feed cornmeal or potatoes. If the dog is fat, give it a dose of Epsom salts once a week to reduce it and increase exercise. Apply compound sulphur ointment to the sores as often as seems to be necessary.

GARGET.—I have a cow that freshened last May. When taken off pasture a few days ago she failed in her milk. When it sets a day the milk tastes old and slightly bitter. She was foundered on shelled oats two years ago. Is the milk all right to use? MRS. L. S.

A.—The milk is unfit for use when changed in consistency as described. Garget (mammitis) is the cause and such a cow is not profitable. We should therefore advise you to dry off the milk secretion and fit the animal for the butcher, if you think that will pay. As she was foundered and has chronic disease of the udder, we do not think it likely that treatment would succeed.

WEAK SOW.—What is the trouble with my six-months'-old sow? She goes down on her knees, gets up and goes down as though she were weak in her hind quarters. She coughs when it is damp. Is it worms? MRS. M. B.

A.—Lack of exercise and overfeeding with corn tend to cause paralysis. Turn the sow out for active daily exercise. Give her four ounces of Epsom salts in slop or warm water to move her bowels, then keep them active. Allow her free access to clover or alfalfa hay, slaked lime, wood ashes and wood or corn-cob charcoal. Feed middlings, ground barley or rye, wheat bran and tankage from a self-feeder. Worms are not a probable cause.

MAMMITIS.—I have a cow that will not give milk out of one of her teats, and the next one to it is drying. Can you tell me the cause and remedy? MRS. L. M. B.

A.—Mammitis (garget) has caused the conditions mentioned and as a treatment will not be likely to do any good we should advise you to dry off the milk secretion in the other quarters and fit the cow for slaughter. If you do not care to do that then let a calf nurse.

INDIGESTION.—Please tell me what to do for my horse. His kidneys do not act often enough—not more than once or twice a day. Sometimes he seems sore over his kidneys, otherwise he is all right. The urine has a bad color. F. E. N.

A.—Indigestion is the cause of the symptoms you describe and there is nothing wrong with the kidneys. See that the horse is never allowed to stand without work or active outdoor exercise for a single day. Allow him a roomy box-stall when in the stable or turn him loose in a shed when not at work. Add one-sixth part of wheat bran, by weight, to the ration of oats. Add roots, especially carrots or parsnips. Until the bowels respond, dissolve two ounces of Glauber salts in hot water and add it to the drinking water once daily. If the urine does not then soon clear up, stop the Glauber salts and mix one teaspoonful of boric acid in the feed night and morning until the urine becomes normal.

BITTER MILK.—The milk from my Jersey cow is very bitter. Just before it turns sour and if it sets a little while a layer of water separates the cream from the curd. Last spring, after freshening, the milk was bitter after being cooked for cocoa. She eats wheat hay, has plenty of water and salt. MRS. A. H. R.

A.—Bacteria in the milk utensils sometimes cause such conditions in milk, therefore you should see that all vessels are scrupulously cleansed, scalded and sun dried. Also set the milk in a clean, dustless place. Do not allow the cow to drink surface water or any water that is impure. Set a sample of milk from each quarter of the udder in a separate sterilized bottle, labeling each so that the quarter from which each sample came may be known. One quarter may be giving abnormal milk which contaminates all the milk. If so, the secretion in that quarter should be dried off. Such a cow should be tested with tuberculin, as tuberculosis is a possibility. If she reacts it will be necessary to dispose of her as prescribed by state law. Write again, if necessary, after you have examined the milk from each quarter. Meanwhile give her a pound dose of Epsom salts in three pints of warm water sweetened with molasses. Give it very slowly and carefully. Follow with a heaping tablespoonful of a mixture of two parts of powdered wood charcoal and one part of granular hyposulphite of soda in each feed.

MANGE.—Can you give me a good remedy for my hound? I have doctored him for scratches and have tried almost everything but he doesn't get any better. He has big red spots and the hair comes off. His feet are swollen and with yellow blisters between the toes. A. S.

A.—The dog is probably affected with parasitic mange; but eczema is, of course, a possibility. When the disease becomes chronic and affects much of the body it is difficult to eradicate and some cases prove incurable. Clip the dog and then tub him in hot water, lather him with tincture of green soap and scrub perfectly to remove all scales and scabs. Then dry thoroughly. Afterwards rub in compound sulphur ointment every three days, or use a proprietary mange cure for dogs which you can buy at the drug store. Put boots on the feet to keep the dog from biting and licking these parts. If the treatment advised is not effective, write again later. It may be added that the dog should live an active outdoor life and have only one small meal each evening. Do not feed cornmeal or potatoes.

BOILS.—I have a Holstein that has never been sick, but has a trouble that worries me. It starts at the top of the teat where it joins the udder and has a raised plane just like the end to a thimble. It gets very sore and the teat cannot be milked. It cracks, bleeds and pus flows from it. It is like this for one week and then a heavy crust forms and at the end of two weeks it is nearly cured. As soon as it leaves one teat it follows to another, until all four have had it. Then it comes back to the others, only worse. M. W.

A.—The boils in such cases are due to germs (streptococci) infecting one new place after another by traveling in the connective tissue. The infection may be spread from one cow to another by the milker's hands, therefore an affected cow should be kept isolated and milked last or by one who does not handle the other cows. Treat, by twice daily, for at least five minutes, immersing the affected teats in a hot 1-to-1,000 solution of chinosol, or in hot water containing all the boric acid it will dissolve. Then dry gently and rub a little one per cent. yellow oxid of mercury ointment into each sore place. When a boil ruptures, paint it twice daily with a saturated solution of permanganate of potash.

PIGMENT SORE.—I have a young cat that has a very peculiar black scab on his upper lip on each side of his nose. It will gradually grow from a speck to a piece almost as large as a dime, then drops off, bringing the hair with it, leaving no sign of a sore but new hair underneath. L. W.

A.—The scab is congealed liquid exudate containing pigment, the cause of which it would be impossible to state confidently. In some animals such a condition or growth might take the form of a melanotic or pigment tumor, and that disease (melanosis) is cancerous and incurable. Cleanse the part and perfectly remove the scab; then paint the affected skin with tincture of iron and afterward rub in a little subnitrate of bismuth once or twice daily if you notice that the scab is rising again. Write us later if further advice is required.

FITS.—I have a cow seven years old that appears to be in good health, giving a large flow of milk. She takes spells, something like a fit, of falling head forward and muscles working all over. The attack lasts about five minutes and in fifteen minutes she is up as if nothing had happened. Can she be cured of them? MRS. A. C.

A.—The cow evidently has epileptic fits and there is no certain remedy for epilepsy. They may come on less often if you have her take outdoor exercise every day and keep her bowels relaxed. Do not feed over one pound of concentrated feed (meals) for each three and one-half pounds of milk yielded daily. It is possible that heavy feeding helps to induce fits. Bromide of potash in half-ounce dose in water at time of fit may help.

MANGE.—My cat has lately appeared with scabs almost the size of a dime covering her head. Her hair comes off in small places. The cat appears to be in a healthy condition, running about and eating as usual. E. W.

A.—The symptoms indicate parasitic mange. Scrub the affected parts clean with soap and hot water and remove the scabs. Do not apply carbolic acid or coal tar dip of any kind as they are poisonous to cats. Compound sulphur ointment, to be bought at the drug store, may suffice as a remedy. Apply it every three days. Kerosene is the popular treatment and is effective in many instances. Write again later if we can be of further assistance.

SWAMP FEVER.—Please tell me what ailed my four-year-old mare. She appeared to be swollen all over before the colt was foaled. She had no milk. The colt seemed to be fully developed but could not get up. The mare's appetite was good for a few days then she refused to eat and her joints would pop with every step. She lived three weeks. W. L.

A.—We cannot give a perfectly confident opinion as an examination would, of course, be necessary for that, but we think it probable that the mare was afflicted with swamp fever, for which there is no cure.

Poultry Farming for Women

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28.)

takes at least twenty-five chickens the first week to make such a "mother" warm enough to keep them comfortably, and it depends entirely on the animal heat from their own bodies.

As soon as they are placed in a brooder some fine gravel or very finely-cracked poultry grit should be strewed about. I like the gravel that is sold for caged birds for the first two or three days, as it is bright and attracts the little fellows to pick it up, and in this way they get the material that is needed to enable the gizzard to grind feed when it is given to them. After the thirty-six hours' fast, put a small pan of sour skim-milk before them and, to teach them how to feed, pick up one or two and dip their bills into the milk. If a few commence to eat, the others will follow suit. Of course, the milk, like the water that is given to chickens, must be put in dishes that are partly covered to prevent them from getting into it. For the sour milk we use small fruit saucers with a strip of board across the top, so that there is only a small opening left on each side of the dish.

At the end of half an hour the milk is taken away and two hours later they have their first real meal, which consists of stale bread which has been dried in the oven and put through a meat chopper. One cup of this is mixed with two eggs which have been hard boiled, cooled and chopped, shell and all. About one-third of that mixture is poured along a narrow board and given to fifty chicks. If any is left at the end of half an hour, it is removed. The following day, sour milk and the above mash is alternated at intervals of two hours. After that, the sour milk is left before them all the time, the mash given in small quantities every two hours.

On the fourth day they have water given them for the first time. The fountain is left in the coop for half an hour in the morning, and the same length of time at about 2 P. M., and a little rolled oats which has been broken fine is scattered on the floor of the coop.

The fifth and sixth days are the same as the fourth, except that the dish of water is left before them all the time. After the sixth day we commence to use rolled oats instead of the dry bread in the mash, and liver or lean meat which has been parboiled gradually takes the place of the egg, and chick feed is scattered on the floor three times a day. All these changes must be accomplished very gradually from the sixth to the twenty-eighth day, and of course the quantity given must be increased, for chicks are very fast growers. In fact, there is no young creature, except squabs, that grows so rapidly during the first two weeks of its life as a chicken, and for this reason chicks require an abundance of easily-digested, nutritious food, and to keep the system in proper working order it must be supplied in small quantities very frequently.

After the fourth day, never leave mash before them more than fifteen minutes at a time and don't make more than is needed for one day at a time or it may sour and cause trouble; besides which, if it is left before them all the time, they will have no inducement to scratch and hunt for the chick feed.

From the fourth to the eighth week we keep a dry mash before them all the time in self-feeding hoppers, for they will not eat this as greedily as they do the soft mash. Give them all the fresh green stuff they will eat at noon. Young alfalfa and clover leaves are good. If you have neither, use the green sprouts of oats.

The dry mash is the same as that used at the New Jersey Experiment Station, and is composed of the following grains:

Wheat bran, 50 pounds; gluten feed, 10 pounds; cornmeal, 10 pounds; ground oats, 10 pounds; meat scraps, 10 pounds; dry ground bone, 10 pounds.

I wish to call special attention to the value of sour skim-milk in baby chick raising. Sour milk is very palatable; it also contains much food value in its casein, which is a form of protein or nitrogen. The greatest benefit, however, lies in its disinfecting qualities. The lactic acid present kills and prevents the multiplication of intestinal bacteria. White diarrhea is one of the most dangerous of these forms. In order to get the greatest benefit from sour skim-milk it should be given the youngsters to drink from the very first day, being given in a closed vacuum fountain so that the chicks cannot get their feathers soiled from it. It should be changed daily and the vessel kept perfectly clean. Experiments conducted at the Connecticut Experiment Station have proven its great value. Experiments conducted at the New Jersey Station show that where sour milk is used as mentioned, the percentage of mortality was very materially reduced over pens that did not receive it. Also the skim-milk chicks made a gain in weight of over 28 per cent. more than those receiving no milk. Since these conclusive tests it is needless to say that we are feeding skim-milk (sour) to all of our young chicks during the brooding period with the greatest success.

Wheat bran is a valuable adjunct to the chick ration. It is especially palatable and rich in protein. It has a high ash content (phosphoric acid) and is fairly bulky; which makes it useful to mix with finer and more concentrated foods. Wheat

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 42.)

$1 Brings You a Tailor-Made-To-Order-Suit

A snappy suit in latest, most stunning style — fine, durable material — made to your measure by the best tailors money can employ—only $1.00 to send with order. Satisfaction in fit and quality guaranteed or your money back. That is our straight, out-and-out proposition, backed by our established standing, large capital and reputation for fair dealing. A clear saving of $15 to $25 on local tailors' prices.

Save $15 to $25

5 Months to Pay

Yes, we give you five months' time to pay. No big deposit, no full payment when suit is done—no security. Wear the suit while paying a little every month. Your word is good with us. See for yourself. Select your fabric and style from our big FREE Style Book. Then send only $1 and we send a suit you will be proud to wear.

FREE Style Book

Be sure to get this splendid book. Shows you the latest, most stunning styles for men. Actual cloth samples come with it—most elegant fabrics, in many beautiful weaves and patterns. Book also fully explains our great 5-Months-to-Pay Credit Plan. Mail coupon, letter or postal today

STANLEY-ROGERS CO.
1015 Jackson Blvd., Dept. 1426 Chicago

Please send me FREE your new Style Book showing latest Metropolitan Styles, also Cloth Samples and full particulars of your $1 down with 5-Months-to-Pay offer.

Name .....
Address .....
Town ..... State .....

$24.95 Upward ON TRIAL American FULLY GUARANTEED CREAM SEPARATOR

A Solid Proposition to send new, well made, easy running, perfect skimming separator for $24.95. Skims warm or cold milk; heavy or light cream. Different from picture, which shows larger capacity machines. See our plan of

MONTHLY PAYMENTS

Bowl a sanitary marvel easily cleaned. Whether dairy is large or small, write for free catalog and monthly payment plan. Western orders filled from western points.

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO.
Box 4136, Bainbridge, N. Y.

NEW KIND OF HEAT!

Famous Oliver Burner gives 3 times the heat without coal or wood—cheaper. Fits any heating or cook stove without change. Burns 5 per cent kerosene (coal oil) 95 per cent air. Safe. Keeps home warmer. Heats instantly by turning simple valve. Sets right in fire box of stove. No fires to make, no ashes nor dirt. 30 Day Trial.

FREE BOOK. Attractive booklet "New Kind of Heat," sent postpaid. Also Special Price Offer. Write Today.
AGTS. WANTED OLIVER OIL-GAS BURNER & MACHINE CO. 2074-B Pine Street, St Louis, Mo.

55 EGGS FROM 57 HENS were received by Mr. C. E. Graham after feeding ARROW EGG TABLETS. They will double your egg supply and prevent cholera.

Don't send a cent: Cut out this adv. and mail to us, giving your name and address, and we will send you two $1.00 boxes ARROW EGG TABLETS. When they arrive, pay the postman $1.00 for one box, the other is yours free of charge. The last month in which to receive free baby chicks. Full information mailed with your order. Write today. ARROW CHEMICAL CO., Rocky Ridge, Maryland.

WANTED

The names and addresses of shippers of Hides, Furs and Tallow who are interested in obtaining top market prices and who are looking for a reliable and regular outlet for their goods. Market information will be gladly furnished free of cost. Send us your name and address and that of your friends.

Keystone Hide Company, Lancaster, Pa.

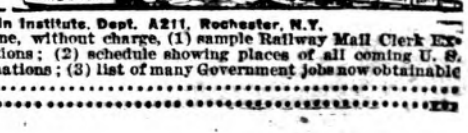
Money in Poultry and Squabs Start small, grow big, get winter eggs, keep healthy fowls, raise prize winners. Our stock pays best, low prices on leading varieties. Big Free Book tells how.

Crescent Poultry Co., Box 2, Des Moines, Iowa

RAISE GUINEA PIGS for us. We buy all you raise. Big profits—large demand—easily raised. Pay better than poultry or rabbits. Particulars and booklet how to raise FREE.

CAVIES DISTRIBUTING CO., 2130 Grand Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

BABY CHICKS



All leading breeds. Pure bred. Lowest prices. Place order now for 1922. Live delivery guaranteed in U. S. Price List FREE.

ROWLES HATCHERY CO., Box 8, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

WANTED Railway Mail Clerks $1600 to $2300 Year.

MEN—BOYS OVER 16
SHOULD WRITE IMMEDIATELY

Steady work
No Layoffs
Paid Vacations
Common education sufficient.
Send coupon today—SURE.

Franklin Institute, Dept. A211, Rochester, N.Y.
Sirs: Send me, without charge, (1) sample Railway Mail Clerk Examination questions; (2) schedule showing places of all coming U. S. Government examinations; (3) list of many Government jobs now obtainable
Name .....
Address .....

Big Bargain SALE
Lucille Smyth's Latest Creation
Wool Embroidered SERGE Dress with 4 Panels of SILK FRINGE

Lucille Smyth, America's favorite creator of fashions offers her newest wool embroidered serge dress with 4 panels of real Silk Fringe, a master designer's masterpiece. This is your opportunity to save over six dollars on the loveliest dress of the season. For this special sale only

$3.85 On Arrival

Just think, never before was such a fashionable dress ever offered at this amazing low price. Man-tailored throughout of finest quality guaranteed double warp serge in graceful lines popular with women of all ages. Charming one-piece design with set-in panels, all around sides of roomy skirt, trimmed with 4 rows of long SILK FRINGE. Absolutely the last word in style. Elaborately embroidered with gold tinsel over silk braid set off artistically by flowery medallions of WOOL FRENCH KNOTS. Silk braid piping on square neck, sleeves and serviceable pockets. Snappy sash at waist.

NAVY BLUE ONLY
Sizes 32 to 46 in. bust measure for women; 14, 16 and 18 for misses.

MONEY BACK IF NOT SATISFIED

Send No Money

Mail coupon for this smashing bargain TODAY! Don't delay as our stock is limited. We will send dress promptly. Pay postman $3.85 plus a few pennies for postage on arrival. If not satisfied every cent of your money is immediately refunded.

FRANKLIN-SMYTH CO., Chicago

FRANKLIN-SMYTH CO.,
Dept. 267, Ravenswood Station, Chicago

GENTLEMEN:—Kindly send me bargain serge dress quick. I will pay postman $3.85 plus a few pennies for postage on arrival. I understand you will refund my money if I am not satisfied.

Name ..... Size.....

Address .....

City ..... State.....

Let Us Send You

This lovely 3-piece combination consisting of a beautiful full cut bungalow apron, stylish deep flounce petticoat and attractive dust cap to match, all for only 98c, C. O. D. on arrival. Mailed postage paid to your door.

Worth $2.50

On Approval

Yes, Ma'am, we take all the risk. Your money back if not delighted. Greatest price slash in years. Order today sure.

3-Piece Set
Cap, Apron, Petticoat 98¢
POSTAGE PAID

Order Quick! Only a limited quantity. Don't lose out. Made of good quality percale with neat figures and stripes on light background.

SEND NO MONEY

No, Ma'am, just give us your name, address and bust size and receive by return mail the greatest value giving bargain ever offered. Pay on arrival only 98c for complete outfit consisting of

Full Cut Bungalow Apron
Stylish Petticoat
Attractive Dust Cap

All 3 Pieces for only 98c
PREPAID. ORDER TODAY SURE.

BERNARD-HEWITT & CO.
Dept. W 532, CHICAGO, ILL.

Any Style Suit NOW 13.45 Made to Order

Brand new and beautiful fabrics at $3 to $10 less than others are asking now.

Let us send you our new fabrics and style book free by return mail, showing the biggest values in tailoring—the lowest prices on earth for made-to-measure suits and pants See the actual CLOTH SAMPLES, feel them, test them, compare the goods and prices with your last year's suit. Money back if not pleased.

Big Pay for your spare time. Get your own clothes at the lowest Wholesale price. Be our agent. Start in your spare time. We furnish big outfit and full information. No experience needed. Write today for big assortment of 1922 samples style book and wholesale pricelist—all free.

CHICAGO TAILORS ASS'N. Dept. 69, CHICAGO

The Spellbinders

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 13.)

"Oh," said the man from Chicago casually, "you and I can divide up on the proceeds."

"The council meets tonight in the room over Gray's saloon."

"Thank you," returned the revivalist. "I'll be there to address the meeting."

On the following morning the father and son, all unaware of the turn of public sentiment, stood again in front of the new theater.

Its contemplation fired the actor's very soul. Unconsciously he struck a martial attitude, bred of long experience in the venerable cohorts of Prince Hal and Richard of Gloucester.

"I'm looking for J. Jefferson, Esq.," said a man who had just crossed the unpaved street behind them.

"'The very man, my lord, thou seest before thee,'" quoted the actor. "'What wouldst of Mortimer?'"

"I ain't looking for no mortimer. If you're said J. Jefferson I want to give you this here dockiment." Whereupon he handed over a huge official paper.

J. Jefferson glanced through its long legal phrases with increasing wonder. One thing seemed clear enough, either he had to pay an impossible license fee, or there would be no festive opening of the Springfield Opera House on the following evening.

"'Full fathoms five my money lies,' apparently," he said grimly, looking at the structure with a different expression. Yet who could be so cruel as heedlessly to destroy his only means of livelihood? He inquired of the messenger if he had read the paper correctly.

"Right you are."

"'Melted into air,'" said the actor, "'into thin air.'"

Then because the bearer's own taste turned more towards the stage than the pulpit, this man proceeded to explain why the city had thus tardily entered upon its moral duties. "That old singin' gent down at the tent talked 'em into it."

"Why, that's the man that asked us our names yesterday," began Joe. Then he stopped. He was so used to being blamed for any trouble in sight that self-defense had become a habit. Evidently his father had the same thought as to the probable beginning of the affair.

"That's all right, Joe. It might have been a lot worse. You might not have been able to do any imitating, and think of that in a family of actors!"

Whereupon he went back to his boarding-house to break the news to his wife.

"'The play's the thing,' my dear, but not in this hamlet of Springfield," he observed by way of preliminary. He related the newest blow at family expectations.

Cornelia Jefferson had learned to meet misfortune bravely, yet her husband's unconquerable cheerfulness sometimes got on her nerves.

"How much is it?" she asked.

"One hundred dollars!"

The sum overwhelmed her. Every cent of their money had been invested in this new theater. They were relying upon success to pay even their board bill.

"It might be w——" began Jefferson.

"Yes," she interrupted dryly, "so you mentioned before." Then she turned from the contemplation of abstract trouble to the concrete and ubiquitous. "Where's Joe?"

Her husband happened to glance out of the window just as he was about to confess that he did not know where the young rascal had gone. "There is your jewel, Cornelia," he announced with a flourish.

The scion of the Jeffersons was running down the street driving before him by the tails of a long coat, a tall, gaunt, active man. In Joe's opinion the highest evidence of friendship was a willingness to be the horse. His friend of the day before was proving his worth.

Mrs. Jefferson started to raise the window to call to her son to desist, then she sat down again wearily. "If the man does not like it he ought not to allow it."

"Quite right, me dear. In fact, you and Shakespeare, in my humble opinion, are always right. What is it he said on a certain occasion? 'First thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers,'" he quoted, as he turned back to the perusal of his legal document.

"Don't you think Shakespeare might have been willing to let a few of us young ones escape?" asked a strange voice behind them.

There stood young Joe, with his fiery steed grasped by the hand.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Jefferson, startled, rose and greeted their visitor as they might have welcomed a prince in their mimic world behind the footlight lamps. They were hospitable souls, hungry for companionship. Their guest lost no time in coming to the business of his call.

"You are the victim, if I may be allowed the term, Mr. Jefferson, of an unscrupulous spellbinder."

"What's a spellbinder?" asked Joe.

"We are all of that profession, more or less," the stranger answered with a smile. "You, Mr. Jefferson, are a success if you can rouse in the hearts of your audience the same feelings you are portraying upon the stage. I am a success when I can make a jury see a case my way. Yet you, I feel assured, play upon the feelings of your spectators only to amuse them, to make them happy, never to inspire evil motives, whatever your enemies in Springfield may say; just as I strive as best I can to be always on the side of right and justice. Now the man who is responsible for the action of the city council last night is animated by no simple motive. Believe me, I would make no such assertion without conviction. I have no spite against the church, but neither have I against the theater. And furthermore I think that a play or a story may teach as noble a moral as the longest sermon that was ever written, and reach with it many a soul the mere thought of church would scare away. Your Shakespeare thought so, too, when he wrote:

"'Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything.'

"That being what I think, I should like your permission to take up your case with the city council. I am young in the law, but this injustice is more than I can stand."

"My dear sir," cried J. Jefferson in delighted agreement, "and I was just telling my wife, things are pretty bad, but they might be a great deal worse."

"But, Joseph, you know we haven't a cent for lawyer's fees," interrupted his wife in embarrassed anxiety. Then she turned toward the lawyer. "You will pardon me for interferring? But he is always so enthusiastic, and I did not want you to misunderstand. You are very kind to make the offer."

"Mrs. Jefferson," said the stranger gravely, "this is a question of right and justice. Even if I won, I could accept no fee for the mere performance of my duty as I see it."

The actors were touched into silence by his simple earnestness.

"'I am a fool, to weep at what I'm glad of,'" quoted Cornelia softly, as she wiped away a tear unashamed.

"I am not always so serious for so long a time," said their visitor smiling as he rose to go. "I have a sort of local reputation as a humorist. Perhaps my country wit felt embarrassed in the presence of a real comedian."

Joe went out with him, still clinging to his hand. The mother and father could hear the boy's questions as they descended the stairs.

"Have you any little boys?"

"No, not yet."

"Going to have?"

"I hope so."

"Can I play with them?"

"You can play for them, Joe."

When the voices were no longer distinguishable, Cornelia turned toward her husband with swimming eyes.

"My dear," he said softly, in answer to the pressure of her hand, "it was worth riding out West here from New York to meet a man like that."

"What is his name?"

"Well, I'll be blest! We'll have to ask Joe. He'll know."

The young lawyer was in the meantime planning his campaign in the city council. If spellbinding methods had caused the passing of the license bill, why he, too, would try the efficacy of eloquence. It was an easy matter to gain a hearing. Any sort of speech was welcomed gladly, the more if it were known that the speaker was a humorist as well as an orator. The city fathers settled themselves on the back legs of their rush-bottomed chairs, laid their tobacco handy and prepared blissfully to listen.

"Always glad to hear you. Nothing like a good laugh," commented the chairman, as the lawyer came into the special council meeting called for the sole purpose of listening to this speech. "What's it about now?"

"It's about a little circumstance that reminds me of a story I heard the other day," began the speaker. For the next ten minutes he kept the citizens in a gale of laughter. Still humorously, he sketched in the history of the drama from its earliest beginnings, far more ancient than the "three pin" shows every man present remembered as an activity of his own youth. "And where is the drama today, you may ask? Gentlemen, it is writhing most uncomfortably here in Springfield, under the expansive boot of an unconfessed actor from Chicago."

All the men except the chairman laughed.

Then the advocate, growing serious, spoke of the tragedy the incident was in the life of a comedian, a man who had spent his life to put others in a good humor, and not only in the man's life but in that of his children.

"Little Joe told me that he would like to live in Springfield. 'But you know,' the youngster added, 'we can't have any home.' 'Why's that, Joe?' I asked him. 'Well, my grandfather used to say that the only home we actors could expect was a place in the hearts of our audience.' And here in Springfield, we are about to deny the little fellow even that."

* * * * * * *

It may have been a half hour later when a small boy rushed into a room in a shabby boarding-house.

"We don't have to pay," he shouted, "'cause there isn't going to be any license."

His father rose from his chair.

"I want to go to thank him at once." The actor who had so often simulated emotion could not keep his own voice steady as he spoke. "What's his name, Joe?"

"Why," answered the child, "the other boys call him Abe Lincoln."

"I Must Earn $200 Quickly" Said Mrs. Snow and SHE DID

Mrs. Frank Snow surveyed ruefully the list before her. She knew it by heart, had written it down a score of times and each item seemed to grin and mock her as if to say "get me if you can."

Clothes for the children, $25, the insurance, $12.50, that long-past-due doctor's bill, a new davenport for the living room, that dress she needed so badly, shoes for Frank and then there would have to be something to keep the family larder well supplied when those visiting relations arrived. She added it up again, $198.50 and no less would do.

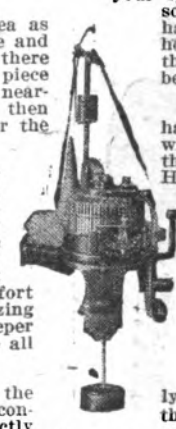
But how to get this money? She thought of working in an office for a while or clerking in a store, even sewing or housework would enable her to overcome this everlasting need of more money than Mr. Snow's slender earnings could supply.

Reluctantly she put aside each idea as impractical for had she not the home and the children to look after? If only there was something she might do at home, piece work sewing, for instance. But the nearest factory was miles away and then again they paid such small prices for the work.

Mrs. Snow was very nearly at her wit's end until one day she chanced to pick up a magazine and there, before her eyes, seemed to be the very thing she was looking for, the Gearhart Plan of Home Knitting. She read of how she could knit famous Allwear Hosiery in the comfort and privacy of her own home, utilizing the spare time which every housekeeper finds each day. Or she could devote all her time, as she wished.

Mrs. Snow investigated and found the Gearhart Company to be a fine old concern with a reputation for doing exactly as they promise and thousands of satisfied women home knitters, and men, too, who had seized the opportunity Gearhart offered.

Like many another woman who has felt the urge of necessity, Mrs. Snow sent for a Gearhart Standard Knitter and the splendid 3-year work contract sent with each machine. Soon she was turning her spare time into a tidy weekly income.



She was delighted with the ease and simplicity with which she was able to knit the loveliest hosiery and still more delighted when the checks from the Gearhart Company began to arrive in ever increasing amounts. The liberal pay per dozen just for knitting, urged her to greater efforts as it seemed to her hardly more than a pleasant occupation with none of the back-breaking, soul-rending strain of hard domestic labor.

So YOU Can Succeed

Can you picture how delighted they were when the $200 was earned and the bills all paid? Can you picture the joy that you, too, would feel after you had accumulated the wherewithal to buy the hundred and one things every woman wants, to help tide the family over financial troubles or to lay away a nest egg for a rainy day?

Does this hypothetical case of Mrs. Snow mean anything to you? Are you in a position where it would be desirable to turn your spare time into dollars and cents? If so, here is the opportunity which perhaps you have been long awaiting, a home occupation so easy and fascinating that you will regret not coming upon it before.

Gearhart has the money, and YOU have the spare time. Is there any reason why you cannot get ready to become one the Gearhart Home Knitters of Allwear Hosiery?

Prompt Action Gets the Money

You are cordially invited to write at once to the Gearhart Company for free full particulars. They will gladly explain the details—how you can get the Gearhart Standard Knitter, free yarn and full instructions how to knit Allwear Hosiery. You will learn of the liberal price they will pay you for your industry and all about the generous 3-year contract which you may also have.

Don't wait, write today. Delay may be dangerous to your opportunity. Can you or any other woman who is really anxious to earn money at once in the privacy of her own home afford to wait a single day? Write now for the Free Profit Guide Book, including samples of knitting and full particulars. Address the Gearhart Knitting Machine Company, Dept. CO-629, Clearfield, Pa.

New Spring MONEY SAVING CATALOG

Big Bargains
Clothing
Dry Goods
Shoes
Farm Supplies
Etc.

Send Your NAME and ADDRESS Get Your Copy

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED

Free

Page after page, showing hundreds of wonderful money saving values. Latest styles—big, fresh stocks of merchandise. All marked at new low, 1922 prices, only slighty above factory cost. Order by mail. Save several profits for yourself. Your satisfaction positively guaranteed.

Bradley, Merriam & Smith
Dept. 242, OMAHA, NEB.

A Trial Nipple for a Nickel
"FEED-RITE"

As the baby sucks a "Feed-Rite," the little cross rib acts like a valve, letting air into the bottle so the nipple can't collapse

Sanitary and durable, outwears two ordinary nipples. Used on any bottle.

Write us for our descriptive list for rubber household goods—hot water bags, syringes, tobacco pouches, etc.

Mail your nickel and get your nipple. For our regular sanitary packet of six nipples, send 50 cents.

TYER RUBBER COMPANY, Andover, Mass.
Makers of Tyrian Rubber Goods for 67 years.

FREE THIS AIR RIFLE or choice of other premiums—flash light, watches, rings, bracelets, etc., sent without cost to boys and girls. Send name and address. We mail 20 pkgs. assorted flower and vegetable seed. Sell at 10c pkg. Return money and we send your choice of premium.

KEENEY SEED CO. BOX 604 MONONGAHELA, PA.

BIRTH STONE RING FREE

14K GOLD finished, guaranteed to give satisfaction, with stone for any month, to introduce our catalogue. Send 15c to cover cost of advertising and mailing. Send size.

SUN JEWELRY CO., Dept. 87, EAST BOSTON, MASS.

ACCORDION FREE!

Musical instrument that you can derive a great deal of pleasure from. You will be proud to have this accordion. Just write for 25 packs Post Cards to sell for 10 cts. We trust you.

Jones Mfg. Co., Dept. 44, Attleboro, Mass.

FREE POWERFUL AIR GUN AND 500 BUCK SHOTS

The best Rifle ever offered. 21 inch, lever action, fully guaranteed. Given for selling 20 pkgs. fancy Post Cards at 10c a pkg.

Our cards sell easy. SUN MFG. CO. DEPT 725 CHICAGO

FREE 15 DAY TRIAL
SEND NO MONEY
EASY PAYMENTS IF IT SUITS YOU

JUST WRITE TODAY AND SAY YOU WANT TO TRY THE

Faultless Drop-Head, Steel Ball Bearing Sewing Machine

When it arrives use it free for fifteen days. If then you are fully satisfied with it, send us $3.95—and pay $4.00 each month for 7 months—$31.95 in all. If it does not suit you, ship it back at our expense.

Genuine Oak Woodwork, beautifully finished: Iron Stand, enamelled glossy black; Head folds inside, leaving flat table top; Automatic Bobbin Winder; Self Threading Cylinder Shuttle; Adjustable Stitch; All up to date improvements. All tools and accessories free.

25 Year Guarantee NATIONAL FARM EQUIPMENT CO., INC. DEPT. 38, 98 CHAMBERS ST., New York Over 100,000 In Use

Love Will Find the Way

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6.)

"Come away, ma'am," she whispered. "He don't know what he is saying. I have seen my father like that. Why, he has beaten my mother when he was drunk, and did not know anything about it the next morning. You must not mind him. He don't know what he is saying."

But for the gently spoken words, Janet Reade might never have recovered from the terrible shock that she had received. A slow shiver passed over her, as if the stagnant blood had suddenly started again through her veins. A long sigh fell through her parted lips.

She was silent for a little longer, as if striving to collect her scattered senses; then she said to Estelle, in a voice which the girl would never have recognized:

"I want to go to the residence of Miss Anne Gordon. Will you find out where she lives and take me there, Estelle?"

"I will, ma'am."

"Then go at once."

The kind girl led the helpless creature to her own room, and left her there in the depths of a great armchair while she went to find out the address, and on her own account order a coupe.

Janet Reade did not reckon time by minutes then, and it seemed to her an age when the door was opened again to admit Estelle.

"I will get your bonnet now, ma'am," the maid said gently, as she looked into the eager eyes. "The cab is at the door."

CHAPTER XXIII.

MRS. READE PAYS A VISIT.

"Is Miss Gordon at home?"

The question was asked in a trembling voice of the girl who answered Mrs. Reade's ring when she applied for admission at the home of Anne Gordon. There seemed to be as little life or animation in the question as it was possible for any human lips to express, and the servant looked into the white face with curious interest.

"I think so," she answered. "Will you walk in?"

Estelle was waiting in the cab, but she looked through the window and saw the kindly girl take the arm of the old woman and assist her, guiding the tottering steps until the door had closed.

"Whom shall I say wishes to see her?"

The inquiry was made after Mrs. Reade was seated in the drawing-room, and the old eyes were lifted—those eyes in which there was such anguish pictured.

She had no card, and in a scarcely audible tone she answered:

"Mrs. Reade. And say, please, that it is—important."

The girl bowed and left the room. Although it was the first time she had ever entered that handsome room, there was nothing in it that attracted the attention of Janet Reade. Her gaze was fixed on the door, and from it never wandered until Anne Gordon had passed through.

She knew Miss Gordon well, and tried to rise as the old friend of her grandchild entered, but a terrible weakness oppressed her. She sank back in her chair and closed her eyes faintly.

Miss Gordon was beside her instantly, with the cold hands in her own warm clasp.

"What is it?" she asked swiftly. "Dear Mrs. Reade, has something happened to Marian? Nothing else could excite you like this. Do be calm and tell me."

She was upon her knees, and Janet Reade caught the tender hands and held them closely as if for strength, while she raised herself more erect in the chair.

"I thought I should find her here," she said hoarsely. "Have you not seen her?"

"No—no! I don't think I exactly understand you. What is it you mean? Is Marian not at home?"

"No."

"And you don't know where she is?"

"I don't know."

"Do you mean that she left secretly?"

"Yes."

"But why?"

The gray head was hung for a moment. It seemed to her that the greatest grief of life lay in the exposure of her son's disgrace, the shame that he had put upon his own daughter, and yet she knew that she would require assistance in finding Marian. She believed that the full account was contained in the morning papers, and, further, she conceived it to be her duty to tell Miss Gordon all that her son had said.

She was silent for a long time, looking straight into the sweet eyes without seeing a particle of their expression; then she leaned back wearily in the chair.

"It is a most painful story," she answered huskily, trying to moisten her stiff lips. "I heard it only this morning. It is not an easy thing, Miss Gordon, to speak of the disgrace of one's own son."

She paused, and all the sympathy of the girl's noble nature was aroused. She drew closer, and kissed the wrinkled cheek affectionately.

"Let me save you that," she said gently. "I know what it is that you would say."

"You know? Know what? Tell me in plain English. Don't try to spare me. The hardest blow that could be dealt, has been, and still I live."

She had straightened up again, and was looking dramatically at Anne Gordon. Her weakness seemed suddenly to have changed to strength. Miss Gordon hesitated a little, and then with lowered head she answered:

"I know that he is—the keeper of a—a gambling-house."

"Is that—all?" whispered Mrs. Reade, closing her eyes for a moment. "Is that—all? Somehow it seems to me so small a thing, by comparison with the rest, that it is scarcely worthy of mention. A gambler might be a comparatively honest man; but, Miss Gordon, my son is a—thief!"

The last words were uttered in a whisper, a whisper so filled with horror, with loathing, with bitterest shame, that Anne Gordon shrank more from the tone than the knowledge the word contained. She was silent, under the surprise of it, for a moment, looking with dilated eyes into the anguish-filled ones of those of the old lady before her; then:

"Oh, no! It can't be true!" she cried. "You must have been misinformed. You must be mistaken."

"Would to Heaven that were possible! I would have believed it from no lips but his own. He has confessed the truth, and I come to you, not alone because you are the friend of his unhappy child, but because you are the woman whom he has wronged."

"I?"

"You. He stole your jewels. Marian saw him do it, and compelled him to return them. He kept one of the rings, and says that it is in his possession now. It was in order to get even with her for forcing him to give back that which he had stolen that he brought this shame upon her. She discovered it last night, Miss Gordon—discovered that she was the inmate of a gambling-house, placed there as a decoy by her own father! Now you know the full extent of the unspeakable shame that has come upon us all."

She sat there like a piece of granite, and Anne Gordon could not find voice to speak. Astonishment, not to say horror, had stricken her dumb. She sat in glazed-eyed silence for a time that would have seemed an age had either of them been conscious of time; then, very slowly, she said:

"And Marian knew nothing of the—character of the house until last night?"

"Nothing."

"But she did know of the—theft?"

"Yes."

"Oh, I see it all now! I tried to warn her, and I thought she knew. It was of the theft of the jewels that she spoke, while I referred to the disgrace that had come upon the roof that covered her. I see it all! Poor, unhappy Marian! How we have all wronged her! But we will find her, Mrs. Reade. We will find her if——"

Miss Gordon paused, aghast at the thought that had suddenly and unbidden come into her own head. It was the thought of suicide. She was thankful that no mention of that awful word had passed her lips in presence of that suffering woman, but it filled her with horror. She arose swiftly, as if to relieve the horror of the thought. She still held the old hand, and as she stopped beside Mrs. Reade, she bent and kissed her again.

"You will not desire to return there until you at least know something definite," she said, guardedly. "Won't you remain here as my guest until we can decide what is best to do? You know that my interest in Marian is almost as great as your own. She is in heart my sister."

"And you can still love her? You can——"

"Love her? Love Marian? Why, what has she done that I should not love her? Her suffering causes her to need me all the more. I don't believe Marian would ever doubt my love."

"But she is disgraced through her father."

"And because of that she needs my friendship all the more. Paul Reade has nothing to fear from me. If he had kept all the jewels, Marian's father would still have been safe."

For the first time there were tears in the eyes of Janet Reade; her lips quivered under her emotion, and she lifted the girl's hand to them and kissed it.

"You are a noble girl, Miss Gordon," she whispered brokenly.

"There is nothing commendable in the fact of my loving Marian," she said simply. "After all, the test of my affection is not great. I am ready to extend to her the hand of friendship when it is needed. It requires no sacrifice on my part, and self-sacrifice is the only test of affection."

"But you have proven that you would be capable of that as well. God bless you, dear child!"

"And you will remain with me, for the present at least?"

"So gratefully!"

"That is good. You must go over this whole thing very carefully and very minutely with me. I know that it will be painful, but we must bear that for Marian's sake. So far, we have but jumped at conclusions, and, as I take it, the matter requires careful handling. But first you are coming upstairs with me to my boudoir, where you can remove your bonnet and have a couch to rest upon. And in the meantime, I shall dismiss your coupe and despatch a note."

Without calling for the assistance of a servant, she helped Mrs. Reade up the stairs; then when she had placed her comfortably on the couch, she took writing materials from the drawer and indited a hasty note. It read:

"I need you, June. Will you come to me, dear?

"ANNE."

TO BE CONTINUED.

6-Piece Set
Fumed Solid Oak

Richly Upholstered. All the four chairs are thickly padded on both seats and backs and upholstered with brown Delavan Spanish leather, the best imitation of genuine Spanish leather known. The upholstering is soft, of a rich brown color, resilient, and will give you the best possible service.

Arm Chair is a roomy, dignified piece of furniture, comfortable and big enough for a very large person while not seeming too large for the ordinary occupant. Seat, 19x17 1-2 in., height 36 in.

Arm Rocker is a massive, stately, comfortable piece, with beautifully designed back, wide, shapely arms, and smooth operating runners. Seat 19x 17 1-2 in., height 36 in.

Sewing Rocker is unusually attractive and useful. Seat 17x17 in., height 35 in.

Reception Chair has heavy upholstering and beautiful shape to match the other pieces. Seat measures 17x17 in., height 35 in.

Library Table Has 2 Book Racks a beautiful piece of library furniture. Has two large end book racks, roomy magazine shelf below. Legs cut of 2 inch stock; massive, dignified. Sides beautifully designed to match the chairs. Top measures 23 1-4x34 in.

Jardiniere Stand matches other pieces. A decoration to your living room or library. Carefully built throughout. Measures 17 1-2 in. high; the top 12x12 inches.

Entire suite is shipped knocked down construction. Very easy to set up. Saves in freight charges. Weight, about 175 pounds.

Order by No. B6844A. $1.00 with coupon, $2.70 a month, price $28.90.

$1.00 Down A Room Full of Furniture

Send the coupon today with only $1.00 and we will ship this handsome 6-piece library set of fumed solid oak right to your home on trial. An amazing value—no home is complete without this set. This great bargain will show you what astounding values Straus & Schram offer on credit—a small amount each month! We take all the risk. Send only $1.00 with the coupon. We ship the set on 30 days' trial. If not satisfied, ship it back and we will refund your $1.00, plus all freight charges you paid. If satisfied, pay only $2.70 a month until you have paid the full bargain price of $28.90 in all.

30 Days' Trial

When you get this magnificent 6-piece library set, put it in your living room or library and use it freely for 30 days. Before you pay another penny examine it thoroughly. Note the massive, solid construction—the beautiful fumed oak finish—the fine upholstery and graceful lines. Convince yourself that this beautiful set will make your home brighter and more beautiful. Compare it with anything you can buy locally at anywhere near the same price—even for spot cash. Then, if not satisfied for any reason and convinced that this is a stupendous bargain—you alone to judge—return the set at our expense and we will refund your $1.00 at once, plus any freight charges you paid.

A Year to Pay

If you decide to keep the set, start making small monthly payments, so low and so convenient that you will scarcely feel them while you enjoy the proud ownership of so magnificent a set of furniture. A full year to pay—at the rate of only a few cents a day, less than one fritters away every day for trifles. This wonderful value is not listed in our regular catalog. We have only a limited number of sets which we reserve for this acquaintance offer to new customers. We send our complete catalog when we ship the set. We trust honest people anywhere in the United States. One price to all, cash or credit. No discount for cash. Not one penny extra for credit. No C. O. D.

Special!—Send Coupon Now!

Free Bargain Catalog

Shows thousands of bargains in furniture, jewelry, carpets, rugs, curtains, silverware, phonographs, stoves, porch and lawn furniture, women's, men's and children's wearing apparel.

Don't delay. Just send $1.00 along with the coupon as a deposit to show you are really interested. If you wish to return the set after 30 days, your dollar will be refunded, plus all freight charges which you paid. Remember, this is a special, limited, reduced price offer. First come, first served. Get your set while this offer lasts. 30 days' trial—we take all the risk—costs you nothing if not satisfied—no obligation. Send the coupon today—NOW!

Straus & Schram, Register 3042, West 35th St., Chicago

Straus & Schram, Reg. 3042, W. 35th St., Chicago

Enclosed find $1. Ship special advertised 6-piece Upholstered Fumed Oak Library Set. I am to have 30 days' free trial. If I keep the set, I will pay you $2.70 monthly. If not satisfied, I am to return the set within 30 days and you are to refund my money and any freight charges I paid.

☐ 6-Piece Library Set No. B6844A. $28.90.

*Name*_____

*Street, R.F.D. or Box No.*_____

*Shipping Point*_____

*Post Office*_____ *State*_____

If you only want catalog put X in box below:

☐ Furniture, Stoves, Jewelry ☐ Men's, Women's Children's Clothing

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9.)

I am not surprised that you gather into your group of hearers some long-legged Georgian boys and girls of the not tremendously-old age of seventeen. Yes, you can find some of the sweetest and best-told tales in the pages of the Book of Books, Ruby; and probably you often tell your audiences, too, of the times when the Cherokee braves and maidens picked hiawassees on the banks of the Tugaloo. Write again and give us the description of yourself which you left out this time. Billy wants to know if you are as toccoa as a nacoochee.

BOAZ, ALABAMA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

May I come in for just a few words? I have sat back in the corner long enough and just listened to the others.

Uncle, I live in a valley between two mountains. The valley is about twelve miles long and there is a big creek in the center of the cove. I live on a farm. My daddy runs a country store and we kids make a crop every year. Uncle, I wish you and Billy could be here and rabbit hunt with me. Well, Uncle, I will give a description of myself: I am eighteen years of age; five feet, nine inches tall. Say, Uncle, what do you think about the girls? They are handsome and nice and look well enough, but my brothers make fun of me for not grabbing one of them. Well, I think a-plenty of them, but I could not take all of them to keep. Say, Uncle, you must tell Billy not to abuse the girls about the powder-puff business. And ask him if he likes 'possum hides.

Good by to you and Billy and all the cousins, from

Your nephew,
A HOPELESS KID OF ALABAMA.

I cannot find anything in your letter, Alabama Kid, to indicate why you have given up hope at such an early age. You seem to be living in a sort of happy valley where nice girls and fat rabbits are plentiful. You don't complain about crops failing or the creek in the cove running dry, and the only possible reason I can see for your state of utter hopelessness is that you have missed some grab you have made at one of those handsome Marshall County girls from Highpoint or Mountainboro. I asked Billy about the Alabama girls, for he told me he used to have a sort of second step-cousin on his uncle's side who once lived in Albertsville—which is not far from your happy valley. Bill said: "Of course I was only there for a short visit, Uncle Lisha; but I certainly remember seeing one girl who worked in a cannery at Guntersville—and let me tell you, Uncle, she was a real lallapaloosa!" I didn't ask Bill what a "real lallapaloosa" was, but I am sure from the way he spoke that it must be something well worth talking about. So if the outlook is too sad and hopeless in Boaz and up and down the cove, Alabama Kid, I think you might do well to take the train up the track to Guntersville and look up Billy's friend.

Oh, by the way, I couldn't ask Bill your question about 'possum hides. Anything like this is a sore subject with him. An aunt of his was once made into a parlor rug.

ARCOLA, MISSOURI.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

May I come in? This is my first visit so I won't stay long. I live on a farm two and a half miles from the small town of Arcola. I ride to school. It is sure fun and I wish some of you cousins were with me. There are several pupils who ride. We run races coming from school. Sometimes we get throwed off, but we are tuff and it don't hurt us. We have a basket ball team and don't intend to let anyone beat us. I intend to graduate from high school in two more years. We are having some cold weather here now and I am almost froze of a morning when I get to school. I spent my vacation gathering corn; I don't know when I will graduate from that. Well, I will close by letting you take a guess at my age: I am between fifteen and twenty. I would like real well to hear from some of the cousins.

By, by. LENA PETTY.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 41.)

Get The Book FREE! If you would like to read the whole of this wonderful story at once and learn its thrilling conclusion, rather than wait for the monthly installments as they appear in COMFORT, we will be glad to make you a present of the complete story in book form. Send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, and we will send you a copy of the book free and postpaid.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Let Us Send You

This lovely silk embroidered Navy blue cotton serge Jumper dress prepaid to your door for only $1.39. Greatest offer ever made. Order Today Sure. Don't send one penny now. Wonderful dress bargain will be shipped to you by return mail prepaid

On Approval

Every woman and miss should have at least one of these stunning Blue Serge dresses. Jumper dresses are all the rage this season. Dress is modishly cut in the latest stylish low waist line effect and handsomely trimmed with rich silk embroidery in contrasting shades. Lovely broad sash girdle. Sizes: Misses, 14 to 18 years; Women, 32 to 44 Bust.

Embroidered Blue Serge Jumper Dress $1.39 Prepaid

Worth $3.00

Smashing reduced price good only while our present limited supply lasts. Wonderful money-saving opportunity. Hurry or you may be too late. Send your order in this minute to avoid disappointment.

SEND NO MONEY

No, Ma'am, just your name, address, and size is all we want. You pay only our slashed price of $1.39 when you receive handsome dress. Rush your order in. YOUR MONEY BACK IF YOU ARE NOT DELIGHTED. You risk nothing.

POSTAGE PAID We pay delivery charges. Another big saving. You pay only our 30-Day bargain price of $1.39 on arrival of goods. World's greatest dress offer. Order today at our risk. State size.

Big Catalogue Mailed Free

BERNARD-HEWITT & CO.

Dept. X 532, CHICAGO, ILL.

1000 SHOT ALL STEEL MAGAZINE AIR RIFLE GIVEN

WE GIVE TO BOYS Choice of Six Guns (on four easy plans) for selling our Magic Healing Wave-o-lena at 25c Box. WE TRUST YOU! Order Seven Boxes Today On Postal Card—we send promptly, Prepaid. Easy to sell—used in every home. Return money as instructed, choosing your Gun according to one of the plans shown in our Big Premium List. Also 200 other Gifts or Big Cash Commission if you prefer. If you are prompt—a special Free Gift.

WAVERLY CO. 202 Tower Bldg., Monongahela, Pa.

HAMILTON 22 CAL. HUNTING RIFLE WITHOUT COST

350 SHOT REPEATER SEND ORDER TODAY. FREE!

BUNIONS

STOPS PAIN---REMOVES HUMP

Try It At My Risk. Here is good news for bunion sufferers. I don't care how bad your bunion is or how you have doctored without success. I positively guarantee that my new combination treatment—Ped-O will end the pain and banish the ugly hump, or I make no charge for the treatment. No pads, no plasters; no clumsy appliances, but a new different method that gets results. Don't doubt—don't hesitate. I take all the risks; you none. You must be amazed and delighted, or there will be no charge made.

H. D. POWERS, Originator

Dept. B 113 Battle Creek, Mich.

FREE "Linene" COLLAR

For trial, a sample of our New Style Copley, if you send 2 cents for postage and state size wanted.

Reversible Collar Co., Dept. E, Boston, Mass.

AGENTS Sell Latest Invention Out. One Everplay Phonograph Needle plays 25,000 records any kind on any machine without changing Needle. Sample 75c. Heberger's, 291 Sherwood Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

Beautiful Silk Remnants

REMNANTS of real silk, in all shapes, sizes and colors. They are carefully trimmed and just what you need for making up quilts, tidies, pillow tops and all kinds of "crazy patchwork." We will send you a package containing more than one hundred of these beautiful silk pieces and 5 skeins embroidery cotton in different bright colors, also an Instruction Book with eight full-page illustrations showing how to ornament seams of crazy patchwork and other work where fancy stitches are used, also how to work the Outline and Kensington Stitch, Arrasene and Chenille Embroidery, ribbon work, plush or tufted stitch, also directions for Kensington painting. All this is yours free upon the terms of the following special offer:

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you one package of these Silk Remnants free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 5561.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

The Family Doctor

The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be taken to your local doctor.

Address The Family Doctor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Sign your true name and give your address. Name will not be published

MRS. J. R., Louisville, Ky.—For the high blood-pressure, take a tablet of 1-100 gr. of nitroglycerine between meals. Of course, live the simple life as to food, and drink plenty of water. Avoid sweets of all kinds.

MRS. L. D., Eads, Tenn.—"Hot flashes" and other nervous phenomena due to the menopause (change of life) are best treated by the use of ovarian substance in two-grain capsules taken morning and night for some weeks.

MRS. E. C. Z., Taylor Ridge, Ill.—A change of climate to a higher altitude would help you and maybe cure your catarrhal condition. Spray the nose and throat with Dobell's solution and take a teaspoonful of pertussin after meals.

MRS. J. W. W., Altus, Okla.—Your child has a form of scrofula, as you surmise. Have him take a teaspoonful of codliver oil after meals. Also paint the swollen glands with tincture of iodine once or twice a week only.

MRS. E. C. M., Fair Play, Md.—There are no specific symptoms of tubercular infections of the stomach glands. Maybe you have an ulcer of the stomach, which is more probable.

MISS F. S., Wilmington, N. C.—Age and loss of flesh as well as worry will cause the skin to wrinkle about the face. Massage, proper diet, and exercise in the open, are the best remedies for the conditions mentioned.

MRS. N. L. H., Bashi, Ala.—Frequent urination is best treated by taking a five-grain tablet of urotropin after meals.

MRS. J. P. D., Andover, Iowa.—If your druggist does not know the formula for Basham's mixture, he should go into some other business, as this mixture is one of the oldest and best iron tonics known.

MRS. J. A. F., Camp Hill, Ala.—The electric needle is the only way to get rid of superfluous hairs without scar and permanently.

MR. R. G., Doe Boy, Wash.—The teeth should be cleansed after every meal. This is no fad but a hygienic proposition. Use some good tooth-paste, and also some good mouth-wash,—one of the best and simplest is Dobell's solution.

MRS. F. D., Castile, N. Y.—The best thing to do in your case is to have the gall-stones removed by operation. In the meantime you should eat, with your salad, large quantities of olive oil. You may also take a teaspoonful of phosphate of soda diluted before meals.

MISS K. M., Minot, N. Dak.—You are suffering from the "change of life," so called, and must bide your time. Take, in the meantime, five-grain asafœtida pills after meals; keep your bowels open and free. Two-grain capsules of ovarian substance are also indicated. Take the capsules morning and night, only.

MRS. C. H. E., Hesperia, Mich.—The actual cause of goitre has not been determined, although the latest teaching is that it is due to some form of intoxication owing to some derangement of one or more of the ductless glands. Have the child take one-grain capsule of corpus luteum morning and night for three weeks. Rest also is indicated.

MR. L. G. B., Jane, Ark.—Go to any good druggist and he can furnish you with the asafœtida pills, if he knows anything about drugs at all. He can also compound Basham's mixture for the same reason.

MISS C. S., Meredith, Mont.—For the excessive nose-bleed, consult some good nose specialist and have the blood-vessel cauterized. You might also take ten drops of tincture of chloride of iron after meals, well diluted, as a tonic.

MRS. E. A. T., Dove Creek, Colo.—If you have persistent pain due to gall-stones, you better have an operation at once and the stones removed. Delay is dangerous. Diet had to do with the formation of the stones originally, plus poor drinking water; but now it is too late for any remedy to be of any value to you.

MISS M. E. H., Jacksonville, Ark.—For the constipation, continue the yeast drink plenty of water, avoid white bread—eat only graham bread of whole-wheat bread mixed with bran. You may also take a tablespoonful of American Oil with your meals. Exercise in the open also and massage the abdomen along the lines of the colon.

MRS. H. L., Chalk Butte, Mont.—Take fluid extract of cascara sagrada two or three times a day in teaspoonful doses, for your chronic constipation. Also after meals take a tablespoonful of American Oil. Avoid white bread at all times and eat graham bread or bran bread, only.

MRS. J. W. T., Grapeland, Texas.—For your chronic rheumatism, take five-grain tablets of salicylate of sodium after meals. Avoid sweets and pastries of all kinds and drink plenty of water

MRS. R. W. C., Cid, N. C.—You can get Basham's mixture at any good, or even average, drug store. The drug cannot be sent to any address. It should be prepared fresh.

MRS. M. M., North McAlester, Okla.—If your local druggist does not have powdered ox-gall have him send to any large city and get it for you.

MRS. G. A. H., St. Joseph, Mo.—The "bump on nose" is probably due to a retention of sebacious matter in one of the sweat glands. Have the gland opened and the mass curetted. Use Dobell's solution as a gargle.

MISS D. A. S., Ticonderoga, N. Y.—Probably inside work may have something to do with your dizzy spells. You should exercise in the open, when possible, avoid sweets, drink plenty of water and have your ears and throat examined by some specialist to see if there is any local cause that would explain your vertigo.

MRS. F. L., Little Gennesee, N. Y.—Ten-grain tablets of bicarbonate of soda taken after meals will help the uric acid condition. You cannot and should not nurse your baby during pregnancy, because you have not the vitality and your milk will not have sufficient nourishment for the child or baby. Lime-water is good used in the way you mention.

MRS. E. W., Manitowac, Wisc.—Operation is the best remedy for your peritonitis, if due to an inflammed appendix.

MISS M. L., Dennison, Texas.—For your nervousness, sleeplessness and nervous dyspepsia, the one best remedy is a 10-grain pill of asafœtida. Take these pills four or five times a day. You probably have diseased tonsils and adenoids also. Have the tonsils removed, also the adenoids, and use as a gargle Dobell's solution undiluted.

MRS. R. L. A., Lenah, Va.—You are anemic and not in good physical condition. Take a tablespoonful of Basham's mixture, well diluted, after meals.

MRS. R. T. M., Jones, Okla.—You have a nervous dyspepsia. Take compound bicarbonate of soda tablets after meals. Also be examined and find out as to the position of uterus and whether or not an operation is advisable.

MRS. B. G., Kansas City, Mo.—You have a rheumatic arthritis. Take 10-grain tablets of salicylate of soda after meals; drink plenty of water. Apply to the painful joints oil of wintergreen.

MISS A. H., Chicago, Ill.—Leucorrhea can best be cured by using a douche of normal salt solution daily. Use very hot.

MRS. E. E. J., Texarkana, Texas.—Better wean the baby at once, if you are satisfied as to your condition as to pregnancy. Take, for nervousness, a 10-grain pill of asafœtida three times a day.

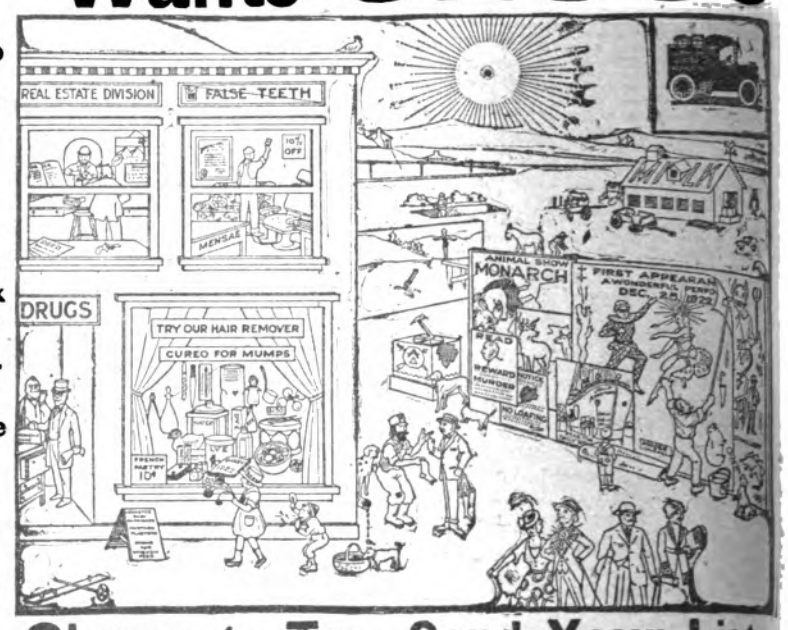
MRS. W. D. H., Campbell, N. Y.—Yeast-cakes are good for you and can be taken indefinitely with benefit. Your shortness of breath is due probably to gas forming in the stomach and intestines. The yeast will help this condition. Urtotropin tablets are practically non-injurious, but should not be taken for too long a period.

MRS. A. E. L., South Range, Mo.—"Lemon receipt" for reducing weight is not proper treatment in any case. Better try the skim-milk diet so often referred to in COMFORT. Use a quart of skim-milk in divided doses on alternate days for food and drink; and, on the other days, avoid starchy foods and lead the simple life. Exercise also daily in moderation.

MRS. C. A., Stamford, Conn.—Bunions are caused, as you know, by wearing improper shoes. Have your shoes made to order and sufficient room made to relieve any pressure on the great toe. If the bunion is very painful and very large, have it operated on and the joint straightened out. The latter is your only hope so far as cure is concerned.

Flying Automobile Tried Out in France

A flying automobile is the latest development in the French aero world.



A successful demonstration of an ordinary automobile with folding wings, two engines, one of 10 horse-power for land going, and the other of 300 horse-power for air travel, was held recently at Buo, Seine-et-Oise. The machine performed all the usual feats of an airplane and also of an automobile.

Who Wants $2500

A Snap for Somebody

It's easier to work with a BIG PRINT Send for one

Read the prizes

No Charge to Try—Send Your List

How many objects do you see that begin with "D", like donkey, dog, devil, etc.? Write them on paper, sign your name and send them in. The largest, nearest correct list entitles the sender to first prize, $20.00. Or you can try for a bigger prize if you want to.

$2500.00 for Somebody

WHO'LL WIN IT? We want everybody to get acquainted with De Do, the exquisite new odor used exclusively in our toilet preparations, so we make this offer. The first prize in the contest is $20.00, but if the winner has made a $1 purchase the first prize is $500.00, if a $2.00 purchase the first prize is $1,000.00, or if a $5.00 purchase the first prize is $2500, more than the average man can save in a lifetime. IT PAYS TO TRY FOR THE BIG PRIZE.

De Do Exquisite Requisites for the Toilet

Exquisite is the only word that really tells how wonderful these preparations are. They are the highest quality that can be made and are put up in charming packages. You could find nothing that will surpass them for gifts or personal use.

Sold Under Absolute Guarantee

Heinrich Products, including De Do preparations, of course, are sold under an absolute guarantee. You are entirely safe in buying them. We see that every purchaser is completely satisfied in every instance.

IMPORTANT. READ.

1. It costs nothing to enter. Anybody not connected with this company or a relative of any member of our organization may compete.
2. Number words 1, 2, 3, etc. Write only on one side of paper. Place your name and address on each sheet.
3. Use only words found in English dictionary, no obsolete, hyphenated or compound words count. Use singular or plural, not both. Do not use same word more than once, even to designate entirely different objects.
4. List having largest, nearest correct list of visible objects shown in picture beginning with "D" wins first prize, next, second, etc. Nothing else counts.
5. Do not name any object more than once. Any part of object may be named in addition to object as a whole.
6. Only one prize to a family, or to member of group working together.
7. In event of ties duplicate prizes will be paid to each tying contestant.
8. Three well known men, none having any connection with this company, will act as judges and each contestant agrees to accept their decision as final. These are the judges: Mr. C. G. Struthers, Cashier, Union State Bank; Mr. H. N. Leighton, Contractor, Ex-Pres. Board Education; Mr. Geo. F. Womrath, Bus. Agt. Mpls. Board Education.
9. All answers will receive equal consideration whether accompanied by purchase or not.
10. At the close of the contest a printed list of the owned "D" words and the names of the winners will be sent to all contestants who make purchases.
11. All answers must be mailed before post office closing time March 1st, 1922.

List of Offers

$1.00 One full size box of De Do Face Powder [white, flesh or natural (brunette)] Prepaid for.....$1.00

$2.00 One large jar each of De Do Night Cream and Day Cream. Prepaid for.....$2.00

$5.00 One box of De Do Face Powder, one jar each of Night Cream and Day Cream (as above), one $1.50 bottle of exquisite De Do Toilet Water, one 25c box of Nail Polish, and one 35c can of De Do Talcum Powder, Total $5.10. Prepaid for.....$5.00

LIST OF CASH PRIZES

	If No Purchase Is Made	If $1.00 Purchase Is Made	If $2.00 Purchase Is Made	If $5.00 Purchase Is Made
First prize	$20.00	$500.00	$1,000.00	$2,500.00
Second prize....	10.00	250.00	500.00	1,250.00
Third prize.....	5.00	125.00	250.00	625.00
Fourth prize....	5.00	75.00	150.00	375.00
Fifth prize.....	5.00	50.00	100.00	250.00
Sixth prize.....	3.00	40.00	80.00	200.00
Seventh prize...	3.00	30.00	60.00	150.00
Eighth prize....	3.00	20.00	40.00	100.00
Ninth prize.....	2.00	15.00	30.00	75.00
10th to 15th....	2.00	10.00	20.00	50.00

Wonderful Opportunity for Workers

Start in business for yourself. Be your own boss. Supply Heinrich products to your community, either town or country, and make $1.00 every hour you work. Write for list of open territories and full particulars.

NOTICE—The former closing date, Feb. 15, has been extended to March 1st, 1922.

De Do Toilet Water $1.50 | De Do Talc. 35c | De Do Night Cream $1.00 | De Do Day Cream $1 | De Do Face Powder $1.00 | De Do Nail Polish 35c

Heinrich Chemical Company

1909 East Hennepin Ave. Minneapolis Minn., U. S. A.

Light Fibre Legs and Arms

657 Dean Bldg. RAY TRAUTMAN Minneapolis, Minn.

HERB BOOK 10c tells how to make medicine from Herbs for all diseases; over 240 recipes and valuable herb secrets worth $$. Calumet Herb Co., Desk 6, South Holland, Illinois

Gate Top Mesh Purse

THIS is the new "Gate Top" mesh purse with a ten-inch wrist chain, handsome, stylish, and perfectly safe for the carrying of money and other valuables. A slight pull with the forefinger of each hand instantly opens the purse, a gentle pressure with thumb and finger closes it. Our illustration shows the purse closed. When open the top is as large as the bottom, or in other words, two inches in diameter. When closed it leaves an opening only three-fourths of an inch wide over which the brightly polished German silver cover snaps down tightly so that the contents of the purse cannot possibly become lost. This dainty purse is now extremely fashionable so we have purchased a quantity for the benefit of those of our lady and girl readers who like to be up-to-date in these little accessories. You can have one of them free by taking advantage of the following Club Offer. For three one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this handsome and stylish Gate Top mesh purse free by Parcel Post prepaid. Reward No. 7833.

Reward No. 7833

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

WATCH, CHAIN AND TWO RINGS

as premiums—send no money—simply name and address—merely give away FREE 12 Beautiful Art Pictures with 12 Boxes of our famous White Cloverine, which you sell at 25c each. We will send you this Genuine American Watch, also Chain and two Gold Shell Rings, according to offer in our Premium Catalog which you receive with the Cloverine. Millions are using Cloverine.

LADIES! YOU CAN ALSO EARN A BEAUTIFUL DINNER SET OR SIX LACE CURTAINS

and many other beautiful premiums. Our plan is the easiest and absolutely square. Write quick—Pictures and Cloverine sent promptly, post-paid. Be first in your town.

THE WILSON CHEMICAL CO.,

BIG CASH COMMISSION TO AGENTS Dept. M. 107, Tyrone, Pa.

Belgium Imported Melotte

Reduced 22%

Melotte, manufacturer of the greatest cream separator the world has ever known, announces a sweeping reduction in prices. Take advantage of this condition while it lasts. Buy now and save money.

Self Balancing Bowl

The Melotte bowl is self-balancing. Positively cannot get out of balance, therefore cannot vibrate. Can't remix cream with milk. Runs so easily, bowl spins 25 minutes after you stop cranking unless you apply brake. No other separator needs a brake Bowl chamber is porcelain lined.

Catalog FREE!

Write for new Melotte catalog containing full description of this wonderful cream separator and the story of M. Jules Melotte, its inventor.

$7.50 after 30 Days Free Trial

30 days' free trial—then, if satisfied, only $7.50 and a few easy payments—AND—the wonderful Belgium Melotte Separator is YOURS. Don't buy any separator until you have found out all you can about the Melotte and details of our 15-year guarantee which is infinitely stronger than any separator guarantee. Write TODAY.

The Melotte Separator, H. B. Babson, U. S. Mgr.
Dept. 3702 2843 W. 19th Street, Chicago, Ill.

MOST POWER—LEAST COST

2 H.P. WITTE

PULLS 2¾

For H-P.—Price—Quality—the best buy of all. Costs less than smaller engines—more power. All sizes 2 to 30 H-P. Way Down—Cash or Terms. Lifetime Guarantee.

$39.95 F.O.B. K.C.

(From Pittsb'gh, $5 More)

Catalog FREE. WITTE ENGINE WORKS,
3645 Oakland Ave., Kansas City, Mo.
3645 Empire Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.

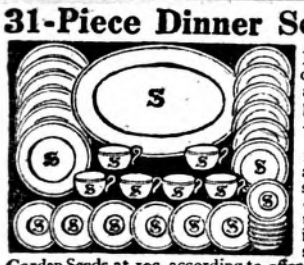
INSIST ON IT
by name
by name
by name
PISO'S
SAFE AND SANE
For Coughs & Colds

This syrup is different from all others. Pleasant—gives quick relief. Contains no opiates—good for young and old.

35¢ per bottle everywhere

GUARANTEED Thin Model WATCH

Latest design, popular high-grade thin model watch with fine gold finished waldemar chain and vest pocket knife FREE, set only $2.95 C.O.D.



Free Knife and Chain

This beautiful watch in highly-polished solid silveroid case, is guaranteed to give perfect time. Open face, stem wind and set, fully tested and regulated. Send No Money. Pay $2.95 on arrival and watch, knife and chain is yours.

Continental Watch Company
1526 S. Wabash Ave., Dept. 21, Chicago, Ill.

31-Piece Dinner Set Given

Full size dinner china, guaranteed against crazing; pure white color. Every piece decorated with royal blue band and your initial stamped in pure coin gold — just the set for a family of six. Simply sell 40 packets Garden Seeds at 10c, according to offer in catalog. Send your name. The Wilson Seed Co., Dept. 107 Tyrone, Pa.

FREE

This is a well-made violin, and is popular model of medium size It is finely proportioned and well finished. Body is well arched from the center with ample depth from the bridge. Flamed maple back and sides to match. It is a beauty. We send it complete, bow, rosin, etc., FULL INSTRUCTIONS how to play, for selling only 25 packages of Post Cards at 10c per pack. We trust you. Just write to Jones Mfg. Co., Dept. 28, Attleboro, Mass.

FREE American Watch or choice from premium list. Sell 30 pkgs. NEEDLES at 10c. SenecaSupplyCo., D-12, Oneonta, N.Y.

350 SHOT AIR RIFLE given for selling 40 big packets "Best by Test" garden seed at 10c. Order today, when sold send $4 and choose rifle, cash commission or other valuable prize in catalog sent with seed. We trust you. The Jefferson Farms, Dept. E, Albany, Ga.

MONEY Made quickly by smart men. Artol Co., 115 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Modern Farmer

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

in drills a foot apart in early spring and till and weed carefully, as the tiny asparagus plants are frail at first and cannot compete with weeds for food or sunlight. By early summer they will be big enough to thin out. Thin out, leaving a plant every three inches, but favor the strongest plants even if the three-inch rule must be stretched a bit to permit it. No further handling, aside from careful cultivation, is needed throughout the remainder of the first season's growth, though some truck gardeners do find it advantageous to mark with small stakes the best and strongest plants late in the fall. In this way the best roots can be singled out for transplanting in the spring; unless marked in some way, it is difficult to tell the strong from the weak after the tops have died down, though an expert can judge closely from examination of the roots.

We have spoken of the right kind of soil and the early tilling required for the asparagus bed. We might add that it is best to locate the bed at one side or end of the garden where it will be out of the way, as it is a fixture—a permanent bed which with good care will last for years. Therefore do not plant asparagus where they will be in the way.

Plow or dig furrows or trenches about ten inches deep and four feet apart. For this operation the common double or "two-way" plow will be found very serviceable. Planting should be done as soon as the ground has warmed up in spring. Set roots two feet apart in the rows, and cover with only a couple of inches of soil at first. Gradually, as the season advances, fill in the trench slightly with each cultivation until level with the ground surface. To cover roots too deeply at the start is almost certain to result disastrously; therefore the suggestion to plant in trenches and fill in little by little until covered to a depth of six or seven inches.

As asparagus should have at least one year, better two, until it is cropped, the space between the rows may be utilized for such crops as cabbage, peas, beans, lettuce or most any other kind of small-growing garden truck that requires cultivation frequently. In this manner the asparagus bed is made to pay its way until it comes into bearing and the care and attention given the companion crop will also serve for the asparagus. This plan we suggest of two ways of "killing two birds with one stone" will, we feel sure, be well received by the farmer or farmer's wife who have only a limited space allotted for the kitchen garden, and who, therefore, must make every bit of ground work all the time.

In another issue we will discuss harvesting, winter care, insect pests and common alfalfa diseases.

Bean Weevils

Housewives often exclaim with extreme disgust and dismay, "Those pesky bugs have got into my beans again," on opening some supposedly "bug-tight" container of beans put away for winter use. The truth of the matter is that the tiny white grubs or larvæ of bean weevils, present in the beans at harvest time, have matured and now appear as the full-grown though tiny insect. Moreover, unless hindered in some way, eggs will be layed and a new brood of worms hatched to feed on the stored beans. We have known cases where, left undisturbed, these pests quickly reduced a large crock full of beans to a dirty mass of chaff.

Though the bean weevil is a very small and insignificant insect, he makes up in numbers what he lacks in size, and the damage he does each year runs into large figures. They have been the chief factor in discouraging commercial production of field beans south of New York except in the upland districts. Their ravages have compelled farmers throughout the entire coastal region of the Middle Atlantic States to discontinue the production of this valuable food crop on an extensive commercial scale. Likewise the cowpea weevil, a first cousin of the bean weevil, is the worst pest of the cowpea seed; this pest has curtailed to a marked extent the use of this excellent soil-building crop in Southern States. Other members of this disreputable family are the pea weevil, four-spotted bean weevil, broad-bean weevil, lentil weevil and Mexican bean weevil. As they are all more or less alike in habits, and as preventive measures for one will do for all, we will discuss the bean weevil only.

Life History of Weevil

A common error on the part of farmers is that once the crop is harvested, threshed and stored for winter use there is no further danger of damage from insect pests. This is not the case, as those who have found even sealed jars of beans crawling with the pests will bear out. That these tiny insects hatch or develop from the germ of the seed is a current but erroneous belief held by many, a belief which a true knowledge of the life history of the insect will not bear out.

The female weevil, which has migrated to the field from some storehouse where infested beans have been stored, or which has hibernated in the field in seed scattered last harvest-time, lays her tiny—almost invisible—whitish eggs on the newly-forming pods at about the time the blossoms are falling off. Eggs hatch into an equally tiny worm or grub which penetrates the skin of the bean, leaving so slight trace of the point of entry that it cannot be noticed without the aid of a magnifying glass. This explains the reason why apparently sound beans will in time "let out the truth" in the shape of the mature bean weevil.

Weevil grubs mature much more slowly than do the beans in which they live. By harvest time they have made about one-fourth of their growth and have damaged the bean so little that it will pass for sound in both weight and appearance. In storage, development continues steadily unless the temperature of the storage place falls to around 34 degrees, when the larvæ lie dormant. Stored in a warm place, weevilly beans will usually liberate the mature insects about midwinter. As we have mentioned before, if not taken in hand at this time another generation will soon be developed from a new "crop" of eggs. (This is not true of the common pea weevil, however, as it can reproduce only on the growing crop.)

Indications of Presence

At harvest time only an expert can determine whether or not weevil grubs are present in beans, though the microscopic worms could be seen if the beans were opened and examined closely with a magnifying glass, a procedure both unlikely and tedious, and one which would not appeal to the farmer. Later in the fall and early winter, as grubs grow, develop and reach full maturity and the time for them to transform from the grub or larval stage to the adult or mature insect approaches, they change from pale white to a muddy bluish tint. Lying just beneath the skin in the dormant or pupa stage, they cause bluish-black spots to appear on the beans. These spots, which can readily be seen with the naked eye, are a certain indication that weevils are in the beans, a fact which will be borne out in a week or two by the emergence of "those pesky bugs."

Prevention and Control

Clean culture and clean seed will go far to control weevils if practiced consistently throughout an entire neighborhood. If not, the insects, which are winged, will migrate for considerable distances to locate a bean field and lay their eggs. Harvest and thresh as soon as possible in the fall to prevent emergence of early-maturing insects which will remain in the field over winter to infest a new crop next spring. Never leave overlooked vines, scattered pods and seed lying in the field; destroy everything that could possibly house the few insects necessary to perpetuate the undesirable race. Turn in the cattle or hogs to clean up the leavings, then fall plow. If this is done, and if either new seed is purchased or your own seed is carefully screened and picked over to remove all light, spotted or punctured beans, the weevil pest can be kept within bounds.

Fumigation, Heating, Etc.

Perhaps the commonest and most satisfactory method of killing the larvæ of bean weevils in beans is to treat with carbon disulphide. This is done by placing beans in some airtight container such as a barrel or washboiler, then fumigating with this liquid at the rate of from three to eight pounds to each 1,000 cubic feet of space. For ordinary farm purposes fill the barrel to within two or three inches of the top, then pour over the beans half a cup of carbon disulphide. Tie two thicknesses of heavy wrapping paper over top of barrel to keep the fumes from escaping, and leave for from one to two days. Keep temperature of room at around 75 degrees; under 60 degrees this remedy is not effective. Carbon disulphide costs from eight to 25 cents, depending on the quantities purchased, and is for sale at any drug store. Caution: Keep away from flame! It will burn or explode like high-test gasolene.

Many housewives use heat to kill weevil grubs with good results. They place beans in a large flat pan and put in the oven for several hours. A temperature of between 120 and 145 degrees is needed to do the work. For home use this works quite well but for use as seed it is a question if the temperature can be controlled so as not to injure the germination of seed. Immersing in hot water for one minute, then drying immediately by spreading thinly on a clean floor, is another household method.

Beans are often stored commercially at a temperature ranging from 32 to 34 degrees; at these temperatures weevils are not killed, but they lie dormant and do not develop into mature insects. They will immediately resume development when placed under more ideal conditions, and will withstand cold for more than a year before being killed. Stored in this manner, germination of seed is not impaired if dampness is avoided. Moist air is highly injurious to the quality and germination of beans, and favors the development of molds.

"Hubam" Still Unproved

"Hubam," the much-discussed new annual clover, is so new that very little is yet known regarding its merits as a forage crop. Certain authorities have boosted it as being superior to the biennial strains of sweet clover. It has been claimed by some that, when seeded with grain in the spring, it will make a growth of from three to eight feet after the grain has been harvested. This claim may be justified in very favorable years under extremely favorable climatic conditions. Many other claims equally remarkable have been made but proof has not been obtainable.

With reference to the statement that "Hubam" seed has been sold for from $3.00 to $5.00 per pound, Prof. G. B. Mortimer, of the agronomy department of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture, says: "The seed of Hubam is not worth $5 a pound, nor is it worth 50 cents a pound, because it is practically untried and its merits unproved. No authoritative tests concerning its value as a forage crop have as yet been carried to completion in Wisconsin. Until such tests have been completed here and elsewhere no farmer should be lead to plunge heavily in raising Hubam."

"Experiments here have not shown Hubam to be a very satisfactory hay crop. Experiments were begun in 1920, but were hampered by an insufficient amount of seed. This year tests were more complete, with the result that the outlook for Hubam, in Wisconsin at least, is not very promising. The seed was sown with small grain under as good conditions as possible, but the crop was practically a failure. This may possibly be due in part to the dry season, but much better results must be obtained before we can conscientiously endorse it as a crop.

"Hubam is a rapidly growing plant and may be of some value as an emergency hay crop, as a green manure crop or as a source of fall pasture. It can be planted in the spring after the regular hay crop is known to have winter killed and a crop of hay obtained the following fall. If it withstands dry summer weather and does not become woody, it still has the disadvantage of unfavorable weather in haying time which usually comes during fall rains. From our observations a good crop of hay in good condition would be difficult to produce. Further experiments will have to be carried on to make certain, however."

Care of Farrowing Sow

"Successful hog breeders have learned by experience that the three days covering farrowing time and the period just after are their harvest season, and that the results obtained then make for either success or failure," says Prof. J. H. Sheppard, of the North Dakota Agricultural Experiment Station. At heart a lover of good livestock, and an active participant in livestock improvement during the past twenty years or more, Prof. Sheppard is in a position to offer valuable suggestions not only suited to the wheat belt of the Northwest but for the country at large. The following "do's" and "don'ts" are based on his hints to hog men:

1. Use good sires. Remember that to get good pigs you must begin with the grandparents. Poor sires mean poor pigs—and paltry returns. Begin right.

2. Get acquainted with your sows before far-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 41.)

$4.99 WONDERFUL BARGAIN 15 PIECE ALUMINUM SET

Beautiful "Sunray" Finish Colonial Panel Design

You will be proud to own this remarkable cooking set in latest Beveled Edge Colonial Panel design. It will give you a lifetime of pleasure and satisfaction. Every piece has new brilliant "Sunray" finish FULLY GUARANTEED GENUINE pure aluminum. Most practical kitchen combination ever offered. Absolutely new and different. (1) shows 5 pieces packed in one to save space when not in use; (2) Combination Cooker; (3) Sauce or Stew Pan; (4) Ladle or Dipper; (5) Self-Basting Roaster; (6) Casserole or Bake Dish; (7) Cereal Cooker or Double Boiler; (8) Tubed Cake Pan; (9) Strainer or Colander; (10) Convex Kettle with Cover; (11) Corn Popper or Corn Flake Toaster; (12) Steamer Set; (13) Cookie or Doughnut Cutter; (14 to 19) 6 Assorted Jelly Molds, each one a different pattern; (20) Measuring Cup; (21) Pudding Pan; (22) Preserving Kettle. This is the most remarkable bargain you were ever offered. Send your order today for a set at this rock bottom

Slashed Price We Deliver FREE!

Remember, you get this wonderful 15-Piece Guaranteed Genuine Aluminum Set, including a six-quart kettle with exclusive patented rim. The set works into 25 cooking, baking and roasting combinations for every conceivable kitchen use. Thousands of satisfied customers from coast to coast.

SEND NO MONEY!

Don't send one penny in advance. We want to deliver this wonderful aluminum set right into your own hands before you pay a cent. This is not a long drawn-out dollar-down offer. When your own postman brings this set to you pay him $4.99 and the set is YOURS FULLY PAID. If after examining it you are not convinced that it is the greatest bargain you ever got or are in any way dissatisfied, simply return it to us and we will gladly refund your money. This special offer is for immediate acceptance only—so fill in and mail the coupon today.

Lester Sales Agency
1186 Rand McNally Bldg.
538 S. Clark St. Chicago

Lester Sales Agency
1186 Rand McNally Bldg.
538 S. Clark St.
Chicago, Illinois

Gentlemen: You may send me your Guaranteed 15-piece Aluminum Set in latest Colonial Panel design with beautiful Sunray finish. When the postman delivers the set to me I will pay him $4.99 and if after examining it I am not satisfied that it is a wonderful bargain I will return it to you in good condition, and you agree to refund my money.

Name .....
Address .....
Street No. ..... R.F.D. .....
State .....

30 DAYS FREE TRIAL Post Yourself

INVESTIGATE—Get facts on Walsh no-buckle harness, before buying any harness. Let me send you this wonderful harness on 30 days free trial. See for yourself this harness which outwears buckle harness because it has no buckles to tear straps, no friction rings to wear them, no holes in straps to weaken them. Highest possible quality of leather.

Try Walsh Harness on Your Team

Return if not satisfactory. Costs less, saves repairs, wears longer, fits any size horse perfectly. Made in all styles, back pads, side backers, breechingless, etc. LIBERAL TERMS, cash or note, no extra charge for credit. Write for FREE catalogue and new reduced prices.

JAMES M. WALSH, Pres.
WALSH HARNESS CO.
Dept. R-3
137 Keefe Ave.
Milwaukee, Wis.

Walsh Harness Book Tells the Why and How WRITE FOR IT TODAY FREE

A NEW OIL LAMP FREE
Burns 94% Air

M. A. Johnson, 609 W. Lake St., Chicago, Ill., the inventor of a wonderful new oil lamp that burns 94% air and beats gas or electricity, is offering to give one free to the first user in each locality who will help introduce it. Write him for particulars. Agents wanted.—Advertisement.

Ladies Wrist Watch

With Silk Ribbon Bracelet

For A Club Of Only Ten

WE have long searched the market for a suitable wrist watch for our girl readers and at last we have found it.

The above illustration really fails to do the watch justice. We know you will instantly fall in love with it. It is the popular octagon shape, only 5-16 of an inch thick and one inch in diameter. It has a high-grade jeweled Swiss movement and will keep accurate time. The dial is pure white with Arabic numerals. The bracelet is made of the finest black silk ribbon with a genuine rolled-gold catch and slide.

If you want a dainty, stylish, up-to-date wrist watch that you will be proud to show your friends, here is your opportunity to secure one absolutely free. You can easily secure the small club mentioned below and as soon as you have done so this beautiful wrist watch is yours without one cent of cost.

Given To You! For a club of only ten one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this fine wrist watch with ribbon bracelet exactly as described above, absolutely free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 75110.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Genuine Gold Filled

Guaranteed For 5 Years

Gold Birthstone Rings

THE most popular ladies' rings worn today are these beautiful birthstone rings. Not only is it considered lucky to wear one of them but they are now and always will be exceedingly stylish. We are able to illustrate only three of the rings but there are twelve in all—a different stone for each month of the year, and of course you should wear the stone that is symbolical of the month you were born. The following is a list of the twelve rings, names of the stones and the month to which they apply:

No. 8411, January, Garnet. No. 8421, February, Amethyst. No. 8431, March, Bloodstone. No. 8441, April, Diamond. No. 8451, May, Emerald. No. 8461, June, Agate. No. 8471, July, Ruby. No. 8481, August, Sardonyx. No. 8491, September, Sapphire. No. 8501, October, Opal. No. 8511, November, Topaz. No. 8521, December, Turquoise.

Each ring is guaranteed genuine gold filled, which looks exactly like solid gold and will wear for years. In fact we absolutely guarantee each ring for at least five years. The rings themselves are perfectly plain, the stones are solitaires and perfect imitations of the real gems. The setting of each ring is the ever popular "Tiffany" style. As a Christmas, Birthday or all-the-year-round gift for wife, mother, sweetheart or sister, nothing could be more appropriate and acceptable than one of these beautiful guaranteed rings set with the birthstone of the person to whom it is given. We will send you one of these rings free upon the terms of the following offer:

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you one of these beautiful gold-filled Rings by parcel post, prepaid. Please be sure to give size and number of ring wanted.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Sugar, Creamer And Tray

MADE of "crushed" silver—the very latest idea. Sugar, Creamer and Tray are full standard size. The Tray is quadruple silver plated and both Sugar and Creamer are quadruple silver plated outside and gold lined inside. A very useful set and a beautiful ornament for the dining table or sideboard.

CLUB OFFER. We will send you this Crushed Silver Set free and prepaid for four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each. Reward No. 7904.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

SELF-FILLING Fountain Pen

For A Club Of Three

HERE is a fountain pen that we can positively guarantee. Perhaps you have had some experience with fountain pens which never would write well and continually leaked ink all over your fingers. If so you will certainly appreciate this opportunity to secure a fountain pen that has none of these defects. Our illustration is of course greatly reduced in size. The pen offered you here is 6½ inches long, made entirely of hard rubber, finely finished, and the pen point is genuine 14-K gold. The feeding device is perfect, permitting a uniform flow of ink and it will not leak. Also please notice that this is a self-filling pen. You can fill this fountain pen in less than 10 seconds by pressing down the spring on the side, then placing the pen point in a bottle of ink, after which you release the spring and the pen is instantly filled with ink to its full capacity. If given proper care this pen should last anybody for years. If you will accept the following special offer we will send you one of these self-filling fountain pens with a positive guarantee that if it fails to prove satisfactory in any way you may return it to us and we will replace it with a new pen free of charge.

Club Offer. For a club of only three one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this guaranteed self-filling fountain pen free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8873.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Five One-Year Old ROSE BUSHES

HERE is the offer you have been waiting for—our new 1922 offer of beautiful Rose bushes free to all COMFORT readers. This year we shall give you what we believe to be five of the finest varieties yet produced. They come from the most famous rose grower in the United States—an expert who has done nothing but cultivate roses all his life. Each bush is one year old and in a growing condition when delivered to you. No matter where you live, you will receive the bushes at the proper time to plant in your locality. We guarantee that they will reach you in perfect condition. If they do not, or if any of the bushes fail to grow, we will replace them for you free of all cost. Following is a brief description of each of the five different varieties. Please read carefully—and send in your order today.

For One Subscription You Get These Five Prize Beauties!

Alexander Hill Grey A magnificent giant yellow rose, standing head and shoulders above all others of its color, ranking with the American Beauty and the Killarneys in value and grandeur. The color is a deep golden yellow with the edge of the petal a little lighter.

Columbia A very large Rose, the open flower measuring six inches across. The color is a true pink, deepening as it opens to a glowing pink. The shades become more and more intense until the full maturity of the flower is reached, and this color is enduring.

Lady Gay One of the most wonderful of all climbing roses, noted for its sweet and lasting fragrance and immense clusters of double, light pink blossoms—as many as thirty to forty in a single cluster. It has none of the defects of the Rambler but remains free from disease in all climates.

Eugene E. Marlitt One of the finest garden roses, healthy, vigorous and free blooming. The flowers are large and very double and of a rich bright carmine with scarlet tones which do not fade in the hottest weather. It is very hardy, fragrant and keeps up a close succession of bloom.

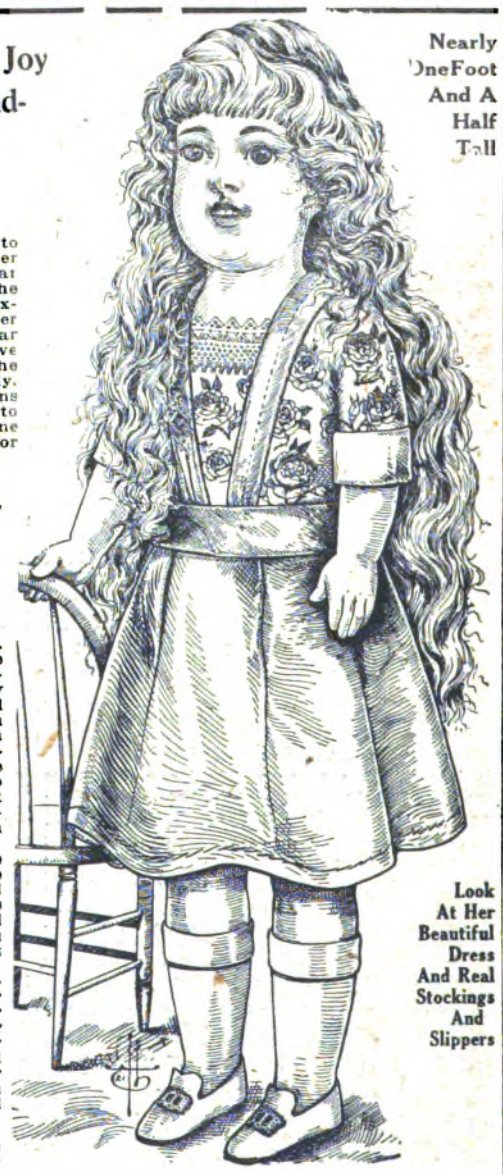
Bessie Brown A splendid new rose introduced here from Europe and beautiful beyond comparison. It bears large, full, double blossoms on strong, erect stems, is very hardy and fragrant, blooming profusely all through the summer. The color is almost pure white, flushed with pink.

Our Free Offer For only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50c we will send you the above described five Rose Bushes, free by parcel post prepaid. They will be forwarded to you at the proper time for planting in your locality and we guarantee they will reach you in perfect condition. Reward No. 8861.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine

What A Beautiful Life-Like Doll For Some Little Girl In Your Home!

Won't She Fairly Shout With Joy When She Finds This Big, Handsome, Sleeping Dolly Is All Her Own!



YES, we will send this big lifelike Doll to any little girl whose Papa, Mama, brother or sister will send in a club of only six one-year subscriptions to COMFORT. Not since before the war have we been able to offer such an expensive Doll. No city store will show a larger or handsomer Doll this season at anywhere near the price we paid for this one. We bought five thousand of them in one lot direct from the factory—that is how we secured them so cheaply. And just think—a club of only six subscriptions to COMFORT brings this beautiful Doll right to your door—yours to have and to own without one cent of expense. What a delightful surprise for some little tot in your home!

She Can Open And Close Her Eyes. She Has Imitation Teeth, Long Golden Hair And Wears A Pretty Dress With Real Stockings And Slippers.

NOW let us tell you more about this Doll, she stands nearly a foot and a half tall. The body, arms and legs are made by a new improved process which renders them practically indestructible. The head is unbreakable and head, arms and legs are movable. And if you could only see her hair. It is a light golden color, thick, long and luxuriant, falling far below her waist. Her eyes are as blue as the sky and she can open and shut them and go to sleep like a real baby whenever you want her to. Her rosebud lips are parted in a winsome smile showing her pretty white teeth in a truly lifelike manner.

She is fully dressed from head to feet in the latest style with cute short sleeves, handsome figured lace trimmed waist and short pleated skirt and she wears real stockings and slippers with silveroid buckles. You can undress and dress this Doll as often as you please and you can take off her stockings and slippers and put them on again just as you do your own.

Fathers and Mothers—just look at this beautiful Doll as she stands smiling and waiting for someone to pick her up, hug her and kiss her and take her out to play. Don't you think your little girl would just love to have her for her very own? Of course she would—and you should take advantage of this offer at once. Remember we have but five thousand of these Dolls on hand and when they are gone this offer will be withdrawn.

Nearly One Foot And A Half Tall

Look At Her Beautiful Dress And Real Stockings And Slippers

FOR A CLUB OF ONLY SIX!

YOU can surely find six neighbors and friends who will be glad to subscribe to COMFORT at the present bargain rate of 50 cents a year. Send us their names and addresses and the money collected ($3.00 in all) and we will send you this big, beautiful Sleeping Doll, fully dressed and otherwise exactly as described above, packed in a strong box so that it cannot possibly get broken, free by parcel post prepaid. There will be no expense to you whatever. Your Mail Carrier will deliver the Doll right to your door without charge. This Doll is Reward No. 7806 and please mention this number when ordering.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Premo Camera

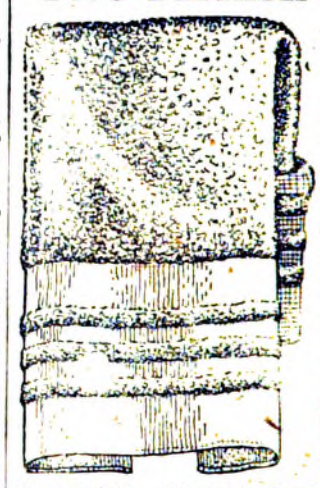
Reward No. 7944

Films And Instruction Book Free

THIS is not a toy but a genuine "Premo" camera, made by the Eastman Kodak Co., therefore you can depend upon it to produce the most pleasing and satisfactory results. It takes a picture 1¼ by 1¾ inches, is fitted with the best quality Meniscus lens and an automatic shutter adapted for snapshots and time exposures. The pictures may be taken either the long way or the short way of the camera. It uses the regulation roll film cartridge containing six exposures and this may be put in the camera and taken out again in broad daylight, so that you don't have to go into a dark room every time you want to load the camera. Anybody can make good pictures with this camera. Being small and compact, it is just the thing to carry with you to "snap" pictures of your friends, sports, etc., with. And remember, we send you not only the camera itself but also include One Six Exposure Roll Film Cartridge and Instruction Book, all packed together in a strong box and sent to you Free by Parcel Post, prepaid, on the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For a club of four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you by parcel post, prepaid, this Premo Camera with one Roll Film Cartridge containing six exposures and complete Instruction Book. Reward No. 7944.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.



Shaggy Teddy Bear

EVERY little boy and girl wants a Teddy Bear and here is an opportunity for every father or mother who reads COMFORT to get one without expense. "Teddy" is a plump, shaggy fellow, 10 inches tall, made of brown plush, carefully stitched and finished, and his head and legs are jointed in such a manner that you can place him in almost any position. He will stand up, sit down, stand on his head, walk on all fours, in fact he gets himself into all kinds of positions, so comical and lifelike that it makes the children scream with delight just to look at him. Teddy is so well made that he cannot easily become broken, and with ordinary care should last for years. We will send you Teddy free if you will accept the following special offer:

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Teddy Bear free and prepaid. Reward No. 9992.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

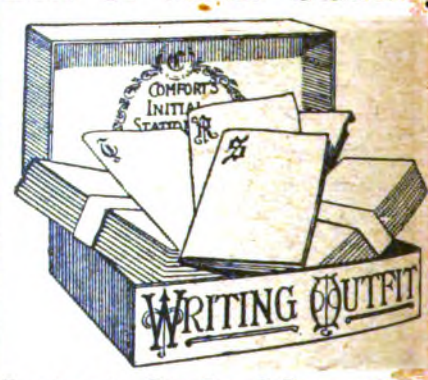
Two Turkish Towels



Good Size Soft And Fleecy

AFTER bathing there is nothing quite as fine as a good rub down with a Turkish towel, in fact it is the best towel for all purposes, whether for the bathroom, guestroom or everyday family use. They absorb the water much more readily than other towels and its soft fleece-like surface imparts to the body a delightful feeling of warmth and well-being. They are also fine for baby's toilet as they will not hurt the tender skin. The towels offered here are 15 inches wide and 32 inches long which is a good convenient size for all-round family use, and are of good weight, well made and finished. We will make you a present of two of these towels upon the terms of the following offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you one pair (2) of these fine Turkish Towels free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 9912.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Box Of Initial Stationery

Latest Style Monogram

IT is now the height of fashion and evidence of the very best taste to use stationery with your own monogram initial or "crest" on it. In this offer we give you two dozen sheets white linen stationery 10¼x6¼ inches in size, each sheet beautifully embossed in colors with any monogram initial you desire and two dozen envelopes. Just think how nice it will be when writing to your friends to have your own letter crest monogram initial embossed in colors on this high-grade fine quality stationery. Remember you get one full quire of choice paper and twenty-four envelopes in this complete writer's outfit. Don't hesitate to send for this premium today because you will surely be delighted with it.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you a box of this Initial Stationery free by parcel post, prepaid. When ordering be sure to specify what monogram initial you want. Reward No. 9482.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Comfort's Information Bureau

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT subscribers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions addressed to this Bureau. They will thus save time, labor and postage.

No attention will be given any inquiry which lacks the sender's full name and address but we will print only initials if so requested.

A SUBSCRIBER, Cherryvale, Kans.—The terms of your inquiry are not entirely clear and they are also, we believe, slightly misstated. Your "100 pounds of compressed air" we take to mean as air under 100 pounds compression. To gauge the increase of this compression under various heightened temperatures, it would be necessary to take some certain degree of temperature as a starting point from which the problem could be worked and the increase in pressure found. For the purpose of our answer, we are assuming that the original 100-pound compression takes place in ordinary indoor temperature of 68 degrees Fahrenheit—which equals 20 degrees Centigrade scale. Starting with this assumption, the mathematical rules governing such calculations give us the following results: At a temperature of 200 degrees Fahrenheit, the compression of the 100 pounds at 68 degrees would have increased to 125 pounds. At a temperature of 300 degrees Fahrenheit, this pressure would become that of 143.9 pounds.

H. S., Beaver Dam, Va.—Fame is of little value if there is yet one part of the United States where Henry Ford and his home address are not as well known as the thousands of gasolene chariots he has set rambling over every road of our country. You may write to Mr. Ford at Detroit, Michigan—where we assure you he is sufficiently well known that a letter will reach him without further address than this.

MRS. S. S., Barker, Texas.—After the death of a testator, the will is often read aloud as a matter of courtesy and convenience to the assembled heirs, but there is no law requiring such a public reading. It often necessarily occurs that one or more heirs cannot be present at such a reading, and these or other heirs can always obtain a copy of the will by application to the Surrogate's office or Probate Court where the document has been offered for probate. You should take steps to secure a copy of your brother's will from the address in Kansas where his last wishes were legally registered. Any local attorney will give you the necessary simple instructions how to go about this.

R. N. S., Pagosa Springs, Colo.—Land which has been made a part of the U. S. National Forest Reserve we believe to be no longer available for homesteading. Any land adjoining your present holdings which is part of a National Forest would be necessarily under the direct jurisdiction of a local Forest Supervisor. This official would be able to inform you authoritatively of the Federal laws governing the matter. If you are not satisfied with his statement of the case, you and your fellow homesteaders should ask aid and information from your Congressman or from the Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MRS. C. S., Port Washington, Ohio.—Some gentlemen who control mining corporations find it more profitable and easy to sell nicely-engraved share certificates than to attempt the laborious obtaining of ore from land which may not be as richly filled with gold, silver or copper as the companies' promises and prospectuses might make investors believe. We very much fear the company you mention is one of this sort and management and that your investment in it must be considered a total loss. If so, be more cautious in the future regarding the placing of funds in far-off concerns regarding whose holdings and management you know nothing more of than can be told you in alluringly-worded literature. One Liberty Bond in the hand is worth any number of fly-by-night copper companies in the bush—and a disappearing bush at that. To find out what has become of this company since 1908, write to the editor of the "Verde Copper News," Jerome, Arizona. Enclose a stamp for reply and state that you are a stockholder seeking to discover the present status of this corporation.

M. A. S., Van Buren, Ark.—Your silver half dime of 1857 is worth perhaps seven cents, if in fine condition. Otherwise it would possess only the value of the modern and more plebian nickel. Your silver three-cent piece of 1866 is valued at from twenty to forty cents, according to condition; and a copper two-cent coin of 1865 can be sold at a price ranging between fifteen and forty-five cents. For the benefit of the many COMFORT readers who write to this department regarding old coins, we state here that a coin, no matter how rare it may be, can never be marketed for more than its face value unless it is in fairly good condition, with date and other mint markings in plain and little-worn state. Coins that have worn smooth and have dates almost indistinguishable are not purchased by collectors. This would make the copper cent, and also the foreign coin you describe, of no worth save that of their face or bullion value. Confederate paper money is of no value except that which might be paid for it as a curiosity—and these relics of the Civil War are not rare enough to rank high as curiosities—there being large quantities of Confederate currency yet in existence.

MRS. E. G., Shell Creek, Tenn.—Your daughter's unfortunate weakness in her left hand and arm would not prevent her capably following the occupation of bookkeeper or cashier, and we believe she might very sensibly take up some commercial course at a high school or business college which would fit her to assume an office position. Both Nashville or Knoxville in your state contain institutions of the sort which might instruct your daughter so she could be self-supporting in the business world.

QUESTIONER, Mt. Vernon, Ill.—A "coloratura soprano" would be one who rendered her songs with many trills and much florid vocal ornamentation. It is a manner of singing requiring training and consists of scaling single syllables so that they are sung in two or more tones. A good canary is a natural artist in coloratura vocal work.

E. G., North Baltimore, Ohio.—For your ink-stained duck, moisten the place of the stain with hot water and then apply a finely-powdered mixture consisting of equal parts of cream of tartar and citric acid. This mixture constitutes what druggists often call "salts of lemon." The powder is best applied to the stain with the bowl of a spoon and well rubbed in. Rinse thoroughly in clean water. Another remover of ink stains is a liquid composed of one part oxalic acid to two parts water. The use of this acid, however, is apt to injure the strength of the fabric.

MRS. J. W. H., Martha, Tenn.—We list the various geographical names you send us, together with the states in which they may be found: Yankton, S. D.; Owasso, Mich.; Hampton, Va.; Havre de Grace, Md.; Stevens Point, Wisc.; Streator, Ill.; Olean, N. Y.; Evanston, Ill.; Weehawken, N. J.; Canandaigua, N. Y. Pamlico Sound and Cape Hatteras are both features of the coast of North Carolina. The Ozark Mountains may properly be claimed by Missouri, although portions of these rangy and beautiful highlands extend into Arkansas. (2) In relation to state Civil Service positions, you should address the Civil Service Commission at your state capital. Information concerning positions in the Federal Civil Service should be sought from the U. S. Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C. You failed to state what particular position you were seeking to secure.

M. H., Cataldo, Idaho.—A Lincoln penny of the date of 1909 is worth exactly one cent.

M. A. V., Montville, N. J.—March 20, 1904, fell upon a Sunday.

A. E. P., Missouri.—The cabinet of President Harding is as follows at this writing: Secretary of State, Charles E. Hughes of New York; Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon of Pennsylvania; Secretary of War, John W. Weeks of Massachusetts; Secretary of the Navy, Edwin Denby of Michigan; Secretary of the Interior, Albert B. Fall of New Mexico; Secretary of Commerce, Herbert Hoover of California; Secretary of Labor, J. J. Davis of Indiana; Secretary of Agriculture, H. C. Wallace of Iowa; Attorney General, H. M. Daugherty of Ohio; Postmaster General, Will H. Hays of Indiana. The two U. S. Senators from Missouri are: James A. Reed of Kansas City and Selden P. Spencer of St. Louis. Mr. Reed is a Democrat and Mr. Spencer a Republican.

Talks with Girls

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In writing this department always sign your true name and give your address; if not, your letter will receive no attention. Name will not be published.

LAST month, in speaking of New Year resolutions, I suggested that we take twelve of our greatest faults, one for each month of the year, and overcome them, one at a time. Then I deliberately side-stepped telling you about my faults, and, anyway, I wasn't sure which was my worst. After due consideration of the matter, I've decided that procrastination is the worst thing I do—or don't do—since to procrastinate means to put off until tomorrow, or from day to day. Much as I've tried to overcome the terrible habit, it nearly got the best of me this month, for I kept putting off answering your letters until it was almost too late. Wouldn't that have been a dreadful thing? I'd never have forgiven myself, never, if it had really happened. Remember, never put off until tomorrow what you can do today, though the average girl's idea of that wise old saying must be something like this: "Never take off tomorrow what you can take off today." But I'm sure my girls aren't like that.

DISSATISFIED ERMA, Va.—It is only natural that your husband should want to be with his mother, but at the same time you and your baby have certain rights and you should be protected, as well as his mother, by his life insurance. You say you "let him have his own way and do as he tells me." Maybe he needs a little wholesome opposition. Why not visit your mother or relatives for a while and give him a chance to miss you?

LEO, Mass.—Third cousins, I believe.

SUNSHINE, W. Va.—It seems to me if I were a girl of nineteen and had assisted in the care and general upbringing of eight younger brothers and sisters, I'd want a vacation before marrying and committing myself to the care of a home and possibly more babies. You show good judgment in wanting to wait until you finish school. After that, may you choose wisely and well and live happily ever after, and the chances for happiness are greater with someone you love rather than with a man you do not care for but whom your parents wish you to marry.

MABEL, Ohio.—It isn't best to believe tales that are told you. The fact that he had been seen with another girl during your absence doesn't necessarily mean that he had been in the least untrue to you. It may have been quite accidental and innocent. On the other hand, if he wanted very much to see you it seems that he could find a way even if he does live in another town and doesn't know when you are to be at home. It might be as well for you to let him make the first advances unless you find that you were wrong in the beginning.

BLUE EYES, North Carolina.—Goodness me, child, I didn't mean to intimate that I was a good cook or housekeeper but just the average, though I'm tickled pink to be of help when I can. If your candy "sugars" I should say it is because you cook it too long or beat it too much after you remove it from the fire. This is my recipe for plain chocolate fudge: Two cups of sugar, two-thirds cup of milk (part cream if not too expensive), heat to boiling point, add two squares of chocolate and stir until chocolate is melted. Boil until it will form a soft ball when dropped in cold water, probably ten minutes, add one tablespoon of butter just before removing from fire. Beat well, add a teaspoon of vanilla when it cools a little, and keep on beating until creamy or mixture begins to harden a very little around edge of dish. Pour into buttered tin, etc. When I want some very special candy I make Divinity Fudge. Here's how: Two cups of sugar, one-half cup corn syrup and one-half cup water. Boil four or five minutes or until it will "thread" when dropped from tip of spoon. Have ready some chopped nuts and the stiffly-beaten whites of two eggs. Pour the boiling syrup onto the whites of the eggs, beating all the while, with egg beater at first and spoon when mixture gets too heavy and thick for beater. Flavor with vanilla and add nuts. At first signs of thickening or hardening, pour it into buttered tins. Maybe this isn't according to Mary Elizabeth, but if you like it I shall be content.

TROUBLED OF MISSISSIPPI.—Didn't you ever hear of little "Orphant Annie" who said that the "goblin uns will get you if you don't watch out"? Well, goblins aren't in it compared with married men who give girls jewelry and take them on automobile rides, so you better "watch out." To tell the truth, I think you'd be much safer with an ordinary everyday goblin than a married man such as you describe. Even a wicked goblin would be interesting, I think. At any rate, he wouldn't start in telling you that his wife didn't "understand" him, and I feel safe in saying that's just what your married man did. Fact is, the wives understand them only too well, and no man that isn't straight likes to be understood. It makes him rather ashamed, and to bolster up his self-conceit he tries to make some young girl think she is in love with him. Honest now, don't you think it would have been more to his everlasting credit if he had bought shoes for his children instead of spending his money for jewelry for you? Of course the dear little things need more than shoes, little shirts and things like that, but shoes always make a hit in a literary and poetical sense, and if cleverer people than I say shoes, then I'll say the same, but I still insist that they need other things as well. From all this I trust you've gathered that I don't approve of your behavior, and if you really want my advice (else why did you waste a perfectly good two-cent stamp—it's all marked up now) you'll have nothing more to do with him only to tell him that you wouldn't want him for a husband, for history might repeat itself, and, furthermore, you want to respect the man you marry, and he hasn't shown himself worthy of respect. In one way you haven't either, but it was through ignorance, and can be overlooked.

CONSTANCE, Utah.—Cheer up, Constance. Folks who are so shy and hard to get acquainted with generally "wear well", once they make friends. That is better than being able to talk easily to everyone and then have them forget you the next day.

GUY, Ky.—Bless your heart, Guy, I had no intention of scolding. You aren't the first boy of seventeen (and eighteen and nineteen), as well as older men, to confess your love to me—for some other girl, I mean, always for some other girl. Some of them were even more serious and hopeless than you are, but to date there have been no fatalities. They either forgot the object of their seventeen-year-old devotion or else married them later and then forgot them—no, I mean married them and lived happily ever after. Most cases, though, they married someone else. The only help I can give you is to be so loyal and devoted that she cannot help but realize that you love her, or else neglect her a little and see if that makes any difference.

PRUDENCE, Tenn.—Your grandmother seems to be a determined old lady, and if she says you can't see or correspond with the young man I don't see how I can change her mind. He might try making love to Grandma, in a nice, attentive, grandson manner, and win her approval that way. Most women are susceptible to flattery, no matter what age. Or he might rescue her from some terrible fate. Too bad granny hasn't a still up in the mountains; then he could warn her of the approach of the revenue officers and thus win her everlasting gratitude and her granddaughter as well. Perhaps it is just as well, though, for in that case he might decide he'd rather have the grandmother.

THREE CHUMS, Ark.—If a girl of sixteen, in the seventh grade, wanted to leave school and go to work to clothe herself, should she do it if her parents objected? If the parents of this girl were able to give her sufficient clothes to cover her in a decent manner then she should be glad to stay in school and to study hard. Of course if she has absolutely no clothing whatever, then I suppose she should go to work long enough to earn money to dress herself in a comfortable manner. According to the way some of the girls dress it ought not to take so much time to earn money enough for that. (2) If your parents object to you writing to a certain boy, then don't write to him. The fact that he sends you the necessary postage doesn't make it right.

WORRIED BLUE EYES, North Carolina.—It is only natural that he should wish to spend Sundays with his uncle, since the uncle gave him a home and education. You wouldn't have him ungrateful, would you? For that matter, you haven't given him so much encouragement. You should have answered him more kindly, at least, though I do think he should have expressed his love for you before asking if you cared for him. Don't worry, everything will be all right.

There, we had a nice little chat, didn't we? I've enjoyed it and hope you have.

Sincerely, COUSIN MARION.

How to Clean a Steel Knife

THE so-called tarnishing of steel knives is the result as much of the wrong method of cleaning as it is of a chemical decomposition of the surface of the blade, according to official advice from the American Cutlery Bureau of Information. A badly-polished steel knife will show more easily the effect of tarnishing than will one that has been well cleaned and polished before use. Experience, in fact, has proven that the best-polished American steel knives, made of high-class steel, are less inclined to tarnish than those of inferior quality.

All tarnishing of steel knives can be avoided if the knives are cleaned immediately after use. The chemical action of the acids which causes tarnishing requires a certain time to accomplish its purpose and the quicker it is interrupted the better it is for the future use of the knife. Do not leave steel knives lying uncleaned over night. Rinse the blade carefully in hot water after use and wipe it dry with a clean cloth. This will destroy the acids. If there is time, polish the blade with a fine powder polish. The polish upon the blade of a good steel knife is produced by very rapid friction which makes the surface of the blade absolutely smooth until it shines as does the polish on high-class furniture or glass.

Acids destroy the smoothness of the surface and eat not only into the polish but create small indentations in which food will decompose and help to make the tarnishing of the blade permanent. Many machines and appliances for polishing knives are sold. The best to use, however, is an ordinary bottle cork and some fine polishing powder. No appliance can replace the sensitiveness of the hand and a few rubbings with the cork will not only remove all the uncleanliness from the blade but also renew the polish which is its natural protector. Before polishing, rinse the blade thoroughly with warm water and dry it. After polishing, a renewed rinsing and careful drying will remove the remains of the polishing powder. The essential purpose of a knife is to cut. Buying cheap cutlery is false economy. Ask your dealer for the best table cutlery made in America.

Try It Three Times Free!

Dr Caldwell will send you a trial bottle of his famous Syrup Pepsin free of charge, enough to relieve three stubborn attacks of constipation.

SEND HIM YOUR ADDRESS TODAY FOR YOUR FREE TRIAL BOTTLE

PEOPLE who are occasionally or habitually constipated will be glad to know of a remedy that brings quick relief; and to dispel all question and doubt I will send a small bottle, enough to relieve three attacks of constipation, free of charge. I ask no money or promise of money, just your name and address in the most convenient way for you.

What I will send you is a compound of Egyptian Senna and other simple laxative herbs with pepsin, known to druggists as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I have been making it for 29 years, and it is today the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. You can buy it in any drug store. A dose would cost you less than a cent, and a bottle will last even a large family several months.

My object in sending free trial bottles is to prove to skeptics and doubters, at my own expense, that my Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a different laxative from any other you may ever have tried. I want to prove that it will relieve any case of constipation, no matter how old, chronic or stubborn; that it will help to regulate your system so that medicines can in time be altogether dispensed with; that it is smoother and pleasanter than others; that it does not pain or gripe.

Thousands of people after using Syrup Pepsin promptly discarded strong physics, cathartics and purgatives; pills, salt waters, calomel, coal tar drugs in candy form and such things. They wrench the system and cause a reaction worse than before. My Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin operates gently and smoothly, and is safe. That is why over 8,000,000 bottles were bought in drug stores last year, several million by mothers who gave them to constipated infants and children. Elderly people, too, prefer mild Syrup Pepsin, for they have not the strength to stand powerful drugs. This is especially gratifying to me, as I know the troubles of the old, being myself in the 83d year of my age.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL

who will send three trials of his Syrup Pepsin free of all cost

There is someone in every family who should send for the trial bottle that I offer free, and parents should send in behalf of the children. Send for it if there is constipation only now and then, and keep the free bottle until it is needed; send for it if there is chronic constipation, and use it at once; send for it if someone is subject to headaches, biliousness, feverishness, loss of appetite, dyspepsia, restlessness, sleeplessness, indigestion, sniffling and colds, for even common colds are complicated with constipation.

CLIP AND MAIL

Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 553 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois.
Send me a trial bottle of your Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin free of all cost. I or some one in the family will give it a trial the next time there is constipation.

Your name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

If you prefer, simply send your name and address on a postcard or in a letter. I will understand.

ALL THIS FREE
Gold-plated Lavalliere and Chain, pair Earbobs, Gold-plated Expansion Bracelet with Im. Watch, guaranteed quality and 3 Gold-plated Rings ALL FREE for selling only 15 pieces Jewelry at 10 cents each.
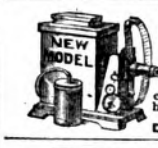
EAGLE WATCH CO., Dept. 15, East Boston, Mass.

FLASHLIGHT GIVEN Everybody wants seeds.
OR CHOICE WATCH, CAMERA OR RIFLE
for selling only 40 packs asstd. Vegetable Seeds at 10c per large pack. Easy to sell. EARN BIG MONEY or premiums. We trust you with seeds until sold. Address;
Send No Money
AMERICAN SEED COMPANY
Lancaster, Pa. Box 32



Prepaid
10 YEAR GUARANTEE Watch and Ring GIVEN
We positively give a genuine Stem Wind, Stem Set Watch, Beautifully Engraved Case, guaranteed time-keeper, for selling only 25 of our Large, Beautifully Colored Art and Religious Pictures at 10c each. Order 25 pictures. We trust you. When sold, return money collected, and this Watch and Handsome Stone Set Ring are yours. It's easy our way.
GAIR MFG. CO. 1926 Sunnyside Ave. Dept. 108 CHICAGO

VIOLIN GIVEN
This special sweet toned Violin given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10 cents each. Order 20 pictures, when sold send the $2.00 and choose Violin or other prize according to big list sent with pictures.
RAY ART CO., DEPT. 48, CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE
Eastman Camera. Load and unload in daylight. Takes pictures 2 1-4 x 3 1-4, sharp, clear and distinct. Sell 40 packets Garden Spot Seed at 10c a packet and Camera is yours. Send no money. Write now.
Lancaster Co. Seed Co. Sta. 99 PARADISE, PA.

MOVIE MACHINE FREE
HAVE YOUR OWN "MOVIE"
Genuine American Moving Picture Machine complete with film, given free for selling 30 sets Colored Postcards at 10 cts. a set. You can earn money giving shows at your own home. Write today.
COLUMBIA NOVELTY CO., Dept. 658 East Boston, Mass.

THIS AIR RIFLE FREE
for selling 10 pckgs. Bluine at 15c a pckg. Rifle first-class in every way. When sold return our $1.50 and we will send rifle, all postage prepaid.
BLUINE MFG. CO., 561 Mill St., Concord Jct., Mass.

MAKE MONEY SELLING GLASSES
Prescriptions filled — Broken lenses duplicated.
Send for Catalog. COULTER OPTICAL CO., Dept. B, Chicago

ALL THIS JEWELRY FREE
This "Lucky Tige" CHARM with 36-inch silk Cord, this Im. WRIST WATCH with adjustable leather strap and buckle, this pair of sparkling pierceless EAR RINGS, 3 Gold plated RINGS and this handsome 36-inch Oriental Rice Bead NECKLACE with Tassel Beaded Drop. We give ALL these 7 articles FREE for selling only 12 Jewelry Novelties at 10 cents each. Send today. We trust you and treat you square.
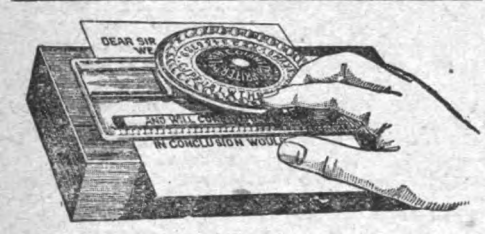
C. W. MEAD MFG. CO., Providence, R. I.

54 Inch Rope Of Pearls

Reward No. 9882

Full Opera Length



THE dream of every woman and girl is to possess her own necklace of gleaming, iridescent pearls. There's a wonderful fascination about them—a beauty that appeals to every feminine heart.

Now your dream can come true—for we are giving away this handsome, full opera length rope of Parisian pearls. It is 54 inches long, all the pearls are of uniform size—¼ inch in diameter—of perfect finish and luster, far handsomer than the ordinary imitation pearl necklace sold at a high price. It can easily be wound twice around the neck, making the double rope as shown in our illustration.

By rare good luck we secured first choice of these necklaces from a large importer and at a price that enables us to give them for an unusually small club. Please read the following offer and learn how you can get a beautiful, 54-inch rope of pearls free of all cost.

Given To You! For only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this handsome, opera length Pearl Necklace free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9882.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Little Giant Typewriter

A REAL machine that writes very distinctly. Has every letter in the alphabet, all the numerals from 1 to 10 and punctuation marks. Uses any size letter paper up to 5 inches wide. For correspondence, making out invoices, statements, addressing envelopes, etc., this machine will do the work well. It is very easy to operate, in fact, a child can write on it after a little practice.

Given To You! For three one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Typewriter free and prepaid. Reward No. 8853.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Silver Bonbon Dish

THIS beautiful dish can be used for a variety of purposes—for candy, nuts, salted peanuts, popcorn, etc. It is much larger than it appears in the above illustration, measuring over five inches in width and two inches deep. It is heavily silver plated outside and gold lined. Needless to say, it makes a handsome ornament for the sideboard and will last a lifetime.

We will send you this handsome Silver Bonbon Dish free upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this Silver Plated, Gold Lined Bonbon Dish free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9942.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Ivory White Toilet Set

Comb Brush Mirror

For A Club Of Six

PURE white, with a fine smooth finish, this handsome Comb, Brush and Mirror Set equals in appearance the finest French Ivory. The Comb is 7½ inches long, very light and dainty, with both coarse and fine teeth. The Brush is 10 inches long and 2½ inches wide, with medium-length, finest, stiff bristles. The Mirror, which measures 10x5½ inches, is made of heavy, flawless, beveled French glass, 4½ inches in diameter.

No lady could wish for a finer Toilet Set than this one. It has the air of refinement found in the highest grade Ivory Sets, it is just as durable and can be cleaned as often as desired without injury to its smooth ivory white finish.

We will give you, free, this fine Ivory White Comb, Brush and Mirror Set in a fitted box upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For six one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this Comb, Brush and Mirror Set in a fitted box, free, by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 7796.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Plant This Grand Fruit Orchard!

For A Club Of Only Two We Will Send You Seventeen Apple And Pear Tree Grafts, Berry Bushes And Grape Vines!

LAST season we sent out nearly twenty-five thousand of these Orchard Collections to COMFORT readers. So far as we know, not one of them failed to grow. This season we expect to give away fifty thousand. We buy these Collections from a nursery man who has been in business for years and who has the reputation of producing some of the finest nursery stock to be obtained anywhere. He personally selects the different varieties that make up these Collections and forwards them direct to our readers by prepaid parcel post. He Guarantees Every Collection. If any of the trees, bushes or vines fail to grow satisfactorily they will be replaced for you free of all charge.

Here Is What You Get!

ONE Snow Apple Tree, One Wealthy Apple Tree, One Kieffer Pear Tree, One Bartlett Pear Tree, Two Lucretia Dewberry Bushes, Two Rex Raspberry Bushes, Three Niagara Grape Vines, Three Delaware Grape Vines, Three Concord Grape Vines.

The four Apple and Pear Tree grafts are one foot high, grafted from bearing trees with good records. They will take root as soon as planted and grow rapidly into vigorous, healthy trees.

The nine Grape Vines are a product of Southern Michigan, where the finest grapes in the world are grown. From selected vines, cuttings are taken and buried in underground pits until they undergo a process known as "calousing." After being properly "calloused" the cuttings will take root as soon as planted. The "calloused" Grape Cuttings in this Collection are all produced in this manner. They will grow rapidly and bear immense crops of choice grapes almost as soon as large vines planted at the same time.

The two Raspberry Bushes and two Dewberry Bushes are robust, one-year-old youngsters, ready to set out as soon as you receive them. They will begin growing at once and develop into fine, heavy-bearing bushes if given proper attention.

All Will Bear Soon!

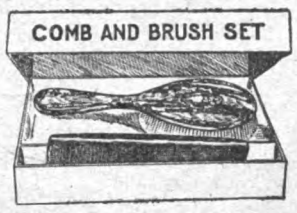
This Fine Fruit Orchard will prove an ever-increasing source of pleasure and profit to you year after year. All the trees, vines and bushes will bear fruit in a remarkably short time. In two years the Raspberry and Dewberry bushes will commence bearing. The following year you will have grapes. The Apple and Pear Trees will begin to bear in from three to five years. Then you will have loads and loads of fine fruit in increasing quantity every year.

Full Planting Instructions!

WITH this Orchard Collection you will also receive instructions for planting. These directions are illustrated with pictures and diagrams showing you just what to do and when and how to do it. By following these simple directions you should in a few years have one of the finest orchards in your neighborhood.

They Are Sure To Grow!

REMEMBER, everything in this Collection is absolutely guaranteed to grow. We stand behind every Collection sent out and the grower in turn stands behind us. You may rest assured that this splendid Collection will reach you in good condition and grow to your entire satisfaction if the directions for planting are carefully followed. If any of the trees, bushes or vines fail to make growth satisfactory to you, we hereby guarantee to replace them absolutely without charge. You run absolutely no risk in accepting this offer.

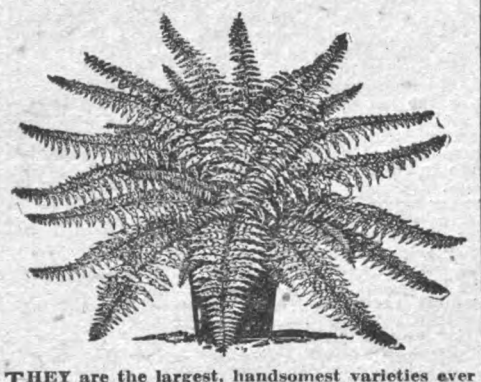


Our Free Offer!

FOR a club of only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will give you this remarkable Fruit and Orchard Collection free—the two Apple Trees, two Pear Trees, two Dewberry Bushes, two Raspbrry Bushes and nine Grape Vines. The whole Collection will be carefully wrapped and sent to you prepaid by parcel post, direct from the grower at the proper time for planting in your locality. Remember we guarantee that everything will reach you in perfect condition. Be sure to send in your order this very day and ask for Reward No. 9542.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine

2-Piece Toilet Set



THIS is a good grade Toilet Set, consisting of comb and brush. The comb is seven inches long, with coarse and fine teeth, and comes in the new popular "Malachite" green finish. The brush is nine inches long, two and a half inches wide, with firm white bristles, and is finished in the same beautiful "Malachite" green, with a silverine shield on the back. We have given away thousands of these sets and it never fails to please.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Comb and Brush Set free and prepaid. Reward No. 9982.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

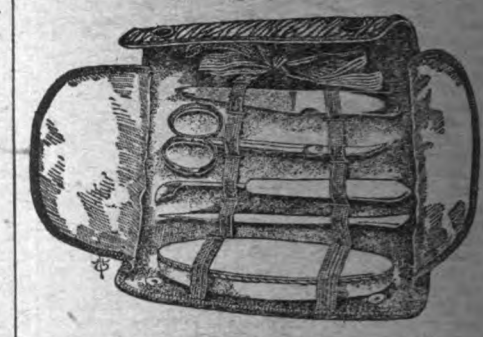
Three Lovely Ferns

THEY are the largest, handsomest varieties ever grown for house culture—the Roosevelt, the Boston or "Fountain" fern, and the Whitmani or "Ostrich Plume" Fern. We guarantee thse ferns to be strong, healthy and well rooted, and that they will reach you in perfect condition, ready to pot. If any of them fail to grow, we will cheerfully replace them free of charge. We are able to illustrate but one variety, "The Roosevelt," but remember you get all three ferns free on this offer.

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you the above described collection of three beautiful ferns free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 8581.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

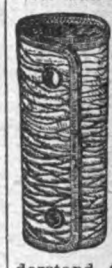
31-Piece Dinner Set



THIS splendid set of dishes is full size for family use and consists of 6 Plates, 6 Cups, 6 Saucers, 6 Cereal or Fruit Dishes, 6 Individual Butters and large Meat Platter all handsomely decorated with clusters of purple wood violets surrounded with rich green foliage and bordered with lovely tracings of gold. Our illustration gives you no idea of the real beauty of these dishes. This is by far the handsomest, daintiest dinner set we have ever offered and we are positive that it will more than please every woman who secures one of them on the terms of our very liberal offer. No matter where you live (if it is not outside the United States), we will ship you this set by express direct from the pottery in Ohio. You are to pay the express charges, but they will be but a fraction of what this set would cost you at retail.

Given To You! For a club of only ten one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this handsome 31-piece Violet Decorated Dinner Set carefully packed to prevent breakage, charges collect. Reward No. 75010.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.



French Ivory Manicure Set

In A Roll-Up Leather Case

Given For A Club Of Four!

A PRACTICAL and beautiful Set, containing everything necessary for the proper care of the nails. It consists of a 5-inch flexible polished steel nail file, a pair of 3½-inch polished steel curved nail scissors, a 4-inch cuticle knife with French Ivory handle, a 4-inch French Ivory nail stick, and a 4½-inch nail polisher or buffer with French Ivory Top. All these articles are neatly contained in a moire-lined, genuine leather case, measuring 5½ inches wide and 6 inches from end to end when opened. The case rolls up as shown in illustration, and fastens with two snap clasps. In this form it resembles a miniature pocketbook, and is just as convenient to carry, as it measures only 5½x2 inches and only 1 inch in thickness.

Although we offer this Manicure Set for an unusually small club, please understand that each and every piece is strictly high grade and regulation size. We know that every woman and girl who accepts this offer and earns one of these splendid Sets will be more than delighted with it. It is free on the terms of the following offer.

Given To You! For four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this splendid French Ivory Manicure Set in a roll-up leather case free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8124.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

"Peggy" The New Winter Doll

She Is Looking For A Mother

Do You Want Her?

PEGGY first saw the light of day in New York but she didn't like the big city with its noise and confusion and was mighty glad to come to Maine on a brief vacation before looking for a permanent home somewhere in the country.

She—doesn't care where she lives so long as as it is in some cozy little town or on a nice, big farm, and provided she can find some little girl who will be a kind mother to her. She just loves the horses and cows and doggies and kitties and—yes, even the little "piggies" make her laugh until she can hardly stand up.

Peggy says that life on the farm is the only life for her, so we want to give her to some little girl who lives on a farm, where she can romp and play to her heart's content and be happy all day long. Please remember, however, that we have but a limited number of these Dolls on hand and if you want one your order should be sent in at once.

A New York manufacturer who wanted to keep his help busy during the dull season sold us these Dolls at about one-half the regular wholesale price, so we are enabled to give them away for almost nothing.

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you "Peggy" free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8621.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Writing And Drawing Outfit

Reward No. 9972

For Home And School

In A Fine Leatherette Case

HERE is something that is needed in every home and by every schoolboy and schoolgirl—a big value-assortment of almost everything needed for writing and drawing. Our illustration is, of course, greatly reduced in size. The Case, which is made of fine leatherette, is 10½ inches long and 2½ inches wide. It is of the folding style, with a snap fastener, so that it can conveniently be carried in the pocket or in the children's lunch basket. Inside the Case there are three high-grade pencils with erasers, one good quality penholder with pen, one twin pencil (in reality two pencils in a combination holder), one pencil sharpener, one large rubber eraser, one 10-inch ruler and an aluminum collapsible drinking cup with cover.

This Outfit is manufactured by the American Lead Pencil Company, which is sufficient guarantee of its fine quality, and we know that it will please our readers, especially those who have children going to school, and of course it is just as handy in the home, because all the pencils, penholder, etc., are high grade and just what grown people like to use. If you will accept the following special offer we will send you one of these fine Outfits free.

Given To You! For only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this complete Writing and Drawing Outfit, exactly as above described, free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9972.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35.)

Lena, you say you run races "coming from school," but you don't say anything about running to school. Yet I suppose it is just possible that you are in more of a rush to get home than you are to arrive at the Arcola Arcanum to which you travel daily for the absorption of wisdom. I'm sure glad you have never yet been hurt when you have been "throwed off" during your races, Lena. This speaks well for your "tuff"-ness, but it is almost mighty tough on your school spelling book or dictionary which apparently must have also been thrown off when you came a cropper in one of your racing spills. Lena, you want to keep a tight hold on your spelling lessons and grammar drills if you intend to graduate from high school two short years from now. Examination papers cannot be answered by intention and there might be a few tough questions thrown in which you would find it hard to answer. I see that you expect your course in corn gathering to last longer than your school work. If you buy any of the finely-scalloped, needle-pointed shoes I see exhibited in shop windows nowadays, I am sure you will be able to keep on corn gathering the balance of your young and old days. Billy, who is fearfully literal and most serious-minded, says that you mean yellow field corn or sweet corn, and not pink toe corns. Perhaps he is right and you do mean that you spend your vacation in stacking together the crop that always runs Missouri's corn score into the millions of bushels each year. If you do mean this, I'll say that you took a very useful way to pass a part of your summer and that perhaps your diploma may be won at some shocking moment this winter when a red ear turns up as part of your vacation-gathered crop.

Lena, you want your age to be discovered: I'm going to guess you are not over sixteen—and if I'm wrong, it will prove that I am a "tuff" guesser and that your letter has "throwed" me completely off the track.

FLETCHER, N. C.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

I wonder if you would let a little orphan be one of your nephews? I am a little boy nine years old, kindly small for my age, but I feel that I will make a big man some day. My mother and daddy are both dead. They have been dead six and seven years. I have two brothers; one is grown and the other thinks he is, but he isn't. I have just one sister and we all live together. Big Brother works, while other brother and I go to school. I am in the third grade but I can't write good and plain, so someone else does my writing. I have two tame rabbits and some little chickens. We have two pigs and three kittens that are my playmates. Sometimes I don't get much chance to play as I have to get wood evenings. If I see my letter in print I will write again sometime. My sister has taken COMFORT for a long time and I love to hear her read aloud the letters from the other cousins. So I will close for this once, hoping I have made no bad mistakes in this letter. Best wishes from one among the new cousins,

Your loving nephew, JOHNNIE LANNING.

Johnnie, my boy, you may have to get along with less fathers and mothers than most boys own, but it is sure that you have mor' cousins in your Family—and I know for certain that you have one Uncle who loves you a lot. I am delighted to hear that you are "kindly small," Johnnie. For I am sorry to say there are too many folks in this world who are not entitled to be called this; instead they are "smally kind"—which is a very different thing indeed, and not nearly so nice. When you get to be that "big man" you hope to grow to become, I am sure you will then want to be "kindly large," and will try to love all the two-legged human friends and playmates you meet in life just as much as you love the four-legged playfellows you have now. Kindness is the best human currency in the world, John; although banks have a funny way of not accepting it—which of course only makes it all the worse for banks and bankers. For just look at the banks now: they are all fussing and fuming about rates of exchange and depreciated currencies and gold supplies—and all sorts of queer things which show how worthless and unstable is all this money they handle so carefully! While to start out with only a small supply of the Legal Tender of Love is to have the foundation of a real wealth that cannot reduce in value, but must always pass current at a true standard in the affairs of men.

I'm glad you like to hear the letters of other cousins read to you from the pages of COMFORT, Johnnie. You must have your sister read to you your own letter now that it is in print; it will make that badly-mistaken "grown-up" brother of yours see that you can do other things beside keeping the wood-box filled.

PARKER, NEVADA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA AND COUSINS:

Aren't we a big family? and a happy one, too! I have been a subscriber to COMFORT for four years and couldn't possibly do without the paper. I enjoy the cousins' letters immensely, and your answers, Uncle Lisha.

I live on a small ranch in the most sparsely settled section of Nevada. Our nearest town, that can boast the name of a town, is a hundred miles from here. This part of the state is a farming and stock-raising region. We are rather behind the times, although we have one tractor in the valley. At present that lonesome tractor is busy threshing grain.

I love the wonderful outdoors and the pure fresh air—of which we have plenty. I have two cows, two pigs and one little puppy which are all my own. Don't you think I am rather rich considering the hard times?

Although I am quite old, I'm still very much of a tomboy, and if Billy the Goat doesn't eat this letter I'll give him and the cousins a description of my elderberrying trip last fall. I'll bet some of you would laugh if you knew about it.

I would like to correspond with some cousin—preferably a rural school teacher between the ages of twenty and twenty-five. My own age is somewhere between these two mileposts. As most of the cousins describe themselves, I will do likewise: I'm five feet, six inches short; weigh 124 pounds and have dark hair and gray eyes. I couldn't be classed among the beautiful and have a frowning expression—so my enemies tell me. I think differently.

With best love to the cousins and all, I am,

A new Cousin, GRUMBLES.

There was not a bit of grumbling in any part of your letter, Jumbles, so I am refusing to call you by your unsuitable and unhappy-sounding pen-name, and am giving you one much sweeter to the tongue. You may feel a little lonely at times, Jumbles, when you think of your nearest real town being a hundred miles away, but I don't know but what these wide spaces are better than having a town a hundred miles around you—as is about the case with Billy and me. Our great cities are so crowded—particularly New York—that people get in each other's way to mutual loss and inconvenience. In our big towns civilization has grown cumbersome and trips itself up. In New York City today the transportation situation is a shame and a horror and the workers cannot be carried to and from their places of labor without suffering conditions of crowding that would disgrace any train of cattle cars. And as for that pure air of the wide West of which you have such a plentiful supply—here in our motor-jammed metropolis we have to breathe a mixture of dust, gasolene and smoke. I said breathe, but one can only try. The stuff is too thick to go down. Those whose lungs are not strong enough to filter the poisonous mixture, drop out rapidly with pneumonia, grip or tuberculosis—but the rush goes on and medical science has to keep on the jump, and mostly two jumps behind, trying to cope with the ill-health and disease resulting from present-day living and housing conditions in our big cities.

Of course you are rich, Jumbles, with all your golden sunshine and fresh air and with two milk companies, two pork packing corporations, and a performing dog all your own. You must have to pay a heavy income tax.

What do you raise on this ranch of yours, Jumbles? Borax, I suppose. I have always heard a lot about the huge crops of borax that are raised in Nevada. The white blossoms of the plant, with their foamy color and sweet, soapy smell, must look very beautiful when spread over broad acres of ranchland. There is one splendid thing about the raising of borax, Jumbles; the crop improves the condition of the land. In fact, experts have declared that borax is good for any kind of soil. I should like to see a borax field in full bloom and hope I may, some day. Other things that are raised in Nevada are gold and mining stocks and divorces. Nevada divorces are supposed to ripen early and to be of the best quality, and many Easterners travel way out to your state to get a fresh Reno brand Nevada divorce. I have always thought a good business might be developed in shipping these divorces Eastward in Refrigerator cars, for the demand is increasing each year and it is a crop that seems to be of rapid growth and easily, although rather expensively, cultivated. I have heard, also, of the great forests of sagebrush from which your state obtains so much of its lumber. I have always been fond of the flavor of sage in turkey "stuffin'" and I have thought it would be fine to own a small woodlot of sagebrush. Then one could gather up the dried leaves in the fall and have a plentiful supply of sage for the stuffing of holiday turkeys. Considering all these things, I think you live in a very interesting state, Jumbles. I hope you will write again, telling us about your elderberry gathering and giving us more details about borax growing. Billy wants to know if soap chips are made from the dried wood of the mature borax plant.

JACKSONVILLE, R. R. 3, BOX 2, FLORIDA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

In reading the letters in the August COMFORT I saw your reply to Ida Doris DeWitt and read where you wanted to know what a "cracker" is. From all I can find out there are two general kinds: those we eat and those that are real human beings. The way the name happened to be applied to native Floridians and Georgians is because the pioneers cracked and boiled corn until mills could be transported to the new homes.

Another name for Floridians is "Fly-up-the-creeks." I don't know why. I wonder if it wasn't because so many pirates would "fly up the creeks" away from other ships which for any reason they could not overhaul for booty. You know that in the early days of Florida a number of pirates infested our fair coasts, as the many creeks offered a safe retreat when a ship was in need of repairs. Many of our islands have a history that is connected with Gasparilla and his daring raids. There are several other notorious pirates linked with the history of Florida whose names I can't remember.

An honest-to-goodness "cracker" is just a native of Florida or Georgia. And you don't have to be broke to be a cracker. All you have to do is to be a native of this state. I know a number of wealthy men who are "crackers." If you are a "sucker" or "tar-heel" and wish to become a "cracker," you must learn to eat big hominy, grits and bacon grease, and collards greens. You see the ancient custom I have referred to is held to in this initiation, for grits are finely-cracked corn with the husks removed.

I would like to hear from Evora if she would care to write to me. I can't promise to write an interesting letter, but I can promise to answer if she writes.

I'm nearly seventeen; fair, with brown hair and gray eyes. That's my description.

Uncle Lisha, I'm so glad you like gingerbread because I'm learning to bake it. I do most of the cooking when I am at home, but when school starts in, then mother is chef.

Sincerely your niece, CAROL MILLER.

I'm much obliged, Carol, for your authentic crumbs of information concerning "crackers," both broke and unbroken. But you have solved one mystery and left two others: What is a "sucker"? or a "tar-heel"?—these strange creatures who can be magically changed into "crackers" by the sufficient consumption of hominy, bacon, grits and greens. I like broiled bacon, also big or little hominy and grits, Carol; so you see it won't be hard for me to be transformed into a "cracker"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 42.)

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31.)

Requests

Poem: "Life's Compass."

Cure for rattlesnake bite.

How to grow pond lilies from seeds.

How to tan hides, such as skunk and opossum.

Poems, "Life's Mirror," and "The Haunted Hunter."

Wanted.—Poems, "Guilty or Not Guilty," and "Where's Mother?" Please publish in COMFORT.

Wanted.—Poems, "Which Loved Best," and "Little Boy Blue," with date of birth and death of author.

My husband suffers greatly from rheumatism. Any cure would be appreciated.—MRS. CHAS. BARRY, Sparta, Mich.

I would like to get music, "Wedding of the Winds." Write first.—MISS ESSIE V. GREEN, Colburn, P. O. Box 28, Idaho.

How to get rid of lice on turnip greens. The small green lice stick to the under side of the leaf and cause it to die.

Will some one please send me the August and September, 1917, numbers of COMFORT.—MRS. J. W. Davison, Stonington, Colo.

I would like to correspond with middle-aged sisters from Ohio and New Jersey.—MRS. W. H. AHLERS, Knappa, R. R. 1, Oregon.

How to make different kinds of sausage, mincemeats and otherwise care for beef and pork so that it will keep for five or six months.

I wish very much to get the September COMFORT for 1920. Will pay postage. Please write first.—MRS. ALLEN SPRAGUE, East New Portland, Maine.

Mrs. Harvey Smith, Silver Lake, Ind., would like July, August, September and October numbers of COMFORT for 1921. Will return favor. Write first.

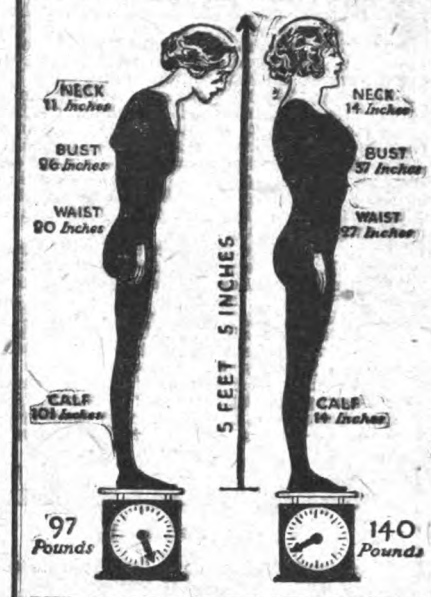
Will the sister who sent in the recipe for eczema, where Princess Pine is used, please send her address to Mrs. W. H. Seibert, Modesto, R. A., Box 172, Calif.

I got grease spots on black and white checked cotton dress. Used tar soap to remove the spots but the white checks have turned brown. Can anyone tell me how to remove those stains?—READER.

Remedies

BURNS.—Make a paste of flour and water as quickly as possible and spread over burn.—MRS. LAURA PERYER, Williamstown, Vt.

WARTS.—Two parts of mutton suet, one part of turpentine. Apply to warts every other night.—MRS. CARRIE L. WILLS, Brownville, Nebr.



CORNS.—Equal parts of beef tallow, sugar and ordinary kitchen soap, worked into a salve. Bind on corns with small piece of adhesive tape. This takes away the soreness.—SUNNY ALABAMA.

For the benefit of many who wrote but did not enclose postage: Liverwort, also known as Tree-Foil, Silver-Leaf (Hepatica Triloba), is a small plant from six to ten inches high, has three-lobed leaf on each stem and purplish white blossoms. Found in the berlands on south hillsides. Used for lung affections, coughs, bleeding lungs, liver complaint and early stages of consumption. The whole plant is used, it being an innocent herb. May be taken freely in infusion or syrup. Iceland moss can be bought in drug and grocery stores. Used when cooked when it forms what is known as blanc-mange. Good for food. The plant has been used successfully in dyspepsia and as a nutriment and tonic in low stages of consumption. As a demulcent it is used in coughs and bronchitis. In these difficulties use an equal proportion of liverwort. It is prepared by adding a handful of the moss to a pint of boiling water. Let stand two or three hours, strain, sweeten with honey and drink freely.—MRS. ALLIE CROWLEY, Eureka, P. O. Box 550, Calif.

How Mastin's Yeast Vitamon Tablets Help Put On Firm Flesh

Increase Your Energy and Beautify the Complexion—Easy and Economical to Take—Results Quick

Thin or run-down folks will find this simple test well worth trying: First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Next take Mastin's VITAMON—two tablets with every meal. Then weigh and measure yourself each week and continue taking Mastin's VITAMON Tablets regularly until you are satisfied with your gain in weight and energy. Mastin's VITAMON Tablets contain highly concentrated yeast-vitamines as well as the two other still more important vitamines (Fat Soluble A and Water Soluble C), all of which Science says you must have to be strong, well and fully developed. They are now being used by thousands who appreciate their convenience, economy and quick results. By increasing the nourishing power of what you eat Mastin's VITAMON Tablets help supply just what your body needs to feed the shrunken tissues, strengthen internal organs, clear the skin and renew shattered nerve force without upsetting the stomach or causing gas. Pimples, boils and skin eruptions seem to vanish as if by magic and the complexion becomes radiantly clear and beautiful. But it is not only a question of how much better you look and feel, or what your friends say and think—the scales and tape measure will tell their own story. A two weeks' test will surprise you.

YOUR WEIGHT INDICATES YOUR HEALTH. ARE YOU GAINING OR LOSING?

If you want to quickly get more strength and vitality and have that firm flesh "pep" which makes you look and feel 100 per cent. better, just try taking two of Mastin's Yeast VITAMON Tablets with each meal for a short time and watch the truly amazing results.

IMPORTANT! While the amazing health-building value of Mastin's VITAMON Tablets have been clearly and positively demonstrated in cases of lack of energy, nervous troubles, anemia, indigestion, constipation, skin eruptions, poor complexion and a generally weakened physical and mental condition, they should not be used by anyone who OBJECTS to having their weight increased to normal. Be sure to remember the name—Mastin's VI-TA-MON—the original and genuine yeast-vitamine tablet—there is nothing else like it, so do not accept imitations or substitutes. You can get Mastin's VITAMON tablets at all good druggists.

MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS
THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE YEAST VITAMINE TABLET

READ OUR GUARANTEE
If You Are Not Entirely Satisfied With The Results In Your Own Case, Your Money Will Be Promptly Refunded.

if it isn't MASTIN'S it isn't VITAMON
The Worlds Standard-Used by Millions

The Modern Farmer

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37.)

rowing time and let them become accustomed to having you around. Be gentle and patient. Kindness pays.

3. Provide clean, sanitary and well-bedded farrowing pens. Cleanliness has its earthly reward in strong, healthy pigs—that live.

4. Keep farrowing sows quiet. Any disturbance that agitates sows or makes them nervous increases the danger of losing pigs through trampling or smothering.

5. Remove new-born pigs at once to a warm place and keep them there until thoroughly dry and warm.

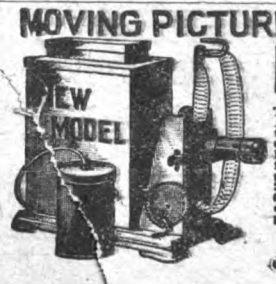
6. Give sow a warm bran mash to eat while the pigs are away from her. This keeps her occupied, serves as a mild laxative or regulator, and induces a feeling of contentment and a desire to sleep.

7. Place pigs along sow's side where they will readily find teats and begin to nurse. If this can be done without disturbing or exciting her, and it should be done this way, the greatest danger period is safely past.

Through the columns of this department subscribers may have free advice from the eminent specialists and experts of our Agricultural Staff on questions relating to farming, live stock and dairying.

Address Modern Farmer, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, Sign your true name and give your address. Name will not be published.

Questions and Answers

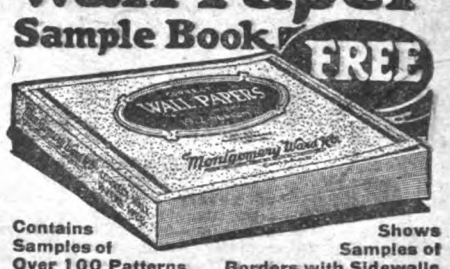


WIREWORMS: PLANT LICE.—I have a piece of land which I wish to plant in corn the coming spring, but am bothered by a little worm, called wireworm, and by little green lice, and would like to know what to do to the ground to control them.

L. G., Kuttawa, Ky.

A.—If the common wireworm, the slender and active larva of the "click beetle," has given you trouble on this same piece of land in the past, then we advise strongly against planting it to corn this season. Turning under a heavy covering of manure or of a green cover crop, to add humus to the land, then planting to some crop such as small grains, clover, cowpeas, soy beans, or grasses that do not require summer cultivation, is the commonest and most successful means of fighting this pest. If corn must be grown on land known to be infested, plant the crop as early as possible (say about the fifteenth of April in your locality) and hasten rapid growth and early maturity by frequent cultivating. Leave the stubble unplowed until late fall after the crop has been harvested. Do not plant corn two years in succession on the same land if it can be avoided. (b) The green lice you mention are very likely aphis or plant lice, by which all crops are more or less subject to attack, especially if their strength and vitality has already been lessened by some other cause. Strong and healthy crops suffer less than poor crops on unfertile land. Spraying a corn crop with a contact insecticide would of course be out of the question; this control measure is suitable only to garden truck, etc. Late fall or early spring plowing to destroy aphis eggs and the adult insects that are kept over from season

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 42.)



MOVING PICTURE MACHINE FREE

This genuine New Model American made Moving Picture machine with film—ALL GIVEN for selling 20 pckgs. Bluine at 15c. a pckg. Write for them. We send them postpaid. When sold return $3.00 and we send machine, film and extra premium free of set of admission tickets, postage prepaid.

BLUINE MFG. CO., 606 Mill St. Concord Junction, Mass.

Wall Paper Sample Book FREE

Contains Samples of Over 100 Patterns

Shows Samples of Borders with Sidewalls

Send today for this big free book containing actual samples of the new wall papers for 1922; shows samples of borders as well as sidewalls. Big variety to choose from—over 100 patterns in all—popular styles and colors. Correct designs for every room.

Lowest Prices Since Before the War

ONLY 8c Per Double Roll (96c for Room 10x12x8 ft.)

We have slashed prices on all grades of wall paper. Same quality that last year sold for $1.50 per double roll now reduced to 75c per double roll. Remember our prices are for double rolls, 16 yds. long (not 8-yd. single rolls by which wall paper is usually sold). Our 8c per double roll means really 4c per single roll.

At our new prices, as little as 96c will paper an entire room, 10x12x8 ft., sidewall, border and ceiling included.

Be sure to get a copy of this new sample book before you buy. See our new styles, see our low prices -- it will pay you to send for this FREE book today.

Write house nearest you. Address: Dept. S-19,

Montgomery Ward & Co.

Chicago Kansas City St. Paul

BABY CHICKS

Hatched in the World's largest Incubator and from stock on our own farm, holding official World's record. We also have best thoroughbred utility stock at our usual moderate prices, twelve popular breeds. Write nearest address, today, for catalogue—FREE.

Smith's Standard (Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.)

THE SMITH STANDARD CO.

Boston, Mass. Dept. 89 154 Friend Street
Philadelphia, Penn. Dept. 89 833 Locust Street
Cleveland, Ohio. 1989 West 74th St.
Chicago, Ill. Dept. 89 427 So. Dearborn St.

Home Training FOR BEGINNERS
Foremost school of its kind in the world.

ELECTRICITY

Positions open for "Burgess-Trained" men. You can quickly qualify. Easiest method. Ask for Special Catalog 2.

BURGESS ELECTRICAL SCHOOL
748 East 42nd Street, Chicago

HAVE YOU ONE OF THESE?

YOU CAN REMOVE ANY CORN OR BUNION WITH HARTWIG'S CORN and BUNION PLASTER 25 Cts

Has a special action on all callous tissues, removes hard and soft corns, bunions, sole callouses, etc. Is so thin that it can be worn without increasing the pressure, no matter how tight the shoe may be. An indispensable adjunct to every home and you should never be without it. Stop Suffering Today. Contains six square inches and will treat about twenty-four corns. 25 cents or five for $1.

W. G. HARTWIG, 215 N. 14th Street, St. Louis, Mo

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right. "The Morley Phone for the is to the ears what glasses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.

DEAF

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 766, 26 S. 15th St., Phila.

BIG VALUE for 10 Cts.

6 Songs, words and music; 25 Pictures Pretty Girls; 40 Ways to Make Money; 1 Joke Book; 1 Book on Love; 1 Magic Book; 1 Book Letter Writing; 1 Dream Book and Fortune Teller; 1 Cook Book; 1 Base Ball Book, gives rules for games; 1 Toy Maker Book; Language of Flowers; 1 Morse Telegraph Alphabet; 12 Chemical Experiments; Mar[illegible] Age Table; Great North Pole Game; 100 Conundrums; 3 Puzzles; 12 Games; 30 Verses for Autograph Albums. All the above by mail for 10 cts. and 2 cts. postage.
ROYAL SALES CO., Box 449, South Norwalk, Conn.

WANTED! RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS

Examinations soon. $135 to $195 a month. Steady life-time job. Common education sufficient. No "pull" necessary. Find out how I can help you secure a steady, good paying position with the U. S. Government, in the Railway Mail Post Office, Rural Carrier, Departmental, Internal Revenue, Immigration, Custom House or Postmaster Services. Send today for Catalog.
Patterson Civil Service School, Dept.532, Rochester, N. Y.

Stem Wind & Set

10 YEAR GUARANTEE

Watch, Ring & Chain Given—We positively give a genuine American Stem Wind & Set Watch, beautifully designed case, warranted time-keeper, 10-year guarantee. Sparkling Set or Plain Ring all for selling 25 large Beautifully Colored Art and Religious Pictures at 10c each. When sold send us $2.50 & we'll send Watch and Ring. HOME ART CO., 426-26 West 59th Street, Dept. 307, Chicago

GIVEN 22 RIFLE A REAL HAMILTON

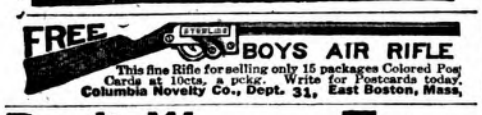
For selling only 2 lots of our Beautiful Colored Art & Religious Pictures at 10c each. Order 25 pictures at once. They sell on sight. You can easily win this 22 Sure Shot Rifle in no time. Guaranteed. GAIR MFG. CO., 1926 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 601, CHICAGO

WATCH OUTFIT GIVEN

Genuine gold plated watch, Waldemar chain and pocketknife. Free for selling 40 packets of Garden Seed at 10c. We trust you with seed. Write for seed today, stating varieties wanted. Many other premiums. DuVernet Seed Co., Dept. 42, Albany, Ga.

SCHOOL BOX FREE

with Fountain Pen, Pencils, Knife, Pen Holder, Eraser, for selling 10 packages Bluine at 15c a pckg. Write today.
BLUINE MFG. CO., 562 Mill St., Concord Junction, Mass.



MEN WANTED, WHITE and COLORED

Railway Train Service, eastern or western roads. Experience unnecessary. Name your color. Address RAILWAY INSTITUTE Dept 22, Indianapolis, Ind.

Wrestling Book FREE

Be an expert wrestler. Learn at home by mail. Wonderful lessons prepared by world's champions Farmer Burns and Frank Gotch. Free book tells you how. Secret holds, blocks and tricks revealed. Don't delay. Be strong, healthy. Handle big men with ease. Write for free book. State age. Farmer Burns, 3042 Ramge Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

FREE  BOYS AIR RIFLE

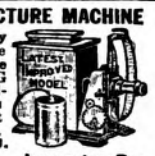
This fine Rifle for selling only 15 packages Colored Post Cards at 10cts. a pckg. Write for Postcards today. Columbia Novelty Co., Dept. 31, East Boston, Mass.

Don't Wear a Truss

We Guarantee Your Comfort

with every Brooks' Appliance. New discovery. Wonderful. No obnoxious springs or pads. Automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No plasters. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Full information and booklet free.
C. E. BROOKS
167 R State St., Marshall, Mich.

The Bee Cell Supporter
A BOON TO WOMANKIND



Made from the purest, softest rubber. Six cups or faces render misplacement absolutely impossible. Endorsed by the medical profession. Send us $2.50 and we will mail you one postpaid in plain package. Money back if not entirely satisfactory. Write for descriptive circular. It's FREE.
The Bee Cell Co., Dept. 168 White Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

LOOK YOUR BEST. Make sure of smooth white arms, face and neck in spite of sallowness, blotches, freckles, blackheads etc. If you want to be charming and attractive—Don't pay 50c but send 10c at once for sealed Package, which will transform your appearance instantly Warranted. TOILET COMPOUND CO. Box 1927A, Boston, Mass.

PHONOGRAPH OR MOVING PICTURE MACHINE

FREE Given for selling only 40 packs vegetable seeds at 10c per large pack. EARN BIG MONEY or premiums — our seeds sell easily. Get sample lot today.

Send no money—WE TRUST YOU.
American Seed Co., Box X32, Lancaster, Pa.

Our Scientific Method will stop that

STAMMER

Send for free 200 page book. It tells how to permanently stop stammering or stuttering in a few weeks' time. A natural guaranteed method.
The Lewis School for Stammerers
Lewis Bldg., 71-77 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

FREE

Not a toy but a genuine Violin, perfect tone, handsome appearance. Bow included. Sell 40 packets Garden Spot Seeds at 10c a packet and violin is yours. Write for seeds today.
Lancaster Co. Seed Co., Sta. 161, PARADISE, PA.

VIOLIN  FREE

Beautiful violin, with bow, book of instructions, and rosin given for selling 25 pieces of Jewelry at 10 cents each. Write today.
Eagle Watch Co., Dept. 620, East Boston, Mass.

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINTED FROM PAGE 41.)

if I ever get as far South as your sun-soaked country. "Collards greens" sounds rather indigestible, but perhaps I can get Billy to pass this part of the initiation for me. Billy is all that I have ever cracked him up to be when it comes to putting away greens.

I think I would rather be a "cracker" than a "fly up the creek." This last name would make me feel a little like a mosquito. By the way, Carol, I have a friend who tells me the Jacksonville mosquitoes are the most healthy, active and muscular of their charming kind. That may be because they get so much good exercise flying up and down the creeks and chasing their suppers of crackers and milk biscuits.

As for pirates, Carol, I don't think you have any more of these gentlemen in Florida than there are anywhere else—that is, if an exception is made regarding your hotel proprietors. I think it must be some of these Miami and Palm Beach desk-robbers that you refer to when you write about the "notorious pirates" who are "linked with the history of Florida." But then we have this sort of pirates right here in New York. I have often felt like chasing a New York hotel buccaneer so hard that he would go flying up the creek, street, elevator shaft, or any other handy place. I knew one particularly bold pirate who once demanded a ransom of ninety cents for a dish containing twelve strawberries that were selling outside of his pirate den at thirty-five cents a quart. I regret to say he has escaped and is yet unhung.

I am glad you are a real gingerbread baker, Carol. If you can make good ginger snaps you are surely qualified to call yourself a "fancy cracker." If I ever go to Florida, and can escape Gasparilla, Sarsaparilla, Miamirilla, Palmbeacharilla and all the other pirates who may come flying up and down the creeks upon me, I shall pay you a visit. You can arrange then for my initiation as a Florida "cracker," and while I'm waiting for the ceremony to begin, I'll sample your gingerbread and Billy will show you what he can do with a bushel or two of hot collard greens.

League Shut-in and Mercy Work for February

"Inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these you have done it unto Me."

Written references from doctor and postmaster must positively accompany all appeals from shut-ins. Every month brings to me many letters which disregard this simple and necessary rule. Appeals unaccompanied by the references required will be destroyed.

Jane Vanconon, Pisgah, N. C. Alone, aged, sick and crippled. A sorrowful case. Asks for quilt pieces, second-hand clothes and a dime shower. She deserves more than this. Mrs. Lucy Vernon, Price, N. C. A shut-in with a large family of children on her hands. Asks for clothes or other help. Noah Fulton, Sparta, Tenn. A crippled, entirely helpless lad of fourteen years. Send him letters and any cheer you can. Lulu Thornburg, Patterson, Mo. Helpless for 33 years and dependent upon outside support. A worthy sufferer. Mrs. George Minnix, Salem, R. R. 1, Va. Has two little boys of five and three years. This poor woman has had to sell her furniture to pay her hospital bill. Clothing and money is the answer. Isaac Price, Lenoir, N. C. Confined to his bed with rheumatism for fifty years. An elderly wife his only aid. Help this poor cripple. Sarah J. Plunkett, Strieby, N. C. Invalid for many years with spinal complaint. A sad and well-recommended case. Give this suffering woman cash and clothing. John Robinson, Springfield, 1133 East Phillips Ave., Ill. An old man, blind, and crippled with rheumatism. He will need money to take him through the winter. He has struggled to help himself and deserves aid. A. McClinton, Trenton, Ga. An old man who is crippled by rheumatism and is "sad and lonely and feeble." Asks for letters so he may not feel entirely deserted and friendless.

The cold of winter means added suffering to all who are sick and needy. Your money, your cheer and other aid, means much now and can warm hearts and bodies that would otherwise rest chill and dark. During these days shut-ins are doubly shut-ins. Every sufferer needs warm clothing. Food, fuel and medicines cost real money. It is yet a long way to spring and spring sunshine. Remember this when you make your gifts and give these poor souls a little sunlight now in the midst of a long winter.

Lovingly,

Uncle Lisha

Comfort's League of Cousins

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of COMFORT'S immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers.

Membership is restricted to COMFORT subscribers and costs fifty-five cents, only five cents more than the regular subscription to COMFORT which is included. The fifty-five cents makes you a member of the League and gives you an attractive League button with the letters "C. L. O. C.," a handsome certificate of membership with your name engrossed thereon, and the privilege of having your name in the letter list, also a paid-in-advance subscription to COMFORT. You continue a League member as long as you keep up your subscription to COMFORT. There are no annual dues, so after you have once joined all you have to do to keep in good standing is to keep your subscription to COMFORT paid up.

How to become a Member

Send fifty-five cents to COMFORT'S Subscription Department, Augusta, Maine, with your request to be admitted into COMFORT'S LEAGUE OF COUSINS, and you will at once receive the League button and your membership certificate and number; you will also receive COMFORT for one year if you are a new subscriber; but if you are already a subscriber your subscription will be renewed or extended one full year beyond date of expiration.

The League numbering over forty thousand members, undoubtedly is the greatest society of young people on earth.

'Address all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and they will promptly reach the head of the department for which they are intended.

Missing Relatives and Friends

For the convenience of its subscribers, COMFORT reopens the "Missing Relatives' and Friends' column.

To the readers of COMFORT is extended the privilege of inserting three-line notices in this column if they will secure only one new yearly subscriber to COMFORT at 50c. If you wish to find a missing relative or friend you can insert a three-line notice containing not over 22 words in this column by securing only one new subscription at 50c. If a longer notice is required send one 50c subscription for each additional seven words.

Will appreciate your help in search of my daughter, Geneva, taken from an orphange at Nashville, Tenn., 1906 or 1907. R. B. Roberson, Oakland, Tenn.

Wanted: To hear from anyone knowing the whereabouts of Joseph Blazer or wife. Address, J. V. Smith, Wallowa, Box 322, Oregon.

Will anyone knowing Daniel H. Bowers of Pennsylvania in the Civil War write Edna Thompson, Grandin, R. R. 1, Box 63, Mo.

If anyone knows the whereabouts of Freeman Haindel please notify Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Haindel, Dansville, R. R. 1, Box 93, Mich.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Cooper D. Heath, age 39 years, tall, dark complexion, please write Mrs. Ira Day, Harmony, N. C.

Crooked Spines Made Straight

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble you can be relieved—and probably wholly overcome your affliction—right in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who cured himself of Spinal Curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. Eminent physicians are endorsing it. The Philo Burt Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertibræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed, and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. Each appliance is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction and let you use it 30 days. Write today for our new book. It gives full information and testimonials.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 334-140dd Fellows' Bldg., JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Poultry Farming for Women

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33.)

bran aids the digestion through the presence of a ferment "diastase" which it contains, and is mildly laxative.

The chick during its early growth makes bone rapidly; for this reason plenty of ash must be supplied.

Extensive experiments show the great value of bone in ration. Dry granulated bone contains about twenty-five per cent. of phosphoric acid and about the same amount of protein, and can be secured by the hundred pounds for a little over two dollars.

The same series of experiments showed conclusively the great need of animal material in the ration for growing chicks. Flocks fed moderate quantities of meat scraps made by far the greatest and fastest gains, and were much healthier than flocks from which all animal material was withheld. The food nutrients from animal sources seem in practice to be more readily available than the same nutrients from vegetable sources. Large quantities of meat or concentrated animal protein feeds should not be fed, especially early in the breeding period, as the forcing which results is apt to cause a relatively high mortality.

Plenty of green feed in the form of lettuce leaves, sprouted oat tops, green clover or alfalfa must be supplied. Such material is termed succulence, carrying, as it does, a high water content. It adds to the palatability of the ration, making it more digestible and keeping the chicks hungry and healthy.

Correspondence

Subscribers are entitled to advice of our Poultry Editor, free, through the columns of this department. Address Poultry Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. BE SURE to give your full name and address, otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

H. K. D.—The usual cause for young chicks pecking each other, and hens pulling the feathers out of each other, is want of animal food and exercise. Give little chicks deep, fine litter to scratch in, and scatter chick feed over it to induce them to work, and you will have very little trouble with their picking each other, especially if you give them milk to eat. For the old hens, add some meat scraps to their rations or nail up a piece of bacon rind or salt pork in the chicken house. It will keep them busy, and they may forget their bad habit. Then smear the feathers all round the places which have been picked with bitter aloes. Feather pulling is a bad habit; once acquired, it is difficult to check unless the birds are given something to attract their attention and keep them busy.

C. L.—The large house shown in COMFORT last December is fifty feet long and twenty-five feet wide, divided into pens by two-foot boards, and a wire above them. Dropping boards, roosts and nests run along the back wall of the house.

F. D.—I think if you had examined further you would have found the liver and heart affected, but I think it must have been a case of gastritis; but unfortunately you have not given me sufficient data to enable me to form any positive opinion.

C. D. D.—We have no stock for sale.

C. T.—The birds have scaly leg, which does not affect their health in any way but which looks disagreeable and of course should be got rid of. Fill a two-quart pail with warm, soapy water and hold the bird's feet and shanks in it for about ten minutes to soften the scales, then scrub with a soft brush and plenty of white soap. Wipe on a soft cloth, and while still warm and moist rub with carbolic ointment or a mixture of sulphur and lard, equal parts. In severe, long-standing cases, the treatment may have to be repeated twice or three times, allowing an interval of a week between treatments. The trouble is caused by a very small insect which bores under the skin. They frequently congregate, and even breed, in old perches and houses, so be careful to clean the perches while you are treating the birds.

W.—Plymouth Rocks are good general-purpose birds, but for your part of the country I think you would find Wyandottes better, especially as you want young birds of a good size to kill. Wyandottes have smaller bones than Plymouth Rocks and are fit for table use when ten or twelve weeks of age. Plymouth Rocks are apt to be skinny and tough. As you say you will have to build a yard, I conclude that you have only a restricted space for fowls. If that is so, a small flock well cared for will be the most profitable. The house which was used as an illustration in the August number of COMFORT, which you referred to, is a very good practical one, and you could build just one section of it at first, consisting of the roosting room, 6x12, and the scratching room, 9x12, and the next year add one or two more sections, as you may require. You ask for a description of the inside of a house. There is a tight board partition between the roosting room and the scratching room; a dropping board nine feet long and two and a half feet wide runs along the wall. It should be twelve inches from the floor. The roosting frame, which stands on it, is eight feet long and fourteen inches wide and has legs at each corner six inches high, which provides two roosts eight feet long and will comfortably accommodate fifteen hens. Nests can stand under the dropping board, and should be fifteen inches square, with front board nine inches high. The door into the scratching room at the end of the dropping board is a small square door at the bottom for the hens to go in and out. In your climate it will be quite practical for the house to stand on stilts but it will of course necessitate a tight floor, which would add materially to the expense.

The Modern Farmer

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 41.)

to season in ants' nests—for the plant louse serves as the ant's cow—is perhaps the only control measure that will give good results. In this case, as in the above, rotation of crops is strongly advised.

CRAB-GRASS CONTROL.—How can I get rid of crab-grass in my lawn? The last year or two it has been crowding out the lawn grass in patches. Will it be necessary to spade up the lawn and seed over? Do the roots live over from year to year in the soil?

N. B., Ohio.

A.—Crab-grass is an annual, growing from seed alone. Each plant lives only one season, so the roots are not a menace as in the case of quack-grass. In fighting crab-grass make every effort to keep it from making seed. If this cannot be accomplished by close and frequent mowing, it is best to hoe out and burn the plants. Crab-grass seed lives over in the soil for more than one year; therefore it will come back in time unless carefully watched. Another thing to remember is that it makes its greatest growth in late summer and early fall when lawn grass is less active because of heat and drought. If lawns are fertilized well in fall or spring with rich barnyard manure to encourage a strong early growth of lawn grass, and then are frequently sprinkled in hot, dry weather, the crab-grass will not make near such rapid headway.

Six Wheel Chairs in January

626 Is COMFORT'S Total to Date

Our Wheel-Chair Department has made a good beginning of the new year by distributing six wheel chairs the first month. The six January chairs go to Jack Simmons, Kopperl, Texas, 17; Russell Harry Williams, Wyoming, Del., 1[illegible]; Mary Jane Oneal, Spanish Fort, Texas, 77; Ina Smithson, Calico Rock, Ark., 65; Allee M[illegible] Huisenga, Wimbledon, N. Dak., 63; C. A. Cole, Kopperl, Texas, 56. The figures following the respective names indicate the number of subscriptions (or subscription equivalent of cash) sent in by them or by their friends for them.

Jack Simmons, age 30, a cripple from infancy, never has been able to walk, but he can use his hands and so will be able to roll himself about in his COMFORT wheel chair which will be a great blessing to him and a help to his sister and aged father in caring for him.

Russell Harry Williams, age 16, is crippled by spinal trouble and cannot walk or even stand, but has some use of his hands. Mrs. Maggie Nisse, a neighbor, who procured the subscriptions for this boy's chair, writes me that "it will be a big help to the poor fellow."

Mary Jane Oneal, age 6, has been an invalid all her life and cannot walk. Her mother obtained the subscriptions for the little girl's chair.

Ina Smithson, age 24, writes that she has been crippled about four years and is dependent on her parents who are old, and therefore had no means of obtaining the wheel chair of which she is so much in need, except through COMFORT'S help.

Alice May Huisenga, age 9, about three years ago had infantile paralysis and spinal meningitis which left her crippled in all her limbs so that she cannot walk and has little or no use of her hands.

C. A. Cole, to whom the sixth January chair was sent, I know very little about except that he is a crippled shut-in very much in need of a wheel chair, as Mrs. G. R. Witt, who sent in nearly all the subscriptions for his chair, has not as yet sent me the requested information in regard to his case.

You will be interested in the picture of James Stanhope Love enjoying his COMFORT wheel chair, and in his good letter of thanks, both of which appear on this page.

The Wheel-Chair Club has set a good pace in January—let us try to keep it up through the year.

Sincerely yours,
W. H. GANNETT,
Publisher of COMFORT

P. S. For the information of our many new subscribers let me explain that for each and every 150 one-year subscriptions to COMFORT, at 50 cents each, sent in either singly or in clubs by persons who direct that they are to be credited to COMFORT'S WHEEL-CHAIR CLUB instead of claiming the premiums to which they would be entitled, I give a FIRST-CLASS INVALID WHEEL CHAIR to some needy crippled Shut-in and pay the freight, too. It is a large and expensive premium for me to give for that number of subscriptions, but I am always glad to do my part a little more each month than you do yours.

Most Comfortable Wheel Chair He Ever Owned

Lockmore Cotton Mill, York, S. C.

Dear Mr. Gannett:

I have received my COMFORT wheel chair. It is the best, most comfortable wheel chair I have ever owned, and my appreciation of it can only be imagined—not expressed in words. I thank you sincerely for sending the chair so promptly, although I have not yet secured the full number of subscriptions required. I am unable to travel about, so cannot personally solicit subscriptions, therefore I appreciate all the more, and am especially grateful for the number (98) of subscriptions which I have received to date. A few newspapers, here in S. C., printed my appeals for COMFORT subscriptions, and the responses to those appeals which came to me immediately were quite as surprising to me as they have also been very gratifying. I thank you all sincerely, each and every person and newspaper which had a part in securing this COMFORT wheel chair for me. In due time a picture of me enjoying the chair will be sent in to COMFORT for reproduction.

JAMES STANHOPE LOVE ENJOYING HIS COMFORT WHEEL CHAIR.

Affectionately yours,
James Stanhope Love.

COMFORT'S Roll of Honor

The Roll of Honor comprises the names of those who have sent five or more subscriptions, or a dol-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43.)

POWERFUL AIR RIFLE Length 32 inches. Working parts of the best grades of steel. The stock is finely polished walnut. Shoots small game. Powerful, accurate, durable. You can have this air rifle for distributing only 8 of our fast selling art pictures at 25 cents on our special offer. Everybody will take one. IT COSTS YOU NOTHING to try, as we take back those you can't dispose of. Send no money, just your name. C. M. THOMAS, 337 W. Madison St. 2D5, CHICAGO

FREE

The Emporium of Bargains and Opportunities

Pithy Little Advertisements that are Interesting, Instructive and Profitable to Read, for they put you wise to the newest and best in the market and keep you in touch with the world's progress

AGENTS WANTED

Agents—Quick sales, big profits. Outfit Free. Cash or Credit. Sales in every home for our high-class line of Pure Food Products, Soaps, Perfumes, Toilet Articles, etc. Write today for Money-Making Plan. American Products Co., 8782 American Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

We Start You In Business, furnishing everything; men and women, $30 to $100 weekly operating our "New System Candy Factories" home anywhere. Booklet free. W. Hillyer Ragsdale, Drawer 5, East Orange, N. J.

Agents—Write for big soap offer. Quick Seller. Big Money Maker. Ho-Ro-Co, 131 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo.

We Start You without a Dollar. Soaps, Extracts, Perfumes—Toilet Goods. Experience unnecessary. Carnation Co., 131 Olive, St. Louis.

Agents—Make a Dollar an Hour. Sell Mendets, a patent patch for instantly mending leaks in all utensils. Sample package free. Collette Mfg. Co., Dept. 452-B, Amsterdam, N.Y.

Sell Necessities. Everybody needs and buys the "Business Guide." Bryant cleared $800.00 in July. Send for sample. Life Free. Nichols Co., Dept. 6B, Naperville, Ill.

Large Shirt Manufacturer wants Agents to sell complete line of shirts direct to wearer. Exclusive patterns. Big values. Free samples. Madison Mills, 503 Broadway, New York.

Agents: $50 a week taking orders for guaranteed hosiery for men, women and children. Must wear 12 months or replaced free. All styles and finest line of silk hose. Write for sample outfit. Thomas Mfg. Co., Class 219, Dayton, Ohio.

Agents! 1922's Greatest Sensation. 11-piece toilet article set selling like blazes at $1.75 with $1.00 dressmaker's shears free to each customer. Line up with Davis for 1922. E. M. Davis Co., Dept. 505, Chicago.

350% Profit: Easy Seller. Klesurite. Washes Clothes without rubbing. Sample Free. Best-ever Prod. Co., 1947-V Irving Park, Chicago.

Agents:—$100 Weekly. Automobile owners wild with enthusiasm. Marvelous invention doubles power, mileage, efficiency. Saves cost first day. Sensational sales everywhere. Territory going like wildfire. $26 sample outfit and Ford Car free. Write quick. Ovec Co., Dept 113, Louisville, Ky.

Men and women make $100 upwards weekly selling greatest labor and money saving household necessity. Big repeater. Good Crew Managers proposition. Free sample and particulars. Reilly Co., D-1, Hastings, Nebraska.

Agents—Steady Income. Large manufacturer of Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods, etc., wishes representative in each locality. Big profits, honest goods. Whole or spare time. Credit given. Send for particulars. Freeport Mfg. Co., 60 Main St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Agents! A sale in every home for our beautiful Dress Goods, Silks and General Yard Goods. Quick sales! Big profits! Large book of 1000 handsome fabric samples. Write today. National Importing & Mfg. Co., Dept. 24X, 573 Broadway, New York.

Bring Home The Bacon selling stain remover. Removes ink, iron rust, grass and fruit stains. Write for free samples today. C. H. Stuart & Co., 47 Broadway, Newark, New York.

Agents: Wireless Umbrella. I am paying $2 an hour, taking orders for this newest invention. Send for 5-part outfit. Six inch midget demonstrator free. Parker Mfg. Co., 317 Dike St., Dayton, Ohio.

We Pay $200 monthly salary, furnish rig and expenses to all who qualify introducing guaranteed poultry and stock powders. Bigler Company, X311, Springfield, Illinois.

Sell Wilson Hats from factory to wearer. Extraordinary commission. We deliver and collect. Every man a customer. Wilson Hat Works, Montclair, New Jersey.

Tailoring agents; wonderful all-wool, one-price line, retails $29.50 per suit; $10 to $20 cheaper than retail prices; you collect profit at once; we ship C. O. D. to customer for balance; exclusive territory; hustlers wanted; none others considered; write fully; state experience. Sales Manager, Dept. A-13, 831 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Agents Sell Neverfall Iron Rust And Stain Remover. Huge profits. Big line. Sample. Write today. Sanford Beal Co. Inc., Newark, N. Y. Dept. 4.

Agents Make Sixty Dollars Per Week selling new Sallie May "Dressup" Aprons. Write and learn how to obtain samples without cost. Mass Apron Co., 57 Searle Bldg., Rochester, N. Y.

Turn Your Spare Time Into Dollars. Big profits selling White K Laundry Tablets 10c packages. Our big premium plan gets the business. We start you free. Send for free sample. L. A. Knight Co., 119 Market St., St. Louis, Mo.

300% Profit to Agents, Appoint Subagents to work for you. Sample Free. Ned Barnard, 3010 W. Van Buren. Chicago, Ill.

Men's Shirts—Big sellers—Factory to consumer, $15.00 daily. Undersells stores. Complete line. Free Samples to workers. Chicago Shirt Co., 208 So. LaSalle, Dept. 106, Chicago.

Big Money and Fast Sales. Every owner buys Gold Initials for his auto. You charge $1.50; make $1.35. Ten orders daily easy. Write for particulars and free samples. American Monogram Co., Dept. 64, East Orange, N. J.

AGENTS WANTED

Be successful Agent! Free sample outfit—worth $2.25. "Quality" beauty preparations. Make big money. Extensive line. Established 50 years. Lynne Co., 209 Logansport, Ind.

General Agents. Something new. Whirlwind seller. "Repeat" washing powder. Washes clothes without rubbing. Women throw away washboards. Big profits. Exclusive territory. Write today free package. Kittredge Co., 2 Putnam St., Tunkhannock, Pa.

Sell washing tablets that are different. They work quicker, sell easier and at a greater profit. Get our proposition. Newton & Co., 4 Main St., Newark, New York.

Agents—New Invention. Harper's Ten-Use brush set and fibre broom. It sweeps, washes and dries upstairs windows, scrubs and mops floors and does 5 other things. Big profits; easy seller. Free trial offer. Harper Brush Works, Dept. A, Fairfield, Iowa.

Agents—$6 to $12 a day. Take orders for Aluminum handle Cutlery Set. Brand new. We deliver and collect. Pay you daily. Sample to workers. Jennings Mfg. Co., Dept. 1728, Dayton, Ohio.

Wonderful Seller. 96c profit every dollar sales. Deliver on spot. License unnecessary. Sample Free. Mission Bead Factory C, 2421 Smith St., Detroit, Mich.

We Pay $36 a Week and expenses and give a Ford Auto to men to introduce poultry and stock compounds. Imperial Co., D 1, Parsons, Kan.

Agents—Fast-selling household specialty; big profits; liberal terms. Write H. E. Bishop Co., St. Louis, Mo. Dept. 2.

$5.00 to $10.00 A Day easily earned taking orders for High Grade Toilet and Laundry Soaps, Toilet Articles, Flavoring Extracts, Spices, Puddings. 7 bars Assorted Soap in Fancy Boxes, Big sellers. Our goods well known, nationally advertised. 100% profit. Write for catalog. Men and Women everywhere make good money. Crofts & Reed Co., Dept. 218, Chicago.

$1,000 Per Man Per County. Get yours. Inexperienced men pulling down star salesmen's profits. Write for proof: How farmers, ministers, clerks—men in all walks of life—made big money in whole or spare time. You can do it. Amazing proposition—wanted everywhere. Exclusive territory—no sales limit. A hot or cold running water bath equipment for any home at only $7.50. Self-heating. No plumbing nor water works required. Investigate. Terms. Send no money. Write letter or postal today. Allen Mfg. Co., 645 Allen Bldg., Toledo, Ohio.

Women Wanted—Reliable firm wants earnest, refined women to introduce Priscilla Fabrics, Underwear, Hosiery, etc. Good pay. Samples, instructions furnished. Write today. Fitzcharles Co., 121 Fitzcharles Bldg., Trenton, N.J.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Ladies—Earn Money Crocheting, Sewing, tatting, making aprons and caps. Patterns and plans 35c. Send remittance now. Returned if desired. Kenwood Pattern Co., 6238 So. Park Ave., Chicago.

Hemstitching and Picoting Attachment, works on all sewing machines. Price $2.00 postpaid. Wayne Supply Co., Dept. G, Hamtramck, Mich.

STAMPING NAMES

Stamp Names on key checks. Make $10 per 100. Send 25c for sample and inst. Either Sex. C. Keytag Co., Cohoes, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

Used Correspondence Courses. Bargain prices. Bulletin 1015 free. Courses bought. Instruction Exchange, 1966 Broadway, N. Y.

FEMALE HELP WANTED

$6-$18 a dozen decorating pillow tops at home; pleasant work; experience unnecessary; particulars for stamp. Tapestry Paint Co., 104, LaGrange, Ind.

Wanted Women to Become Dress Designers. Sample lessons free. Franklin Institute, Dept. A 501, Rochester, N. Y.

Get Government Jobs. Women over 17. $90 month. List free. Franklin Institute, Dept. A9, Rochester, N. Y.

At Once; 5 bright, capable ladies to travel demonstrate and sell dealers. $40 to $75 a week. R. R. fare paid. Goodrich Drug Co., Dept. 82, Omaha, Nebr.

Women—Be Millinery Designers. Earn $125 month. Sample lessons free. Franklin Institute, Department A809, Rochester, N. Y.

SALESMEN & AGENTS WANTED

Permanent Position; young or old, to sell Period Shoe Gloss. Can go over territory, 2 or 3 times a year; big profit, can always average sale to every second house, some towns every house. Is jet black oil shoe finish, repairs scarred places on leather. Apply and rub with hand; dull or bright finish. 2 coats makes patent leather lustre. Will color white or tan shoes black. Makes old rubbers look like new. Colors straw hats. No equal as marking fluid in shipping department. Can be washed same as rubber. 35c postpaid. Send for instructions how to sell free. Doris B. Nutter, 396 Casco St., Side Entrance, Portland, Maine.

MOTION PICTURE PLAYS

Photoplay Ideas Wanted By 48 Companies. $25-$500 paid. Experience unnecessary; details Free. Producers League, 311, St. Louis.

MISCELLANEOUS

Remnant Store, 1510 Vine St., Cincinnati, O. Greatest Dry Goods Bargains on Earth. Agents and Storekeepers supplied.

Switches made from combings. The new way. Write me. Mrs. E. Vanderveort, Davenport, Iowa.

Don't buy a Bicycle Motor Attachment until you get our catalogue and prices. Shaw Mfg. Co., Dept. 3, Galesburg, Kansas.

Wanted Mothers and Girls to use Lady Love Sachet perfumed which cannot be beat for scenting Bureaus, Clothes Chests or lady's handbags. 10 cts in silver will bring you one of these Packages postpaid. Lawrence P. Miller P.O. Box 1250, City Hall Station, New York, N.Y.

Stop Daily Grind. Start Silvering Mirrors. Auto headlights, tableware, etc. Plans free. Clarence Sprinkle, Dept. 99, Marion, Ind.

SALESMEN WANTED

Salesmen: Make extra money easily. Sell our Accident & Sickness policies in your spare time. $5000 death, $25 weekly benefit for $10 yearly. Address Underwriters, Dept. F-28, Newark, N. J.

FARMS FOR SALE

99-Acre Farm; 27 Cattle, 3 Horses, poultry, crops, implements, ample buildings; $3500 only $1500 cash; Details page 24 Illus. Catalog. Strout Farm Agency, 150 BG, Nassau St., New York City.

The State Land Settlement Board of California has a number of desirable irrigated farms of twenty and forty acres in San Joaquin Valley for sale to bona fide homeseekers on 36½ years' time. 5 per cent interest annually. Your opportunity to acquire a farm in winterless California. All deciduous fruits profitably grown; alfalfa is a paying crop. Ideal conditions for stock and poultry. Good schools and unsurpassed roads. Fruit associations market your crops, relieving you of marketing problems. You can farm all year in California. Go this fall and see. State Board's booklet, also Santa Fe folder describing San Joaquin Valley, mailed free on request. C. L. Seagraves, Gen. Colonization Ag't, Santa Fe Ry., 918 Ry. Ex., Chicago.

Want to hear from owner having farm for sale; give particulars and lowest price. John J. Black, Comfort St., Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin.

HELP—MALE & FEMALE

Earn $25 Weekly, writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary; details Free. Press Syndicate, 461, St. Louis, Mo.

Government Positions Are Fine: $1400, $1600, $1800 at start, up to $2300 and $2600. Exams everywhere. Write Today for full information. Patterson Civil Service School, Box H, Rochester, N. Y.

MICH. FARM LANDS FOR SALE

Land Opportunity! 20, 40, 80 ac. tracts in Mich. only $25 to $35 per ac. Very easy terms. Investigate this chance to get a farm home. Write today for Free booklet. Swigart Land Co., C-1240, First Natl. Bk. Bldg., Chgo.

FARM LANDS

Own Your Own Orange Grove in Fruitland Park, Florida's finest lake-jeweled highland section, way above sea level. A few dollars a month will buy it. Plant peaches, a quick money crop, with oranges, and the peaches may be made to pay not only for your land and orange grove but yield a profit besides. We can produce you a better orange grove for less money than anyone in the State and in Florida's greatest section. Fruitland Park is best. We can prove it. Write for a book of actual photographs, the interesting story of a Fruitland Park farm and why peaches may for it. Lake County Land Owner's Association, 298 Palm Ave., Fruitland Park, Lake County, Florida.

Productive Lands. Crop Payment or easy terms—along the Northern Pacific Ry., in Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. Free literature. Say what state interests you. H. W. Byerly, 16 Northern Pacific Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS

Used Correspondence Courses at less than half original price. Any school, any subject, for men or women. Send for free price list of 1000 courses. Students' Exchange, 1966 Broadway, New York. Courses bought.

PATENT ATTORNEYS

Patents—Write for free Guide Book, and Evidence of Conception Blank. Send model or sketch and description for free opinion of its patentable nature. Highest References. Prompt Service. Reasonable Terms. Victor J. Evans & Co., 661 Ninth, Washington, D. C.

Inventors—Desiring to secure patents should write for our book, "How To Get Your Patent." Send model or sketch and description for opinion of its patentable nature. Randolph & Co., Dept. 112, Washington, D. C.

Patents Secured. Submit sketch or model of your invention for examination. Write for Record of Invention blank and valuable book, Free. J. L. Jackson & Co., 230 Ouray Building, Washington, D. C.

Patents—Send for free book. Contains valuable information for inventors. Send sketch of your invention for Free Opinion of its patentable nature. Prompt service. (Twenty years' experience). Talbert & Talbert, 402 Talbert Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Inventors. Send sketch or model of invention for advice. Write for Evidence of Disclosure form and Book on Patents, Free. Prompt Service. Merton-Roberts & Company, 169 Mather Building, Washington, D. C.

MALE HELP WANTED

All men, women, boys, girls, over 15, willing to accept Government Positions, $123, write immediately, Ozment, 184, St. Louis.

Be a Railway Traffic Inspector! $110 to $250 monthly, expenses paid after 3 months' spare-time study. Splendid opportunities. Position guaranteed or money refunded. Write for Free Booklet G-5. Stand. Business Training Inst., Buffalo, N. Y.

Government needs Railway Mail Clerks, $133-$192 month. Write for free specimen questions. Columbus Institute, A-2 Columbus, O.

Wanted Men. Become Automobile Experts. $35 week. Sample lessons free. Write Franklin Institute, Dept. A410, Rochester, N.Y.

Be an Expert Penman; Wonderful Device guides your hand; corrects your writing in few days. Complete Outline Free. Write C. J. Ozment, 53, St. Louis, Mo.

Firemen, Brakemen, Baggagemen, Pullman and train porters (colored). 823 Railway Bureau, East St. Louis, Ill.

Those out of employment or wishing to increase present income, communicate with Chautauqua Commercial Agency, Jamestown, N. Y.

Firemen, Brakemen, for railroads; nearest their homes—Everywhere, beginners $150, later $250 monthly (which position?). Railway Association, Desk M-17, Brooklyn, N. Y.

OLD COINS

Will Pay Fifty Dollars Cash for nickel of 1913 with Liberty Head. Watch your change. We pay cash premiums for all rare coins. Send 4c. for Coin Circular. Numismatic Bank, Dept. C, Fort Worth, Texas.

GAMES & AMUSEMENTS

250 Magic Tricks—10c. Big New catalog of Tricks, Novelties, Books—2c. L. Moody, 6074 Stony Island, Chicago.

HELP WANTED

$1135 month commence. U. S. Government Railway Mail Clerks. Men, Boys, over 17. Steady. Vacations. List positions free. Write today sure. Franklin Institute, Dept. A-12, Rochester, N. Y.

Wanted—Men, Women, age 17 to 65, for U. S. Govt. positions. Experience unnecessary. Information free. Chicago Civil Service College, Dept. K, Chicago, Ill.

FIRE ARMS FOR SALE

Automatic pistols at ridiculously low prices. No. 114 .25 cal. 7 shot automatic $9.75. No. 514 32 cal. Blue steel Military Model. 10 shot automatic $12. Extra Magazine free. All goods sold by us are brand new and guaranteed to be absolutely satisfactory after examination or money back. Send no money. Just send your name, address and number of pistol you want. Pay Postman our price and postage on arrival. Send for Free catalog. Paramount Trading Company, Dept. 114, 34 West 28th Street, New York.

MAGAZINES

Ambitious writers of photoplays, short stories, songs, poems, newspaper articles, send today for Free helpful booklet, "Successful Writing." Writer's Digest, S. 609 Butler Bldg., Cincinnati.

FOR ROADSIDE SELLING

Roadside Gladiolus Selling—Send for free instructions. 10 sample bulbs, 10c. Outfits $1 up. J. L. Vondel, Sharon, Mass.

PHOTOPLAYS, STORIES

Wanted—Men and women ambitious to make money writing Stories and Movie Plays. Send for wonderful Free Book that tells how. Address Authors' Press, Dept. 31, Auburn, N.Y.

PHOTO FINISHING

Special Trial Offer. Your next Kodak film developed 5c. Prints 2c each. Moser & Son, 2122 St. James Ave., Cincinnati, O.

Old Tintypes, Daguerreotypes or Faded Pictures of loved ones can be restored so as to produce beautiful enlargements and perfect likenesses under our new process. Individual pictures may also be produced out of groups. Satisfactory results guaranteed. Prompt work. Fair prices. Roanoke Photo Finishing Co., 502 Bell Ave., Roanoke, Va.

Better Pictures—Your kodak film developed 4c—prints 4c each. Cameron Photo Co., C 3418 Burch Ave., Cincinnati, O.

Kodak Finishing. Not the cheap way, but the most reliable. Our Quality Work insures best prints from every negative. Get particulars and List of Prizes. Or send Trial Order. Moen Photo Service, 15-A, LaCrosse, Wisconsin.

MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS

$35.00 Profit Nightly. Small capital starts you. No experience needed. Our machines are used, endorsed by Govt. institutions. Cat. free. Atlas Moving Picture, 471 Morton Bldg., Chicago.

America's Greatest Fortunes have been made in the moving picture business. Small investment needed. We furnish complete theatre equipment. Easy payments. Openings everywhere. Catalog free. Dept. 909 Monarch Theatre Supply Co., 724 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

HONEY FOR SALE

For Sale Select quality Clover and Basswood honey. 1921 crop. Sample 15c. Price List free. M. V. Facey, Preston, Minn.

Honey and Cheese of Superior Quality packed in family size packages, write today for Free price list. E. F. Rose, Munroe, Wis.

STORY WRITERS WANTED

Authors:—Stories, poems, photo plays etc. are wanted for publication. Submit Mss. Literary Bureau, C4, Hannibal, Mo.

AUTOMOBILES

Auto Owners Wanted to use and introduce our new 6,000 and 10,000 Mile Guaranteed Cord and Fabric Tires. Make big money, part or full time. Free Tires for your car. Write quick for special agents offer and low wholesale prices. It will pay you to answer this little adv. now. Reliable Tire & Rubber Co., 35th St. & Michigan Ave., Dept. 70, Chicago, Ill.

INVENTIONS

Inventions Wanted. Cash or royalty for ideas. Adam Fisher Mfg. Co., 91, St. Louis, Mo.

ENTERTAINMENTS

Plays, Speakers, dialogues, and Entertainments; catalogues free. Address Dept. A, Ames Pub. Co., Clyde, O.

FOR PHOTOGRAPHERS

Have You a Camera? Write for Free sample of our big magazine, showing how to make better pictures and earn money. American Photography, 289 Camera House, Boston, 17, Mass.

MAIL ORDER BUSINESS

I Made $35,000 with small Mail Order Business. Sample article & plan 25c. Free Booklet. Tells How For Stamp. A. C. Scott, Cohoes, N. Y.

POULTRY

Baby Chicks 8c, 10c up, 12 kinds, and ducklings. Postpaid. Guaranteed. Large illustrated catalog and guide free. Superior Farms, Windsor, Mo.

Baby Chicks. 10c up. Twelve breeds. Catalog free. Booth Hatchery, Clinton, Mo.

Day Old Chicks, for sale. Thousands per week. Strong, better hatched, utility and pure Bred, circular Free. Old Honesty Hatchery, Dept. C, New Washington, O.

FARM WANTED

Wanted: To hear from owner of good farm for sale. State cash price, full description. D. F. Rush, Minneapolis, Minn.

Six Wheel Chairs in January

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 42.)

lar or more in money, to credit of the Wheel-Chair Club during the month previous. Following each name is the number of subscriptions or amount of cash sent:

B. F. Oneal, Texas, for Mary Jane Oneal, 77 subs; Mrs. G. R. Witt, Texas, for C. A. Cole, 47; Mrs. Thomas Cude, Texas, for John Brasher, 32; Mrs. H. C. Colvin, La., for Clovie Colvin, 32; Mrs. John Blizzard, Texas, for W. E. Courtney, 31; Mrs. L. C. Williams, Jr., N. C., for Claude Wilson, 29; Miss Annie Perry, Ala., for Harvey Perry, 28; Mrs. Matilda Fillpot, Mo., for Jesse Fillpot, 27; Harriet A. Boles, Laura Scott, Iva Holmes and Mrs. Joe Hallar, Iowa, for Kenneth Rose, 27; Mrs. R. L. Gregson, Okla., for Glenn Grogan, 22; Mrs. Maggie Nissen, Del., for Russell H. Williams, 36 subs and $15.40 cash; Mrs. Cecil W. Humphrey, Mo., for Velnia Hough, 19 subs; Mrs. John T. Davenport, N. C., for Claude Wilson, 19; Mrs. Dessie Spence, Texas, for Mrs. Flarrie Courtney, 17; Mrs. Parrie Hulett, Texas, for Jack Simmons, 17 subs and $16.00 cash; Mrs. John Williams, Texas, for Johnnie Brasher, 15 subs; Mrs. W. E. Stinson, N. C., for Emma Pete Overcash, 12; Mrs. A. J. Altom, Texas, for Ira Norton, 10; Mrs. Edward L. Osburn, Okla., for Glenn Grogan, 8; Mrs. Mary E. Melton, Tenn., for Johnnie E. Melton, 7; Mrs. Iolar Borders, Ala., for Vertice Borders, 7; Gracie Goldsu, Okla., for Glenn Grogan, 7; Wallace A. Johnson, Va., for Thomas Heller, 5; Mrs. L. C. Locklin, Okla., for Glenn Grogan, 5; Mrs. Alice Chambers, Wis., for general, 5; Mrs. John Blalock, Jr., N. C., for John Blalock, 5 subs and $1.00 cash; Mrs. G. C. Huisenga, N. Dak., for Alice Mae Huisenga, 3 subs and $1.00 cash; Mrs. Ellsworth Allison, Wash., for general, $5.00; Mrs. Belle Buzord, Kans., for general, $4.00; Mrs. Thomas Wolfe, Calif., for general, $2.00; Lillian Billerbeck, Ill., for general, $2.00; Mrs. Florence Lane, Pa., for general, $1.00.

The Man Who Invented the Six-Shooter

An American is entitled to the credit of having invented the revolver. While many changes have been made since he announced his discovery, in principle there is very little difference between the first weapon of this sort and the most improved model six-shooter on the market today.

In the year 1835, when the first revolver was patented in England, and two years later when the same model received the O. K of the United States Patent Office, many scientists all over the world became acquainted for the first time with the fact that "Dr. Coult" was none other than Samuel Colt, the American engineer.

"Dr. Coult" had spent years in traveling and on the lecture platform, mostly in Europe. Plain Samuel Colt, in the meantime, kept his parents in New Jersey informed of the progress of the work he had started when, at the age of fifteen, he modeled a wooden revolver which, by the way, is still in existence.

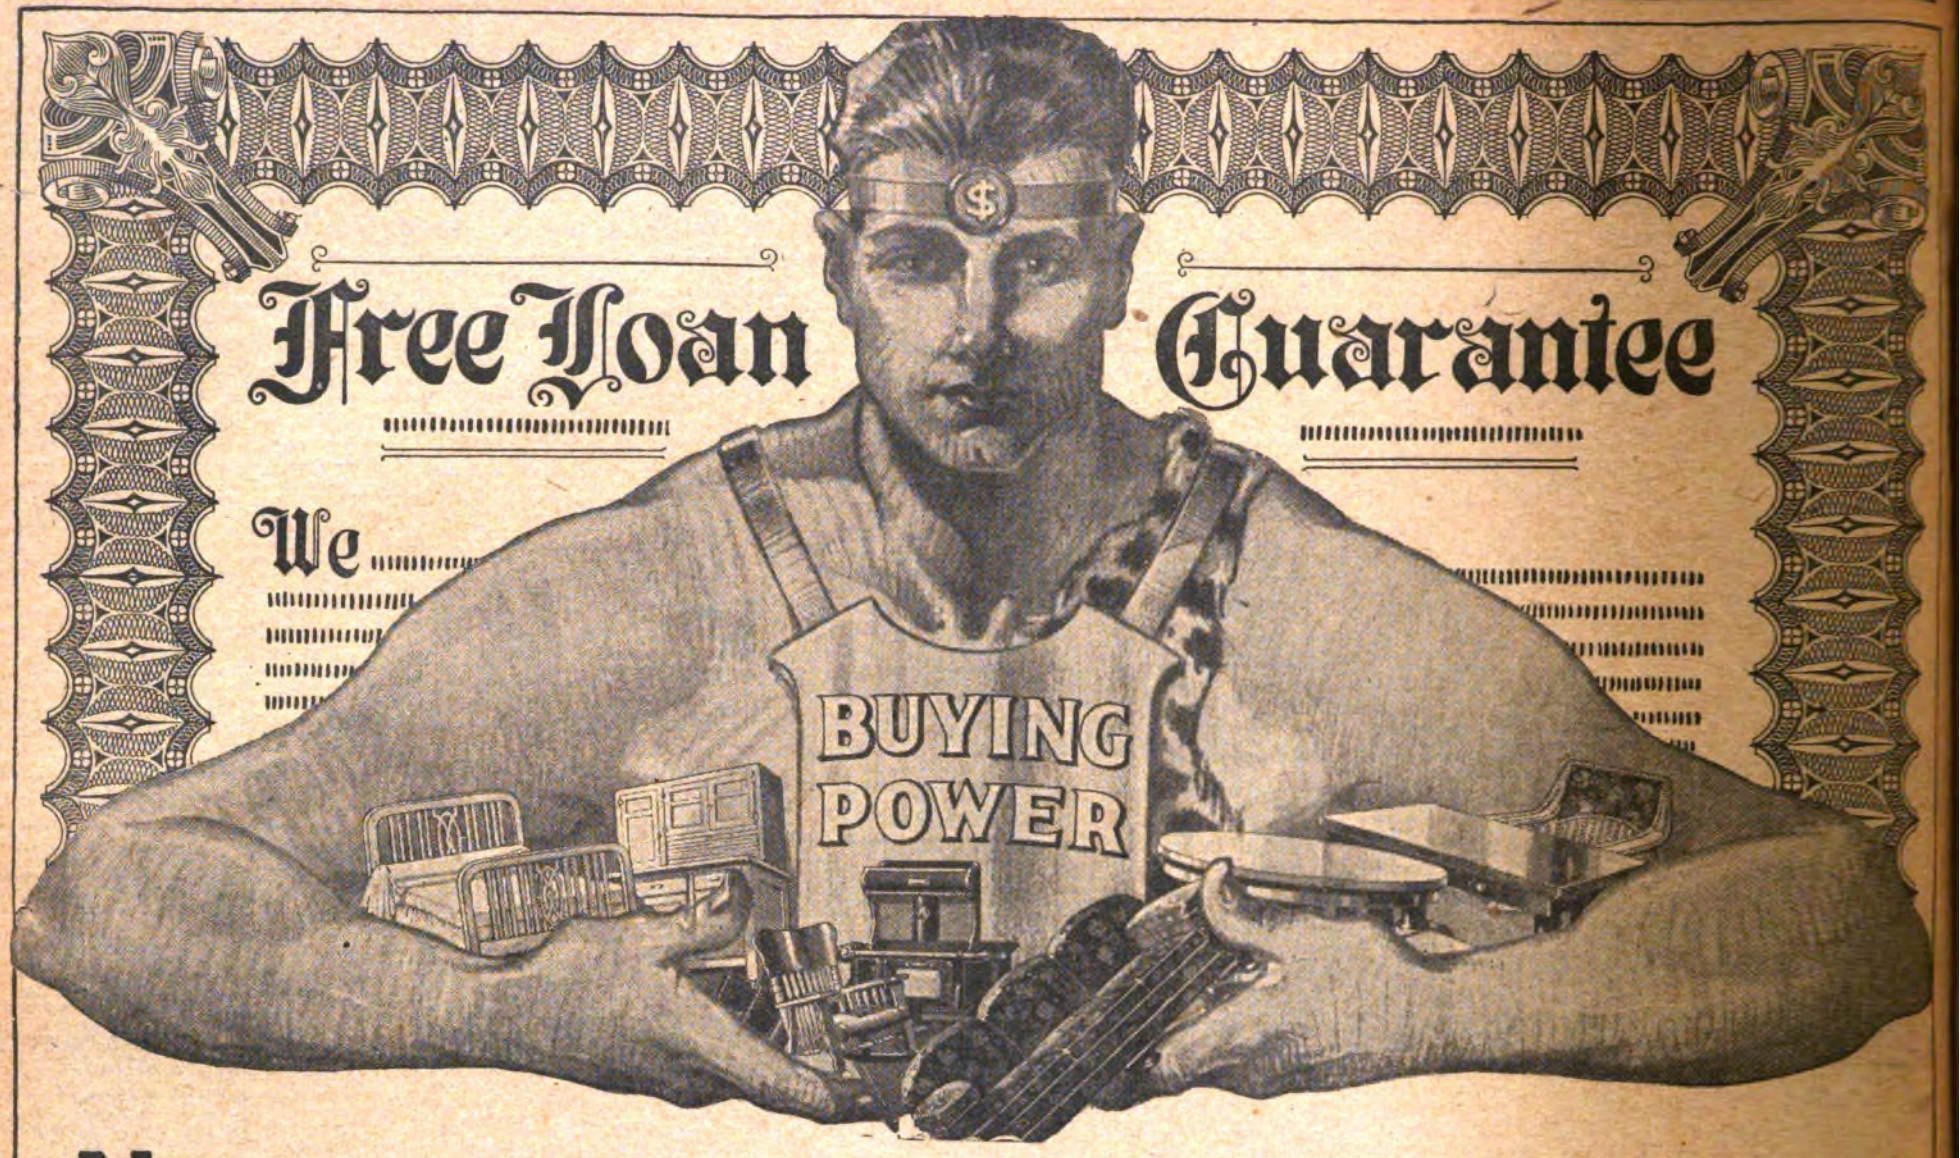
Colt's invention revolutionized modern warfare of those days as much as the tank did in 1916. The first production of Colt's factory at Paterson, N. J. were used by the U. S. Government in the Seminole Indian War in Florida, and since then the principle invented by this inspired son of an American woolen manufacturer has been retained in the production of all repeating firearms.

Paradoxical.

Patsy—"Mum, won't you give me candy, now?"

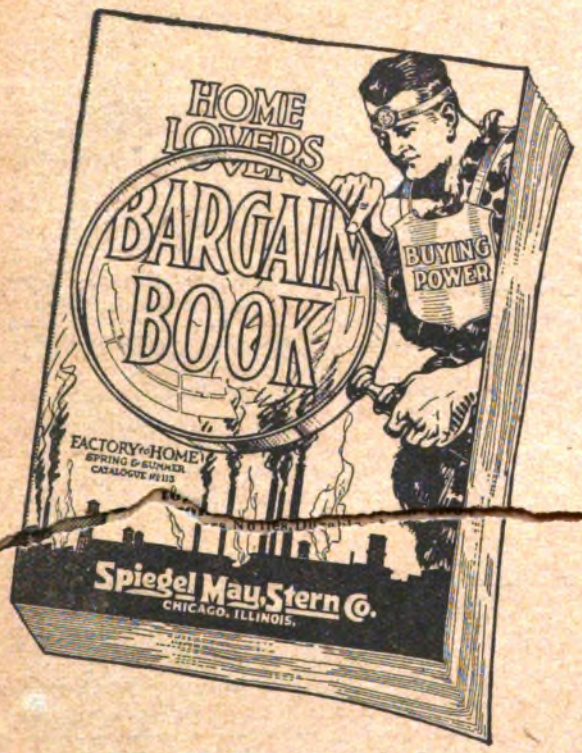
Mrs. Casey—"Didn't Oi tell ye Oi wouldn't give ye anny at all if ye didn't hape still?"

"Yes'm, but—"



"Well, the longer ye hape still the sooner ye'll get it."—Philadelphia Press.

Unwelcome Interruption



The following speech was made by an Irish barrister in behalf of his client whose cow had been killed by a train:

"If the train had been run as it should have been ran, or if the bell had been rung as it should have been rang, or if the whistle had been blown as it should have been blew, both of which they did not, the cow would not have been injured when she was killed."—Widow.

Now comes a concern big enough to loan furniture free while you leisurely decide on it!

Mail Postal for Your Free Copy!

The easiest thing to say is you are not interested in any new furniture right now, and think you'll send for our free book when ready. Nine times out of ten you will forget to do it later, or if you remember, we'll be out of books.

No greater display of house furnishings is shown anywhere. It is probably the largest book of its kind published. A great many things are shown in their actual colors.

You will find in it, prices amazing for their lowness. We could not afford to urge you to ask for this book, and then urge you to accept a free loan of some article, if in the long run you're likely to find something better elsewhere.

OUR FREE BOOK SHOWS

a complete line of all kinds of furniture, bedding, linens, silverware, dishes and cooking utensils. Rugs and carpets in all weaves, patterns and colors; curtains, lamps, clocks, sewing machines, musical instruments; a complete department of diamonds, watches and jewelry.

This free book will give you wonderful ideas about good house furnishings in all ranges of price. It will prove a real price guide. You will learn to like to refer to it. Ask for it now.

Our new Home Lovers' Bargain Book is absolutely free to you. In it we show many thousands home needs all loaned free. Entirely as an extra advantage we bring the most agreeable and longest credit—free to all.

No matter how clearly and simply we state these facts—it's all so different, so entirely new—that some folks will go right on thinking it cannot be so.

For fear the least shadow of a doubt can remain in anyone's mind, we go way beyond mere promises. We guarantee every statement we make here. This free loan guarantee comes with our free book. It is legally binding.

Still we go further. We are big enough and old enough to be able to step aside and let the unimpeachable outside testimony of the greatest national institutions endorse our guarantee.

Your own postmaster, or station agent; any bank in Chicago, New York or other large city; or any bank in any town in the United States, no matter how small, will vouch for the fact that Spiegel, May, Stern Company will keep its every promise.

Forget About Buying
Ask for Our Free Book, Anyway

We invite you to have a free copy. It comes for the asking, without the slightest obligation to buy. We'll not even keep on bothering you to buy after we send it.

Sooner or later you will need some home necessity; maybe a few pots or pans, dishes, silverware, linens, blankets, curtains. Our book shows everything for the home.

So please don't think of it merely as a book of furniture. When your particular need arises, we like to have you look everywhere else first. All we ask is to look in our book, too, and compare our display.

Then we want to take all the burden of proving that in one way or another, we can please you better. Our way of proving it is to loan the article free of all cost or risk to you. We loan it to you long enough so that you have plenty of time to leisurely make up your mind.

Read This Out Loud

We realize that before you decide on any purchase, even though the article seems to be exactly what you desire, there are several questions to be finally answered. Above everything else comes price; then quality, service and appearance. Nobody can tell how a rug, for instance, is actually going to look and fit when you get it in your home.

No picture, no description, and not even the most careful [illegible] of the actual article in a store. The house really and truly satisfy all these questions.

You never know a person till you live with them; you never know furniture till you live with it and use it.

So again we say, before you actually get right down to buying anything, let us first loan it to you free to be compared anywhere and used freely. This is the only test that means anything.

Credit Free to All!

Without Asking—Pay Little by Little!

With our free book comes the credit certificate that opens your account in advance. This credit is offered freely to everybody. No matter where you live, what your position may be, or what your earnings are, it makes no difference.

There is never any annoyance; no bother before you order or afterwards. We have no collectors; we hate red tape. After all, our credit feature is simply an added advantage.

You don't need even to think of it when you ask for a free loan. We loan things to everybody alike, whether they pay cash or use their credit. But because we offer credit so freely—we are able to make this loan without the cash in advance — merely a trifling deposit.

That is what makes our plan so different. That is why our offer is so new. That is why credit here cannot ever mean extra costs nor annoyances. We simply say, try your selection leisurely Use it freely. Test it in any manner.

After you decide to keep it, begin to pay little by little. If not satisfied, we bear every expense — all freight and hauling charges.

You see we have done away with all formality; all old-fashioned rules and embarrassing practices. It's just a friendly arrangement. We never write to your neighbor or employers. Don't have the least fear that we will ever try to pry into your affairs.

Ask Your Bank

The Corn Exchange National Bank of Chicago, one of the very biggest in the whole country, will tell you that we will live up to every promise we make. Take this entire advertisement to any bank anywhere, and they will tell you that we cannot go back on actual guaranteed statements like these.

Our free loan guarantee is bonded by the National Surety Company, whose security is accepted in any court in the land. Again, remember that this magazine would not print this message unless it were true.

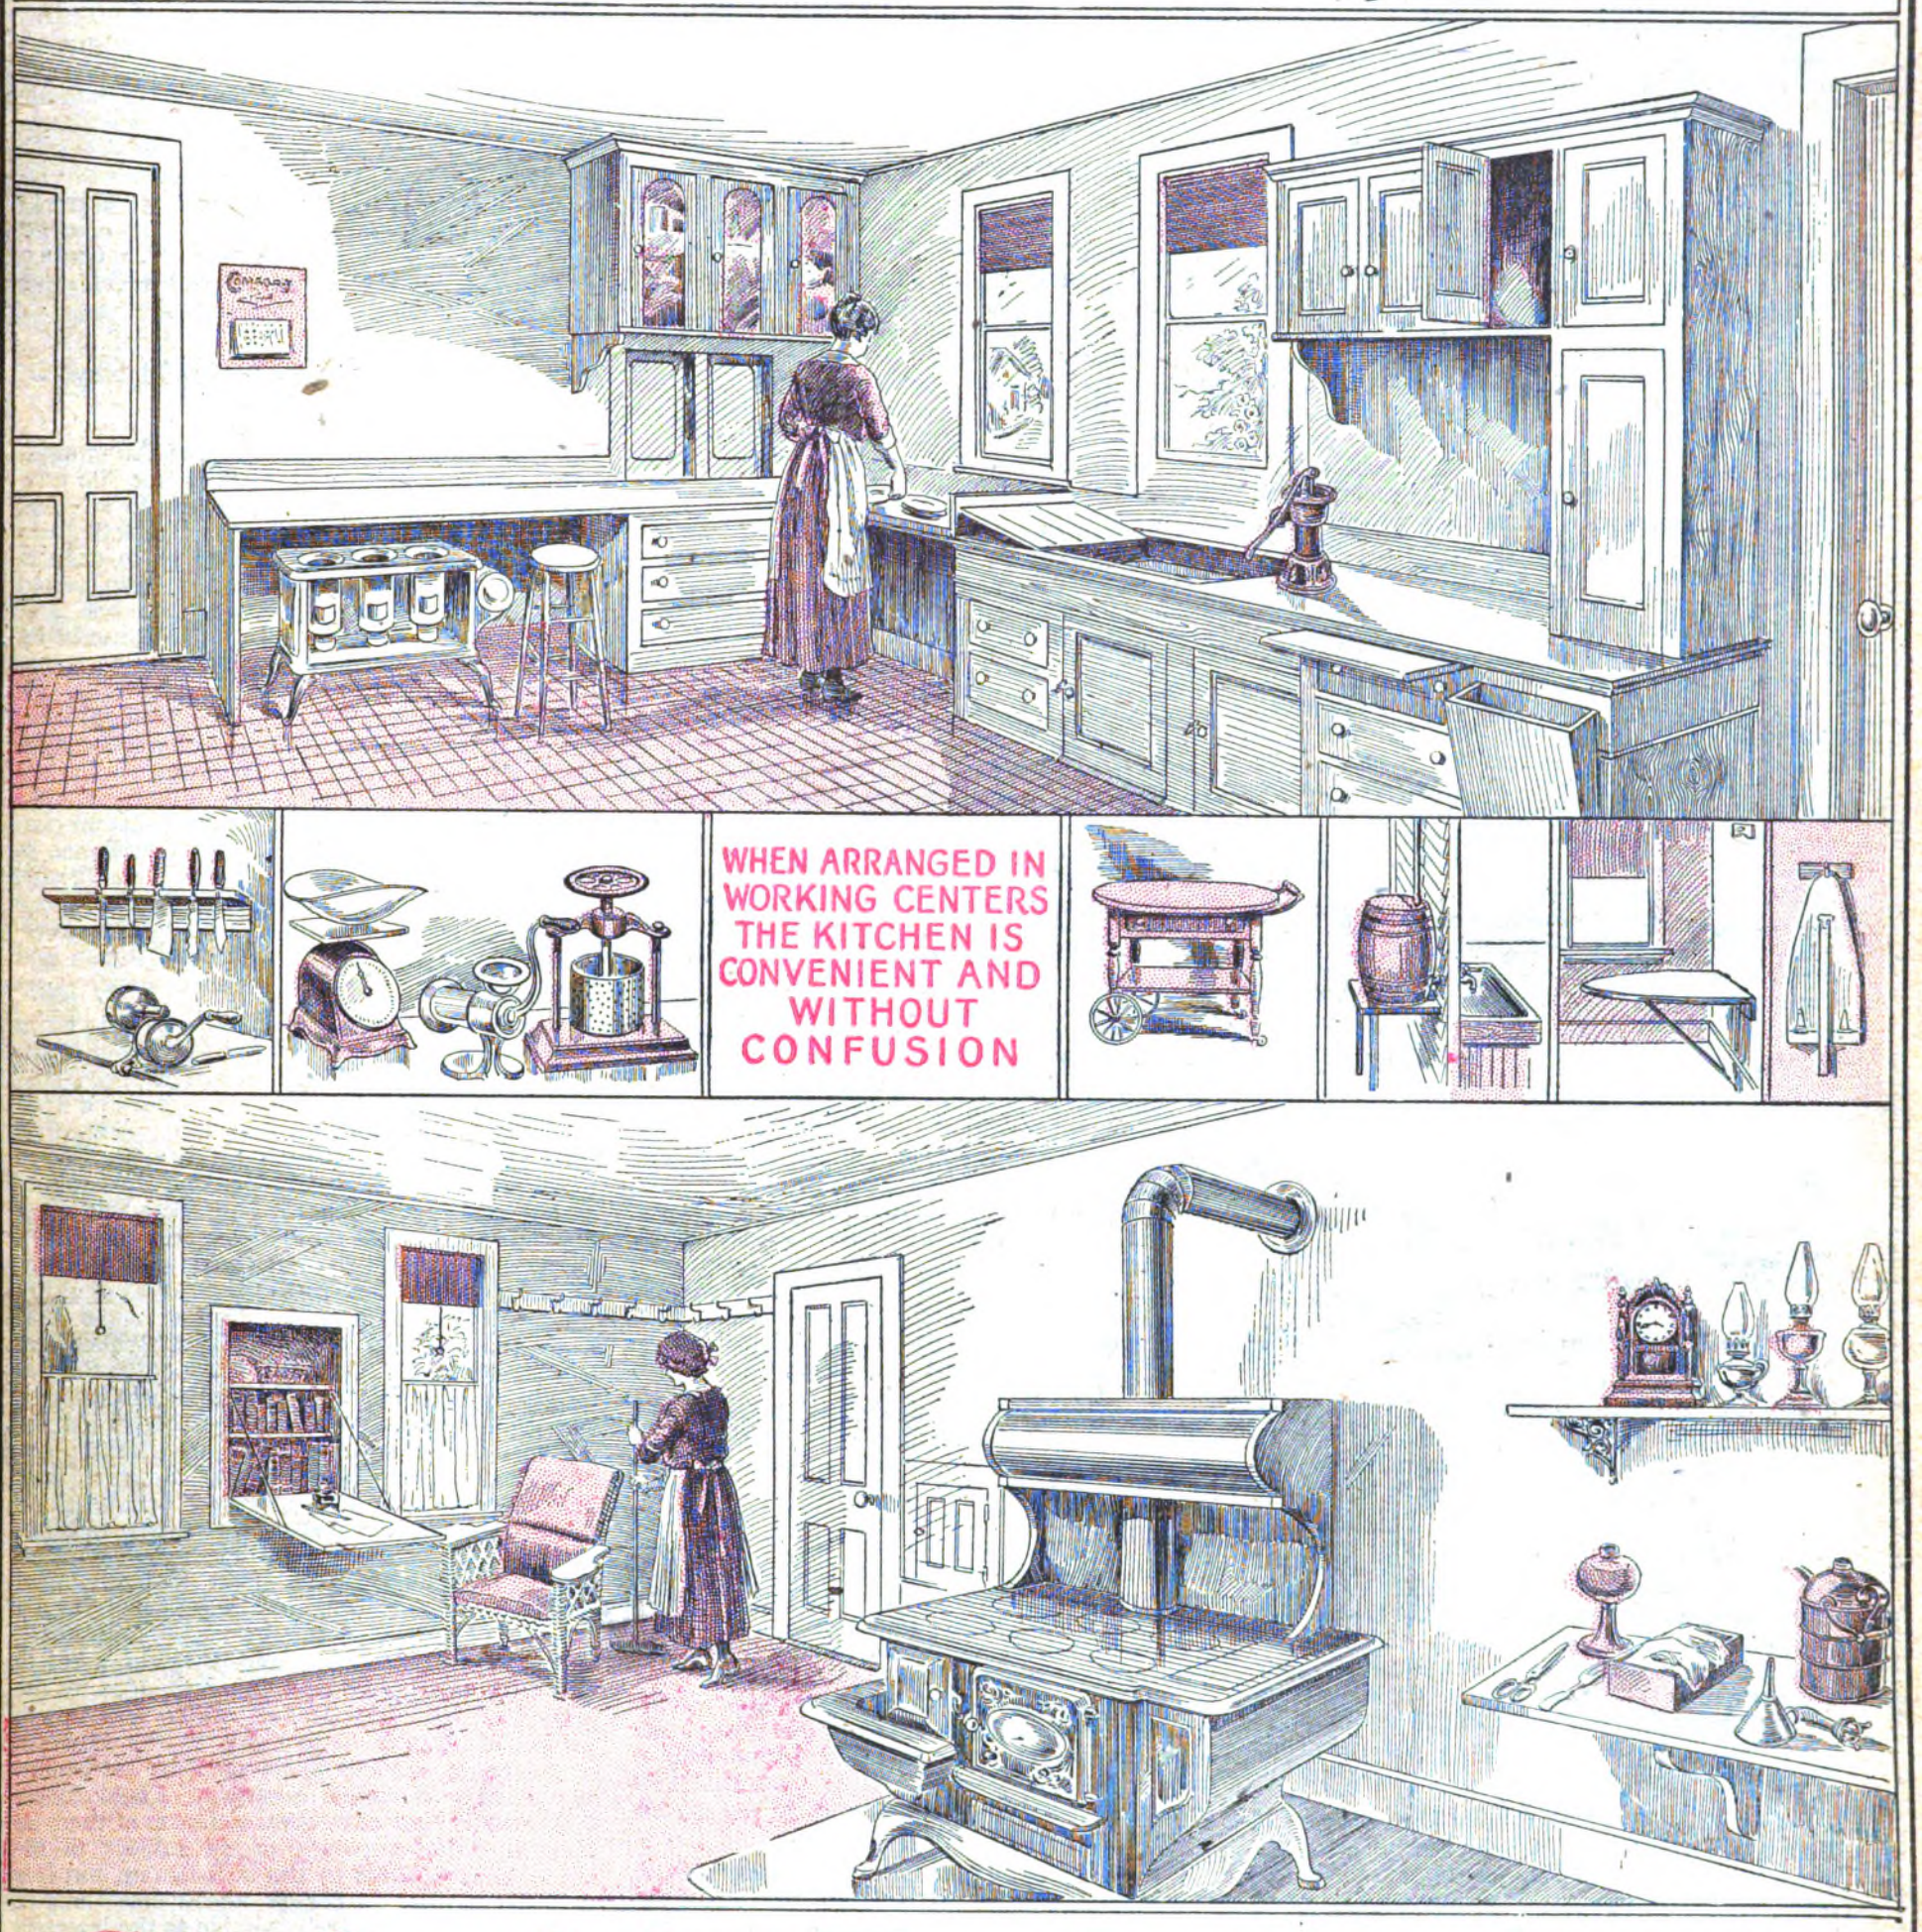
The United States Government would not allow us to misuse the mails by making false statements — and all our business is done by mail.

If you are likely to need the slightest thing for you home now, or in the next six months or year, have our free Home Lovers' Bargain Book on hand for comparison purpose, if nothing else!

Spiegel, May, Stern Co.
1523 West 35th Street, Chicago, Ill.

VOL. XXXIV
NO. 5

HOUSEHOLD NUMBER



COMFORT

The Key to Happiness and Success in over a Million and a Quarter Homes

Published at Augusta Maine

MARCH
1922

"Whatever Lessens Woman's Work Benefits the Race"

COMFORT MADE ITS FIRST APPEARANCE A THIRD OF A CENTURY AGO

OUR OBJECT IS TO PROMOTE A HIGH STANDARD OF HOME AND FARM LIFE

MOTHER AND BABY WELFARE ARE AMONG COMFORT'S HIGHEST AIMS

FRIENDSHIP ENCOURAGEMENT AND ASSISTANCE ARE FOUND IN THE SISTERS CORNER

ONLY THOSE HAVING PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE CONDUCT OUR MANY DEPARTMENTS

READ COMFORT'S CAREFULLY SELECTED STORIES FOR AN EVENING OF ENTERTAINMENT

THROUGH THESE PAGES WE TRAVEL THE ROAD TO HEALTH KNOWLEDGE AND HAPPINESS

See article, "Lessens Woman's Work", on page 13

Copyright 1922 (Trade-Mark Registered), by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Incorporated.

Table of Contents on Page 8.

COMFORT EDITORIAL

THOUGHTS THAT BREATHE AND WORDS THAT BURN

The "Flu" Is Here again in Epidemic Form—Precautions and Treatment Advised by Health Officers

THE influenza, commonly known as the "flu," since early winter has been, and still is, raging in northern and central Europe, including Scandinavia, Germany, France and England, whence the infection seems to have been conveyed by transatlantic shipping to America, making its appearance, as in the terrible epidemic of 1918, in our Atlantic seaboard cities and thence spreading to the interior. Although simple "flu" is causing a considerable number of deaths, the most dangerous feature of the disease is its tendency (the same now as in 1918) to develop into or induce pneumonia, resulting fatally in a very large percentage of the latter class of cases.

Though somewhat confusing, and in part apparently conflicting, the following excerpts from recent press reports give some idea of the seriousness of the menace at the present writing (February 6th). A United Press despatch dated Washington, January 25th, summarizing the report on influenza issued that day by the U. S. Public Health Bureau says: "Meager and incomplete reports from fifteen States show that 274 new cases have been discovered during the last seven days. The total showed 582 cases this week compared with 308 cases last week." Dr. Safford, Deputy Health Commissioner of Boston, Mass., in commenting on the situation as it stood at the close of the week ending January 28th, is reported to have said "that reports from New York and other cities show there have been serious epidemics of influenza, but not to the extent of the epidemics of 1918 and 1919. There has been lately an increase in Boston of cases of what the physicians usually call the old-fashioned grippe, to distinguish them from the typical influenza cases of three years ago, but thus far there has been no increase in mortality from pneumonia or other respiratory diseases in Boston, unusual for this season of the year." He added, however, that "If New York is having a more or less serious condition of this sort, it cannot be reasonably expected that Boston is going to escape indefinitely," and explained that the Boston Health Department was preparing for such a situation and planning to aid in providing medical and nursing care, as was done in the influenza epidemics of 1918 and 1920.

On January 31st, Health Commissioner Copeland of New York announced that influenza cases in that city had reached epidemic proportions, basing his assertion on the official report of 813 new cases of influenza and 185 new cases of pneumonia during the previous twenty-four hours, with 43 deaths from the two diseases. He pointed out that the epidemic this year is much milder than the one of 1918-19 when on the corresponding day there were reported 2,070 cases of influenza and 283 cases of pneumonia in the city, with 61 deaths from the former and 99 from the latter. He called attention also to another difference in that the fatalities resulting from the epidemic of 1918-19 were most numerous among persons between the ages of 15 and 45 years, while this year old people and children appear to be hardest hit.

On February 3rd New York City reported 1,122 new cases of influenza and 263 new cases of pneumonia during the previous 24 hours, with 92 deaths from both causes, and Dr. Copeland announced that if the epidemic continued to grow more severe in the next two or three days the plan put into effect during the 1918 epidemic to reduce travel in the subways at the rush hour would be adopted again.

On February 3rd the Health Commissioner of Massachusetts reported 87 new cases of influenza and 30 new cases of lobar pneumonia in the entire State during the previous 24 hours, as compared with 47 cases of influenza and 42 cases of pneumonia reported the day before. On the same day of the month a year ago only one case of influenza was reported.

Public Health officials appear disposed to calm the people's fears by publishing expressions of opinion that minimize the danger, which may or may not be a wise course under present conditions. In view of the calamitous consequences of having allowed previous visitations of the "flu" to get a strangle hold on this country it should seem the part of common prudence to sound a warning of the danger and give out information as to such preventive measures and remedial treatment as the people could pursue for the protection of life and health against this threatened infection.

How to Prevent Infection—What to Do if You Catch the "Flu"

ACCORDING to a recently published interview Dr. Safford, of the Boston Health Department, is reported to have said: "In so far as infections like grippe or influenza can be prevented at all must depend upon the trouble that people themselves are willing and able to take for their own protection. We know that infections like influenza or the grippe are spread from person to person." He explained that persons sick in bed are less important factors in spreading such infections than are those [milder, so-called walking cases of] persons who are running around and mingling with other people.

As preventive measures Dr. Safford urged personal cleanliness, the frequent washing of one's hands, care as to the use of towels and eating and drinking utensils, and to avoid crowds as much as possible. He emphasized the necessity for a person to get plenty of sleep and not to become chilled or tired, so to maintain the resistant power of the system against disease, especially against pneumonia which he asserted to be essentially a disease induced by physical exhaustion or lowered vitality. In a circular on this subject, which the Boston Health Department is issuing, there is a special warning against kissing, and the following opinion as to the preventive value of masks. "Experience and research have not shown that the wearing of masks tends to prevent infection, nor that proper masks properly worn increase in any way the danger of infection. It is believed, however, that improperly made masks, and masks improperly worn, no matter how well they may be made, tend to increase the spread of the disease."

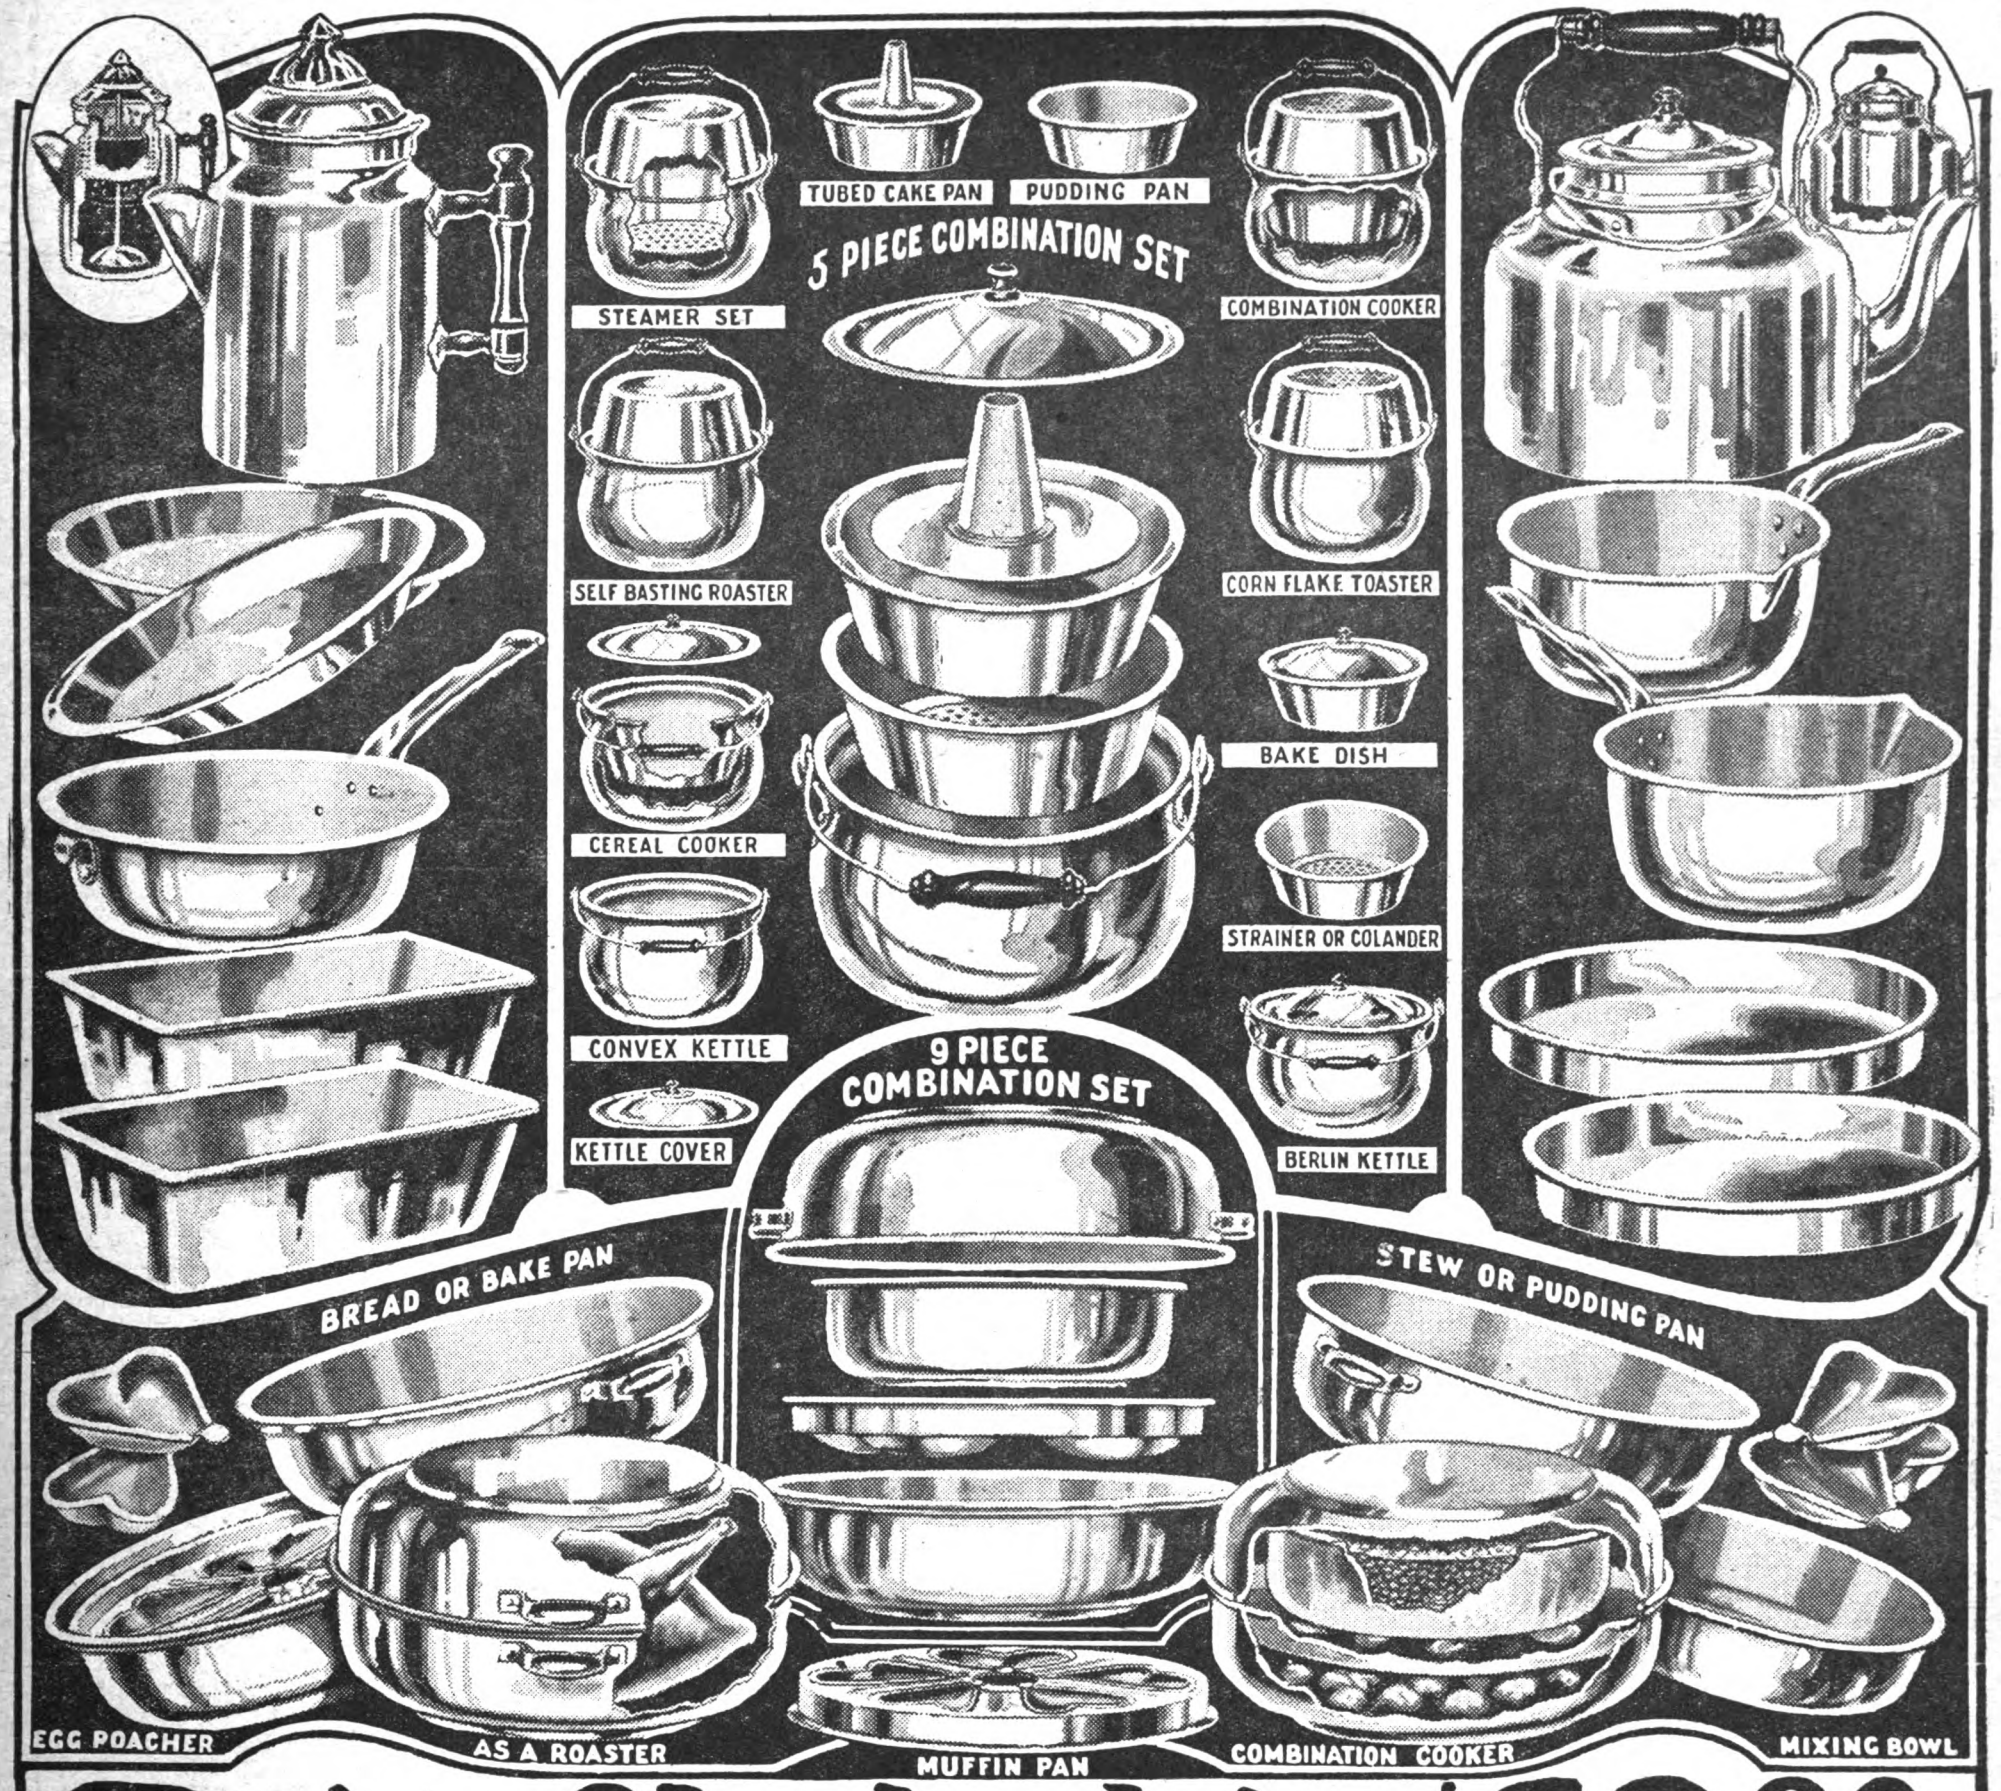
Regarding the duty of everybody to do his or her part in preventing the spread of the "flu" and other infectious diseases of the throat, nose and lungs, Dr. Eugene R. Kelly, Health Commissioner of Massachusetts, says: "Do not cough or sneeze in public without covering your nose and mouth with your handkerchief. Wash your hands before eating, and keep your hands or other objects away from your mouth at all other times. This will be your personal contribution in the preservation of your own and the community's health."

As to treatment for the influenza, grippe and other like diseases, Dr. Safford's instructions are: "At the first symptoms of sickness go to bed and stay there until the bodily temperature has been normal for at least two days." This implies, of course, that in such case you should also send for the doctor at once. This treatment is also recommended in case of a bad cold which in itself is always dangerous if neglected, and may lead to pneumonia or develop some other complication with serious or fatal consequences. This is especially important when the influenza, grippe, or pneumonia is prevalent, as in the first stage these diseases may not be easily distinguishable from a bad cold. Even a slight cold should be looked after, and if it refuses to be thrown off, see a doctor and obey his orders.

If unable to procure the attendence or advice of a physician for a person who has caught the influenza, grippe or a bad cold, so that you are thrown on your own resources for home treatment, the following suggestions may be helpful: If the bowels are at all sluggish give salts, castor oil or other laxative to cause a thorough evacuation; put the patient on a light and scant diet, preferably of gruel or milk so long as there is any fever; have him drink plenty of water; hot drink is useful to induce perspiration and reduce fever; orange juice clear, or lemon juice in water, hot or cold, is likely to prove refreshing and beneficial. If there is a tendency to bronchitis or congestion of the lungs, application of mustard poultices or plasters, or of musterole or rubifax, is useful, but care should be taken not to blister. It is important to keep the patient comfortable and warm, but he should have fresh air without exposure to draft. By offering the foregoing suggestions for home treatment it is not intended to exclude or discourage the use of other suitable home remedies—but I repeat the advice to get the doctor if possible. Finally, all authorities agree in advising not to worry nor be alarmed, for worry is weakening, and if you do your best to observe proper precautions there is but very little chance of your having the influenza, and much less chance of it proving dangerous to you.

Armament Conference Successful Beyond Expectation

THE Conference on Limitation of Armament, called by President Harding for the purpose signified by its name and to attempt a peaceful settlement of the conflicting national claims, policies and designs as to eastern Asia and the islands of the Pacific Ocean, vexed problems that were threatening another and greater world war with the United States in its incipient vortex, finished its great work in a session of less than three months and finally adjourned on February 6th with a record of splendid achievement that exceeds the most hopeful expectation of its sponsors and far surpasses the accomplishments of any previous international conference. The American delegates led in proposing and shaping the work of the Conference in which they had the hearty support of the British delegation throughout, and but for the influence of Britain's favorable attitude could not have overcome, as they did, the opposition of Japan and France on some of the chief points at issue.



In the present limited space I can only summarize some of the most important results of the Conference as follows: (1) United States, Great Britain, Japan, France and Italy agree to a limitation of naval armament that requires the first three named Powers to make an immediate large reduction in their respective navies by scrapping all battleships in process of construction and some already built, so that the British and American navies thus reduced shall be equal, and the Japanese navy only three-fifths the strength of either the British or American, and further agree that none of these five powers shall increase its naval armament during the next ten years. Besides largely reducing expenses this cuts naval strength to a point adequate for defence but insufficient for offensive war. This tends to promote general peace and practically assures the United States against attack by Japan. (2) Agreement by the same five Powers not to use poison gas in war, and limiting the use of submarines to combat ships of war. (3) United States, Great Britain, Japan and France agree to maintain peace in the Pacific Ocean. (4) The five Powers above named and China, Portugal, Holland and Belgium agree to the "Open Door" policy in China demanded by the United States. (5) United States and Japan settle their dispute as to rights in the island of Yap. (6) Japan and China agree on settlement of a number of vexed questions. These agreements are in form of treaties, and such of them as the United States is party to are subject to acceptance or rejection by the U. S. Senate, but it is unthinkable that the Senate would reject any of them, as all of them are favorable to the interests of America and of peace the world over.

COMFORT'S EDITOR.

COMFORT, PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY W. H. GANNETT, PUB., INC., AT AUGUSTA, MAINE.

Subscription price in United States and United States Possessions 50c a year; Canadian subscriptions 65c a year, foreign countries $1.00 a year. No premiums or prizes will be given on Canadian or foreign subscriptions. Please send your renewal just as soon as your subscription expires. We can not send you even one copy of COMFORT, after expiration, until your subscription is Renewed. If you do not get your magazine by the 25th of the month write us and we will send you another copy free. Please notify us immediately in case you move, so that we can change your address and see that you do not miss a single copy. Remember that we must have your former address, as well as your new address to make the change. Be sure to send both. We do not supply back numbers.

Entered at the post office at Augusta, Maine as second-class mail matter. Copyright, 1922 (Trade-Mark Registered), by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

Price Slashed to $13.90

$1.00 Down

Complete Set Genuine Lifetime Ware

Madam: Here's an opportunity you haven't had in years—yes, years—even before the war. A complete set of genuine "Lifetime Ware Aluminum", each utensil stamped with the manufacturer's brand genuine, heavy gauge, extra hard, pressed sheet seamless aluminum—and at a price less than is asked by others today for thin, ordinary aluminum ware. We, ourselves, had to charge $23.90 for a set like this only a few months ago; but now on a special factory offer we have smashed the price to $13.90 (on easy monthly payments), lower than pre-war prices on aluminum ware of this grade. This is an exclusive offer to Straus & Schram customers by a special arrangement with the factory. We had the cash; they needed business to keep their employes working—that's why we are able to make you this amazing, price smashing offer.

Notice Be careful in buying aluminum-ware. Some sets offered for sale are made of cheap, soft aluminum which bends easily, dents with every fall or knock and is not durable. Insist upon genuine, heavy gauge, hard sheet aluminum. The set offered here is made of genuine pure sheet aluminum, heavy, extra hard. Guaranteed "Lifetime Ware."

LIFETIME WARE DIAMOND BRAND SANITARY BRIGHT DURABLE PURE ALUMINUM

Everything in the Kitchen of Pure Aluminum—28 Pieces

Combination tea kettle and double boiler (3 pieces) 5 quart size, 8¼ inch inside, with a double boiler, 2 quart capacity; one Colonial design coffee percolator (2 pieces), 8 cup size with welded spout, dome cover, fully polished; one roaster consisting of 9 pieces, measures 10½ inches wide and 6 inches high. These 9 pieces have dozens of different uses, some shown in illustration, including bread or bake pan (7 pint capacity); stew or pudding pan (7 pint capacity); pudding pan or mixing bowl (4 pint capacity); egg poacher (5 eggs at a time); muffin pan; biscuit baker with 5 custard cups or jelly molds; deep locking self basting roaster, double boiler cereal cooker or triple steamer. The outfit also includes 2 bread pans, 1 lip stew pan (1 quart capacity), 1 lip stew pan (1½ quart capacity). Two 9 inch pie plates; two 9½-inch extra deep cake pans; 1 colander with 9 inch top, 5½ inch bottom and 2¼ inch depth (can also be used as a steamer.) 5 piece combination set, having 12 different uses as shown in illustration, consists of 6 quart convex kettle with cover; 2 quart cake and pudding pan with cake tube; strainer or colander. Shipping weight about 15 lbs. All pieces (except the pie plates and bread pans) are highly polished, made of genuine pure sheet aluminum, extra hard, absolutely guaranteed the famous "Lifetime Ware".

Order by No. A6729A. Send $1.00 with order, $1.50 monthly. Price, 28 pieces, $13.90.

30 Days' Trial Easy Payments

Only $1.00 down brings the set to your home for 30 days' trial. See how it cooks and bakes better than any other kitchen ware, heats quickly, will not crack, chip or peel, polish can't wear off. If not perfectly satisfied, return the set at our expense within 30 days and we will refund your $1.00, plus any express charges you pay.

But if you are pleased—delighted with this wonderful set, start making small payments of $1.50 per month until you have paid $13.90 in all. We trust honest people anywhere in the United States. No discount for cash; nothing extra for credit. No C. O. D.

Send NOW!

Only $1.00 with the coupon brings this 28-piece "Lifetime Ware" Aluminnm set on 30 days' trial. Money refunded if not satisfied. Don't miss this slashed price offer. Send coupon now.

Free Bargain Catalog
Shows thousands of bargains in furniture, jewelry, carpets, rugs, curtains, silverware, stoves, talking machines, porch and lawn furniture, women's, men's and children's wearing apparel. Send coupon today.

Straus & Schram, Dept. 3043 West 35th Street Chicago, Illinois

STRAUS & SCHRAM, Dept. 3043 W. 35th Street Chicago, Ill.

Enclosed find $1.00. Ship special advertised 28 piece "Lifetime Ware" Aluminum Kitchen Set. I am to have 30 days' trial. If I keep the set, I will pay you $1.50 monthly. If not satisfied, I am to return the set within 30 days and you are to refund my money and any freight or express charges I paid.

☐ 28 Piece Aluminum Kitchen Set No. A6729A, $13.90.

Name.....

Street, R.F.D. or Box No......

Shipping Point.....

Post Office..... State.....

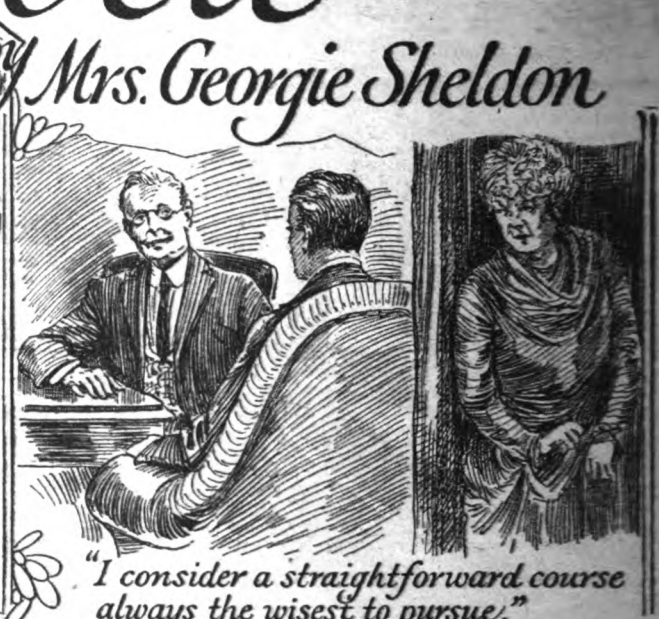
If You Only Want Catalog, Put X in Proper Box Below:

☐ Furniture, Stoves and Jewelry ☐ Men's, Women's and Children's Clothing

Stella Rosevelt



by Mrs. Georgie Sheldon

Star's heart nearly ceased beating.

"Lord Carrol" she said, in her iciest tones, "release my hand, if you please."

"I consider a straightforward course always the wisest to pursue."

Copyright, 1888, 1902 and 1903 by Street & Smith.
Renewal granted to Mrs. Georgie Sheldown Downs, for 28 years from March 20, 1911.
Serial rights by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A terrible storm at sea and from a steamer running between Liverpool and New York only five escape seasickness. Among them is Stella Rosevelt Gladstone, an orphan and on her way to some distant relatives in New York. She is befriended by an elderly man, Jacob Rosevelt, who is startled when he learns her mother called her "Star," her grandmother giving her the name. A fire breaks out and she saves valuable papers. The boats are rapidly filled. Stella refuses to go unless room is made for Mr. Rosevelt, who the next day suffers from an ill turn and is carefully nursed by Stella. The sixth day they are rescued. Mr. Rosevelt is told of the care Stella gave him during his illness and while thanking her a young man approaches and Mr. Rosevelt introduces Archibald Sherbrooke, whose home is in Derbyshire where Star's father preached. Star's shawl becomes loosened and not finding the pin, Mr. Sherbrooke draws one, an exquisitely carved stone, from his necktie, and Stella pins the shawl and then tells the story of the wreck and her endeavor to save Mr. Rosevelt's life. Arriving in New York, Mr. Sherbrooke regrets the loss of her address—he would call before his return to England. He hopes they will meet again and will she always consider him her friend. He places a card in her hand with his address upon it. Stella, remembering the pin, passes it to him. He begs her to keep it as a souvenir. Wishing she had something to give, he will accept a lock of her hair. Stella is met by Mrs. Blunt, Mrs. Richards' housekeeper, who hurries her away, much to Mr. Rosevelt's disappointment. Stella receives a cool reception from her aunt who had written she would befriend and educate Stella until able to care for herself and learns she is to take the place of Maggie Flynn and to be degraded to the level of a common servant. Resenting it, she asks her aunt if her father, from what she wrote him, had any idea she was to come into the family as a servant. Mrs. Richards does not relent, and insists she fills Maggie Flynn's place or none. Stella appeals to Mr. Richards, giving him the letter written by her father to Mrs. Richards and her reply. Stella's father is anxious to provide a home and begs Mrs. Richards to have the care and education of his daughter, since she once professed friendship for Stella's mother in saving her life from drowning. Stella has one hundred pounds. Could she not use it and then teach, relieving his wife of all responsibility? Mrs. Richards is surprised at Stella's suggestion and Mr. Richards makes arrangements for her to attend a select school, she giving a part of each day to household work. By close application Stella wins, at commencement, a part in the class exercises and surprises Mr. Richards, who is present, by her instrumental music, essay and promotion to the senior class. He tells his wife she has done the last day's work in the house. Josephine, admiring the cameo worn by Stella, suggests she give it to her, as her wardrobe does not correspond with it. Going to Stella's room and finding the cameo, Josephine takes it and discovers the initials "A. S." Stella misses the cameo and is suspicious who has it. In the meanwhile Mr. Richards receives a letter from Mrs. Richards' Uncle Jacob. He has lost all, is penniless and will accept the home that was offered him when rich. Mrs. Richards refuses to receive him, the house is full, and Mr. Richards is left troubled. Upon his arrival he is taken to the Lodge to sleep, Mr. Rosevelt meets Star who offers her room to him and does all she can to brighten his life. Mrs. Richards receives him coldly, and Josephine ignores her uncle. Mrs. Richards and Josephine go to Long Branch where they meet Lord Carroll, of Carrolton, Derbyshire, England, who appears pleased with Josephine and requests permission of her mother to call. Noticing a ring Josephine wears and examining it he sees the initials "A. S". Josephine claims it is given by a relative. Lord Carrol cannot understand it. The next day he leaves for New York. Stella, hurrying to take a train for home, and in danger, is stopped by Archibald Sherbrooke and the acquaintance renewed. Stella tells him that she and Mr. Rosevelt are in the same home. Mr. Rosevelt goes to New York with Stella to call upon Mr. Sherbrooke in his studio and arranges a pleasure trip for them to Coney Island for the following day. When they return from it Stella is the promised wife of Archibald Sherbrooke. Lord Carrol, of Carrolton, thought to be Josephine's betrothed, is expected. Stella sees in him her promised husband, Archibald Sherbrooke.

XVII.

"WHY HAS HE DONE THIS THING?"

WHAT could this strange thing mean? What was Archibald Sherbrooke—the man who, two days before, had told her that he loved her and no other—doing there in that character of Lord Carrol? Why was he there, laughing, chatting, and exchanging greetings in that familiar way with Mrs. Richards and her family?

Star's heart nearly ceased its beating; she grew faint, giddy, and absolutely soul-sick. Her face paled until it was as white as those cold, waxen berries at her throat; her very lifeblood seemed to be congealing.

What could it mean?

Looking down upon the little group, she saw that Josephine's eyes were fastened upon him—her lover—with an expression that there was no mistaking. It was full of pride and wistful affection. Her voice was low and sweet when she spoke to him, her laugh silvery clear as it rang out upon the still evening air at some light jest of his; and Star knew that she loved him deeply, passionately; that she would stop at nothing to win him, if indeed, he was not already won. Oh, what—what could it all mean?

It was cruel, cruel as death, to have her short, bright dream shattered thus; to have given all the wealth of her warm young heart to the handsome young stranger who had called himself Archibald Sherbrooke, and now to discover him to be a myth—that there was no such person, that she had been made the plaything of an idle hour. And yet it had all appeared so real; he had seemed so true and loyal, and to have loved her so fondly.

But stay—might she not be jumping to conclusions, after all?

A different solution to the mystery flashed into her mind. She started eagerly up, the color coming back to her face, a joyful light flashing into her eyes.

Archie had told her that he should "come to her Monday or Tuesday—that he could not wait longer;" but she had not thought he would come tonight. She did expect him tomorrow, and perhaps he had arrived.

On the other hand, Lord Carrol had, perchance, disappointed his friends. They had gone to meet him, and had not found him as they expected.

Archie, very likely, had taken the same train from New York that his lordship had intended to take, and on arriving had inquired of some one for the street and number that she had written on the card for him; the individual whom he asked might have known it was Mr. Richards' residence—for he was well known there—directed him, and he, on learning the man's errand, had probably, with his usual good nature, invited him to take a seat in his carriage, and had driven him home.

Thus she reasoned with her aching, fear-burdened heart, clutching at this little ray of hope as a drowning man clutches at a straw.

But he did not appear like a stranger to any of them; neither did Josephine seem like the disappointed girl she probably would have been if her expected lover had not arrived. She was chatting and laughing with him in the most friendly way; her face was glowing with happiness; her tones and her laughter were musical from very joy.

With these doubts mingling with her sudden hope, Star leaned forward, eagerly listening for him to inquire for her; but the words which came floating up to her smote her heart with a deadly pain, drove the color back again from her face, and made the love-light in her eyes change to a look of mortal agony and despair.

"My lord," Mrs. Richards said, graciously, "we will not keep you standing here; the drawing-room, where we have other friends waiting to meet you, is more inviting, and our dinner will soon be served."

And my lord, with his most charming smile and bow, replied:

"Mrs. Richards, you have given me a most hospitable welcome to your delightful home, and I shall be happy to meet your friends;" and giving his arm to Josephine, he followed his hostess within, to be presented to the other guests who had been invited to meet him.

All hope was gone now—they had called him Lord Carrol and he had replied; and, stricken with despair, Star slipped from her chair like one from which all life had been suddenly smitten, and fell prone upon the floor, where she lay in a semi-conscious state for more than an hour.

But when at length thought and feeling began to return to her, she wondered if she were herself or some one else who had lived through a century of misery—youth and happiness, joy and hope seemed to be attributes of an age so long gone by.

"Why has he done this thing?" she moaned, sitting up and clasping her icy hands across her burning brow. "Why has he deceived me thus, making a fool and a plaything of me merely to pass an idle hour? Why did he call himself Archibald Sherbrooke, when he is Lord Carrol, of Carrolton? Why could he not have left me alone when I was content with my music, my studies, and my simple life? Oh! why need my whole future be blighted thus? I could have gone on my way—I could have carried out my plans and gratified my ambition to become a teacher and be independent, and believed myself happy, if he had left me to myself. But now—if I could only die—if I could even go mad—anything to make me forget how I have allowed myself to love him, and built all my future hopes on his love for me!"

The sound of gay voices and laughter came floating up to her from below as she sat there mourning her blighted life: it smote her like the stab of a knife, and she shivered from head to foot, every nerve cringing with keenest pain.

In imagination she could see how Josephine was assuming her most bewitching airs to win the treacherous man who had blotted out every hope of joy from her existence, and who, perhaps, was bending over her, speaking soft and tender words, even as he had done to her only two days ago.

She got up from the floor, tottered to the window and shut it, to keep out those hateful sounds from below which nearly drove her into a frenzy; then, too weak to sit up, she crept into her bed, where she lay shaking as with an ague and moaning with pain all the long night through.

Morning found her burning with fever, with an aching head and a crushed and breaking heart, and thus good Mrs. Blunt found her about ten o'clock.

"Merciful sakes alive! whatever in the world has happened to you, Miss Star?" she cried, when she saw the young girl in her wretched condition lying on the bed.

"I believe I do not feel very well this morning," Star said, wearily.

"I should think not, indeed! You've got a high fever, and yet you're shaking with the cold. Goodness gracious, child! and you all dressed out like this, too! What has happened?" Mrs. Blunt cried, aghast, as she pulled back the coverlid and saw at a glance that she had been lying all night in her clothing.

Star was too miserable to explain, as the good woman saw, and she did not press her with questions; but with nimble yet tender hands she removed her clothing, replacing it with her robe de nuit, and then wrapping her in a heavy blanket, she tucked her snugly into bed once more.

She then went down below, where she prepared a steaming drink of some kind, with which she hastened back to her patient, and insisted that she should drink it—"every drop."

The poor child obeyed, feeling too wretched to offer any objections; and then saturating a napkin with camphor and water, Mrs. Blunt bound it about her aching head, and darkening the room, bade her go to sleep again as quickly as possible, for of course school was not to be thought of that day; and indeed Star had forgotten the existence of such an institution.

The hot drink warmed and soothed her, while the kind attention of the woman comforted her; and exhausted nature asserting itself, she soon dropped into a profound slumber.

It was late in the afternoon when she awoke again, and realized that she was much refreshed physically, although her burden of misery was still crushing down upon her heart.

Mrs. Blunt found her as white and wan as she had been flushed and feverish, when she looked in upon her again just before dinner, and she could not understand the look of hopeless despair that lay in her usually bright and joyous eyes.

Mrs. Blunt helped her to dress and watched her closely with those small, keen eyes of hers.

She did not trouble her with conversation, but after making her room tidy, she went quietly out and left her alone.

Left alone, the unhappy girl felt that she must get out and away from that close room where she had suffered so much. So dressing hastily and wrapping a shawl about her, she stole down a back way, out by a side door into the grounds, and taking a circuitous path, made her way as rapidly as her strength would permit toward the lodge.

She had accomplished about half the distance when her limbs began to fail her, and she became so weak and faint from the exertion she had made that she was obliged to stop and lean against the trunk of a large tree to rest a while.

A feeling of unutterable woe overcame her—such a sense of loneliness and desolation that she could not bear it; and covering her face with her hands, she gave way to the flood of tears which would not be restrained.

She had no idea how long she wept—time, place, everything was lost in the utter abandonment of her grief—until she was aroused, and a thrill of terror went tingling through all her nerves, as a hand fell suddenly yet lightly upon her shoulder.

With a start, her hands dropped from her tear-stained face and she looked up, to find the grave, questioning eyes of her faithless lover looking down into her own.

A low cry of surprise and dismay escaped him as he recognized her.

"Star! My darling, what does this mean?" he asked, in astonishment. "How came you here, and why do I find you grieving thus? You look more like some stricken white dove than like my bright, beautiful star. I was coming to you tomorrow—I wanted to come today, but I could not. Tell me, dear, how is it I find you here in the grounds of Mr. Richards, where I am visiting?" and he would have gathered her into his arms, but by a quick movement she evaded him, and stepping back a few paces she confronted him with a haughty uplifting of her small head, her face and eyes glowing with scorn and indignation.

"Tomorrow you would have come to me," she repeated, with curling lips. "Pray, where would you have sought me?"

"Here in Yonkers, at No. 56 ——— Street. I think that was the address you wrote on the card," he said, apparently bewildered by her strange conduct, and regarding her with a troubled look. "I wanted to go there today, but there has been no opportunity," he said again. "And tomorrow I was intending to ask Mr. Richards to direct me to the address which you gave me."

"Do you know the street and number of this residence?" Star asked, sternly.

"No. When it was arranged that I should come here to make a short visit, Mrs. Richards was so kind as to say that her carriage should meet me at the station, so that I do not even know the name of the street on which they live."

"Then tomorrow, when you should ask to be directed to the address which I gave you—if, indeed, you intended to ask for it—you would have been told that you would find me here in this place—this house. Mr. Richards' residence is No. 56 ——— Street," Star said, proudly and coldly.

She had no faith in him; she believed he was acting a part.

"Impossible!" he cried. "I never dreamed of such a thing. Why, then, have I not seen you? Why were you not with the family when I arrived last night? Why have I not seen you today?" he asked, as if more and more astonished.

"Because," she answered, her voice rising, with a scornful, bitter ring, "I am a dependent upon the bounty of the rich; because I am a burden and expense in a house of luxury, and only tolerated on account of a promise made to my dying father and to cancel a debt due to my mother. You have not seen me, because I am not allowed to breathe the same air, eat and drink, and sit at the same table with those who think they are of finer mould than I. But it is just as well, my lord——"

"My lord!" he repeated, in a startled tone, interrupting her. "Star, that from you!"

She laughed bitterly, lifting her head with a haughty gesture, though her face gleamed like a piece of marble in the waning light.

"Yes, that from me!" she said. Fortunately, I was at a window above the entrance when you arrived last evening, and witnessed the honors that were heaped upon my Lord Carrol, of Carrolton, and the revelation of your true character, although a sudden and bitter one to me, was, perhaps, after all, a providential one; for, if it showed me how I had been duped and betrayed, how I had been made the plaything of an idle hour, it also gave me time to collect my scattered senses a trifle before meeting you and telling you how I scorn you for——"

"Duped! betrayed! plaything! Star, listen to me," pleaded the young man, his breath almost taken away by these startling accusations and by her wild words, so full of derision and pain.

"I will not listen to you!" she cried, passionately; "I have listened to you too much already. Oh! why did you do this wicked thing? Why could you not have left me alone? Had you not enough already, with your riches, your title, and your life of pleasure, without coming in cruel sport to spoil a poor young girl's life? Was it not enough that you could woo and win the heiress, the belle and beauty of Long Branch, without the amusement of trying to win and break my poor heart?"

"Star! Star!" he cried, drawing nearer the excited girl. "What wild, wild words! Every one is like a dagger plunged into my heart. You do not know what you are saying, dear. I try to win and break your heart! My poor darling, you have been misled by having learned of my title. I should have told you before, but——"

"Then you are Lord Carrol? You own it—you acknowledge it?" Star interrupted, with a ring of wild despair in her tones.

"Yes, I am Lord Carrol, of Carrolton; but, Star——"

"That is enough; I want to hear no more," she said, stopping him with an authoritative gesture of her white hand. "I will not listen to another word from your traitorous lips!"

She turned proudly from him and would have left him, but he sprang forward and seized her hands.

They were cold as ice and shaking as with palsy, and he was shocked by the hopelessness visible in her face as he looked down upon it.

"Star, my darling," he began, in a voice that was almost stern from emotion; "you shall listen to me. It is my right to be heard, and I can explain everything to you if you will but give me the opportunity."

But she would not. Pain, despair, outraged pride and affection made her unreasonable and almost insane.

She flashed a haughty glance up at him.

"Lord Carrol," she said, in her iciest tones, "release my hands, if you please."

He dropped them as if they had been coals of fire, and drew back a pace or two from her, deeply wounded, while his own face was nearly as white and pained as hers.

"Star, you are wronging me more than you dream. Surely you will listen to my defense," he said, and his voice trembled with suppressed feeling.

Oh, how she longed to yield and allow him to win her back; how she longed to let him take her into his strong arms, and hear him murmur again those tender words such as he had spoken to her so recently; but, remembering his attentions to Josephine last night, her looks of affection and pride, her bright face and happy laugh—remembering what she had heard regarding his devotion to her at Long Branch, and the reason that had been given for his coming there to her home, she could not.

He had played the role of rich lover to the proud heiress; he had acted that of a poor sweetheart with her; for had he not told her he was an artist, but hoped to be able to take care of her, so that she need never know the meaning of the words poor and dependent again; and now, with all this evidence before her, how could she help believing him false to the core—to have simply amused himself at her expense?

"You can have no defense to offer me, and I will hear nothing," she returned, coldly. "You have deceived me most cruelly; you came to me as Archibald Sherbrooke; you used all your powers of fascination to make me love you as a poor artist, while you had already played the part of a rich lover in a different character at a fashionable watering place. I congratulate you upon your marvelous success as an actor, my lord," she concluded, with scathing sarcasm.

A deep sigh broke from him; her words hurt him keenly, for he was very proud.

But he saw how she was suffering, and he tried to be patient with her, feeling sure that if he could only make her listen to him all would be well.

"My dear," he said, gently, "you do not understand. Pray, let me tell you all about it. I swear that I am both——"

"You need not swear; I know enough already. Go back to my more fortunate cousin, Miss Richards, whom the whole household expects you intend to make Lady Carrol. She, I own, is better fitted to be the bride of a peer of England than the poor alien who is a burden upon her bounty. She will grace your proud home and name with her beauty; she will add to your riches with her wealth. But let me tell you"—and Star had no idea how superbly beautiful she was as she stood so proudly before him and uttered this prophetic sentence—"that the girl whom she has despised and insulted, whom you have deceived, and whose life you have blighted by your treachery, will yet rise to a position that shall shame and humiliate you both. Go back to her, I say, and—ask her for the cameo which you gave me. I told you that I had lost it. I put it that way because I did not like to tell you how badly I had been used by those who

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 12.)

This Department is conducted solely for the use of COMFORT sisters, whereby they may give expression to their ideas relative to the home and home surroundings, and to all matters pertaining to themselves and families; as well as opening a way for personal correspondence between each other.

Our object is to extend a helping hand to COMFORT subscribers; to become coworkers with all who seek friendship, encouragement, sympathy or assistance through the interchange of ideas.

Any abuse of this privilege, such as inviting correspondence for the purpose of offering an article for sale, or undertaking to charge a sum of money for ideas, recipes or information mentioned in any letter appearing in this department, if reported, will result in the offender being denied the use of these columns.

Do not ask us to publish letters requesting money contributions or donations of any sort. Much as we sympathize with the suffering and unfortunate, it is impossible to do this as we would be flooded with similar requests.

Please write only on one side of the paper, and recipes on a separate sheet.

Always give your correct and full name and address, very plainly written; otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

Address MRS. WHEELER WILKINSON, CARE COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

IF everything comes to him who waits, then just as surely everything must come to "her" who waits, and, as proof, here is the COMFORT Sisters' Circle Pin that we have talked of for some time. I've forgotten who suggested it in the first place. It isn't as elaborate as some suggested but we've tried to have it attractive and within the reach of everybody. I hope you like it and that everyone will order one. Thank you.—Ed.

Comfort Sisters' Circle Pin

Every COMFORT sister should wear this beautiful Sisters' Circle Brooch Pin—the one and only official sisters' "badge" of membership, uniting in one grand circle of friendship and love the thousands of COMFORT sisters living in all parts of the world. It is the size of a 25-cent piece, gold finished on the back while the front is inlaid with handsome cloisonne enamel in two colors—your choice of red or blue—with the words "COMFORT Sisters" deeply embossed, as shown in the illustration. For further information see offer at end of Sisters' letters.

LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

As I am renewing my subscription for three years I thought I would like to write to the Sisters' Corner at the same time.

To the mothers who have children that are cross eyed or have any trouble with the eyes, I say take care of it directly. I was cross eyed from infancy and mother did not attend to my eyes as the family doctor said I'd outgrow it, which I did, but I lost the sight of the eye as the muscles are numb. At times the pain is so intense that I cannot bear a bit of noise. Also at the age of twenty-four my hair is streaked with grey.

There is quite a discussion as to how to earn pin money. Though my sight is poor I earn money. You will perhaps laugh as I haven't read of anyone else doing anything like it. I lathe houses. My husband and his brothers are carpenters. When they build houses for themselves they let me lathe. I put on the average of six bundles a day for which I receive fifty cents per hundred, so I can earn around three dollars a day. As I do not work by the clock I can care for my home and children before I leave. I take the youngsters along and they play in the sand or with blocks and I quit when I feel like going home. I also have a garden and in summer I sell the surplus vegetables. Lima beans are most profitable. I have my own berries of all kinds for preserving, and my own fruit trees. As carpenter work is slack in the country in winter, we lay in our winter supplies in summer. We generally have a pig or two.

There are many things I'd like to discuss with the sisters. I think this corner is about the coziest as well as the most educational part of the whole paper. It gives one something to think of.

I am five feet, six inches tall, weigh 150 pounds, and have brown hair, grey eyes and a freckled face. I have been married six years and have two children.

COUNTRY READER.

SALEM, W. VA.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I think we are a world-wide chain of sisters. Since Bernice Lee Whiteman's picture appeared in COMFORT I have received letters from almost every state in the Union. Whitemans have written asking the relationship and as I haven't time to answer all letters personally I am taking this method. I do not know the history and genealogy of the Whiteman race but there is a man in Clarksburg, W. Va., writing a history of that state and its first families. When it is completed I am going to purchase a copy of the book if I have money enough, then, provided it is a good history. I'm going to let all the Whiteman sisters know whether or not we are related. I thank you all for your letters. Some days I get five and six.

To the sister in Texas who wrote wanting to sell me a soap recipe to make soap without grease or lye, I will say that I haven't the money to risk on it but if she sees this and wants to know of a stove that doesn't burn any fuel, write me and I will tell her free of charge.

Some of the sisters are opposed to picture shows. They haven't seen the right kind. I like movies that show foreign scenes or views of our magnificent buildings in Washington, D. C. I have never seen them, only in movies. Suppose you were traveling and met some noted Englishman and he would ask you to describe your capitol? If you had never seen it at all you would feel embarrassed but if you had seen it in the movies you could make a rough sketch of it. False pretence, I hear someone say. Well, pretence or not, I'd show game by describing it.

Of course you know about Pollyanna and her "glad" game. Well, next time you go to the movies and are shocked by the extreme evening dress of the ladies on the screen, just think how nice their arms and necks look and be "glad" it isn't any worse.

Good luck to all. DAISY WHITEMAN.

Mrs. Whiteman.—Sometime, maybe, I'll tell the sisters about my visit to Washington a few months ago. Do you suppose they would care to hear about it?—Ed.

JACKSONVILLE, 121 Florida Ave., FLA.

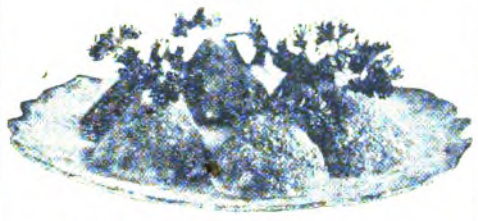
DEAR SISTERS FROM EVERYWHERE:

May I chat with you a bit? I have read COMFORT, off and on, ever since I was a child. I think I get real enjoyment from the Sisters' Corner, and the short stories are often better than those in more expensive magazines.

I have read several answers to Mother of Seven. I did not read her letter so perhaps I shouldn't express my opinion. How wonderful it would be if all mothers could be kept on the pedestal for which they were intended. Many, really, are undeserving of the title. Think of the kiddies who just grow up and the only motherly care received is that of nagging. I agree with the sister who explained the cause of nagging but some are just natural born naggers. Home conditions have a great bearing on a child's character. It is easy to become a nagger if you don't adopt the right course at the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 7.)

Comfort Sisters' Recipes



ODDS and ends of stale bread,
Little scraps of meat,
Make a toothsome croquette
Fit for king to eat, might well be applied to the croquettes illustrated below. Besides being appetizing they are economical, an advantage peculiar to croquettes. Leftovers that the family nose might elevate itself at, are greedily devoured when made into croquettes. A few recipes, not necessarily made from leftovers, are here given. Try them.—Ed.

SALMON CROQUETTES.—Make a thick white sauce of two tablespoons of butter melted, and one-third cup of flour. Blend well and when hot and bubbling add one cup of milk, a little at a time, and stirring well to prevent lumps forming. Season with salt and pepper. To a cup of this sauce add two cups of cold salmon, picked into small pieces. Season with salt and pepper and a teaspoon of lemon juice. Spread out on platter to cool, shape, dip in crumbs, beaten egg and crumbs again; fry in deep fat. Serve with peas.

RICE AND JELLY CROQUETTES.—Cook one-half cup of rice until soft. Let cool a little, add yolks of two eggs, beaten, and one tablespoon of melted butter. Let cool, shape and roll in bread-crumbs. Dip in beaten egg and roll in crumbs again and fry in deep fat. Drain and serve with jelly.

CROQUETTES MADE FROM LEFTOVERS.—Odd portions of meat or fish combined with bread-crumbs, cooked rice or other cereal, cooked vegetable mashed or chopped fine, well seasoned and moistened with gravy, milk, cream or beaten egg and shaped into croquettes or small cakes, is the best way to cook leftovers. Cakes may be fried in a small amount of fat, first on one side and then on the other, or cooked in deep fat if made into croquettes. The croquettes shown in illustration were shaped by lightly pressing the mixture into a small-sized tunnel which was each time first dipped into cold water to prevent sticking. A delicious pork croquette is made as follows: Mix together two cups of cold roast pork ground fine with half the amount of boiled rice. Add one-half teaspoon of sage, one tablespoon of grated onion, pepper and salt to taste, one well-beaten egg, three-fourths cup of fine bread-crumbs, and enough pork gravy to make soft enough to shape. Hot water and one-fourth cup of butter can be used in place of the gravy. Shape, roll in crumbs, then in beaten egg diluted with a little water, and in crumbs again.

CROQUETTES MADE FROM LEFTOVERS.

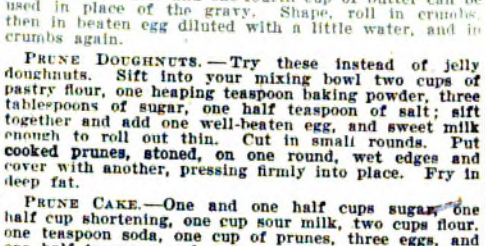
PRUNE DOUGHNUTS.—Try these instead of jelly doughnuts. Sift into your mixing bowl two cups of pastry flour, one heaping teaspoon baking powder, three tablespoons of sugar, one half teaspoon of salt; sift together and add one well-beaten egg, and sweet milk enough to roll out thin. Cut in small rounds. Put cooked prunes, stoned, on one round, wet edges and cover with another, pressing firmly into place. Fry in deep fat.

PRUNE CAKE.—One and one half cups sugar, one half cup shortening, one cup sour milk, two cups flour, one teaspoon soda, one cup of prunes, three eggs, and one half teaspoon each nutmeg and cinnamon. Cream butter and sugar, sift flour three or four times with soda and spices; beat eggs until creamy; add flour and milk alternately, a little at a time, and last add prunes. Bake in three layers. Make filling of one cup of powdered sugar, one teaspoon butter and enough milk or cream to make it spread nicely.—MRS. EVA HARMON, Los Angeles, 1432A Toberman St., Cal.



PRUNE COBBLER.—Cut cooked prunes into fairly small pieces and use to cover bottom of baking dish. Sprinkle with sugar. Make a batter of one cup of sour milk, two eggs, piece of butter size of egg, one half teaspoon of soda and flour enough to make thick batter. Spread this over the prunes and bake. When ready to serve, turn out onto plate so prunes will be on top. Serve with sugar and cream.

OATMEAL BREAD WITHOUT EGGS.—One cup oatmeal flour, and one quarter cup each corn-meal and white flour. To this add enough sour milk to make batter as for gems, adding a level teaspoon soda and one teaspoon baking powder and one half teaspoon salt. Mix and bake in greased gem pans or in pan. Bake in quick oven.—C. D. R., McKinney, Texas.

GINGERBREAD PUDDING.—Fill a baking dish half full of apples, cut in thin slices and sprinkle with sugar, salt and cinnamon and half a cup of water. Make gingerbread of one half cup molasses, one half cup of sugar, quarter of a cup of butter, one cup of boiling water in which one teaspoon of soda has been dissolved, one teaspoon cinnamon and ginger and flour to make a thin mixture. Pour over the apples and bake.

STUFFED PRUNES.—Wash and soak prunes over night in cold water. In morning let simmer until tender. When prunes are cold, remove the stone and put in its place half a walnut. Roll in granulated sugar and set away to dry slightly before serving.—MRS. O. H., Highland, Ill.

CELERY STICKS.—Use only the white tender stalks, allowing them to remain in cold water until crisp. Wipe dry and fill the concaves of the celery with the following mixture: To every one-fourth cup of cream cheese, use two tablespoons of heavy cream, mayonnaise dressing or condensed milk, and beat until creamy. Flavor with a small pinch of mustard, salt and paprika, and add one tablespoon of finely-chopped nut meats. If mayonnaise is used, less flavoring will be necessary. Beat again, and after filling the celery sprinkle with paprika. Arrange as illustrated, placing between stalks the small center ones with tender leaves. Leftover bits of meat ground fine and mixed with cream or salad dressing, combined with chopped boiled beet and highly flavored, makes another delicious filling.

CELERY STICKS.

GRANDMOTHER'S TEA BISCUIT.—One-half cup of butter, two cups of sugar, two pints of flour, two teaspoons of baking powder and one teaspoon of extract of nutmeg. Sift the flour, sugar and baking powder together; rub in the butter cold and add enough sweet milk to make a soft dough, adding extract last. Roll out half an inch thick and cut out with biscuit cutter. Wash over with milk and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven.—LAURA E. JUSTI, Red House, Va.

SAVORY POTATOES.—Cut half a dozen potatoes into slices, put in casserole in layers, with one onion, chopped, and three or four slices of bacon, cut into small pieces. Season with salt and pepper and add one pint of milk. Bake three hours in slow oven.

BANANA CREAM.—Dissolve one-half box of gelatine in a pint of warm water, and add one cup sugar, juice of one lemon, and one cup sliced banana. When ready to serve, stir in one-half pint whipped cream.

CANNED CURRANTS.—Wash currants well, after carefully picking them over and allow one pound of sugar for every pound of fruit. Put the currants into preserving kettle, with a little water, and let stew slowly half an hour, then add sugar. Keep as hot as possible without letting it boil until sugar is dissolved and place in sterilized jars and seal.

Biscuitry Saves Your Hours

With a variety of appetizing, nourishing N. B. C. bakery foods on the pantry shelf, many an extra hour is afforded for recreation—hours which otherwise would be spent in a hot kitchen.

Every course of every meal has its particular National Biscuit Company product. There are N. B. C. Oatmeal and Graham Crackers to be eaten with milk for breakfast, Oysterettes to go with the soup at dinner, Nabisco and other Sugar Wafers for and with dessert, as well as Uneeda Biscuit and the host of others for every between-occasion of serving. All wondrously fresh, good, and nourishing.

A supply in your pantry will save your hours.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Write to Advertising Department, 415 West 15th Street, New York City, for booklet "Biscuit in Choice Recipes"

Love Will Find the Way

by Wenona Gilman

He put out his hands and gently patted the bowed head.

Mrs. Presbury came forward through the door and joined them.

"It's just over there across the hedge miss."

Copyright, 1898, by George Monroe.
Serial Rights by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Junius Beckwith, a Westpointer, Anne Gordon, wealthy, Marian Reade, companion, friend and protegee of Anne Gordon, occupy a box at the Metropolitan Opera House. The curtain falls and Beckwith admits that "Lucia di Lammermore" has a depressing influence upon him and he cannot think of insanity without repulsion, no matter what the cause may be, and a marriage with either tainted, should be made a crime punishable by law. The next morning is Marian's birthday and deciding to go home, Anne Gordon, with a premonition that she ought to stay, exacts a promise, if any trouble comes, Marian will let her know first. Marian walks away and turning the corner meets June Beckwith and they go to the park. Remembering it is her birthday, he offers his love as a gift and asks her to be his wife. Happy in her love for June, Marian reaches home. Janet Reade, her grandmother, tells her that her mother is not dead but the inmate of a madhouse. What can she say to June? Hearing a voice, she answers to her father's call. He gives her a curious Venetian ring for a birthday gift, and questioning him where he got it he evades the answer and queries what Anne Gordon gives her. Showing the watch, her father berates Marian's friend. She might have given one thousand dollars, which he needs and will have. Marian, under the horror of all she hears, forgets all her grandmother told her, even forgets June Beckwith. Later in the night, recalling her promise to Anne Gordon, she goes to her home. A light flashed from a window opposite shows a rope hung from Anne Gordon's window, and in the window her father's face. Reaching home, Marian meets her father, tells him where he has been, and for no honest purpose, and demands that he return all he has stolen. He refuses, and only after her earnest pleading does he ask what she will do for him. Little dreaming the price she must pay, she asks for nothing but to serve him and she seals the promise upon her mother's Bible. Left alone, Paul Reade decides to keep one ring. Marian writes June she does not love him and that her soul is withered as much as the flower she encloses. Her father assures her he has obtained a position in the brokerage business and rented a house down town. June is stunned upon receiving Marian's letter and welcomes his friend, Fred Underwood, who tells him Paul Reade is a most unscrupulous villain and the house he has rented is a decoy for gamblers, that Marian is not as innocent as she appears. June cannot believe it, and Underwood will prove it to him if he cares to go. June calling upon Anne, she tells of Paul Reade's sudden wealth, and June, knowing where it comes from, as a friend, forbids Anne to go to Marian Reade's home. Going to the reception, Underwood requests Paul Reade to introduce Marian. In the meanwhile June appears with a message from Miss Gordon. He invites Marian for a waltz which she ends with Dick Gresham, the most notorious gambler in New York. The evening ended, Marian faces her father and asks who were those people. She receives no satisfaction from his answer—he expects her to receive them with courtesy, she has sworn to obey him. Anne begs Marian to come to her for a home, to divulge the secret that troubles her and she denies she has one. June Beckwith calls upon Anne, who defends Marian and with tears in her eyes pleads with him not to condemn her. If he never loved Anne before he thinks he does now and she is willing to be his wife. Marian speaks to her father of her mother and what has kept her from Marian all these years. She must see her. Her father refuses and Marian insists. There are those who will help. Paul Reade requests Ezra Morris, whose mother is hopelessly insane and confined in a house built especially for her, to allow Marian to visit her, believing she is her mother. Returning home she cries, "will the inheritance come to her?" Dick Gresham announces Anne's betrothal to Junius Beckwith, and for several days Marian remains in her room. Again mingling with her father's guests, she is introduced to Elliott Dwight, a multi-millionaire who, by his words and manner, arouses Marian's suspicions as to his motives. She demands of her father, and before his guests, to deny that she is an inmate of a gambling house, a decoy by his will for his guests, that it is not as Elliott Dwight says. Her father's silence convinces her it is true and in her anguish Marian leaves the house. She is stopped by Fred Underwood who exacts a promise that she will see him before making a decided change. Her heart sinks. June believes her guilty. Underwood admits he is in a most uncomfortable position. June loves Marian, Anne Gordon loves June and I love Anne Gordon. Janet Reade goes to Anne Gordon; she knows her son is not only a gambler but a thief, and has stolen from Anne, detected by his daughter and innocent of the character of the house Marian leaves as soon as the truth comes to her. Anne, anxious to find and help Marian, writes to June.

CHAPTER XXIV.

MARIAN TAKES A JOURNEY.

THERE was a little weary pause between Fred Underwood and Marian. He looked, as he had said, as if hope were dead within him. She would have done anything within her power to have assisted him in his sorrowful strait, but there was nothing that she could do. She was impotent of all save earnest desire, and that was of no great benefit to him in his extremity.

The servant came and brought their breakfast; but there was no appetite on the part of either. Marian swallowed a little coffee, as if to give her strength, then she leaned forward and placed her hand upon his arm.

"You must not think of me," she said earnestly. "I have already told you, and I tell you truly, that there is absolutely nothing that you can do for me. I am not to be considered. I have already told you that there are no circumstances under which I would become Mr. Beckwith's wife, however much he might desire it!"

"And yet you love him."

She colored painfully.

"That is a fact which I must leave behind me with the past that I am going to try to blot from my remembrance. It would be the greatest folly for me to attempt to remain here. I must go away. New York holds no promise for me. I must go where I am not known."

"And starve?"

"There is something honorable in starvation, and I am beginning to think that nothing matters so long as it is not dishonorable. I could never remain here where my story is known, where the shame that has blighted my life is upon every tongue, where I should be pointed out as the girl whose own father disgraced her. Oh Mr. Underwood, can't you see how impossible it all is? Can't you understand that no man would want to make such a woman his wife, even if that were the only misfortune that attached to her? No. I must go away. I must make my own way in the world, or I must sink under my burden, as fate ordains. I am sorry for you. There is nothing that I would not do if it were in my power, for you have been the only friend that I have possessed; but you must see how powerless I am to help you in any way."

"I hope you don't think that I have been considering myself alone in this case?" he cried, looking up quickly. "I hope you don't think I was striving to plan a reconciliation between you and June, in order that Miss Gordon be left free for me?"

There was almost a trace of horror in his tone, and she hastened to reassure him.

"No, no! I beg of you not to believe such a thing. I know that you are good and true. Have you not proven it to me? I think nothing of you that is not noble and sincere. You believe that, do you not?"

"I will try to believe it if you will promise me one thing."

"And that is?"

"That you will do nothing without my sanction. That you will make no attempt to escape my friendly interest. Somehow I feel myself indirectly responsible for your present position, and I would make amends in any way that might lay in my power. It was I who first told June of your father's business. It was I who first told him of—of the shame that attached to your residence there."

"But the fault was not yours, and no blame should rest upon you. You would have little deserved the name of friend if you had not told him what you believed to be a shameful truth."

"Then you have no censure for me?"

"None."

"Will you prove it?"

"By making the promise that you have asked?"

"Yes. That you will make no move that we have not canvassed thoroughly together; that you will trust me and let me help you. In return, I will swear to you that nothing will tempt me to betray your place of residence, or any part of this story, without your permission. Will you do it?"

"Yes."

"Thank you. It is a great relief to me. I should feel myself eternally culpable if I were not allowed to look after you—in a measure, to take care of you. I think I am recovering somewhat"—with a smile. "I am afraid that I have been a great baby; but, you know, there must come moments of weakness in the life of the strongest man. I have proven to myself that a little girl can have more courage than a six-foot coward such as I can have in his whole body. I have made a baby of myself, while you have been the heroine; but it is all gone now. Now let us talk. I propose that you go out into the country for awhile, until we have time to think and plan."

"I know a family who have a charming farmhouse where I can take you, and where you will be perfectly safe. I never like to jump into a thing without due consideration, and we should be sure to make a wrong move if we did anything in the mental disquiet that is now upon us. If you remain here, I am afraid that you would be made very uncomfortable. The newspapers are liable to get hold of the affair at any moment. Reporters are like bloodhounds. They would find you without doubt, and your life would be made a torture. In order to avoid all that, suppose you go out to my friends for a few days. They are simple people, and will ask no questions. Will you do this?"

"Gladly."

"Then I will drive you out there today."

"But there is one thing that I had forgotten."

"And that is?"

"My grandmother. Oh, Mr. Underwood, think for me! It seems that at every turn I am confronted by some new emergency. She has been more than a mother to me. She has been everything in one, and—I shame to confess it—I had forgotten her as entirely as if she had never existed. It will kill her if I leave her. What am I to do?"

She had buried her face in her hands. There were no sobs, no tears. Underwood was thankful for that, though a woman would have understood the situation better. He put out his hands and gently patted the bowed head.

"Don't let that distress you," he said kindly. "I am in the habit of going to the house. I can go there and see her. I will explain all that is necessary, and we can decide later, when we know more, how best to act."

"How shall I thank you?" she asked, lifting her white face wearily.

"Only by letting me do something to relieve you of the position in which I have helped to place you. Will you go out to the country this morning?"

"At once, if you like."

"That is well. You remain here until I have ordered a carriage, then you can get your hat, and we will be off. And you will promise to trust me? You promise that you will not leave without communicating with me?"

"I do."

"That is well. Somehow I feel encouraged, as if the beginning of the end were near. After all, little one, we can do no more than let events take their own course."

He arose and got his hat; then:

"Don't look so unhappy," he said gently. "You will find that there is more in this old world to live for than you have dreamed of. Love is not the only thing that goes to make up life, dear, though no one will deny that it is the best thing. We are blinded now by our hopelessness and fear of the future; but there never came a rain that the sun could not dry. There has never been a cloud that was stationary. The sky is always clearest when the storm has passed."

He went out and left her there alone. She could not have told whether it was his words or a gleam of sunshine that had suddenly penetrated, from some other cause, into her own clouded heart, but she felt the lifting of the terrible burden she had borne. Perhaps it was because some one was bearing it with her.

She had always hated sympathy, and yet she felt that she could bear it from Underwood. It came to her from him a sweet, soothing influence, whereas from another it had wounded her to the quick. She had felt it to be an insult from another, but from him it seemed a benediction.

She was actually considering that she would tell him the story of her life. She had about made up her mind to tell him who it was that was confined in the little vine-covered house near Judson's asylum. She had about decided that she would tell him of the tableau that she had witnessed the night that Anne Gordon was robbed of her jewels; but when he appeared before her again, she shrank from adding that shame to her father's life. She would not tell him one without the other, and so her lips were sealed.

"Come," he said, "the carriage is at the door."

He took her down the hall to her own room. He even observed that she was more agitated than she had been when he left her, not ten minutes before; but he asked her no questions.

He waited in the hall until she had pinned on her hat, then he took her arm and led her to the elevator.

He placed her in the carriage and gave directions to the coachman before he entered himself. She did not hear his words, and it is doubtful if they would have conveyed any meaning to her if she had.

CHAPTER XXV.

MARIAN MAKES AN ACQUAINTANCE.

It was a beautiful place, the one to which Underwood took Marian that memorable morning. It was a farmhouse, and the people were simple enough, but Nature had been most bountiful in her gifts.

The gray lichens hung in heavy picturesqueness to the trees, and morning-glories wound in and out among the branches. There were dainty ferns in the shaded places and sweet-briar in the sunny ones, with clusters of bluebells and forget-me-nots in artistic profusion. The house was old-fashioned and roomy, with balconies stretching to right and left, and giant oaks of centuries' growth planted immediately in front for the shade.

But it was neither the beauty nor the safety of it all that appealed most to Marian. It was the purity. The silence that would have oppressed another was glorious to her. The breathless stillness seemed to impart peace and restfulness. It seemed to her that the hand of God was hovering over its very isolation, and she bowed her head, while a little unuttered prayer hovered on her lips.

Somehow the memory of that conversation with Elliott Dwight returned to her. She recalled how she had spoken of her delight in light, in the breath of hothouse flowers, in the possession of jewels, and in bacchanalian revelry, and she shivered a little at the remembrance. It seemed impossible now that such words could ever have left her lips, even in the wildest jest. But the peace and quiet and holiness of this place was too perfect for that recollection to remain.

And Underwood left her there with the old people, after he had obtained from her the reiterated promise that she would do nothing without first consulting him.

"Good by," he said to her on leaving. "I shall see your grandmother, and, if it is her wish, bring her out here to you. You may be sure that whatever is done will be for your interest. I hope you will not be unhappy, little one."

She smiled into his eyes, it was the first that he had seen on her lips since she had left her father's home, and it did him good. He patted her head as if he had been her grandfather.

"That is right," he said gently. "There is always hope when a person can smile like that."

"Why should I not?" she asked. "I know that God has not deserted me, in that He has sent me you."

Underwood did not reply. He pressed her hand, even raised it to his lips; then he took his seat in the carriage again, the door slammed, and he was driven away.

She stood there on the balcony, with the warm sun just touching her pretty head. The sound of the wheels and the hoof-strokes had died away. Her thoughts had gone with the person who had just left her, and she did not hear the footstep beside her, until suddenly she became conscious that some one was mounting the few steps that led to the balcony.

She glanced around.

It was only a woman, yet for just a moment Marian stood there staring at her in a breathless sort of way. She was no longer young, yet somehow the snowy hair did not seem to fit the countenance. It was brushed smoothly away from the brow, and the gray eyes were fixed upon Marian in a half-frightened, half-questioning sort of way.

And what curious eyes they were! Marian had never seen any like them, so filled were they with a wild, indescribable sadness. There was a haunted, startled look about her that would have attracted the attention of any one, and a little quiver passed over Marian as she stepped forward.

She was about to introduce herself, when the old lady, Mrs. Presbury, the friend to whom Underwood had brought her, came forward through the door and joined them.

"Mrs. King," she said gently, "let me introduce you to Miss Reade. She has come to stay with us for awhile, and I hope you two will be company for each other. I saw you coming up the garden walk and came to make you acquainted. Dinner will not be ready for more than an hour yet. Miss Reade, are you hungry?"

"Not at all," answered Marian.

"Then I won't spoil your appetite by giving you anything now."

She went into the house again, and Marian was left alone with Mrs. King.

She could not have explained it, but a strange kind of embarrassment seemed to oppress Marian. Perhaps it was because those peculiar eyes were fixed on her in that curious, haunting way. Certainly, it was a great relief when Mrs. King pointed to one of the huge garden-chairs, and said:

"Won't you be seated, Miss Reade? You look pale and tired. Have you just come to Wildhurst?"

The voice affected Marian even more than the eyes had done, and she sat down with elaborate care before replying.

"Yes," she said, with a little ring of excitement in the tone that she tried vainly to control, "I have just come. Do you live at Wildhurst?"

The woman smiled. Her face had softened and grown beautiful in those few seconds. The singular apprehension of her expression had gone, and while the sadness of the eyes was there, as haunting and alluring as before, the smile changed all the face.

"I live here for the present" she answered, taking a seat beside the girl. "It is beautiful, is it not?"

"I never saw a more beautiful vista than this. I am afraid I did not see much of the park as we drove through. I was thinking of something else."

"You missed, then, one of the loveliest places in the whole country. Suppose, if you feel equal to it, I take you for a little walk over the grounds, after dinner? I am sure you would feel yourself repaid."

"I should be only too glad."

"A nervous person might not like the situation, but to one who can regard the uncanny without too much horror, there is no place that can equal Wildhurst."

"I don't think I exactly understand you. Is Wildhurst uncanny?"

"Not Wildhurst exactly; no, but its neighbor. I have not the remotest objection to it. It is misfortune that brings us nearer to God."

"I am not acquainted with the neighborhood, Mrs. King, and have not the least idea to what you refer."

"Haven't they told you, then, that the grounds adjoin those of an asylum?"

Marian started violently.

"An asylum!" she repeated, in a dazed sort of way. "I hope I have not frightened you? I suppose Mr. and Mrs. Presbury thought you knew. But there is not the slightest danger. I assure you of that. There is no reason why you should be afraid."

"I am not afraid," answered Marian, in a low tone, recovering herself somewhat. "I am not—in the least—afraid. But—Mrs. King—what asylum is it that—adjoins Wildhurst?"

"Judson's."

She had expected the answer; she had felt sure of the syllables that would fall from Mrs. King's lips; and yet when she heard the word, Marian fell back in her chair, growing as white as death. Mrs. King leaned forward and took her hand in a firm, quick grasp.

"What is it?" she asked.

"Nothing—nothing," answered Marian, pulling herself together and smiling wearily. "Only—I have a—relative in there."

Mrs. King did not speak. She could think of nothing to say. The same curious, haunted, expression had crossed her face. She held Marian's hand for a little time in silence, and then, as if unable to endure it longer, Marian rose.

She looked down into the strange face; her lip quivered.

"Excuse me," she said simply, and walked down the steps and out into the garden.

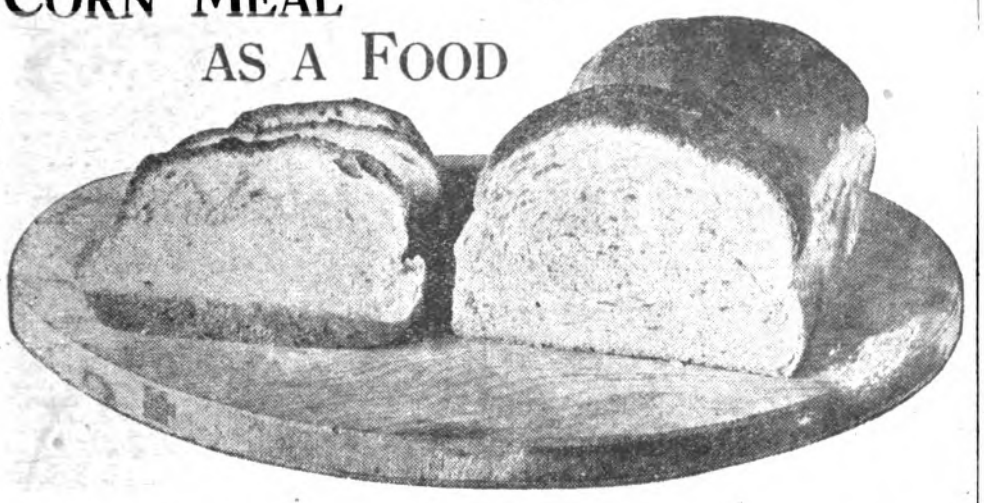
Mrs. King neither replied nor followed. There was something that kept her silent, immovable; but she watched the girl with singular fascination as she disappeared among the trees.

And Marian walked like one in a dream.

It seemed to her, like some extraordinary fatality that Underwood should have brought her to that of all places. She, even in the excitement that was upon her, thought how she would have refused to go if she had known; but the knowledge was kept from her.

"Dear God," she whispered, "I understand it all now! I have sinned in neglecting the work that was meant for me to do. I have shunned my duty, and this suffering has been sent upon me in consequence. I see it all now, and with Thy help I will atone. Show me my duty, and grant me the strength to perform it."

She had paused beneath one of the trees, with her hands clasped upon her bosom in mute appeal to Heaven. As the last word left her heart she glanced about her.



There was a gardener at a little distance at work on a flower-bed. She went up to him.

"Can you tell me, sir," she asked gently, "in which direction Doctor Judson's asylum lies?"

"It is just over there across the hedge, miss," he answered, mopping his brow with the sleeve of his shirt; "but there is a small lake just between, and you will have to go around by the gate. The boat-house is there, and Jake will row you across if you want to go. The gate is down that way, miss. Just follow the path."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 18.)

CORN MEAL AS A FOOD

By Violet Marsh

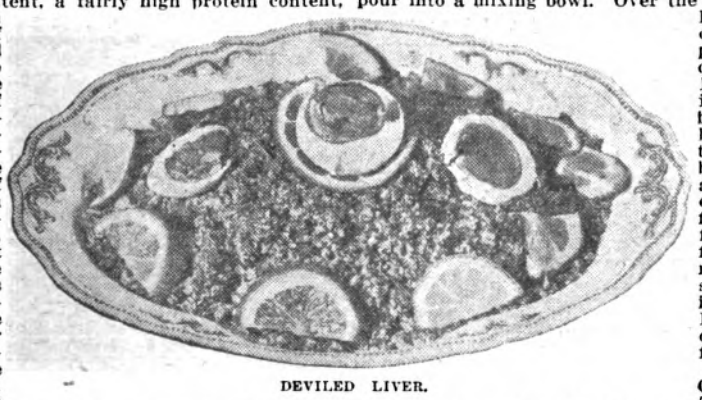
Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

CORN meal has long been an important food material in this country, and to the Red Man should be given the credit of having first gathered, prepared and cooked this valuable cereal. How the North American Indians gathered the ears of corn before they became hard, roasted them in the embers or before the fire, and made this food the chief source of their living through the season of green corn is told in a history of Carolina written in 1743. Following this account, mention is made of how the ripened and dried corn was parched, beaten to a powder and carried in bags by the Indians on their long marches, so that the only necessary preparation for eating was to mix the corn with a little spring water.

In approaching the subject of corn meal as a food, let us first briefly take up the composition of the ordinary family diet, that we may better understand the possibilities of corn as compared with other cereal foods in common use.

COFFEE JELLY.

Without vegetables and fruits there is danger that the diet may be lacking in mineral matter and other substances needed in the making of tissue and for keeping the body in health.



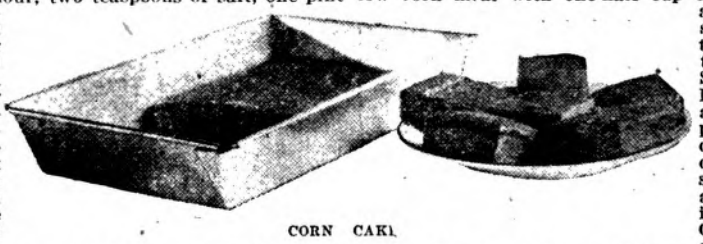
Without milk, cheese, eggs, fish, and dried peas, beans, etc., the diet is sure to lack some of the materials needed to make body protein, which is found in all the tissues.

Without sugar, molasses, syrups, honey, and other sweets, the diet would be lacking in sugar, valued as body fuel and for its flavor.

Without fats and oils, which have a high value as body fuel, and give to food an agreeable quality commonly called "richness", the diet would be lacking a needed component.

Without wheat, oats, rye, corn, barley, rice and their products, the diet would contain practically no starch, the cheapest kind of body fuel, and would also fall short of the total amount of protein required for tissue making, unless milk, cheese, eggs, fish, peas, beans, etc., are used more freely than is desirable for economy and health.

Compared with the average composition of the common foodstuffs which make up the diet of the majority of people—meat, dairy products, vegetables, fruits, etc., corn has a low water content, a low fat content, a fairly high protein content, a very high percentage of starch, and very close to the average amount of mineral matter. A detailed comparison of the composition of Indian corn and other cereal grains, shows that they may be considered as a group of interchangeable foods so far as their nutritive value is concerned. On the other hand, the value of corn as a source of energy to the body ranks the highest among them, on account of the high percentage of fat which it contains.



DEVILED LIVER.

There are many varieties of corn, and as many flavors. White corn is the milder in flavor and preferred generally in the Southern States, and in Rhode Island, while the yellow is preferred in the Northern States as a whole. The blue, black and red varieties have always been very largely used in the Southwest, where Spanish influence is marked.

Except when corn is eaten fresh from the cob, or canned, it is generally used in the form of granulated or bolted meal, corn flour, hominy or grits. Besides being used in these forms, the consumption of popped corn is very large throughout the country.

Corn Meal Recipes

RAISED CORN BREAD.—One and one-half quart of fine corn meal, two and one-half quarts of sifted wheat flour, two teaspoons of salt, one pint of either dry-cooked mashed pumpkin, or cooked mashed sweet potato, and one or two yeast-cakes. Put together as follows: Mix one pint each of the corn meal and the flour and add warm water enough to form a stiff batter. Add the yeast-cakes previously mixed with one-half cup of lukewarm water. Keep this sponge in a warm place until it becomes light, taking care that it does not stand long enough to rise and fall in the center. Scald the remaining meal with water, and as soon as it is cool enough add it to the sponge with the flour, potato or pumpkin, and salt. The dough should be just thick enough to knead without danger of its sticking to the board. Knead well and put in a warm place to rise, cut down, and let it rise the second time. Cut down and with buttered hands make into loaves without kneading. Let rise twice its size and bake one hour in a moderate oven. See illustration at top of page.

CORN CAKE.

RHODE ISLAND JOHNNY CAKES.—Since the earliest records of using corn meal this simplest variety of corn cake has been made in the little state from which it takes its name. Another name by which it is called in some parts of New England is scalded corn cake. Put one cup of fine white corn meal and one-half teaspoon of salt into a stew-pan and slowly stir in actively boiling water until all is wet and of a crumbly consistency, but not a dough. Do not have it in too hot a place as it will burn. Continue stirring until the meal is swollen, and then add, a little at a time, enough cold milk to form a batter that will hold its shape when dropped from the spoon. If too soft the cakes will not be tender, and if too stiff they will be dry when cooked. Have the griddle well greased but not hot enough to brown the cakes quickly. Drop by spoonfuls, pat into uniform shapes until about half an inch thick, and slowly brown. Place a bit of butter in the center of each and turn. As they cook it is well to move them about in the pan. Half a teaspoon of sugar may be added to the meal if desired.

INDIAN BANNOCK.—Mix together one cup of fine corn meal, one scant tablespoon of sugar, one even teaspoon of salt, and stir into it two cups of boiling milk. When nearly cold, add the yolks of two eggs well beaten, and, lastly, the beaten whites. Bake in a shallow pudding dish in a very hot oven. Serve with butter.

CORN CAKE.—Sift together one cup of white flour, two cups of yellow corn meal, one scant teaspoon of salt, three level teaspoons of baking powder, and one-half cup of sugar. Beat two eggs, add two cups of milk and stir into the drys. Add two tablespoons of melted butter, and beat the mixture very hard for two minutes. Bake in a moderate oven half an hour.

CORN CAKE WITHOUT EGG.—Sift together one and one-half cup of fine corn meal, half a cup of flour, two tablespoons of sugar, one teaspoon of salt, one teaspoon of soda, and two teaspoons of cream of tartar. Add six tablespoons of heavy cream and sweet milk to form a batter. It should not be soft enough to run. Spread about half an inch thick and bake in a fairly hot oven until it shrinks from the edges and is a rich brown.

CORN AND RYE MUFFINS.—Put five cups of boiling water into a stew-pan, slowly stir in one cup of fine corn meal, three tablespoons of sugar, one teaspoon of salt, and two tablespoons of butter. Cook slowly one hour, stirring frequently, then pour into a mixing bowl. Over the top pour one-half cup of cold water to prevent a crust forming. In the morning add one beaten egg and beat the mixture until well blended, then add one cup each of corn flour, white flour and rye flour, and two rounding teaspoons of baking powder. Bake in a hot oven in muffin-pans.

CUSTARD CORN CAKE.—Three-fourths cup of corn meal, one-fourth cup of flour, one-half teaspoon of salt, one-half teaspoon of soda, two level tablespoons of sugar sifted together. Beat one egg, add one-half cup of sweet milk, one-half cup of thick sour milk, and stir in the drys. Beat hard. Melt a tablespoon of butter in a buttered tin and pour the mixture over it. Pour half a cup of sweet light cream over the top, but do not stir it. Bake in a hot oven twenty-five minutes. When cooked, there should be a layer of custard on top of the cake.

MUSH WITH CHEESE.—Cut cold mush into quarter-inch rounds. Prepare sandwich fashion, with a generous layer of cheese, a dash of cayenne and a light sprinkling of salt, and fry brown in pork fat.

Miscellaneous Recipes

CORN-MEAL MUSH.—Bring to a boil one and one-half cup of water and two of milk with one level teaspoon of salt. Wet one cup of fine yellow corn meal with one-half cup of cold water, and slowly stir it into the boiling water and milk. Stir constantly, and as soon as it thickens pour into a double boiler, or set the stew-pan into a pan of boiling water. Cover closely and cook one hour. Longer cooking will improve the flavor.

BOILED CALF'S HEAD.—Scrape, remove the dark membrane from the inside, the eyes and the gristle around the nose. Remove the brains and tongue and cover with cold water. Soak the head two hours in lukewarm water. Drain, cover head, tongue and brains with cold water, slowly bring to a boil and carefully skim. Now add half a cup each of thinly-sliced carrot and celery, one small onion sliced, one-fourth teaspoon of white pepper, and after the boiling point is reached again, place where it will simmer so that the meat will not cook apart. When about half done, add one teaspoon of salt. Remove bones when the meat commences to fall from them, thicken the liquor with a little dry flour and butter creamed together, or add spoonful of soft biscuit dough, cover the kettle closely and slowly cook fifteen minutes.

DEVILED LIVER.—Fresh calf's liver should be used. Cut into small cubes and fry in a little bacon fat, add a few scrapings of onion, salt and pepper, and just before taking from the fire one or two tablespoons of tomato ketchup. Cook until tender, but not dry, and put through the meat chopper. Reheat by returning to the frying-pan and turn onto a platter. Garnish with slices of hard-boiled eggs, and lemon.

TOMATO SAUSAGE.—Use tomatoes that have been canned whole; remove seeds and drain. Cut three pounds of lean pork into small pieces. Cook one-half cup of washed rice in three quarts of salted water, boiling it hard for ten minutes; drain. Use one cup of firm tomato. Stir meat, rice and tomato together and put it through the grinder. Season with salt, white pepper, cayenne and sage, using sparingly of the two latter. It is well to test the flavor by frying a bit. Put sausage meat into casing. Another way to prepare the meat is to make it into a roll, cutting it into inch-thick slices. Place very thin slices of salt pork or bacon in the bottom of a tin, lay on the slices and bake in a moderately hot oven three-fourths of an hour. These are wholesome and delicious. Eat with baked potatoes and apple sauce.

SUGARED CARROTS.—Scrape, slice into rounds, cover with boiling water and cook until soft. To about every four good-sized carrots there should be half a cup of water in the stew-pan when the carrots are done, so it is better to add a little water from time to time than to use too much at the start. Pour the cooked carrots with water into a baking tin, lightly sprinkle with sugar, dot with butter, add a little salt, one tablespoon of lemon juice and a few gratings of the rind, and bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes, basting several times.

HOT BREAKFAST CAKES.—Sift together one and one-fourth cup of flour, two even teaspoons of baking powder, and one-third teaspoon of salt. Beat one egg until light, add one cup of sour milk and a scant one-third teaspoon of soda, and into this mixture beat the flour, and, lastly, two tablespoons of melted butter. Fry by spoonfuls on a hot griddle.

POPOVERS.—One of the secrets of light popovers is beating the egg a very little, just enough to break it up, and another is to pour the batter either into hot earthenware cups or iron gem-pans, as the heat starts immediate rising. The oven must be hot, and after baking thirty minutes it is well to keep them in the oven with the door open for about five minutes. Put the batter together as follows: Beat one egg slightly and then stir well into it one cup of milk. Add to this one cup of sifted flour and one-half teaspoon of salt. Beat just enough for smoothness.

BUTTERSCOTCH PIE.—Mix well together two tablespoons of flour and one scant cup of dark brown sugar, and add two unbeaten egg yolks and one tablespoon of creamed butter. Stir until light and well blended. Gradually add one cup of hot milk, and cook slowly until it thickens, stirring continuously. When cold, add half a teaspoon of vanilla, pour into a crust previously baked or on an inverted pie tin. After the crust is shaped over the tin, prick it full of holes with a steel fork to allow an escape for the steam, otherwise it will puff away from the tin. Cover with a meringue made of two egg whites beaten very stiff and two tablespoons of sugar gradually beaten in. Brown in a moderate oven.

COFFEE JELLY.—One quart of boiling hot strained coffee, two-thirds cup of sugar, and two tablespoons of granulated gelatine previously soaked ten minutes in half a cup of cold water. As soon as the sugar and gelatine are dissolved pour into a mould to stiffen. Serve with sweetened whipped cream flavored with extract of cinnamon.

DELICATE PUDDING.—Wash half a cup of rice, soak over night in lightly salted water, drain, and add one cup of rich cold milk. The mixture should fill an earthen baking dish about half full. Cover closely and bake in a moderate oven until the kernels are puffed and soft. Be sure it does not boil. Beat the yolks of three eggs until light yellow, add half a cup of sugar and beat again, then stir in two cups of scalding hot milk and mix it with the cooked rice. Cover and bake until the custard is set which will only take a short time. As the heat of the pudding and dish will continue the cooking of the custard after it is taken from the oven, it is well to remove it a little underdone. Serve lukewarm or cold with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

ORANGE SYRUP.—Select thoroughly ripened oranges, grate the yellow from the rinds, then squeeze out the juice and strain. To each pint of juice add a pint of sugar and boil ten minutes, carefully skimming. Add the grated rind of the oranges, cook one minute longer, pour into bottles and seal. Useful for flavorings in sauces, puddings, cake fillings, and refreshing drinks.

GIVE THEM

BAKER'S COCOA

TO DRINK

The almost unceasing activity with which children work off their surplus energy makes good and nutritious food a continual necessity. Of all the food drinks Baker's Cocoa is the most perfect, supplying as it does much valuable material for the upbuilding of their growing bodies. Just as good for older people. It is delicious, too, of fine flavor and aroma.

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

MADE ONLY BY

WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.

Established 1780

DORCHESTER, MASSACHUSETTS

Booklet of Choice Recipes sent free

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 5.)

start. Young mothers, you can do more with kindness and firmness than by any other method in child rearing. Your child is entitled to the same thoughtful consideration that a grownup is. Win their comradeship and the rest will be easier.

I sometimes read a sisters' view and she seems entirely right. Then I read an opposing view and she seems right too. Then like the old fellow in Silas Marner I feel like saying, "Wal, ye're both right and ye're both wrong."

And some daddies do "lose an hour of sleep" over their children. I have known mine to sit up at my bedside night after night and then work in the daytime. Mother did her part nobly too.

I suppose I should follow the custom and give you a word picture of myself. White, married, twenty-three, curly gold brown hair, turnup nose, about five feet, two inches tall and varying in weight from 89 to 97 pounds.

It's convenient to be little. It's my chief asset in life. Agents almost invariably ask me for my mother. No, it's not abbreviated skirts. They say it's my face and while I may be infantile in appearance I assure you I am anything but cherubic. I am "growing up" with my two babies, my boy nearly five and my daughter two and one-half. I play with them so much that I am taken to be their sister. You see, we all live together in the little crooked house, with our mother-in-law who is a beauty at past sixty.

Stuffing Blue Chums, did you get your name from stuffing pickaninny dolls or from thinking of Thanksgiving? I thought black babies were my own idea. Well, great minds run in same channels. I also make cats from old stockings, preferably silk. A good one makes two kitties.

I think it would be lovely to receive piles of letters from you sisters as some say they have.

My home town library is making a collection of the public libraries in as many different cities in the country as possible. I have thought of a way to add to their collection. Everyone who reads this please send me a postcard view of your public library.

I think I shall beg or borrow a typewriter to answer everyone with, that is, if I happen to get a lot of letters. Suppose I don't get one!

Love to all. MRS. ROSEMARY STEIN.

Rosemary.—How do you expect to ever grow up? Not with such a little-girl name as Rosemary. I like it ever so much and I'll send you a picture of our library.—Ed.

NEW ALBANY, R. R. 6, MISS.

DEAR COMFORT READERS:

I have been reading COMFORT for several years but this is my first letter. I have lived in the northern part of Mississippi all my life and think my home state the best there is.

The most awful experience I ever had in my life was being blown away in a cyclone, the 20th of last April, at 7.30 in the morning. Ninety-seven were made homeless and we were among that number. Our house was taken up in the air, moved several yards, turned on the top and blown to pieces. My husband was badly injured, being knocked senseless, bruised about head, collar bone and two ribs broken. Our two girls, a niece and I were hurt, but we were thankful to escape with our lives. Several were killed not far from here and now when a storm comes up we are very nervous until we can get to a storm house.

I would like to hear from some sister who has used the Auto Knitter.

We have a good country school near us and I can hear the children playing. We have only one girl there now The other is in school at New Albany, eleven miles from here. It is our aim to give them good educations.

I am blessed with good neighbors, so near that we are almost a little village.

A COMFORT friend, MRS. J. D. CLARK.

Mrs. Clark.—I'm 'most as excited over your story as though I had actually been there and the cyclone had whisked me around as well as your house. Don't you think it would be a good idea for each one to tell us about the most exciting thing that ever happened to them, their most thrilling experience? Something exciting happens to even the most quiet of us, and I think the more quiet our own lives, the more we like to read of thrilling things happening to others.—Ed.

MT. VICTORIA, MD.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

Well, here we are again. How did you enjoy Christmas? Fine, I hope.

Now don't all laugh for I am going to tell you something. When we saw our letter in November COMFORT we were so proud of ourselves that we were like the old frog who tried to puff herself up as big as an ox, and

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 16.)

Cubby Bear Umpires the Frogs' Jumping Contest

By Lena B. Ellingwood

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

"FROGGIE Frolic, from Cedar Lake, is coming to see you today," said Billy Bluejay to Cubby Bear.

"I have heard of Cedar Lake," said Cubby, "but I have never been to see it. Shinyblack Crow said he would take me there some day. But why is Froggie Frolic coming here? I do not know him!"

"I will tell you!" said Billy Bluejay. "The frogs of Cedar Lake, and those who live farther on, at Swampy Bogs, are to have a day of sports and games together. A loving-cup will be the prize for the winning side."

"What is a loving-cup?" asked Cubby.

"Oh, I think from what the frogs said, it is a beautiful cup, just to be looked at—never to be used for drinking! Griffie Grayson, a gray squirrel who lives this side of Cedar Lake, has been at work for the last three days, carving a cup from wood. Now, the frogs want an umpire for their games——"

"What is an umpire?" asked Cubby, puzzled by so many new words.

"The one who sees that there is fair play, and settles disputes."

"We have never had an umpire for our games," said Cubby.

"We shall hereafter!" declared Billy. "We have been behind the times. The frogs asked me if I could tell them of someone who was honest and truthful, and would be fair to everyone. I told them to come to you—that you were the best one I knew to be their umpire!"

Cubby Bear's face shown with pleasure.

"Oh, thank you!" he said, "for saying such nice things about me!"

Froggie Frolic called that afternoon, and explained the plans for the day to Cubby Bear.

Cubby was invited to go to Cedar Lake the day before the grand affair, so to be there early in the morning.

"I would like to have you call at Griffie Grayson's on your way," said Froggie, "and get the loving-cup. It is not finished yet, and I shall be too busy to go for it."

"Oh, please," asked Cubby, "would you mind if Shinyblack Crow went with me? He could show me the way!"

"Bring him along," answered Froggie. "We shall be glad to have him, I am sure."

When Shinyblack Crow called for Cubby on the day they were to go to Cedar Lake, he found him sitting on the doorstep, waiting in a fever of impatience to start.

After traveling a couple of hours, they came to the hollow tree where Griffie Grayson had his workshop. Griffie came to the door to meet them.

"You have come for the frogs' loving-cup," he said. "Froggie Frolic told me you would be here today. I'm not quite satisfied with what I've done, but you shall see!"

He darted inside the tree, and soon reappeared, bringing with him two little cups.

"I hunted everywhere around," said Griffie anxiously, "and brought home the largest acorn-cups I could find. I knew I could make nothing prettier, and they were about the size the frogs wanted. Of course they would not stand up on their little stems, and were not tall enough by themselves, anyway, so I carved out these little standards to set them in, from a piece of wood. You may take them both, and give the one you like best for the prize."

"I think they are beautiful, and am sure the frogs will be pleased," said Cubby, and put the little cups carefully in his pocket.

The day of the games dawned bright and warm, and the shore at one end of Cedar Lake was alive with frogs, all dressed in their cool suits of green, with white vests. They kept up a lively croaking.

Quite early in the morning their visitors from Swampy Bogs arrived, hopping along through the woods in one vast company.

"I did not know there were so many frogs in the whole world!" said Cubby to Shinyblack Crow.

First they had a tug of war, using a long piece of vine for a rope, the Cedar Lake frogs pulling one way, and those from Swampy Bogs pulling the other. They braced their little feet and pulled, until the vine snapped apart in the center, sending them tumbling.

Springing up, they shouted, "Who won? Who won?"

"They are asking you, Cubby Bear!" said Shinyblack Crow, nudging him. "Answer them!"

"Why, why, nobody won!" faltered Cubby. "The rope broke."

"Wrong!" croaked a gruff-voiced old Swampy Bogger. "Both sides won."

Next came a pebble race, but the players grew so excited nobody stopped to carry the pebbles from one side of the ground to the other, as they should, and the pebbles were thrown in all directions.

"That will soon grow into a fight," Shinyblack Crow warned Cubby. "You must stop them!"

"Please stop," said Cubby in a faint voice.

"They do not hear you. Speak up louder!" said his friend.

"But I do not want them to think I am not polite," said Cubby.

"They wanted you to be umpire, and you must do your duty!"

"Order, order!" cried Cubby, louder this time; but the frog policemen had to go among the players before order was restored.

"Who won? Who won?" was asked again.

"Nobody won!" Cubby told them once more.

Next came a swimming contest. Eight lively young frogs undertook to swim the whole length of the lake, and come back around the shore.

FIRST THEY HAD A TUG OF WAR.

Cubby Bear, Shinyblack Crow and all the frogs settled themselves on the shore to watch the race.

The eight frogs were excellent swimmers, and started finely, but the sun was hot, and after they were well out on the lake it tired one's eyes to watch them on the sparkling water, and the spectators turned their attention to other things.

"We were up early," Froggie Frolic said to the crowd, "and I am sure would like some dinner now. It is all ready, spread out in the shade of the cedar trees at our right."

After a good dinner, which everyone enjoyed, it was thought best to take a little rest before the jumping contest.

The frogs settled themselves to their liking. Shinyblack Crow perched himself among the sheltering boughs of a spruce tree, and Cubby Bear lay down in the shade of the cedars.

He was roused from a pleasant nap by a question he was beginning to dread.

"Who won? Who won?"

He started up, rubbed his eyes, and saw, standing before him, the eight young frogs who had started to swim across the lake.

"Who won?" they repeated.

"I don't know!" faltered Cubby. "You were so far away, and the sun was so bright, and dinner was ready—I didn't see you when you reached the other shore."

The swimmers looked at each other in disgust.

"No one cared enough about the race even to watch us!" one of them said.

"And they ate up all the dinner while we were gone!" cried another angrily.

"It's my opinion this umpire doesn't know his business!" said a third, with an unpleasant scowl at Cubby Bear.

"I am afraid not," agreed Cubby meekly, "but you see, I——I never umped before!"

Froggie Frolic came hopping up to the little group, and the young frogs were partly pacified by being told that some dinner had been saved for them.

"Now we are to have the jumping!" Froggie Frolic told Cubby. "I hope you will not mind standing out in the lake a little way, so you can be sure who jumps farthest out. Of course it will be shallow water for you, you are so large."

So Cubby stood in the water to watch the jumpers, and many of the frogs sat near him, on large lily pads.

It was amazing to see how the creatures jumped.

One after another they sprang from the shore and came flying out in graceful curves, landing with a splash in the lake. Fast and furious waxed the fun. The air was filled with delighted cheers.

"Caw!" cried Shinyblack Crow. "Look at that!" For up on the bank shot a small frog, with a tremendous leap, sailed out over Cubby Bear's head, and struck the water far beyond where any other frog had gone.

"Swampy Bogs! Swa-a-mpy Bogs!" yelled the visiting frogs, hopping up and down in excitement. "Swampy Bogs wins!"

The wonderful young jumper, Sammie by name, swam back to shore, where he was quite overpowered by the embraces of his rejoicing friends.

"Tell them it's over," a big Swampy Bogger said to Cubby Bear. "You're umpire—tell them we've won!"

Thus urged, Cubby called in a loud voice:

"The contest is ended. Won by Sammie, of Swampy Bogs!"

An indignant voice rose above the wild cheering which followed.

"A cheat! A cheat!" cried Froggie Frolic. "Call the crowd to order, Cubby Bear!"

"Order!" said Cubby. "Listen to what Froggie Frolic has to say."

"No cheat about it!" said a frog from the Bogs. "The umpire has declared we won the game. There's nothing more to be said. Pass over the loving-cup!"

"Not so fast!" cried Froggie Frolic. "With my own eyes I saw what was done. Sammie's grandfather, the biggest, heaviest from here, drew down a branch of that little tree over there, and sat upon it; then called Sammie to take hold of the end. When the grandfather slid off, of course the branch straightened, and Sammie flew out over the water. It was a cheat, a cheat! You must tell them so, Cubby Bear!"

Cubby Bear, his face troubled, waded to the shore.

"What shall I do, Shinyblack Crow?" he asked.

"The crow is not umpire," the frogs objected.

"Do what you think is right," said Shinyblack Crow.

"There were no rules about jumping," clamored the Swamp frogs. "If Grandfather Frog was bright enough to make Sammie jump higher than the others, the loving-cup is ours!"

"Never!" cried the Cedar Lakes. "The sports are ended for the day. We keep the loving-cup!"

Poor Cubby was puzzled. He wanted to settle the matter right, and he wanted the day to end happily for everyone. What could he do?

He cleared his throat, stood up straight before them, and made his little speech.

"The games have been good today," he said. "You have wonderful swimmers, to go the whole length of the lake. The dinner was a fine one, and the jumping the best I ever saw frogs do. Grandfather Frog was quick-witted to think of his little joke, and Sammie had a grand flight. But of course it was only a joke, and not a real jump. Neither Grandfather Frog nor Sammie would want to get the loving-cup that way! Both sides have done well, and Shinyblack Crow and I thank you for our share in the fun."

Here he took the two little loving-cups from his pocket and held them up to view.

"I have decided," he went on, "that both sides have won a loving-cup, so I shall give this one, here, to Froggie Frolic for the Cedar Lake Frogs, and this other to Grandfather Frog, for the Swampy Bogs people. Please come forward and get them."

The cheering was feeble at first, but soon all joined, and the frowns on the froggish faces were replaced by smiles. After all, each side had its loving-cup, and it was better to be friends than enemies.

"You did well, Cubby Bear," said Shinyblack Crow, as they were on their way home, "to settle the matter as you did, and please them all."

"Yes," answered Cubby, "but if Griffie Grayson had not made two loving-cups, whatever should I have done?"

CONTENTS

	Page
Editorial	2
Stella Rosevelt (continued)	4
Comfort Sisters' Corner and Recipes	5
Love Will Find the Way (continued)	6
Corn Meal As a Food	7
Cubby Bear Umpires the Frogs' Jumping Contest	8
Crumbs of Comfort	8
Comfort's League of Cousins	9
Marriage—The New Woman's Problem	10
Lessens Woman's Work	13
The Pretty Girls' Club	14
Mother and Baby	16
Making Home Attractive	18
The Busybody	21
Things That Were Old but Now are New	22
Work Finished in Applique Embroidery	23
Correcting Cross-Eyes in Infancy	24
The Modern Farmer	26
Automobile and Gas Engine Helps	27
Poultry Farming for Women	28
Some Novel Uses for Applique Patches	29
Manners and Looks	30
Fight the Fly Nuisance	31
Veterinary Information	32
Home Lawyer	33
Fine Laundering Done at Home	33
Information Bureau	35
Talks with Girls	36
Family Doctor	41
Four Wheel Chairs in February	42
The Emporium of Bargains and Opportunities	43

All Subscriptions Cut Off At Expiration

All subscriptions will be cut short off on date of expiration, unless the subscriptions are renewed and paid for. Not even one copy will be sent, after expiration, until the subscription is renewed. If the number over your name on the wrapper on this magazine is 401, it means that this is the last copy of COMFORT you will receive until you renew your subscription. DO IT TODAY.

APRIL COMFORT

Our Farm Improvement Number for April will specialize on Agriculture, treating of matters peculiarly interesting to our host of farmer readers, in a practical and helpful way. Farming, our basic industry, if given a fair chance will soon rise to the flourishing condition that is indispensable to national prosperity. The following are some of the Special Features for April

"Farm Improvement" Describes improvements of buildings, machinery and other appliances that lessen labor, increase profits and better living conditions.

"Improved Farming" Deals with improved methods of operation and management that increase efficiency and production and reduce expense.

"A Psycho-Illogical Episode" A strange and thrilling romance in which Cupid triumphs by means of pseudo-telepathy.

"Curious Easter Customs" An interesting interpretation of our Easter emblems and customs, telling of the queer superstitions from which they originated.

"Health in Spring Foods" By proper selection of food rather than by medicine is the better way to restore the flagging appetite and remedy other spring distempers.

"The April Wedding" Published instructions for wedding arrangements usually apply exclusively to those that occur in June. This article tells how to plan a wedding for April or any other season.

"Cubby Bear and the Turtles" Cubby Bear and his friends attend Tillie Turtle's family reunion and learn some wonderful things about turtles.

If the number over your name on the wrapper on this magazine is 401 it means that your subscription expires with this present issue and that you will not receive April COMFORT unless you renew your subscription at once—we can not send you a single copy, after expiration, until you have renewed. Don't miss April COMFORT.

Save money by renewing and extending your subscription two or three years. Use coupon below and do it today.

Please send bills or silver carefully wrapped in paper and securely sealed, or post-office money order. If obliged to send postage-stamps, send two-cent stamps.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: 50 cents a year, $1.00 for three years, 75 cents for a TWO-YEAR renewal, in U. S. or Cuba. (In Canada 65 cents a year.)

SUBSCRIPTION COUPON FOR RENEWAL OR EXTENSION

Publisher of COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

I enclose ..... cents for renewal and extension of my subscription ——— full years from date of expiration.

Date——— Name———

Post Office——— Street and No.———

R. F. D. No.——— Box No.——— State———

March, 1922.

Crumbs of Comfort

Give gladness,
Children sweeten labor.
You are your own judge.
Whatever is over is past.
Faith keeps away failure.
Be useful as much as you may.
Kind things are not hard to say.
Sturdy trees are slow in growing.
Spread kindness; it goes a long way.
An acorn and God can make an oak.
Secrets make a dungeon of the heart.
The man that seeks power loses liberty.
Selfishness is not the road to happiness.
There is something good in all weathers.
There can be no charm without courtesy.
Curiosity of the right sort is a great asset.
The best thing to give your enemy is forgiveness.
Do not break a record if it means breaking a heart.
He feeds upon his own life who has nothing to love.
Labor and the soil are the only real bases of wealth.
There is no sponge that can wipe out what has been said.
A hearthstone should have a glow that can warm the soul.
Kings have few things to desire, but many things to fear.
The sweetest part of the cup of life is often at the bottom.
Mark with deeds the vanishing traces of swift-rolling Time.
A liar faces God, however much he may hide the truth from men.
If you see good in everybody, nearly everybody will see good in you.
The money which goes farthest is that earned honestly and honorably.
Spin cheerfully, carefully, prayerfully; but leave the thread with God.
The wrecks that strew Life's ocean are those that had no star for a guide.
The great, who are so well known to all, are often strangers to themselves.
A man is rich in proportion to the number of things he can afford to let alone.

LEAGUE RULES: To be a comfort to one's parents. To protect the weak and aged. To be kind to dumb animals. To love our country and protect its flag.

CONDUCTED BY UNCLE LISHA

COMFORT for one year and admittance to the League of Cousins for only 55 cents. Join at once. Everybody welcome. ADDRESS all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. See Instructions at the close of this Department.

AS Billy sat down to breakfast this morning, I was unsympathetic enough to be a little amused when I saw him rub his left knee meditatively and mournfully. "Gosh, Uncle Lisha," he said as a greeting; "how the wind did blow last night! And this morning it looks mighty like snow. It certainly is a long winter."

"I thought you were a philosopher, Bill," I said, as I passed him the bran muffins. "You know you't can't change the weather and the calendar. March is seldom a pleasant month, and never a warm one in our latitude. How is your game leg this morning? I thought I smelt liniment."

"Oh, my leg is all right, Uncle Lisha," said Bill disgustedly. "Or it will be when I can get out and we can have some decent weather. I am not a cripple yet, thank you. But I must say, Uncle, that this winter seems as long as a second Ice Age. I want to see green grass and dandelions!"

"Bill," I chuckled; "I love you because you are so human—even to your rheumatism. You want Spring, but you are not willing to wait patiently for it and its place in the months; and you really take a sort of unhappy pleasure in kicking about the present, rather than looking forward with a grin to the April days that are coming. Yet you know there are always dandelions every year—and the grass has an old-fashioned habit of becoming green no matter how hard the cold winds have been blowing a few weeks before."

"You can talk, Uncle Lisha," replied Billy, giving a little shiver as the windows shook and a blind banged upstairs; "but that doesn't put the thermometer up any or stop this blame wind. Ugh, what a day!"

"Bill, old boy," I said, "cheer up! Take another hot muffin and listen a minute. It is not that the things best worth having must be worked for. No; Spring is a happy gift to us each year. But all good things must assuredly be waited for. Patience must have her perfect work if we want her to give us perfect things. This snow we are having now will make your grass in Prospect Park all the greener by-and-by, and add more of an eighteen-carat gold to your dandelions. Even this wind will cease and let the clouds gather for showers of warm rain. And just so, too, the very winds of unrest that are blowing about the earth today and banging governmental shutters are going to subside in the end into national and political weather which, if yet far from perfect, will be much warmer and sunnier than that the shivery old world has been lately experiencing. Spring seems always slow in coming, Bill; and slower that her delaying footsteps is the movement of humanity—creeping through the years and centuries a little nearer always to the time when the ice of ancient human hatreds will have melted and the storms of national angers ended. It is only then that we can expect the first flowers of peace and understanding to begin blooming in the better world season that must finally be ours. I've got faith that this season will come, Bill. I'm sure it has a place on God's calendar—and is just as much a part of it as your grass and dandelions."

Billy raised his left eyebrow and assumed the quizzical expression I have learned to know so well. "Uncle Lisha," said he, in the tone of one having a forced part in a futile discussion; "you can have all the faith you want. I'm glad if it makes you happy—and keeps you free from chills. But in such weather as this I'd rather have a full coal bin than all the faith in the world." And Billy looked fondly toward the radiator which, for a wonder, was steamingly hot.

"That's just where you're wrong, Bill," I answered seriously. "It is faith which can keep our hearts warm when all the coal mines in Pennsylvania might fail at the job. There are some pretty cold hearts in the world today, Billy, who are yet able to sit before the biggest and snuggest sort of fires. And they are thinking chilly thoughts. We need the glow of faith if we are to realize the betterment that is honestly possible in human life, and we need the warm hearts this faith can give if we are to work cheerfully for a world of happier and better order—and be patient while we work. Selfishness, disillusionment and unfaith are sadder sins than we know. They mean the setting-up of an altar, the worshiping of an idol, whose very ugliness would frighten those who kneel if they dared to look closely. By believing in our fellow-men we believe anew in ourselves; by helping others, we, too, are helped; by maintaining our faith in perfect patience we do not make the work of God harder. Just as Spring is nearer to us when we have faith in its coming, so humanity's slow movement onward is helped by every one of us who keeps his faith in God and man; by everyone who knows that all cold and barren years and places can yet blossom; by all who hold hopefully to a belief in the coming of the Springtime of the World. It is in these ways we can look past storm and change to something sunnier beyond—and by this seeing make the light come closer and warmer."

"'Forward, March!' is the word, Bill; and the further March goes forward, and we march forward, so the sooner April will be here, and we a bit more on our way."

But Bill, who had by this time finished six muffins and all the butter, only pushed his chair over by the radiator and started to look up the day's weather report in the Brooklyn Bugle. Every time the windows shook his nose quivered uneasily. His silence was eloquently chilly. Billy will be glad when Spring comes, poor chap! The winter has been long, but I think that he is making it longer.

And now for the letters:

BISMARCK, R. R. 1, N. DAK.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

As I have never seen a letter from North Dakota, I will write one. I am fourteen years old, have light complexion, blue eyes and light brown hair. I am five feet, four inches tall. I graduated a year ago in the eighth grade. Now I want to go through high school. I don't mean in one door and out the other, but to really graduate. My sister is teaching her second term of school. I want to teach school, too, as soon as I can get smart enough.

My! I'd like to see Old Scissorbill. But I don't think I will ever risk going to Canada. I look bad enough now and I wouldn't want those Canadian winds to hit me. I would like to see folks have a sense of humor, though.

I can do all sorts of housework—odds and ends too numerous to mention. I live on a big farm (no; I don't own it), can ride a horse, hoe spuds and feed the pigs. Can I milk a cow? Oh, hardly. They say I milk so slow that the milk would sour before I got through. So I'm excused to wash the dishes.

I am a League member and my number is 45011, but here comes the bad part of it: I had a lovely League badge. Of course I wore it to show the neighbors, and as I stooped over to pat their frisky pup my badge fell off—and that pup done ate it! I would have just liked to have performed an operation then and there! So now, sad to relate, I have no badge.

Do any of the cousins live in Indiana? That's the state I came from.

Your loving niece, GLADYS BRECHTEL.

Although you write from the capital of North Dakota, Gladys, I feel sure you are not living under the dome of your state house, nor hoeing spuds in the grounds of your Dakotan penitentiary. But I do wonder if your "big farm" lies along Apple Creek, or is up by Sunny or Sweetbriar? For these are charming names, Gladys, and it ought to make one happier to live near such delightfully named localities. Billy, who is interested in what he calls "municipal nomenclature," called my attention to the fact that your old home state of Indiana contained such harshly named towns as Gatchel, Blankenship and Central Barren. "If Cousin Gladys is now living near Aster, Sweetbriar or Angora, Uncle Lisha, she should be glad to have left such badly christened Hoosier hamlets behind her," said Billy. But I told Bill that your letter was just snappy enough to make me willing to bet him a bran muffin you used to live in Pimento, Vigo County, Indiana, before you struck North.

If all I have heard about Dakota winds is true, Gladys, you will not have to go up in Old Scissorbill's Canadian country to get warped. Winds do not seem to pay much attention to boundary lines or custom duties, and so can go warping and whooping about Sweetbriar and Sunny just as blusterously as when they are blowing Medicine Hat off the head of Alberta. However, I'll hope you are not warped too badly as yet, and that you do not resemble Old Scissorbill too strongly.

As for a sense of humor, Gladys, you are right in knowing it's a sense worth having. Folks that lack this mental smile-aider are generally short on other important mental qualities—particularly that useful sense known as "horse" sense.

Although I mourned your loss, Gladys, I was much interested to hear that there was a Dakota pup alert enough to snap at the opportunity of becoming a member of our League and that this pup now wears our badge—even if on the inside of his coat. Billy was delighted to get this piece of news because he has long been in favor of having a four-legged branch of the Cousins—with himself as Honorary President, of course.

CATAWBA, WEST VIRGINIA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

As I have never seen any letters from this part of the state, I thought I would write one. I am fourteen years old. I walk about two miles to school. We have a man teacher and he is pretty cross sometimes. We have only thirteen scholars and they are all boys but two. It is awful lonesome when one of us girls misses a session—for there is only one comes then. I will write again if Billy the Goat doesn't eat this letter. Good bye!

A loving cousin, MILDRED BUNNER.

Mildred, I think the reason your teacher gets ill-tempered is because he has so many boys to manage. If there could be some way arranged of putting more girls into your schoolroom, your pestered pedagogue would have easier going. What has become of all the girls in Catawba, Mildred? Have they all grown up and got married? Or do they have to stay home and help make grape juice out of the famous Catawba grapes? Cousin Augustus H. Trick might say they had lost their powder-puffs, perhaps, and so could not get properly dressed to come to school! But cantankerous cousin Gus has been quiet of late and I, for one, would not be a bit surprised to hear that he was coming home from the movies these nights and brushing some powder spots from his new overcoat. You can never tell how these young reformers are going to backslide—particularly if the slide is made extra slippery by red cheeks and bright eyes. Well, Mildred, even if your teacher is "pretty cross," this is much better than having him "ugly cross." No teacher is so bad but he or she might be much worse. I used to study under a mighty irascible master of about five feet, two inches. And when I left him for another whose disposition was about the same, but whose height was over six feet, I wished painfully many times that I could have had the shorter-armed, smaller-muscled teacher back again. If you want to help things out, Mildred, you will have to try and scare up a few more girls and import them into Catawba from the neighboring villages and vineyards. Billy says he knows lots of girls who would be glad to move into a community where those long-legged animals called boys were so obtrusively numerous. So if you can't find enough school-immigrants, Milly, write to Billy and he will send you his list. Certainly something ought to be done to help your loneliness and your teacher's pretty-crossness.

NJMOPS, OP. EBLPUB.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

No; I am not a Russian, nor do I live in Russia, although some people try to make us believe that all in this state are members of the Russian Bolsheviki except themselves. But I am trying to beg something from the cousins this time, and so I am hiding my name and address for fear of getting too many answers to my plea. I would appreciate it very much if some cousin would send me a dozen or so cotton seeds. I picked some myself once near Waco, Texas, while I was stationed at Camp McArthur, but the blamed stuff wouldn't grow. As most of the cousins describe themselves I will do the same, so that you may know what a Russian looks like: I am six feet tall and thirty-six inch belt measure, otherwise I don't look a durn sight worse than anyone else.

I will be glad to answer all letters from those cousins who can decipher my true name and address—as I know these writers will be wise birds.

Your loving cousin, CFOOJF HJMCFSUTPO.

Cousin Cfoojf of Njmops, your mystifying letter did a good turn to Billy: it took his mind off of his rheumatism and the weather. For the past three days he has done nothing but consult foreign and domestic lexicons and gazetteers in the vain endeavor to discover the secret of your name and nationality.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 21.)

*What IS a BUDGET Anyhow?

[You may get $500 out of keeping this budget book.]

This one is a "Silent Partner." It helps you save and HAVE!

Now read our Ad. Story

This IS a PLAN not merely a BOOK! it's an aid to SAVING—a Silent PARTNER—it's the friend in need who HAS that $5 or $10 when you don't know WHERE to turn for it.

It is a way to S-A-V-E.

HOW would you like to have a Silent Partner from whom you could borrow the "much-needed-Five-or-Ten-Dollars" that is so hard to get, sometimes, when you need it MOST?

Of course you'd like to have one! And here it is!

Here is the Housewife's Silent Partner,—the "friend-in-need"

"The Menter Plan of HOME BUDGETS"

—Not merely a book, but a complete PLAN;

—Not just ADVICE, but HOW to make ends meet;

—Not a course in bookkeeping, but a CAREFULLY STUDIED OUT, consistent plan, which is the basis of HOW to save money, and HOW to have something to show for your INcome at the end of the year (just as a business shows a dividend on ITS INcome, when the business is properly managed).

This HOME BUDGET *BOOK has been prepared to show you How to find out where the leaks in your use of your household money occur,—so that you can decide HOW to stop them. This book is a HOW BOOK—not a book of advice and wise sayings, but a complete plan which pays you in your business of home-making, the same dividends that efficiency, applied to business, has paid to many corporations.

You can HAVE this Silent Partner working with you—helping you to avoid WORRY, helping you to HAVE something to "fall back on," and you also can get some of the $5,000.00 that will be distributed to those WHO use this book most diligently.

How to get your share of the $5000

Contest closes Jan. 10th, 1923 is told in this book—which is sent postpaid for $1.00

ORDER your copy of THIS Housewife's Silent Partner, today!

It is mighty helpful, too, for single men and women, who do not seem to be able to save anything.

It is a genuine FIRST AID to enjoying your INcome.

It is PRACTICAL THRIFT demonstrated!

(The nearest approach to it sells for $2.50)

The sooner you get yours—

The sooner you'll have a Savings Account.

You can obtain your copy of the book at the following addresses, where we demonstrate PRACTICAL THRIFT

Order Now, Postpaid $1.00

MENTER

TEACHERS OF PRACTICAL THRIFT IN FORTY CITIES IN THE U. S. A.

Address mail orders to HOME OFFICE: 667 Seventh Avenue, New York City

226 West 125th St., NEW YORK, N. Y.	200 South Market Ave., CANTON, O.	217 South Anderson St., ELWOOD, IND.	313 Monroe Ave., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
435 Fulton St., BROOKLYN, N. Y.	230 North High St., COLUMBUS, O.	501 Main St., EVANSVILLE, IND.	114 South Franklin St., SAGINAW, MICH.
6 Court St., BINGHAMTON, N. Y.	425 Euclid Ave., CLEVELAND, O.	1024 Calhoun St., FT. WAYNE, IND.	156 North Main St., WICHITA, KANS.
119 North Pearl St., ALBANY, N. Y.	35 South Ludlow St., DAYTON, O.	111 South Illinois St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.	1017 State St., ERIE, PA.
615 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.	33 West High St., SPRINGFIELD, O.	659 Wabash Ave., TERRE HAUTE, IND.	1117 Market St., WHEELING, W. VA.
29 Seneca St., GENEVA, N. Y.	212 Summit St., TOLEDO, O.	525 North Main St., PUEBLO, COL.	48 East 7th St., ST. PAUL, MINN.
62 State St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.	231 West Federal St., YOUNGSTOWN, O.	1539 Welton St., DENVER, COL.	418 Nicollet Ave., MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
423½ South Salina St., SYRACUSE, N. Y.	423 North Main St., BLOOMINGTON, ILL.	147 Asylum St., HARTFORD, CONN.	853 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.
13 Third St., TROY, N. Y.	320 West State St., ROCKFORD, ILL.	332 Main St., SPRINGFIELD, MASS.	1224 Grand Ave., KANSAS CITY, MO.
53 Franklin Sq., UTICA, N. Y.	515 N. S. Square, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.		424 West Market St., LOUISVILLE, KY.
39 South Howard St., AKRON, O.

*NOTE: A BUDGET is simply a PLAN which regulates the spending and saving of your INcome, so that you can control your OUTgo and live on less than your EARNINGS. It helps you to accumulate money and open a savings account.

Copyright L-Jr. for Menter Co. 1922. No. 20-L-Jr.-23

COMFORT COUPON MARCH

Fill in your

Name .....

Street No. or R. F. D. .....

City ..... State .....

Then tear this out and return to us with One Dollar ($1.00) attached.—(Money Order or cash, registered). You will receive your plan for saving money by return mail.

MARRIAGE—The New Woman's Problem

By Maud Mary

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

AT Norah's suggestion Harriet Landis had slipped out of her severe evening frock and into a flannel wrapper and had seated herself on the floor in front of the fire, a little ill at ease in her unaccustomed posture.

She wondered why she had, at Norah's urgent summons, thrown over an important board meeting in Boston to race over to the latter's studio party.

But, she admitted with a shrug of her square shoulders, Norah Lane had compelled her to do unconsidered things even in their days at the college where Norah, a quick-witted freshman, had attracted the older girl who, already graduated, held a secretarial position.

They had seen a good deal of each other during Norah's years at college, and on several occasions Harriet had taken the recently orphaned girl home with her for vacations.

For several years their paths had lain apart, for on leaving college Norah had gone abroad to study art while Harriet had been making a name for herself in the sociological world.

Nearly a year ago, however, Norah had returned to New York and opened a studio and to her had come, if not fame, at least a sudden and decided vogue. And now she was about to give up her studio to marry Harriet's brother.

"I'll be with you in a minute, Hal," sang out Norah as she seated herself at a Florentine desk to dash off a note or two which she had characteristically forgotten.

Harriet turned to look at her hostess, the color running up into her sallow cheeks at the dear diminutive which no one save Norah had ever used.

Norah's was a piquant face, with features too irregular for actual beauty, but with a brow broad and spiritual and widely-spaced, heavily-lashed gray eyes which held sparks of Celtic cleverness. Her mouth was sensitive but willful, her chin firm. The perfection of her coloring and her shining russet hair were, Harriet decided, her chief claims to beauty.

"There!" Norah sealed the last note. "Now for one of our old talks, Hal."

Again the name gave Harriet a galvanic sense of youth and warmed her like a draught of strong wine. With others her personal relations might be reduced to the dispassionate brevity of a charities' report, but never with Norah.

Norah, in her odd black and gold negligee, snuggled down beside the older woman.

"I am so gratified that you came," she breathed. "But I counted on it. If you only knew how I want Dick's family to love me! I have a conviction that your mother and Ellen never will, but if I may count on you, Hal!" Her sensitive fingers crossed the dun-colored flannel of Harriet's wrapper.

"Norah," began Harriet impulsively, "why didn't Richard come over to your party?"

The fingers hung motionless. "Why, you see, Hal, he had an engagement which he could not easily break."

"I—see."

"But," added Norah honestly, "I suspect that he didn't wish to break it. I think that he doesn't altogether approve of studio dwellers."

"Well," said Harriet stoutly, "I am glad, at any rate, that I came. I wouldn't have missed seeing you in this setting for the world. It explains you, Norah."

"It explains my very depleted bank account," returned Norah with a rueful shrug. "I am so glad you like it. And did you approve of my friends, Hal?"

"They are very much like mine, Norah, only more open-minded and instinct with life."

"That is a sweet tribute, dear."

They fell silent for amoment, Harriet speculating as to what her brother, a college professor at thirty, dignified and austere, would do to this high-spirited girl.

The family had spoiled him, she reflected. Their father having died when they were all young, Mrs. Landis and the girls had deferred to him since his knickerbocker days. His had been the final decision regarding their friends and their food, their frocks and their frolics.

Suddenly it seemed intolerable that he should take this vital girl and fashion her to his mould.

"Norah," she said, "I'm sorry."

Norah was rigid for a moment. "Sorry that your brother is going to marry me?" she asked.

"Sorry," corrected Harriet, "that you are going to marry my brother."

"I am afraid you will have to explain that, Hal."

Miss Landis clasped one of the girl's chilly hands till she relaxed. "Dear, I'm afraid, among us, we've made Richard an autocrat."

"Oh, not that, Hal. Dick has strong convictions but he never could be autocratic."

"Are you planning to go on with your illustrating, Norah?"

"Oh, yes, indeed. Not so intensively, of course, for as Dick's wife there'll be demands on my time."

"Have you explained your intention to him?"

Norah laughed. "My dear, what kind of a problem are you imagining? Dick and I are intelligent modernists; I couldn't have loved him else. Our interests will merge. Why not?"

"I hope they do, Norah, only please take my advice and have it all out with him before you are married." And they dropped the subject.

It was to be a quiet wedding, and because of its informality, and because it was the only place which she could claim as home, Norah would have loved having it in the studio, but at the suggestion a frown gathered between Landis's fine eyes.

"Wouldn't that be a trifle bizarre, Norah?"

"Bizarre?" she repeated, surprised.

"I must have the president of the college and my intimates among the faculty. What would they think?"

"What should they think?" queried Norah slowly.

"Why, that a studio is scarcely the place to lay the foundation of a home. Besides, who ever heard of a wedding in town in August?"

Landis was a handsome man of great restrain and when he took Norah in his arms as he did then, he subjugated her as one more extravagant with his caresses could never have done.

"Mother has a tiny summer place in Maine," he said, his lips to her hair. "She wishes us to be married there. It is the very place. Trees for a chapel, birds for the music, and the old bishop to bless us."

Under the influence of his hands and his voice Norah's body yielded even if her spirit was not quite under control.

None of her studio friends could go up for the wedding for there were no accommodations to be had in the Maine hamlet and Dick's friends filled Mrs. Landis's cottage to the eaves. At first Norah was bitterly disappointed but she brightened at her lover's plausible reasoning.

A month of idyllic happiness followed the wedding. Landis talked more freely than he ever had done of his ambitions and he read her the opening chapters of the novel he was writing. They made romance-touched plans for their future but nothing was said, ever, of Norah's work, and because self-effacement in the presence of the man she loved had been bred in her for generations and because, at the moment, her emotions were in the ascendent, she did not greatly mind.

She had some lovely frocks, some of which met with her husband's disapproval and those she packed away without a quiver of rebellion.

They went to the beautiful old college town of Gray late in September, taking a suite of rooms at the inn till they should permanently establish themselves.

Norah loved Gray, and while her husband was busy she took long walks by herself. One afternoon on his return from a lecture, she met him with starry eyes.

"Dick!" she cried. "I have found the very place for us on the edge of town—a new house with the look of age about it. And, honey, it's for rent."

She paused expectantly but he was silent.

"There are casement windows, Dick. And yawning fireplaces. And French windows leading to broad piazzas. And a study for you—in a quiet corner with a view of the open country."

Silence.

"And the garret," she went on valiantly, "will do nicely for my studio. The agent is going to have estimates made for a skylight."

"I scarcely think you will need a studio, Norah."

"What—do you mean, Dick?"

"Isn't it enough for you that you are my wife?" The dark pupils of her gray eyes dilated.

"It happens that I have a place in view," his pleasant, unyielding voice was saying.

It was Norah's turn for silence.

"Why, child! He was amusedly tolerant. "You aren't sulking?" I must be near the campus and the library. As for your work, as you call it, why, good heavens, dear! I'll do the work of the family."

He held out his arms and after a moment of indecision she went to him.

"The Vaughans started today for Japan. It is his sabbatical year. They've offered us their apartment. Only four rooms! Not enough even to need a maid. It is the very place for us."

She wrenched herself free from his arms. "I abominate apartments," she flared. "And where can I put my things from the studio?"

"Sell them," he promptly advised.

"You must be jesting."

"No. Your things were all very well for a studio but one doesn't wish permanently to live in a junk shop."

She turned to the window, too proud to let him see the uprush of tears and when she faced about he had gone.

For an hour she suffered miserably but in the end she decided that it was, after all, a trivial matter and that life was too brief to waste on non-essentials. If her husband wished her to give up her career, she would give it up. It was a mental but not a spiritual surrender.

Landis, too, spent a bitter hour but he was so certain that he was right that he had no argument with himself. His only discomfort lay in hurting Norah. He returned to the inn to find her pleasant but very quiet.

"Won't you come with me to see that apartment?" he asked after a time.

"If you like." She went into the bedroom and returned with her hat on.

"Not that hat, dear!" he protested. "I think I told you that I do not like it. Please go put on the blue one."

Norah went meekly and changed her hat, not knowing whether she most wished to laugh or to cry.

Passing through the office, Landis paused at the desk. "Have a maid pack our things," he ordered; "our trunks will be taken to Navarre Chambers this evening."

So he had made the final decision irrespective of her approval! She felt caged and helpless for the first time in her life.

Norah was forced to admit that the apartment was furnished discriminatingly. But where were the broad spaces which she loved? And did they call that grate a fireplace?

"You like it, darling? I knew you would. There is the desk where I shall write my novel."

"What will become of me while you write?" Norah reasonably asked.

"You will sit by the window or the fire, sweet, a book or bit of sewing in your hands. You won't disturb me. And there will be the housework. I must telephone your agent that we sha'n't be wanting the white elephant you looked at this morning."

But Norah was not smiling at his picture of her by the fire. She was not even listening. Her mind had stuck fast at the word housework.

"I'm no housekeeper, Dick," she told him.

"You will learn, sweetheart. Of course we'll have a woman in for the heavy work and for a few days we can take our dinners at the restaurant below, though their prices are outrageous. You haven't married a rich man, Norah, but you will find me uncritical. I care only for simple things."

They moved to Navarre Chambers that night, Norah unspeakably depressed. The next morning after her husband had left she wandered about, altering the arrangement of bric-a-brac or a picture. Invariably she replaced them, for Mrs. Vaughan's taste was unerring. There was no outlet here for self-expression.

Finally it occurred to her to light a fire in the grate and when Landis came in he found her in front of it, a book in her hand.

"Dearest!" he said, advancing, his eyes tender. "This is what I have dreamed of—to come home and find the woman I love like this."

He sat on the arm of her chair and drew her against him and they sat in happy silence.

"Lunch?" he suggested presently.

Norah sprang to her feet. "Now see what you've gone and married, Dick! I haven't thought of luncheon."

His face clouded slightly. "We'll get it together—this time," he said. "I ordered some things; were they sent, Norah?"

"I believe so," she answered, and led the way to the kitchen.

They lunched in front of the fire and sat talking till Landis's conscience rebuked him. "I must write now, honey," he said. "Will you be as quiet as possible at your work?"

She cleared away and washed the dishes in happy silence. Then, dragging down a cook book from the shelf, she puzzled over it till her husband's work was done. They went for a walk over the crimsoning hills, coming back to dine in the restaurant and to an evening in front of the fire, Landis smoking while Norah read aloud. Life to Norah looked good; nothing in her studio experience approximated this happiness. She slept that night with a smile on her lips.

But the next morning eggs, toast, coffee—all went wrong.

"It is the limit!" she cried in mock despair.

Her smile was not reflected on her husband's face. "I told you how to do them," he said. "Of course, Norah, one has to use one's brains at cooking."

"I am so stupid," she admitted contritely.

The next morning and the next, things were no better. "My dear!" Landis said in controlled exasperation as he opened a hard-boiled egg: "can't you watch the clock?"

Because she could not endure that fleeting look of anger in her husband's face, Norah learned to cook. But the lesson was at the expense of flesh and spirit. She grew thinner—and quieter. Landis, observing it, only thought that she was taking her new responsibility with becoming seriousness, and approved.

Letters came from art editors, offering her a story or a book to illustrate. At first she handed them on to her husband, but he always tossed them aside impatiently.

"Tell the idiots that your husband can take care of you," he would say.

One day in winter he returned jubilant and at his call, Norah emerged from the kitchen, her hands soiled from scrubbing potatoes.

"Norah, Dean Brett of Hale is coming to the inn with his wife for a few days. He tells me so in a letter congratulating me on one of my recent articles. We must have them to dinner, dear."

"Why, of course Dick! We'll dine down stairs."

"Merciful heavens, no! That isn't my idea of hospitality—or my mother's. Can't you manage it, Norah?"

"I'll try, Dick." But when he tried to take her in his arms, she eluded him and returned to the kitchen.

On the afternoon of the dinner Landis came in late and went to the dining-room where the table was already laid.

"I want things right," he informed Norah, eying the table critically. "You called, Norah?"

"I left cards."

"Right. I shouldn't have arranged the flowers in that bowl," he said, frowning.

"It is the best possible arrangement, considering the size of the table," she returned unsmilingly.

He glanced at her, changed the angle of a dish of hors d'acuvre, and followed her to the kitchen.

"What are we having for dinner?" he asked anxiously.

"Please don't worry." The kitchen door definitely closed between them. "I have used my brains," she called through the barrier.

He wandered into the bedroom where Norah's dress lay on the bed.

"Norah," he cried, going firmly to the kitchen, "I thought you knew that I do not like that dress. Wear your black one, please."

She faced him, her cheeks scarlet from basting the chickens. "Richard," she said, "will you give me credit for a grain of sense? That dress suits me—otherwise, you may be sure that I shouldn't wear it. Now, if you will be so good.....This kitchen is small....."

She Turned Her Head so That His Lips Merely Brushed Her Checks.

Landis retreated, hurt.

Bathed and her hair dressed, Norah the closet, looked at the black frock, cisively returned to the bed and put on chiffon. When Landis saw her his lips but he made no comment.

The dinner was perfect, and Landis, a first, relaxed into serenity. The g charming, with Mrs. Brett gayly informa

She leaned to Norah. May I be p she asked.

"Please."

"That frock is amazingly becoming, but an artist would know that you rose."

Norah knew that Landis was listening imp of audacity compelled her to say, "I you like it. It is my husband's favorite

They found mutual friends. "So y Julie Fitch! Why, Mrs. Landis, your calls you 'Norah'. You aren't Norah L illustrator, by any chance?"

"Yes."

Mrs. Brett looked bewildered. "But w you do your work?" she asked.

"I have given it up," Norah explained

"Oh, wicked! Doctor Landis, you perm

Landis crumbled a bit of bread before "I suppose I am old fashioned, Mrs. B it seems to me that a wife's interest center in her home."

"And she is not capable of two inter men are?"

"I think not."

"Well, sighed Mrs. Brett; "it's lucky that you are not tied to me. I am a w shot."

Landis's laugh was constrained.

"Don't mind her, Landis," advised De "That woman has a passion for steerin monial craft."

"Monster!" retorted Mrs. Brett with of affectionate understanding which the married keep for each other. And they other things.

After the guests were gone Norah we kitchen to face the task of washing th for the maid who had come up from th rant to serve the dinner had spurned th

"I will write till you are finished," called to her.

It was midnight before the last dish place and she was unutterably weary.

"Earning the money to pay for all this would be so easy!" she sighed. "And so able. I should think God would deny t talents." She crept into bed without her hair.

"Asleep, Norah?"

"Nearly."

"The dinner went off very well." He quite forgiven her the dress episode.

Norah turned her face to the wall wi plying.

All that winter Norah honestly tried to yearnings and completely to merge her her husband's. She was very popular social duties coupled with the unac ones of her small household kept cupied.

Landis failed to mark the signs sion about her and when he came late afternoon to find her ready to his tea, he was satisfied that he right in divorcing her from her

She took pride in concealing her gnawing regrets, but it took le for her to respond to his moods ness.

A day came in late spring whe preparing breakfast, fainted. La oughly alarmed, got her back to called the doctor.

"Nerve exhaustion," the latter "Your wife has a high-geared org

"But since her marriage her life so even and sane," he said.

"A sane life, professor," retu doctor, "is one which follows it and spiritual inclinations."

Landis frowned and when the d left, wired for Harriet.

Her presence was a tonic to N her capable management of the tin was a relief to Landis who frett organization.

After two days Harriet asked h to take her for a walk.

"You've done it," she began once they had started.

"Meaning what, Harriet?" aske stiffening under her tone.

"You've slowed a racer down to trot of a dray-horse."

"Norah will tell you that she happy."

"Of course. Norah is game. whimpered and you inferred that hurt. Norah isn't the whimperin

"You are my brother and I love I am not blind to your selfishn have distorted a beautiful spirit your mid-Victorian desires. I hope satisfied."

"Rot!" Landis broke in hotly.

"I'll wager you've heckled the child coffee, her clothes and her conversation you, my friend."

Landis was stunned.

"I mean to carry her away with me tist who has a cottage at Twilight loaned it to me for the season. It is place for Norah."

"She won't go."

"We'll see about that."

They left the next day. At partin still dazed, bent to kiss Norah, but she t head so that his lips merely brushed

At Twilight Park the two were pr alone for it was too early for the co have arrived. There was a studio in th but on Norah's visit to it she looked a indifferent eyes. She did not enter it

Day after day she lay in a steamer ch and inscrutable, and Harriet, watching half regretted meddling with her desti after the cottages filled, Norah refus drawn into gayety.

In Gray, Landis, also, was silent and He sat for hours at his desk, but he write and his mental impotence flayed to a frenzy. He wanted to go to Norah, never called him. He took on some le the summer school as much to relieve t of the days as to earn more money t Norah.

June passed, and July. In early Augu bore down upon Harriet at her desk.

"Dick is ill," she cried. "I have a from Doctor Rand."

Harriet wheeled in her chair, her face h

"While I have been up here sulking been over working down there. I feel and cheap."

Harriet rose and gently pushed her int

"That is the trouble with us women," "we permit an emotion to override our

"And how can you be certain that better than permitting our reason to ove emotions, Hal? Marriage is like no other ship. Dick wanted a woman, not an ar his wife. I suspected it, but I was too to face the issue before I married him. to circumstances, cajolery, even, to get

"And that is another trouble with stoop to cajolery instead of standing squ our independence."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 20.)

You Can Easily Look Your Prettiest Paying Little by Little

Wouldn't it be wonderful if you could step to your mirror any time at all and actually see yourself in some pretty style you have admired and longed to have.

This is just about what you can do if you have my Style Book handy. And still better—you don't ever need to long for charming clothes. You can have them almost as easily as looking at them. I bring you credit without asking. Have your new things early—pay later as you wear them. Take about six months.

Try On Free
Any of My 1001 Styles

Take, for example, the pretty Slipover Style Dress I show you here. I'd love to have you try it on without the merest promise to buy. I'll send it on your request for just a dollar. It will come to you prepaid. I give you plenty of time to make up your mind—two days in fact. If you decide to keep it you may pay little by little over a full half year.

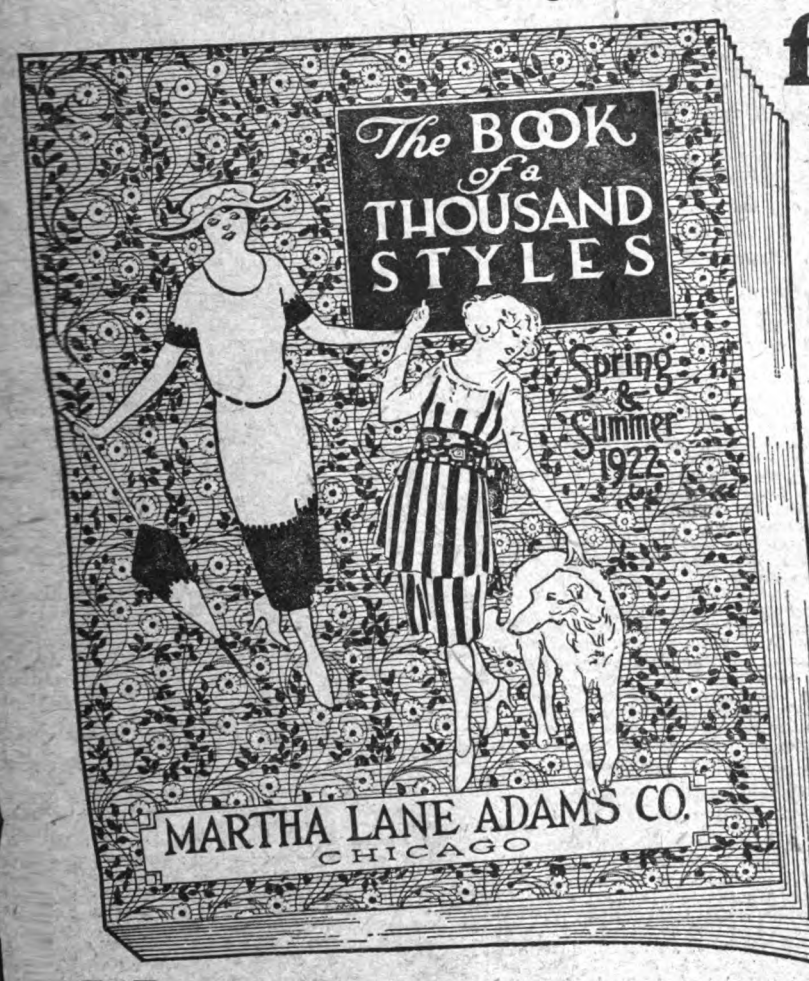
But I do that with everything. So I would much rather send you my Free Style Book first. It contains scores of beautiful dresses and everything else a woman wears—all in great profusion. I want so much to have you see them all.

Every woman loves to picture herself in pretty clothes. You can just day dream to your heart's content over my display of dainty underwear, smart footwear, fetching millinery and the scores upon scores of the season's finest creations in suits, coats and dresses. They are all there in great variety, myriads of stunning styles from which to choose.

You will see many a thing that you will just wonder how it would look on you. You are sure to picture yourself in first one thing and then another. Going through this fine, new, Free Book of a thousand and one styles, is sure to prove one of the nicest treats you have had in a long time.

Long Credit for All
I Prepay Delivery

My plan is free from all embarrassment. It is open to everyone alike. When I send you my Style Book I open your charge account in advance. You are free then to use your credit immediately.



There is not a bit of red tape about it; no annoying features. I don't ask for references or pry into your affairs. I never write to any of your friends or neighbors.

I have shown you how easy it is to get the beautiful Slipover Style Dress I picture here. It's just as easy to get everything else.

I send all selections, always, prepaid on approval. I take back anything unsatisfactory without the slightest question. I pay return charges also; I immediately return your small deposit. Nothing could be simpler.

And the finest thing of all is this. I don't go to all the trouble of tempting you with pretty styles only to have you turn away in the long run because it seems you cannot afford what you desire. I bring you a new kind of credit that's so easy and agreeable, so free from old time annoyances, that considers so perfectly your circumstances, that actually my customers tell me that paying for things is almost fun.

My Free Style Book Ready for You

My Style Book has always been considered an authority on good fashions. This season it is bigger than ever before. I have added many new pages. Lots of things are shown in actual colors. Your name and address on a postal card is enough to bring it to you immediately, free.

Never before have I been fortunate enough to secure such bargains. Every page is just full of amazing values. You ought to have this book as a price guide if nothing else. I'd like to have you use it for comparison.

It brings the greatest opportunity in years to make a big saving in everything a woman wears, as well as in my wonderful department for children, little folks and the boys.

Asking for it places you under no obligation whatever. While you are shopping everywhere else, just don't forget me. While you're looking at other style books I want you to have mine also.

Here Are Few Departments:

APRONS	CORSETS	RAINCOATS
BABY NEEDS	DRESSES	PETTICOATS
BATHROBES	GLOVES	SHOES
BLOOMERS	HAIR GOODS	SKIRTS
CHILDREN'S AND BOYS' WEAR	HOSIERY	SUITS
	KIMONAS	SWEATERS
	LINGERIE	UNDERWEAR
WRAPS	MILLINERY	WAISTS
COATS

Mail Your Post Card—Now!
My Books Never Last Long

MARTHA LANE ADAMS
3902 Mosprat Street, CHICAGO

$1.00 Brings
All-Wool Double-Warp Serge Slip-Over Style Dress

Here is the pretty sample bargain that I bring you simply to give an inkling of my low prices, my charming styles, and liberal credit. To get it, tell me your size and measurements and enclose a dollar. Then I'll send it prepaid on approval for free examination. If you send it back. I'll pay the return cost also. I'll immediately refund your dollar deposit. If you keep it, pay little by little, spreading the cost over many months.

The Slip-Over Style Favorite of All Fashions

I do not believe there has ever been a fashion created that has so universally captured the fancy of women. It is so youthful in appearance, smart as can be and ever so handy.

Almost any sort of a blouse or waist may be worn with it, even waists that you have thought of throwing away. After all only the sleeves and yoke of the waist shows. The best-dressed women wear the slip-over style everywhere. The fashion magazines feature it as the foremost style of the season.

The Material is a guaranteed all wool double twisted warp serge. There is not a thread of cotton or any other mixture in it. It is woven evenly and firmly, yet soft to the touch, and has lovely draping qualities. It has a delightful finish. It will hold its color to the very end.

Man-Tailored In its cut and graceful swing it shows the deft touches of expert men tailors. Man tailoring in women's clothes you know, always stands for the utmost in stylish appearance.

Made to fit comfortably, yet in every line has an unusual degree of graceful style. It shows just the right degree of freedom in the skirt for charming snug fullness.

The Trimming adds a delightful finishing touch. There is just enough of it to relieve the plain simplicity. Silk braid outlines the neck and then brought down into a square at the yoke. Upon this braid there is silk stitching in the new shade of red—the popular henna color. The five square novelty tabs at the yoke are henna color also.

Two prettily tailored pockets also tend to relieve any severity of outline. They are trimmed with a loose overlap at the top, and also ornamented with the square novelty tabs. From them hang three rows of loose braid overstitched in the henna silk embroidery.

The Belt is especially good quality. It is the very narrow ribbon style patent leather, piped in henna color. It runs through tailored loops.

All seams are well bound. Neck and arm openings have inside facing of sateen, to hold the shape and insure extra wear.

I'll Send It On Trial
Send Only $1.00

To get this dress send only one dollar with your measurements and the dress will come to you immediately without question, bother, or red tape, for free examination. That's the way with everything I sell.

COLOR—This dress comes in a rich dark shade of navy blue only.
SIZES—32 to 44 Bust Measure—Lengths 30 to 36 inches. Be sure to get these sizes down.

No. E4A411 $4.98

$1.00 with order; 80 cts. monthly.
Prepaid on approval.

You Will See

Prettier teeth—safer teeth—in a week

If you ask for this test—as millions have done—you will see great effects in a week.

Old methods of teeth cleaning have proved inadequate. Nearly everybody knows that. Teeth brushed daily still discolor and decay. Tooth troubles have been constantly increasing until very few escape.

You owe to yourself a test of the method which modern dental science advises.

Film ruins teeth

The great tooth enemy is film—that viscous film you feel. Now it is known as the cause of most tooth troubles.

It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. Old methods do not end it. So very few people have escaped its attacks.

Film is what discolors, not the teeth. Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Teeth are unclean

Teeth brushed in old ways are dangerously unclean. The film that's left may night and day attack them.

So dental science has for years sought ways to fight that film. Two ways have now been found. Able authorities have amply proved them. And now leading dentists everywhere advise them.

These effective methods are combined in a dentifrice called Pepsodent. And all the world over it is being supplied to people who will try it.

These five effects twice daily

There are other effects which modern science has also proved essential. And Pepsodent brings all of them with every application.

It multiplies the salivary flow—Nature's great tooth-protecting agent. It multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva. That to digest the starch deposits which cling. It multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva. That to neutralize the acids which cause tooth decay.

Pepsodent users twice daily get all these desired results.

Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coats disappear.

Judge by what you see and feel. Read the book we send. Then in the future do what you think best. Cut out the coupon so you won't forget.

748

10-Day Tube Free

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 740, 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

.....

.....

Only one tube to a family.

Pepsodent REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant, whose every application brings five desired effects. Approved by highest authorities, and now advised by leading dentists everywhere. All druggists supply the large tubes.

Stella Rosevelt

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4.)

should have given me only sympathy and love; but she—the girl whom you have come to win for your wife—stole it from me, my one little treasure, the only ornament I had which I could wear in my humble position, and which I prized more than anything else in the world. But let her keep it, I relinquish it freely, now that I have discovered the baseness of the giver. My Lord Carrol, of Carrolton, alias Archibald Sherbrooke, the artist, I despise you, and I bid you farewell!"

She was gone before he could hardly realize that she had ceased speaking; she had sped down the avenue with the lightness and swiftness of a fawn, leaving him dazed, bewildered, almost paralyzed from the wild words, the terrible denunciations which she had uttered.

CHAPTER XVIII.

EXPLANATIONS.

"Star! Star! my dear love, come back and let me undeceive you," he called aloud, as soon as he could recover his senses sufficiently to speak.

But there was no answering sound, save the sad sighing of the rustling leaves which had so unnerved the unhappy girl a few minutes before.

He followed the direction she had taken. He wandered about the grounds for full half an hour, but could discover no trace of her; and at last, feeling greatly disturbed, he was obliged to retrace his steps, and returned to the mansion.

He had strolled forth at the close of dinner to smoke, and to get away for a little quiet musing, for he had intended, as he said, to seek out his beautiful love on the morrow, and put upon one of her white fingers the seal of their plighted troth, and, this done, to tell her that he was both an artist and a peer of Victoria's realm.

"Poor child! It is very awkward, and I never dreamed of any such denouement; but I cannot blame her. If she would have given me one moment in which to tell her how it is; but she was wild with pain," he said, with a troubled face, as he slowly went back to the house.

"I must get out of this muddle as soon as possible," he said, as he ascended the steps and paused a moment on the porch to consider what he ought to do.

Entering the house, he avoided the drawing-room, where a gay company was assembled, and passed on to a music-room which led into the library.

Mr. Richards was in the latter room, seated at his desk, and the door between the two was open. As he saw his lordship, he arose and came forward to meet him.

"Can I have a few moments' conversation with you?" the young man asked, gravely.

"Certainly; as many as you wish. Shall we retire to the privacy of the library?" returned Mr. Richards, who at once jumped to the conclusion that he was about to receive a formal proposal for the hand of his daughter.

So also thought another listener, who happened to be standing on the veranda just outside the open window of the music-room, and who had caught the above sentences.

"No," Lord Carrol returned. "What I have to say can just as well be said here as anywhere. I find myself unexpectedly in a very unpleasant situation, and I have come at once to you, because I consider a straightforward course always the wisest to pursue. I wish to tell you a little story, and then ask your assistance in correcting an awkward mistake."

"Anything that I can do for you, my lord, I shall be most happy to do," blandly affirmed Mr. Richards, little realizing what he was promising, while he followed the young man's example and sat down to listen to his narrative.

"I came over from England, nearly a year ago, on the steamer ———," he began, "and on board that vessel I met a young girl of great personal beauty and intelligence, in whom I became intensely interested. She could not have been more than sixteen years of age, but her mind was far in advance of both her appearance and her years, while it was evident that she had been reared with great care, for every word and act betrayed her to be a perfect little lady, and every day spent in her society only served to make her more attractive in my sight. At parting, I gave her a trifle as a souvenir of our pleasant acquaintance, and asked in return for something to keep in memory of her. I did not know that I should ever meet her again, and had I not done so, the remembrance of what I had enjoyed in her society would eventually have become, it is probable, but a pleasant episode of the past, although I must confess that her face haunted me continually.

"But I did meet her again, and only a very short time ago. She had changed—developed into even greater beauty, and had become more mature, and I began to realize at once that I had even a deeper interest in her than I had imagined possible. Subsequent interviews—for I took pains to see her often—and the study of her character, convinced me that I had found the woman whom I could love with all my heart, and whom I should win for my wife if I could."

A rustling of the drapery at the open window just then made the young lord pause; but hearing nothing more, he thought the wind had simply stirred the curtains, and continued:

"Within a very few days I have brought things to a crisis—have, in fact, asked and secured a promise from her to become my wife as soon as she shall have completed her education, and I had intended tomorrow to seek an interview with her friends and make formal proposals for her hand.

"This may sound rather strange to you, knowing my position, and realizing something of the prejudice of the English against marrying outside the pale of their own rank. But I was convinced from the first that this young girl was of good blood and parentage, and upon a more intimate acquaintance with her, I have learned that her mother was an English lady from an excellent family.

"Now, what I have to tell you," Lord Carrol continued, with a smile, "has a slight touch of romance connected with it. When I left England I came away known as Sir Archibald Sherbrooke, baronet. Two months after my arrival here, I was notified of the death of my mother's only brother—Lord Carrol, of Carrolton—and who, being a widower and childless, willed his estates and all that he possessed to me, with the provision that I was to assume his name, and consequently his title.

"It would have suited me better to travel and remain plain Archibald Sherbrooke, as I always called myself, until my return; but I was with a company of friends—all artists, who were traveling and studying with an old painter—who knew all the circumstances, and they would not hear a word to my remaining incognito, and insisted upon introducing me everywhere by my newly-acquired title.

"As plain Archibald Sherbrooke, I met, wooed and won the young lady of whom I have told you, but I intended, when I formally asked for her hand, to reveal the circumstances which have made me Lord Carrol. I have not for a moment thought of deceiving her, for I abhor double-dealing of any kind; but, notwithstanding, I find myself in a very awkward situation.

"You will, perhaps, be surprised to learn that tonight, since going out after dinner, I met my betrothed by accident, and very much to my astonishment. She had discovered that I had been sailing 'under two flags,' or, as she supposed, under false colors. She had heard of my meeting your daughter at Long Branch as Lord Carrol, and the report seems to have preceded me, much to my surprise"—here the young man colored from embarrassment—"that I intended something more than a friendly visit here, and she has passionately denounced me for my duplicity—as it appears to her—and refused even to allow me to explain my position.

"This is the mistake that I wish you to help me rectify by securing an interview for me with her, so that I can exonerate myself from all blame in her sight."

Mr. Richards was greatly astonished at what he had heard, and in no small degree disappointed, for he liked the young man, and his wife had affirmed that Josephine was the magnet that had drawn his lordship thither, and she had also confidently asserted that he would propose for her hand before he left.

But, of course, he could not betray anything of this feeling, after having been made the confidant of another love affair; therefore he said, with as much self-possession as he could command:

"The situation is somewhat unpleasant for you, I admit, my young friend, but I think it may be easily made right. I must confess I am much surprised by what you have told me; the story is certainly romantic in every respect. And you met the young lady by accident tonight? She is, then, a resident of Yonkers. Who may she be? Perhaps she is no one whom I know."

"She is Miss Gladstone, and your wife's ward, I believe," Lord Carrol replied, and bending a grave look upon his host.

Mr. Richards nearly bounded from the piano-stool upon which he had been sitting at this startling intelligence, while outside that open window there was a sound as of some one weakly sinking into a chair. But both gentlemen were so deeply engaged in the subject under consideration that they did not appear to hear it.

"Star!" ejaculated Mr. Richards, when he could recover his breath.

"Yes, sir; Miss Star Gladstone is the lady of whom I have told you," Lord Carrol replied, somewhat coldly, for he could not understand why any one so lovely and accomplished in every way as Star was should have been so slighted and ill-treated in his family.

"But I do not understand—I cannot see—I—I beg pardon; but, to tell the truth, I am completely taken aback by what you have told me," Mr. Richards stammered, for it was to him a most astounding revelation.

"I expected that my communication would surprise you; but you cannot be more so than I was upon learning tonight that Miss Gladstone is a member of your family," returned his lordship.

"But you tell me that you were intending to call upon her friends tomorrow, and here you have been in the same house a day and a night already."

"True; but I was not aware of the fact until within the last hour. You will remember that I am an entire stranger in this place, and that I do not even know the name of the street upon which you reside, as Mrs. Richards was kind enough to say that some one should meet me at the station upon my arrival. I wished very much to go to Star today, but courtesy demanded that I should not disarrange Mrs. Richards' plans. I fully intended, however, to ask you to direct me to her tomorrow, never once suspecting that I was already in the house where the lady of my choice resides."

"And has Star never mentioned our name to you?" Mr. Richards asked.

"No; she has been very reticent regarding everything connected with herself save her studies and her music, and I have not thought to question her on that point."

Mr. Richards' face clouded.

"You say you met her tonight?" he said.

"Yes; I went out for a stroll and a smoke after dinner, and came upon her suddenly in the grounds. She appeared to be greatly distressed, and I, never suspecting the cause, pressed her to tell me. She turned upon me like an outraged queen, and denounced me in a manner that fairly took my breath away. She believed me to be simply Archibald Sherbrooke, an artist, until last night, when she saw me driven to your door and received as Lord Carrol; and, having heard exaggerated reports of my attentions to Miss Richards while at Long Branch, it is not strange that she should resent the seeming deception, for appearances are certainly against me. But a few words will set everything right, if you will explain something of this to her and secure an interview for me."

"Then it is our Star whom you want to marry, my lord?" Mr. Richards said, reflectively.

"Yes, hoping for your sanction, of course," Lord Carrol answered, with a rising flush, for he could read something of what was passing in his host's mind. "But, pardon me," he added, fixing a look of grave questioning upon his face, "how is that I find she is the ward of your wife. I can not understand why I have not met her with the other members of your family."

"Ahem! Well," began Mr. Richards, with evident embarrassment, "she has been very deeply engaged with her studies ever since she came to us—is ambitious, you know, and also spends a great deal of her time practicing music, and my wife thought it would be best for her not to—to mingle in company much until she had—um!—completed her education;" and Mrs. Richards, sitting just outside that open window, where she had heard every word of the above conversation, thanked the fates that for once her husband had smoothed awkward things over for her quite comfortably.

Lord Carrol simply bowed in reply to this statement. It would not become him to question the truthfulness of what he had heard, but since his interview with Star, his opinion of the family had changed very materially.

"Well, I am nonplussed, and I reckon that this state of affairs will create quite a commotion when it becomes known," Mr. Richards resumed, after a few minutes of thought, during which his surprise seemed to increase. "I never dreamed that our Star would ever step into such a chair of state, although she is of good blood, I believe."

"Of the best," Lord Carrol returned, decidedly. "She told me upon one occasion that her mother was a Miss Anna Chudleigh, of Chudleigh Manor, Devonshire. I know something of them, and they were a fine family, although I have been told that they were very much displeased at the marriage of their only daughter with a clergyman of limited means. But—have I your sanction to prosecute my suit with Miss Gladstone, and will you arrange an interview for me?"

"Certainly; I shall do what you wish, and I must say that I am glad that things are turning out so well for Star. I have been very fond of her, for she is a bright and winsome little body about the house. She is talented, too, to say nothing of her beauty, and she will make you a good wife. I congratulate you both, and there is my hand on it, my lord," Mr. Richards concluded, heartily, and extending his hand to the young peer, which he took and cordially shook.

But Mrs. Richards, her heart filled with bitterest rage, felt as if she could have strangled her husband with a good relish for taking such an interest in Star's prospects, while the gorgeous air castle which his own daughter had built was tumbling to the ground about his ears.

Mr. Richards then arose.

"I suppose you are anxious to see Star at once?" he said.

"Yes, if you please. I desire to make my peace with her as soon as possible, for I know that she is deeply wounded, and I cannot rest until she knows the truth."

"Very well; I will go to her, and send her to the library. You will be free from intrusion there," Mr. Richards said, and immediately left the room in search of Star.

He came back very soon, however, saying that she had not returned to her room, and no one had seen her that day save Mrs. Blunt, who told him that she had been very ill, and not able to attend school.

Lord Carrol's face fell at this information, and he realized more forcibly than ever what Star must have suffered from this unfortunate misunderstanding.

"Perhaps it will be best for me to wait until tomorrow morning," he said, after a moment of thought. "She appeared so greatly excited when I met her this evening, and has been so ill all day, it may be well for her to get rest before exciting her any further. Yes, I will wait," he concluded, with a sigh, for he was deeply disappointed and anxious.

"Is Mr. Rosevelt a member of your family also?" he asked, after a moment, and suddenly remembering that Star had told him they were inmates of the same house.

"Yes; well, not exactly a member of my family," Mr. Richards returned, flushing over this another awkward question. "He is my wife's uncle, and one of us; but his health is so poor, and noise affects him so unpleasantly, that he prefers to have a room at the lodge rather than here where there is so much gayety and confusion."

Mrs. Richards, still an eavesdropper, heaved another comfortable sigh over this rough place made smooth.

"You must have met Mr. Rosevelt also," he added, as it came to him that Star and his wife's uncle had shared that dreadful experience at sea.

"Yes; and I think him a fine old gentleman. I must see him also tomorrow," his lordship returned; and then he went on to explain more fully how he had made the acquaintance of these two unfortunates, and described their sufferings and hardships so graphically that his listener, who did not know one-half, was deeply moved.

"Miss Gladstone was considered quite a heroine on board our steamer after her rescue," the young man said, "when the passengers learned with how much fortitude she had conducted herself during the disaster and the dreadful events following. The captain told me, with tears running down his cheeks, how she had denied herself both food and drink in order that the life of Mr. Rosevelt, who, she declared, had less vitality than herself on account of his age, might be sustained. She did not even take the rest which she needed, but watched and worked over him unceasingly—in fact, she saved his life."

"She is a noble girl—she is a splendid girl!" Mr. Richards returned, tears in his own eyes, and his heart full of remorse over the life Star had led since she came into his house. "She will make you the best little wife in the world. God bless you both!"

Lord Carrol saw that he was sincere, and began to suspect where all the trouble lay regarding Star. He was inclined to think, and rightly, that jealousy, or ill-will on the part of the petted Josephine and her proud mother was the cause of her unpleasant position in the family; but he inwardly resolved that it should be entirely different in the future, or she should not remain there.

But he had been absent a long time from the gay company in the drawing-room, and, feeling assured that he could not see his darling that night, he returned to it, trying to wait with patience for what the morrow would bring him.

CHAPTER XIX.

MALICIOUS FALSEHOODS.

As soon as Mr. Richards and his distinguished guest left the music-room, a white hand parted the curtains from the window, and a blanched, distorted face appeared in the aperture.

The emotions of Mrs. Richards can better be imagined than described when she heard the story which the young man told her husband, and learned that Star, the despised and neglected waif, had secured the prize which she had so coveted for her brilliant daughter.

A perfect tornado of wrath, jealousy and hate raged within her heart as she heard his praises of her, and his manly confession of love for her, with the intention of making her his wife.

Star, the beggar maid, as she had always regarded her, the burden reproach of her life, the wife of a peer of England!

It could not be; she would not have it so, when she had plotted and schemed to win this proud, handsome young aristocrat for her daughter; when she had spent hundreds to snare him; and

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 25.)

Wall Paper Sample Book FREE

Contains Samples of Over 100 Patterns — Shows Samples of Borders with Sidewalls

Send today for this big free book containing actual samples of the new wall papers for 1922; shows samples of borders as well as sidewalls. Big variety to choose from—over 100 patterns in all—popular styles and colors. Many correct designs for every room.

Lowest Prices Since Before the War

ONLY 8c Per Double Roll (96c for Room 10x12x8 ft.)

We have slashed prices on all grades of wall paper. Same quality that last year sold for $1.50 per double roll now reduced to 75c per double roll. Remember our prices are for double rolls, 16 yds. long (not 8-yd. single rolls by which wall paper is usually sold). Our 8c per double roll means really 4c per single roll.

At our new prices, as little as 96c will paper an entire room, 10x12x8 ft., sidewall, border and ceiling included.

Be sure to get a copy of this new sample book before you buy. See our new styles, see our low prices -- it will pay you to send for this FREE book today.

Write our house nearest you. Address: Dept. S-19.

Montgomery Ward & Co.

Chicago Kansas City St. Paul

Dye any Garment or Drapery with "Diamond Dyes"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can dye or tint faded, shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, sweaters, stockings, hangings, draperies, everything like new. Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed, even if you have never dyed before. Tell your druggists whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, fade, or run. Wells & Richardson Co., Burlington, Vt

10 Cents a Day Pays

For smaller Symphonola. Style pictured and others 7c to 25c a day. Tens of thousands giving satisfaction.

Symphonolas

No expensive attachments needed to play all Records. Tone natural, life-like. Well built. Highest quality equipment.

No Money Down

Shipped anywhere in U. S. 30 Days FREE Trial before you make first payment. If pleased take up to 2 years time.

Records 70c Each

Plays on all phonographs using steel needles. Latest vocal and instrumental hits. Also Sacred and Operatic. Full size 10 inch. Postpaid. Ask Today for Symphonola Booklet and Record List.

Larkin Co. Inc.
Desk SCT-322 Buffalo, N. Y.

NEW MONITOR SELF-HEATING IRON

AGENTS SEND FOR FREE OUTFIT OFFER

$80 to $80 a week actually being made now by men and women. The original—the best—the lowest priced. Nickel plated—looks good—makes good—sells fast—guaranteed. No experience needed. Women as well as men. Exclusive territory. Work all or spare time. Mrs. Stockman, Kansas, sold 10 in half a day. Pearman, Ky. made $150 first week. Liberal terms. Prompt service. Write today.

THE MONITOR SAD IRON CO.
421 Fay St. BIG PRAIRIE, OHIO

Agents: $48 a Week

taking orders for Aluminum Handle Cutlery Set. Brand new. Written guarantee with each set. We deliver and collect.

PAY YOU DAILY

Steady employment. No lay offs. We need 500 Sales Agents, men and women, to cover every county in the U. S. Big money for spare time. Write for every day money plan.

Jennings Mfg. Co., Delight 336 Dayton, Ohio

LOOMS $9.90 AND UP. BIG MONEY IN WEAVING AT HOME.

No experience necessary to weave beautiful rugs, carpets, etc., on UNION LOOMS from rags and waste material. Home weaving is fascinating and highly profitable. Weavers are rushed with orders. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderfully low-priced, easily-operated looms.

UNION LOOM WORKS, 274 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

Every Quilter

Should have our book of 450 prettiest and scarcest patterns from old log cabin to star and puzzle designs. We will mail you this wonderful 25c book, also catalogue of beads and needlework materials, for 20c. No stamps. Our latest book of applique designs containing over 25 beautiful patterns for quilts, spreads, etc., and above, 25c.

LADIES' ART CO., Block 18, St. Louis, Mo.

GIVEN

Cooking Set. Blue gray enamel ware, best grade, 7 pieces all full size, given for selling 40 packets Garden Seed Seeds at 10c a packet. Send no money. Write today for seeds and catalog.

Lancaster Co. Seed Co. Sta. 69 PARADISE, PA.

SILK REMNANTS, LARGEST Packages yet offered. Square of Stamped Satin free with every package. MFRS. AGENCY, X, Portland, Maine 20c

Lessens Woman's Work

By Clara Huntington

(See front cover illustration.)

GIVE THE HOUSEWIFE A FAIR CHANCE

COMFORT fully appreciates the responsibility it long ago assumed of carrying into the farm home a knowledge of such improved methods, and of their practical application, as increase efficiency and contribute to success. On the front cover of this, our Household Number, we present views of a kitchen interior where the necessary equipment is so arranged that the various tasks may be performed thoroughly and rapidly, and with the least expenditure of energy on the part of the worker.

UNIQUE NEEDS OF FARM KITCHEN

The purpose of this article is not to discuss the small, compactly equipped city kitchen in which artificial light is necessary all the day long, but rather to consider the possibilities of the farmhouse kitchen where, through its windows, the sunshine may enter and glimpses of sky, trees and flowers rest tired eyes and nerves. Little is carried on in the city kitchen except the preparation of food, while the farm kitchen is an institution that reveals through its various uses and activities how closely related are the work of the farm and that of the home.

FARMER'S WIFE HIS BEST HELPER

The woman on the farm must find her source of encouragement and inspiration in her immediate surroundings, and a great deal is expected of her. Putting self aside, she does not measure her services to her family in dollars and cents, nor count the hours of labor between early rising and the time of retiring. With the idea that the out-of-door work is of first importance, the husband often calls upon the good wife to cooperate in poultry raising, in the dairy, garden and field, for in her he finds a business adviser and an efficient, economical worker, and his good fortune inspires him to broader activities. And thus the work goes on, while mortgages are paid off and the farm grows in buildings, modern machinery and acreage, the wife realizing that only by their combined efforts can an education for their children, and a provision for old age be attained.

GIVE HER SUITABLE KITCHEN EQUIPMENT

Now let us take note to see if the husband and wife are in fact working partners. Is hers a life of drudgery in which she has early grown old and worn trying to get along with inconveniences and antiquated equipment in the home, until the standard of the farm machinery was raised to a profit making basis? Or, is the farmer a far-sighted man who sees in his wife his greatest asset, and realizes that improvements in the home, like those on the farm, are an everyday need, and not something to be acquired at a later period in life? The farmer who comprehends how vital is the household management to the farm knows that he cannot look with indifference upon the equipment of the home and expect the highest results from his farm investment.

MAKE THE KITCHEN FIT FAMILY NEEDS

Whether the program is one of building a new kitchen, or remodeling an old one, the first thing is to study individual needs and decide to what extent the kitchen will become a "general-purpose" room. The next consideration is the relative position to dining-room, pantry, cellar, storeroom and woodshed, as the kitchen work is so closely associated with these elements. If there is a food pantry it should be located between the kitchen and dining-room, as this means an immeasurable saving of steps. Too frequently it is located on the shed side of the kitchen, away from dishes and dining-table. This room should be longer than wide, so that only a few steps will be taken in passing across it and, if possible, a window at one end. The location of the cellarway is also of equal importance if used as a place in which to store food and food supplies.

KITCHEN SHOULD BE LIGHT AND AIRY

The kitchen should be so located as to get the morning and forenoon sun, and where the view from the windows is pleasant and restful. Many a case of "nerves" has been cured by changing the scene from that which was drab and vexing into the sunshine and open. A depressing location is always felt, but far too seldom recognized. In order to obtain light from two directions and "cross-ventilation," the kitchen must be located either in a corner of the house or in a narrow part where there can be windows on opposite sides. Last, but by no means of least importance, is to see that the kitchen be so located with reference to the barn and other outbuildings that the prevailing winds will not bring unpleasant odors and flies from them.

DOORS MINUS SILLS SWING BOTH WAYS

There should be a door, from the kitchen leading out-of-door, either through an entry or an enclosed porch. Doors that swing both ways between kitchen and pantry or dinning room are a great convenience as they are easily pushed open when both hands are full. Avoid putting in thresholds under inside doors when possible. This seems like a very small matter, but the saving of energy caused by not stepping over thresholds can only be appreciated after discarding one over which one steps many times a day doing routine work. New doors are fitted just to clear the floor, while old doors would require to be lengthened by nailing on strips.

HANDY WOOD-BOX ARRANGEMENT

A shed for the storage of fuel should be located just outside of the kitchen and on the same level. By referring to the cover illustration, a small door, located between the stove and shed door will be observed. Here an opening has been cut through the kitchen wall, and on the shed side a huge stationary wood-box has been constructed, with the result that instead of a wood supply being stored in the kitchen, it is taken as used from the outside box to stove through the small door. Thus an endless amount of "brushing up" is eliminated and the space around the stove is clear for other purposes.

TABLES AND OTHER WORKING SURFACES

Probably a large majority of our women readers already have kitchens; some of these, no doubt, are entirely adapted to the family requirements, while others fall far short of being adequate. Out of the unsatisfactory kitchen arrangements I will venture to say that the chief difficulties arise from not having sufficient working surfaces. The old-fashioned idea that a general-purpose kitchen table was a "convenience" much to be desired, has been banished. On cooking days, bread-board, utensils and materials were brought from different quarters and piled on a table, and there remained, often in a state of necessary confusion until the last cookie was out of the oven. In the meantime the table, being the only working surface, was needed for other purposes, and, not being available, a late dinner or other upset might be the result, to say nothing of the nervous strain on the part of the worker. Whatever changes you may make in your kitchen, there is no improvement that brings the same amount of satisfaction as ample working surfaces.

WORK CENTERS BANISH CONFUSION

The size of the room has little to do with the arrangement, as the modern, workable kitchen has everything built against the wall, leaving the center free for a dining-table and chairs which may be pushed back when not in use. While on the subject of table, I will call attention to the kitchen wagon, pictured on the cover page, and recommend its use as the greatest step-saver any kitchen can possess. It can be loaded with dishes and food and pushed to the dining-table, thus saving several trips. In turn, it carries the food to its storage place, and the soiled dishes to the sink, where it can stand nearby ready to receive them when again they are to be put away. The kitchen wagon provides a working surface near the stove, a long-felt want with most housewives. Here hot platters and vegetable dishes can be put, ready for the "dishing up" and seasoning. In frying cakes, bacon and eggs, doughnuts, or cooking other foods that must be transferred as soon as done, the wagon saves the worker from using the top of the stove which may already be covered with pans and kettles, and, besides, the food is ready to be pushed to the table without rehandling.

KITCHEN WAGON VERY USEFUL

An ordinary bedroom stand may be converted into a kitchen wagon which does not call for anything "fancy." Some sort of a handle, similar to that used on a baby carriage, is necessary. The top and shelf are best when zinc covered, though newspapers may be used under hot dishes instead. Neither are the two front wheels necessary if four large-size castors are used. These should be of good quality as a protection to the floors. In the drawer are kept spoons, pancake turners, forks, holders, etc., that are used in taking up food.

HOW TO AVOID DRUDGERY

"A place for everything and everything in its place" is the motto of every housewife who would have a well-ordered kitchen, but without the place to put the particular thing into, the motto cannot be adhered to. It takes but a glance at our kitchen interior to satisfy our most fastidious readers that kitchen work may be classified, and accomplished without confusion, if due consideration is given to the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 18.)

PHILIPSBORN'S Undersell Them All! This Free Style Book PROVES IT!

FREE! Write for It!

312 Pages of Bargains

Our prices speak in thunder tones—defying all competition! The 2,000 Challenge Bargains in our 312-page Style Book prove that WE UNDERSELL THEM ALL! We go still farther—WE PREPAY ALL CHARGES and actually GUARANTEE the Lowest Prices in the U. S. A.

"Miss Economy" FROM PHILIPSBORN'S, Is Knocking at Your Door

Right now—this minute—"Miss Economy"—in the person of PHILIPSBORN'S Style Book—is knocking at your door, when real economy should be highly welcome.

Requests for this beautiful Free Catalog are coming in such vast numbers that the enormous edition of 3,000,000 copies will soon be exhausted. You must hurry if you want yours.

2,000 Challenge Bargains!!

Every item in every department—coats, suits, dresses, skirts, blouses, underwear, corsets, shoes, hats, hosiery, gloves, piece goods, men's and boys' clothing, children's clothing—everything in wearing apparel for all the family—is quoted at the lowest possible price at which merchandise of PHILIPSBORN quality can be sold.

America's Best Styles for Every Member of the Family

Season after season—for 32 years—American women have turned to PHILIPSBORN'S for authoritative styles. Our Spring and Summer Catalog with its brilliant assemblage of new styles will add new luster to the fame of PHILIPSBORN'S.

REAL PARIS MODELS Gowns. Suits & Coats

The very latest and loveliest Paris models—the originals costing as high as 5,000 francs in France—purchased direct from famous French dressmakers. We sell actual reproductions of these beautiful Paris importations for as little as $14.98.

Charming* NEYSA McMEIN

Famous Artist and Designer, says: "Nothing I saw at the famous dressmakers of Paris excels the wonderful display assembled in PHILIPSBORN'S Spring and Summer Style Book. It is truly a work of art."

It's NOW or NEVER!

Are you on our Free Mailing List? Are you getting the benefit of the tremendous savings? If not—why not? Send today for our 312-page Spring and Summer Shopping Guide, with its 2,000 Challenge Bargains.

PHILIPSBORN'S
DEPARTMENT 428 CHICAGO

PHILIPSBORN'S, Dept. 428, Chicago

Please send copy of Philipsborn's Spring and Summer Style Book, free, postpaid to

Name .....

Address .....

Town ..... State .....

Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

PAULINE FREDERICK

"The refreshing and stimulating after effects are delightful and indescribable." If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls of Mulsified will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.

Elizabeth Arden's Recipe for Charm

A clear radiant complexion is the essential. Begin now to take wise care of your skin, and let Spring find you lovely as youth itself. My methods are sure as Nature's own. My Venetian Preparations arouse every languid cell; strengthen the tissues; rejuvenate the skin. Write today for these two preparations!

Venetian Cleansing Cream—Softens the skin and removes all impurities. $1 by mail.

Venetian Pore Cream—Refines a skin coarsened by relaxed pores. $1 by mail.

Write me a frank description of your skin and I will send my booklet "The Quest of the Beautiful" with personal advice.

ELIZABETH ARDEN

Salon d'Oro, 681-D Fifth Avenue, New York
25 Old Bond St., London 255 Rue St. Honore, Paris

RUBS OUT WRINKLES

Don't let wrinkles and hideous crow feet destroy your beauty. They make you look years older than you really are. Under the magic urge of wrinkles disappear. Absorbed by the dry skin and shrunken tissues beneath it fills hollows and replaces that aged, tired look with one of youthful freshness. You're a new woman and can see it! Send name, address and ten cents for Sample Box and Beauty Book. Agents Wanted.

PARISIAN FLESH FOOD

Mme. M. FOULAIRE, 84 Parisian Bldg., CLEVELAND, O.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR

ZIP positively destroys superfluous hair and roots. Simple to use, rapid and effectual. Harmless and painless. No burning chemicals. No electricity. Used by Actresses and Beauty Specialists. Avoid imitations. At better stores or direct by mail. Call to have FREE Demonstration. Write today for my BOOK: "Beauty's Greatest Secret" FREE

ZIP

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

IT'S OFF Because IT'S OUT

MME. BERTHE, Specialist, Dept. 10A, 562 Fifth Ave. NEW YORK CITY

Hair Dyeing COMB

produces any shade by simply combing without staining the scalp, perfectly harmless, durable, undetectable. Saves time and money and is the only practical way of coloring hair. Write for particulars. H. BIENECK, Dept. D, 1836 Mulford Ave., New York.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED

Quickly and naturally to its original color and beauty, by a simple, harmless, inexpensive home method. Complete secret sent sealed for a 2c. stamp. Guaranteed. R. V. Sefton Co., Prectorius Sta., Dept. 61, St. Louis, Mo.

Kill The Hair Root

My method is the only way to prevent the hair from growing again. Easy, painless, harmless. No scars. Booklet free. Write today enclosing 3 stamps. We teach beauty culture.
D. J. MAHLER, 348-X, Mahler Park, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Cuticura Soap Will Help You Clear Your Skin

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. Samples free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. D, Malden, Mass.

The Pretty Girls' Club

Conducted by Katherine Booth

Beautifying in Public

I HAVE a question to put this month, girls. What would you think of a man who was acting as your escort, who would pause on entering a store and look himself over in the glass, adjust a trouser leg, settle his hat more securely, finger his tie pin, arrange his shirt cuffs, then take out a small brush and painstakingly shape his small mustache—supposing he had one?

Or how would you like it, if as you sat in a street car with him he should take out a small mirror and looking earnestly in it brush out his eyebrows, cleanse the corners of his eyes, or perform other small acts of the toilet?

Well, then—for of course I know what your answer would be—I trust you are consistent and do none of these things yourself. Really, the place for one's toilet is in one's own bedroom. If one needs a little freshening up when one is away, then one should wait until a convenient and appropriate place offers itself—the ladies' parlor of a hotel one may be visiting, or the bedroom of a friend if one is spending the day or evening there. The modern vanity case is much abused. Its function is, and should be, merely to transport our own individual powder, cream—rouge, if need be—to wherever we may be going. It is like a traveling case. None of us thinks of stopping in the middle of the street, opening a traveling bag and beginning to brush our hair or change our clothes. Yet, through some unexplainable process, the girls of America to a very large number, have acquired a belief that a vanity case is perfectly proper to open and use wherever they may be.

BE SURE YOUR TOILET IS COMPLETED BEFORE YOU LEAVE YOUR ROOM.

The other day, on one of the most fashionable residence streets of a big city, I saw a pretty young bride who had just come to live in one of its blocks, going out to dinner with her new husband. They were bound for the big and luxurious hotel around the corner, and as she went down the street hatless and most lovely to behold, she had her vanity case open and, holding it up in front of her so the mirror was on a level with her eyes, she was using her powder puff seriously and with the utmost care.

And not so long ago I rode twenty minutes on a suburban train with a very gayly dressed lady who was no longer young who spent the whole twenty minutes with her vanity case open in front of her while she used cold cream, rouged, powdered, applied an eyebrow pencil, a lipstick, and brought into action every possible art of the toilet. It was the rush hour and the train was filled with men returning to their homes from their offices in the city. But she labored on, serene and undisturbed.

Whatever you do, girls, don't emulate these two examples. Perform your toilet in your own "boudoir". Take a vanity case with you when you go out, but only as an aid in case you have an opportunity and a need to repair damages to your freshness and cleanliness. There are occasions when a public toilet may be excusable—such as a picnic with an all-day trip; or a motoring excursion where one wants to freshen up before entering a town or calling on acquaintances. But when you must, be sure to apologize. Say: "Will you pardon me if I try to get off a little of this dust before we stop at the Jeffersons?" Or, "Come on, girls, let's excuse ourselves long enough to freshen up a little?"

The girl who carries a vanity case always on her wrist is in danger of being put down as a vain, empty-headed young thing—at least that is the opinion of one very good friend of yours—the one who talks to you every month and who says now to her Pretty Girls—"Do not beautify in public! Make your toilets in your own rooms!"

Answers to Questions

KEWPIE.—Most certainly, my dear, a natural complexion is much more to be desired than an artificial one. I am glad you do not rouge, powder, or do anything else to your very pretty skin. Aids of this kind are really for the skins which have been misused and so now need artificial repairing. Perhaps the exception is the use of cold cream at night or a little powder to ward off sunburn, but just so long as you can get along without any such aids, you do so, my dear, and thank your lucky stars. I compliment your good sense. As to your weight you do not weigh too much. It is quite probable that your flesh will spread itself around in a little different proportion shortly, and then you will not feel fat at all. It would not do you harm, however, to lose about six pounds until you are older. So, suppose you begin to cut down somewhat on the sweet things you eat? Candy, for instance, and preserves, and sugar, and cake—just the things that girls of your age are apt to like and eat too much of. And if you will also be careful not to eat between meals it will help. You need exercise, too, I feel sure. Outdoor exercise, I mean. Long walks, brisk ones at that; tennis, golf, swimming, rowing, any or all of these, whichever is possible where you live. And for indoors, I suggest arm exercise, deep breathing, and the exercise of bending from the waist to touch the floor with the finger-tips, while keeping the knees stiff. You should hold the arms out in front of you with elbows straight, and palms turned down, then throw the hands down vigorously as you bend at the waist. Keep on trying daily for five to ten minutes at a time, until you can touch the floor easily with the finger-tips; then, keep on some more, just to see that your body is limbered up daily as it should be. You sound like a very pretty girl, and I am most glad that you are making up your mind to go on to high school. Get every bit of school you can; it will be worth more to you in later life than all the money that anybody could give you. And it will mean more and more pleasure for you in life, as well. The more we know, the more things we find to enjoy. You will not be at all too old, so don't for a minute give up this plan. One more word about that fear of getting fat; you can't get fat if you don't eat too many fat-building foods, and coddle yourself too much. If you are active and energetic, and cut many sweets out of your menu, you cannot build fat. So just keep that in mind. The foods that build fat are more especially the sweets, then the starches—by the latter I mean potatoes, rice, white bread, macaroni, etc. At your age it is not a good plan to give up starchy foods; you need them for nourishment; but you can be moderate in your eating, and you can cut out a large portion of the sweet stuff you have been in the habit of eating. Fondness for sweets is at the bottom of most figures which exhibit more pounds than their possessors desire. Good luck to you!

REDHEADED.—Toilet ammonia is usually not quite so strong as the washing ammonia, being more diluted. Try the ammonia you have on the skin of the leg, and if it does not irritate it, you will be safe to use it on the face. Remember you need peroxide of hydrogen, too. One day you should dampen the hairy spot with ammonia, letting it dry on; the next day with peroxide. If the skin becomes irritated, stop the treatment and apply cold cream, then after a little resume the treatment again. I cannot tell you how long it will take, my dear, because it varies with different people, depending on the strength of the hair root. But it is not a quick treatment. If your hair is red, it should not be nearly so noticeable as if it were black. Don't exaggerate the disfigurement of a little hair on the lip. Other people do not notice it as critically as you do. One thing you want to do is to keep your facial skin well cared for. Be sure that you have a body bath daily that your pores may be kept open and free of impurities. Then give the face a thorough bath in warm soapy water at night, rinsing well afterward. Cleanliness of the facial skin—perfect cleanliness—will help the hairy condition. And let me say one thing more. Take these measures to destroy the growth of hair, but waste no thought upon the condition. The girl who thinks the least about any little defect is the prettiest. And when she stops thinking about it, so to one everybody else will also. Cultivate a lovely smile, and a friendly sympathetic disposition, and I would be willing to wager few of your friends or acquaintances will discover that you have this little hairy growth which bothers you. But I certainly hope, for your own peace of mind, that it will disappear speedily.

MRS. G. H.—Yes, the electric needle is the best method for ridding one's self of superfluous hair, if one is where there is a skilled operator. But you can try the French treatment, which is what I am recommending to "Redheaded" above. This is a long road to travel but it is efficacious. Have you used a depilatory on your chin or cheeks? That might bring back such a growth as you describe. Keep the face well cleansed as recommended above, and the bowels well open daily—with proper foods, not cathartics; fruits such as apples and oranges, grapefruit, figs, prunes, eat bran muffins, plenty of green vegetables. I certainly hope you will be able to destroy this growth of hair, and shall be much interested in your success. If you ever get to a town which has a good electric operator, I advise you to take at least three twenty-minute treatments. Twenty minutes is about all you can probably stand at a time, though many people take forty-five minutes without minding it. The charge is usually $5.00 an hour, but an hour can do a great deal.

BOBBED HAIR.—I am sorry it is against the rules of this department to answer letters by mail. You see we are all interested in every question, and in answering one person I can help many. For that reason, and some other special ones, no questions are answered by mail. I hope you may see this answer. You say in regard to your hair and its condition of dandruff, "If I comb the dandruff off, in a few days there is more if possible to take its place." Combing off dandruff is the worst thing you could do, for you scratch and irritate the scalp, and of course this means more dandruff. What you should do is to oil the scalp, now, and let the oil stay on over night. Apply it with a medicine dropper, run along first one part and then another until the whole scalp has been gone over. Pin up the head in a towel, and the next morning shampoo it. Do not use a comb on the scalp after that, but only to separate the hair and take out tangles. Neither should you use a very stiff brush or use it vigorously. Treat the scalp with consideration. Even a very strong soap may cut the skin and cause dandruff, so use a mild white household soap and shave it into boiling water, letting it dissolve, and using the resulting liquid for shampooing. Many professional people—actresses and models—use a "mange cure" to apply to their hair to overcome dandruff conditions and falling hair. This should be put on and left all night, with the head pinned up, then the hair shampooed. It has a very offensive smell, so don't use it when you expect callers. I suggest that you massage the scalp nightly; that is, press the fingers tight against the scalp and move it back and forth on the skull without lifting the fingers. This brings a supply of blood to the head to nourish the hair. The scalp should be at all times loose on the skull.

THE GIRL WHO BEAUTIFIES IN PUBLIC.

"SUNNY."—If the brown spots are freckles, then use a stronger freckle lotion than peroxide. Here is a good formula:

Freckle Specific

Glycerine, one ounce; lactic acid, two ounces; rosewater, one-half ounce.

Pour a little of this mixture in a saucer and apply to the face with a soft cloth. Remember that any preparation which removes freckles really removes the outer layer of freckles, for freckles are beneath the skin. So your skin is always more sensitive after freckles are removed and should be well protected with cold cream and powder. Grated horseradish applied carefully to each freckle will peel the skin quite successfully. Try it on the leg first, to be sure that it does not burn unduly. Of course the horseradish should be fresh. If your hair is getting darker, you can use borax in your shampoo water—one tablespoonful to a gallon of water. Washing soda added to the shampoo water will also lighten the hair—one heaping teaspoonful to a gallon of warm water. These ingredients dry the hair, however, and you must use judgment in continuing them; if you find your hair getting dry and brittle, stop their use. An egg shampoo will aid in lightening the hair. Take two yolks of eggs and stir thoroughly. Into this mixture dip the finger-tips after parting the hair in many places. Rub the finger-tips along the part and the hair-line at the forehead and nape of neck. Do this over and over until you know each fraction of an inch of the whole scalp has been anointed with the yolks. Then pour water over the head or dip it up and down in a bathtub, until it has been thoroughly rinsed. The rinsing water should be very warm. After this rinse the hair many times with a bath spray if you have it; if not, with water poured from a pitcher held high. The secret of success in a shampoo is intensive rinsing. Nothing more quickly causes dandruff and other scalp ills than the leaving of soap or other shampoo ingredients in the hair. Thick or oily hair needs many rinsings.

GITTER.—Your question is not a "beauty" question but one requiring medical experience. The doctor who told you this lump on the side of your throat was an enlarged gland should also be able to tell you what to do for it. While following his medical directions, you should be sure that you are looking after your general health. Exercise daily, both indoors and out—especially arm and breathing exercises. I wish you would promise me that you will practice at least fifteen minutes a day at deep breathing and that as you walk about you will be careful to fill your lungs with each breath. Then see that your bowels are kept open by eating proper food—especially plenty of fruit and green vegetables. Bran bread or muffins will help in this, spinach is an excellent bowel alterative; oranges and apples better than medicine. Take plenty of good milk as a food, and do everything possible to build yourself up. You must do this, my dear, and you will, will you not?

MILDRED.—There are two requisites to a fair complexion—oh, more than two, but these I want to emphasize first. First, perfect body cleanliness, and next perfect bowel action. See that you take an entire body bath daily. If you have no bathtub, that need not deter you, for you can take a perfectly good bath in your room with a bowl of hot water, a wash-cloth, a piece of soap and towels. Fold a bathtowel to stand on. Then scrub every inch of the body thoroughly with your wash-cloth and hot water and soap. Use clear hot water and another cloth to go over the body for a rinsing. Then rub dry and continue to rub gently until the blood tingles through your veins. Where there are pimples do not rub, but just pat the skin dry. Do not squeeze out your pimples. Instead touch them with camphor and alcohol, just a little. The entire body bath is essential daily. It will get rid of your blackheads in time, and I think you will find will shoo away the pimples if, besides, you are careful to see that the bowels move daily. Every night put six large prunes to soak in a tumbler of water. In the morning, eat the prunes, chewing thoroughly, and drink the juice. Drink eight to ten glasses of water a day, but not at meals. Chew every mouthful of food until it is liquid before swallowing. And form a habit of attending to the bowels at a regular time twice a day, morning and evening. At first they may refuse to respond but keep right at it daily until the habit is formed. Eat all the fruit you can, especially apples. If you will do these things, you will find your pimples disappearing. Be careful about getting chilled. A girl of your age should keep her ankles always nice and warm and her feet dry. If you get your feet wet or cold, take a hot footbath or an entire hot body bath at once on reaching home. All these things help keep the circulation as it should be, so that the blood may carry off impurities. Sluggish circulation means impurities left in the body, so speed up yours with exercise, fresh air, lots of it—your window open at night in your bedroom, always—good food at regular hours but not between meals, proper mastication of your food, plenty of fruit and water, eight hours sleep, body baths daily, and extra care given to the bowels. Then you will say good by to your pimples and blackheads, and "Welcome" to a good, clear, healthy complexion.

R. R.—See answer to "Mildred." Do not use any powder on your face, or anything else to clog the pores. What you need at present is to clean the pores thoroughly and keep them so, that they may have a chance to heal up. Follow the directions above to the letter, and you will come out all right, and your complexion will clear up in color as well.

BROWN EYES.—No, at thirteen you should not use powder. You will merely clog your pores and not give your complexion a chance to grow beautiful. What you should do is to be careful about daily body baths, about outdoor exercise, drinking eight glasses of water daily, exercising in the open air, and eating plenty of sensible, nourishing food—drinking milk, eating nice, mealy baked potatoes, boiled rice, plenty of bread and butter, green fresh vegetables of all kinds, fresh fruits. Chew your food thoroughly and you will convert it into healthy blood which will make your cheeks pink and your eyes bright and your nice little figure plump. But let powder and cold creams alone and do not worry about freckles. If you perspire freely, bathe daily, exercise constantly, and wear broad-brimmed hats when you are outdoors, your freckles will not amount to anything. They will probably fade away to nothing this winter, if you eat all the sensible things I have suggested, and when spring comes again you can be careful about wearing big hats when you are out in the sun.

Address all letters containing questions to KATHERINE BOOTH, care COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

Danderine

Stops Your Hair Coming Out, Thickens and Beautifies

35-cents buys a bottle of "Danderine" at any drug store. After one application you seldom find a particle of dandruff or a falling hair. Besides, every hair shows more life, vigor, brightness and abundance.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It will gradually darken streaked, faded or gray hair and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.—Advertisement.

For the Housekeeper

who dreads putting the hands in water during this cold windy weather is not a "Cure-all!" —here is your soothing and best friend SANA-BALM, the new, great antiseptic balm that will sooth, heal and protect tender irritated skin. It is not for Colds, Catarrh or Headaches. It But it is an excellent antiseptic, scientifically compounded and should be used on burns, cuts, bruises and chapped skin. Try SANA-BALM at our expense, then buy it at your druggist's. Send for FREE sample today—a card will do. Address

FREE SANA-CUTIS CHEMICAL CO., Box 691, SEDALIA, MO.

FREE Hearth Rug FREE

WITH 9×12 FT. Seamless Brussels Rug

$1 WITH ORDER

30 Days' FREE Trial

No description by word or picture can do justice to this fine rug. You must see it, you must handle it, you must have it on your own floor to fully realize its beauty, its charm, its quality. I want this rug to be its own salesman. I want to send it to you on 30 Days' Free Trial to use as your own at My Risk. If your satisfaction is not complete—or if for any reason in the world you wish to do so—you may return the rug after a whole month's use. The trial will not cost you a penny. I will refund your first payment and all freight charges without quibble, question, delay or formality. Sign the coupon, send it and $1.

The rug will soon be on its way to you.

THE FREE Hearth Rug

This 26 x 52 inch Brussels Hearth Rug is of the same quality, the same materials, and the same colorings as the 9 x 12 ft. room rug described on this page. It matches the big rug exactly. When used in the same room, the two will harmonize perfectly. This Free Hearth Rug is a Prize to the Prompt. To get it you must send in your order promptly. Both rugs will be sent together. Send in your order today.

PRICE LAST YEAR, $36.95

Special Slashed Price, $21.95

Easy Monthly Payments

The former price of this Fine Rug was $36.95—and without the Free Hearth Rug of course. You would have been satisfied to pay this higher cost. Now that I have Slashed $15.00 from the price and am including The Free Hearth Rug besides, this offer is a Tremendous Bargain that you cannot afford to miss. Size: Full Room Size, 9 x 12 ft. only. Material and Quality: Brussels of a very good grade. Genuine, high-quality wool worsted face, with heavy back. The worsted yarns are carefully selected, tightly twisted, and woven in the well known desirable Brussels loop style. Made entirely in one piece and without a single seam. A rich-looking rug that will give many years of satisfactory service. Design: A floral pattern, dainty, yet distinctive. The handsome center medallion is made more beautiful by the rose clusters surrounding it. Then there is the exquisite gold scroll and floral field all enclosed in a rich border. Colors: A pleasing harmony of Tans, Browns, Red, Green and Gold. There are several shades of these colors. Light Tans running into rich deep Browns predominate. These colors are guaranteed to be absolutely Fast and Will Not run or fade. This is a rug for any room in the house: bedroom, dining room, living room, library or parlor. It will harmonize with any kind of furniture. Former price, $36.95.

Order No. MA5075. Terms: $1 with order, $1.50 Monthly. Price, $21.95.

Nathaniel Spear
President

SPEAR & CO. Department E-3 Pittsburgh, Pa.

Home Furnishers for the People of America

Big FREE Book

My New 1922 Catalog is now ready. It is Big! It is Beautiful! It is Free! From cover to cover it pictures and describes a Wonderful Stock, a Great Variety of Furniture and Furnishings. It will give you Thousands of Ideas for making your home brighter, better, happier.

One of the reasons why Thousands get all their furnishings from me is that You Don't Buy from pictures when You Deal with Spear. Everything I sell is sent on 30 Days' Free Trial —with a Money-Back Bond. This means that no matter what you order, that article must be its own salesman for a whole month right in your own home before you decide to buy.

All Prices Slashed

Do you want to see a Tremendous Array of Astounding Bargains? Do you want to be Satisfied that you need wait no longer for Prices to Come Down? Then, send for my Free Book of the Biggest Bargains—Send for it Today. Just a few minutes with this book will prove that the time has at last arrived for you to BUY RIGHT AT ROCK BOTTOM PRICES provided you Deal with Spear. Sending for my catalog does not obligate you to buy anything.

Price Cuts

of 30 to 50% on

Furniture	Glassware
Bedding	Stoves Ranges
Springs	Enamel Cooking Sets
Mattresses	Aluminum Ware
Bed Spreads	Refrigerators
Rugs, Carpets	Washing Machines
Linoleum	Sewing Machines
Lace Curtains	Guns Silverware
Portieres	Clocks Cameras
Dishes, Lamps	Victrolas
Baby Carriages	Paints, etc.

SPEAR & CO., Dept. E-3, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Send me at once 9 x 12 ft. Rug and FREE Hearth Rug as described above. Enclosed is $1.00 first payment. It is understood that if at the end of the 30 days' trial I am satisfied, I will send you $1.50 monthly. Order No. MA5075. Price, $21.95. Send me your Big Free Catalog also.

Please print or write name and address plainly.

Name.....

R. F. D. Box No. or Street & No.....

Post Office..... State.....

If your shipping point is different from your post office fill in line below

Send shipment to.....

FREE CATALOG If you want the Free Catalog Only, Send No Money, put an X here ☐ and write your name and address plainly on the above lines.

Vapo Cresolene Est 1879

The Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds

The time for Vapo-Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat, which are so often the warnings of dangerous complications.

Simple to use; you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed at night.

The soothing antiseptic vapor is breathed all night, making breathing easy, relieving the cough and easing the sore throat and congested chest.

Cresolene is recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs and Nasal Catarrh. Its germicidal qualities make it a protection when these diseases are epidemic. It gives great relief in Asthma.

Cresolene has been recommended and used for the past 42 years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

Sold by druggists. Send for descriptive booklet 24. THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada.

Be a Nurse

Learn in spare time at home
Earn $30—$35 a week

Every woman should learn. We train Beginners, Practical Nurses, Mothers and Religious Workers by our Fascinating Home-study Method, Leading Chicago System. Endorsed by physicians. Established 23 years.

Earn while learning

If you are over 18 and under 55 years of age write for illustrated catalog and 32 Sample Lesson Pages with FREE details of Money-Back Guarantee and FREE NURSES EQUIPMENT.

Become Independent

Chicago School of Nursing, Dept. 288, 421 Ashland Blvd. Chicago

Velvet Grip

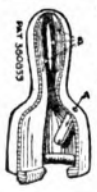
HOSE SUPPORTERS

Equipped with our famous Oblong ALL-Rubber Button clasps, hold the stockings in place securely—and without injury to the most delicate silk fabric.

Velvet Grip Hose Supporters for ALL the Family

Are Sold Everywhere

Made by the George Frost Company, Boston



Knitting Wools

14c an Ounce

Silky Wool, 2 ozs.—44c

150 Samples Upon Request
Daily Parcel Post Service

COLONIAL YARN HOUSE
1231-C Cherry St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Mizpah" Baby Nipples

Do not collapse—Prevent much colic
Free to Mothers and Doctors

Valve (A) prevents vacuum. Inside ribs (B) prevent collapsing when child bites nipple. Rim is made so nipple cannot be pulled off bottle. Guard your baby's health. Send no money! We send you a sample nipple free, postpaid on request. Write now to

THE WALTER F. WARE CO., Dept. A Philadelphia, Pa.

DON'T LAUNDER THE BABY

Bathing a tender infant in a hard rubber tub and dressing him on the lap is purely a laundered process. Learn how hundreds of mothers have cut the bath-time task in half. Write today for free kiddie booklet describing the Baby Bathinette, the wonderful patented combination of Bath, Dressing table and Baby Basket

KIDDIE-TOWN PRODUCTS INC. 8 OAK ST. SENECA FALLS, N.Y.

Big Money

Made by agents selling our wonderful Facial Soap, Perfumes, Toilet Articles, Spices, Extracts, etc. Free cake of soap & agents terms mailed to any address.

Lacassian Co., Dept. 402, St. Louis, Mo.

3 Piece Toilet Set Free

for selling only 8 boxes of our famous ROSEBUD at 25c a box; a home necessity. EASY TO SELL. WE TRUST YOU. Big catalogue sent with goods. Order today.

Write to this firm.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO., Dept. A, Woodsboro, Md.

AGENTS MAKE $10 A DAY

Leatherette Shopping Bags, 14x15, cretonne lined, $7 per doz., sells for $1.50 each. Every woman buys. Send 75c for sample, and complete Agent's catalog.

Economy Sales Co., Dept. H, Boston, Mass.

SLEEP ON A REAL FEATHER BED

BIGGEST BARGAINS EVER OFFERED—A 25-lb. bed, only $7.95; 30-lb. bed, $8.95; one pair 5-lb. pillows, $1.75. Or this big combination offer: One 25-lb. bed, one pair 6-lb. pillows, one pair full size blankets, one large counterpain, all worth $25.00—for only $12.95. One SPECIAL 25-lb. DUCK BED, RETAILS AT EIGHTEEN DOLLARS, FREE with every order for five beds or outfits. All new feathers genuine 8 ounce ticking. YOU ARE PROTECTED by $1,000.00 cash bank deposit—guaranteeing satisfaction or money back.

MAIL YOUR ORDER TODAY or WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG

SANITARY BEDDING COMPANY, Dept. 114, Charlotte, N. C.

Through the columns of this department our Doctor's advice regarding maternity and child welfare will be given free in answer to questions by our subscribers. Address Mother and Baby Department, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and be sure to give your full name and address. Names will not be published.

Indigestion of Babies

IN taking up this subject for this month's talk, we think we are discussing the most common of conditions that babies or even adults have to contend with. There are few babies, if any at all, but what have occasional attacks of indigestion, and some babies have it all the time.

Most of these, if not all, can be cured, and it is with this idea in mind that we prepare this talk.

By the term indigestion, we mean that condition of stomach in which the function of digestion is disturbed or suspended, independent of inflammation, injury or other disease of that organ that we can discover. The principal causes of indigestion in nursing babies are an unhealthy condition of the mother's milk; the mother's health is not good or her diet is not regulated properly. We have known babies to suffer from indigestion, vomiting acid secretions on account of the mother's very rich diet, especially vegetables and fruits. We do not mean to assert that all women nursing babies should abstain from fruits, or even live on simple diet, for we have known some who could eat the richest food and all kinds of fruits and vegetables without the least injury to baby. There are others who cannot do so without causing indigestion and colic in their babies, because probably the children are unusually susceptible to the action of the materials absorbed from that kind of food.

Babies have been known to suffer severe attacks of indigestion from nursing mothers who had been very angry. The depressing emotions, anxiety, grief, fear and despair, are well known to affect the milk secretion in such a way as to cause indigestion.

A nursing mother, taking these things into consideration, should try and keep her own digestion in perfect condition, though not to follow strict diet unless the baby has indigestion. If the baby vomits, has colic, it is up to the mother to discover what she has been eating that might cause it and eliminate this from her diet.

A baby's bowels should move once or twice a day and be yellow in color. If the stools are green in color this indicates an acid condition and if this is allowed to go on you will soon see mucous in the stools, which indicates that there is an inflammation or irritation of the membranes somewhere in the intestinal tract.

A baby must not nurse too often or too fast as either condition will often cause trouble.

A baby will cry if hungry, cold or wet, and if neither cold nor wet the impression is often given that it must be hungry, and this may be the case, but unfortunately a baby's stomach may be distended with gas, and, unlike an adult, it is not able to know that eating will increase the pain, so you see you cannot rely on baby's judgment as it cannot tell a hunger pain from a gas or colic pain.

You sometimes get an absence or loss of the digestive function of a baby's stomach independent of the nature of the food, a condition similar to dyspepsia in an adult. The baby may be born with this condition or acquire it from improper or excessive feeding. This may exist during the course of some diseases, as teething often diminishes or impairs the tone of the digestion, so that the child is often unable during that process to digest food that agreed with it perfectly well at other times. The cause of indigestion after the first teething may be from some inherited feebleness of digestive function, or may be brought on by the baby becoming debilitated by frequent attacks of disease of any kind.

Indigestion may be brought on by want of due exercise in the open air, undue exercise of its mental faculties, and I mean by this last playing with baby too much, and showing off its brilliant accomplishments.

Indigestion in babies is often divided into two classes, occasional or accidental, and habitual. By occasional or accidental we mean the kind that is transient, brought on by error in diet of its nursing mother, some sickness or teething.

Habitual indigestion means a form that is long continued in consequence of the persistence of the cause.

The symptoms of the occasional indigestion in a baby are paleness, contraction of face, restlessness, peevishness, moaning and crying, or, in bad cases, screaming. The baby may have diarrhea, nausea and vomiting, in fact may vomit freely and accomplish a cure.

Habitual indigestion not only causes a train of symptoms, which are different in some respects but much more severe, frequent attacks of nausea and vomiting, repeated for days, weeks and even months. They have continued restlessness, crying, fussing especially during the evening and at night, colic attacks, baby screams out with pain, has languid expression. Baby has a contracted look, and in fact this does prevent natural growth in stature and size, so baby is puny and small for its age. Its hands and feet are usually cold, and it takes cold easily, due to the condition of its circulation.

Subject for next month, Indigestion of Babies—continued.

Questions and Answers

INTESTINAL CATARRH.—I have a twenty-months'-old baby who has had bowel trouble for six months, bowels moving several times a day and containing a lot of mucous. He is cutting stomach teeth, and do you think this might cause the trouble? Can it be that he has swallowed a pin? Will appreciate any suggestions you may make in regard to diet or medicine, as so far we have treated him without relief.

MRS. O. P., Tyler, Texas.

A.—Without much doubt, your baby has intestinal catarrh, probably caused by teething, and without positive evidence, like seeing him swallow pin, or X-ray picture, I should eliminate the pin theory. Have gums examined and lanced if red and swollen, give teaspoonful doses of castor oil to get rid of any offending contents of bowels, put baby on strict milk diet, diluted half and half with boiling water at first. For medicine, give baby three times a day a tablet crushed, or powder, containing bismuth subnitrate, three grains; pepsin sacch, two grains; aromatic chalk powder, one grain. Give this powder or tablet oftener if bowels do not improve. Lessen frequency of medicine as bowels are checked, and gradually with caution add more milk to diet, until you are giving pure milk, with the addition of one tablespoonful of lime-water to six-ounce feeding.

INDIGESTION.—My three-months'-old baby is troubled with gas; will often cry out with pain. I nurse him, also give Meilin's food between his nursings. My diet is simple, potatoes, bread, butter, little meat, no tea or coffee. Baby weighs sixteen pounds, but does not sleep nights on account of gas. MRS. A. S., Ulen, Minn.

A.—Your baby has indigestion and, while his weight indicates that he is well nourished, it may be that you are feeding him too much or too often. A baby three to six months old should be fed every three hours during day, amount of food 30 to 35 ounces. I should advise nursing him, no other food, make him nurse slowly, keep your own bowels regular so baby's bowels will move once or twice a day. Take two teaspoonfuls of elix. lactated pepsin, yourself, after meals as this will help baby's digestion.

TO INCREASE FLOW OF MILK.—I am writing to ask if there is anything I can do now to increase and continue the flow of milk, as I am expecting a baby in a few months and have not been able to nurse my other children. MRS. G. J. E., Stanwood, Wash.

A.—No, only as you get your own health in the best possible condition. If pale, anæmic, take iron in some form. Neoferrum is a good preparation. After baby comes drink lots of liquids, especially milk, buttermilk, oyster broth. Boiled beets, without vinegar, is the best vegetable to eat.

CONSTIPATION, RED SPOTS.—I am nursing my baby who is one year old, healthy, except very badly constipated. What can I do for him? (b) A week ago a large red spot appeared on his cheeks; was red two days then became purple and was hard; did not seem to hurt him, and gradually disappeared. What was this and what can I do for it? MRS. F. G., No. Franklin, N. Y.

A.—Should wean baby and give him in his milk teaspoonful doses of milk of magnesia often enough to keep bowels regular. Orange juice, prune juice occasionally, will help. (b) Do not know what caused red spots, unless baby was bitten by some insect. Should not suggest any treatment if it causes no discomfort and disappears quickly.

HERNIA.—Is there any cure for my baby girl, sixteen months old, who was ruptured when she had whooping cough? The navel bulges out as large as a hickory nut. MRS. R. E., Washington, Pa.

A.—Would suggest that you hold navel in place with button, held firmly by adhesive plaster applied crosswise. Have the rounded or bulging side of button pressing on navel, with cotton or soft linen under it. In young children this will produce a cure in a few months if properly applied.

LEUCORRHŒA.—What can I do for a slight, irritating discharge that I have had since baby came, five months ago? MRS. E. L. P., Backus, Minn.

A.—Would suggest that three or four times a week you take at bedtime a douche of quart of hot water that has been boiled and into which you have put three teaspoonfuls of boric acid.

MALNUTRITION.—My seventeen-months'-old boy is thin and pale, does not eat much and sleeps with eyes partly open. What would you suggest for diet? MRS. S. R. B., Richland, Mo.

A.—Would suggest that you give your baby all the milk it can digest properly, oatmeal gruel, strained, meat juice, orange juice, also give it Maltine with cod-liver oil. Give baby one-half teaspoonful doses of Neoferrum, three times a day. If you cannot get this, get the following put up at your drug store:

RECIPE.—Liq. Potassii Arsenitis, one dram. Vinum Ferri Amarum, six ounces.

M, Sig. Give baby one-half teaspoonful doses of this in tablespoonful of water, three times a day.

Keep baby out in the open air all that you can, sleeping outside if possible. Without doubt, lots of babies are starving for fresh air when we think it is food that they need.

SORE, FLAT NIPPLES; COLIC, ETC.—Tell me what will harden my nipples, as baby is six weeks old and they are still flat and sore. (b) What can I eat to increase the amount of milk? (c) What causes colic, and what can I do for it? MRS. F. P., Saint Michaels, Pa.

A.—Draw out nipple by holding over it a glass bottle whose contained air has been heated, as this will draw out nipple as air in bottle cools. Cleanse nipple every day with four per cent. solution of borax and water. (b) Drink all the liquids you can, especially milk, buttermilk, cocoa, oyster broth, and eat boiled beets without vinegar. (c) Colic is caused by indigestion; baby eats too fast or too often, bowels constipated. In nursing baby, if mother's digestion and bowels are normal, baby will not have colic. Treatment of colic: Get movement from bowels with glycerine suppository and teaspoonful dose of castor oil. Dry or moist heat over abdomen relieves distress.

CONSTIPATION.—My ten-months'-old baby is badly constipated and her condition is such that castor oil and other medicines I have tried do not relieve her. I am nursing her, but feed her some from the table. MRS. C. M. B., Hill City, Kansas.

A.—Would suggest weaning her and putting her on cow's milk, adding teaspoonful doses of milk of magnesia often enough to regulate bowels. Give her oatmeal gruel strained, orange juice, prune juice, and you will soon get bowels regulated.

BED-WETTING.—My six-year-old girl wets the bed every night, and I have tried about everything without relief. MRS. R. C., Wewoka, Okla.

A.—Bed-wetting is an obstinate condition to treat, as one must find cause and remove this the first thing. Get child's health in the best possible condition, removing adenoids or diseased tonsils if suffering from these troubles; examine urine, if acid, dark in color give her the following:

RECIPE.—Potassii Citratis, ½ ounce; Spt. Aetheris Nitrosi, ½ ounce; Aquæ, six (6) ounces. Give dessertspoonful in tablespoonful of water every four hours.

If urine has an ammonical odor, give four grains of Urotropin three times a day. Give child dry supper, drinking as little liquid as possible during later part of day.

INDIGESTION AND CONSTIPATION.—Will you tell me what to do for my nursing baby who is troubled with indigestion and constipation? I suffer with sour stomach and constipation. MRS. W. C., Lebanon, N. Y.

A.—Get your own digestion in normal condition and baby's will be normal. Take teaspoonful doses of fluid extract of Cascara Sagrada often enough to keep your bowels moving freely; avoid acid fruits and vegetables. If, after bowels are regulated, you still have indigestion, sour stomach, take two teaspoonfuls of elix. lactated pepsin, after each meal.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7.)

when we received all those letters from the sisters we just came near bursting. Will the sisters who wrote to me accept my apology for the newspaper patterns I sent them, and my sincere regrets that I could not answer all of the letters with patterns for all the animals and directions for making. I did not receive the letters until a short time before Christmas and you all know how busy mothers are at Christmas, when there is a house full of youngsters. Will also state that my chum was married on the 19th of November and was away on her honeymoon. She says she has married the best of Sams and just can't live without him. The first day of July will be my wedding anniversary, tenth, and I'd appreciate a card shower at that time. Why don't the rest of you send in the date of yours.

In the bunch of letters I received was one from a little nine-year-old girl, Catherine Petty, but I could not make out her address so could not answer her letter. I am sorry because I know she must have been disappointed.

This is the way I use up stockings that are beyond mending. Wash thoroughly, cut off worn parts and sew good portions together in strips. When you have enough sewed to make a quilt, cover with flannel or calico. I knot mine with wrapping twine that I save from bundles. Wornout clothes of any kind make good filling for comforters.

I will tell you how I make the first outfit for my baby. I make the dresses about eighteen inches long and petticoats the same length. Any light weight, white goods will do for dresses. Nainsook is good. You can trim them if you like. I use Shaker flannel for petticoats, making them to hang from the shoulder. Don't make them on a band to pin on. I think they are injurious to baby. The bands can be made from Shaker flannel too, just a straight piece of cloth, unhemmed, eight inches wide. Shirts can be made of flannel too or bought readymade of wool or cotton. I make blankets too, yard of white with a six-inch border of blue or pink. Diapers made of bleached or unbleached cotton are best. This is the number of clothes I make. Six everyday dresses, six petticoats, one good dress and petticoat, three shirts, three bands, two nightgowns, four pairs of stockings, three dozen diapers, three blankets. Other necessary articles. One dozen assorted safety pins, one bottle of vaseline, can of talcum powder, bar of Castile soap, small package of boric acid and some sterilized white cloth, old pieces of wornout sheets will do.

Let me make you acquainted with my chum and me. My chum is Mrs. Samuel Hill, alias Jeff. And I am Mrs. Lillian Thompson, alias Ike. I would like to get the books, "Tarzan of the Apes," "Miriam the Avenger" and "Brandon Coyle's Wife." Please write before sending book as I want only one copy of each. If I do not answer your letter it means that I have already gotten the book wanted.

I will come again and tell you how to make a kitchen cabinet.

FROM IKE, ONE OF THE STUFFING BLUE CHUMS.

Ike.—We would have liked it if you could have told us about the kitchen cabinet in this letter, then we could have made one for our recently housecleaned kitchen. But we have another letter to look forward to, which is better. Please tell your chum that we wish her a life of health and happiness.—Ed.

MIDFIELD, TEXAS.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I have written twice before this but my letters, for some reason were not printed. I've just about come to the conclusion that none of the letters are real. If this appears I apologize and admit I have been wrong in my opinion. Some of the letters are more than interesting; they are helpful, and I guess that is the reason other letters than mine were printed.

I think it a good idea for the sisters to describe themselves as it gives the reader an idea of what they are like. Will give you a mental picture of myself. I am five feet, four inches tall, dark complexion, dark hair, grey eyes, turned-up nose and weigh about one hundred and twenty-six pounds. Have been married four years; one child, a boy I am sending his picture, taken when he was eight months old.

I am glad we are to have a sisters' pin.

With love to all the COMFORT Sisters and Brothers,

LONE STAR STATE.

Lone Star State.—To be perfectly candid, your baby's picture is the reason this letter escaped the waste-basket. It would be a shame to deprive the readers of his wonderful eyes and smile just because his mother neglected to tell his name or a single one of the many interesting things she could have told about him. And he's such a dear, too.—Ed.

NORCATUR, KANS.

DEAR SISTERS:

I have been a silent reader of COMFORT for a long time and would like to step in a minute for a little visit, if I may.

Do any of the sisters know what will make piano keys white? My piano has been used only five years and is in fine condition only the keys are getting yellow.

How many of you know the value of white enamel for retouching old furniture? When we started housekeeping last summer there were so many things to buy that we economized every way we could. Our bedroom was finished in white enamel. We bought an old dresser, sawed off the top then sandpapered the lower half and gave it two coats of white paint and one coat of enamel. We painted an old stand the same way and I use it for plants. We purchased an old light green iron bed from a neighbor and enameled that to match the furniture and now we have a pretty white bedroom.

I was somewhat amused when I read Mrs. Mile Mullins' letter in the January number, though, like her, I believe the fashions at the present time are somewhat risque. However, a girl is not necessarily immodest because she wears short skirts, thin waists or rolls her hose. I do all those things myself occasionally, especially the latter, in hot weather. I do not believe, like her, that girls do these things to attract attention. It is their nature to want to look attractive and they pattern after society women and movie stars. Most of the men and boys today, at least here in sunny Kansas, do not think evil of girls because of the way they dress. It is the girl herself that counts.

I see no great harm in leaving supper dishes unwashed in order to spend the time with husband or children, or in leaving housework to accompany the husband to town or elsewhere. Many men do not think to ask their wives if they would care to go.

I am twenty-two years old, dark hair, light brown eyes, rosy cheeks and a dimple, and am five feet, five inches tall and weigh 190 pounds.

Your sister, MRS. I. E. W.

Mrs. I. E. W.—Thanks so much for the snapshot of yourself and your husband. I put it into my COMFORT Sisters' Album. Am always glad when someone sends me her picture.—Ed.

SOMEWHERE IN MICHIGAN.

DEAR FOLKS:

Every time I read the letters in the C. S. C. the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 17.)

MOTHER!

"California Syrup of Figs" is Best Laxative for Child

Accept "California" Syrup of Figs only—look for the name California on the package, then you are sure your child is having the best and most harmless laxative for the little stomach, liver and bowels. Children love its fruity taste. Full directions on each bottle.

Ask your Druggist for "California Syrup of Figs"

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16.)

"writing bug" gets me but I usually backslide when it comes to actually putting my thoughts on paper. So many of the sisters write such interesting letters that I dislike having the space used up by my letters.

I'm nearing twenty-three as to years. And to go on, I'm one of those worthless people—"Jack of all trades and master of none.

I do like sewing, though. Once upon a time, I couldn't hem a towel even, but now I do all my own and baby's sewing. Doesn't that remind you of the ads. you see in all the magazines? I learned to sew by mail last winter. How many of the others in this corner have learned that way? My mother is taking a course in millinery and has made about ten hats besides sewing for others. So she has nearly paid for her course with the hats she has made, although she is only about half through with it.

Tomorrow is Sunday and I am so anxious for it to come because after we get home from church, hubby and I are going in the woods. Last year I was only out once. Let me whisper why—I am feeding and caring for my boy according to schedule. "A Better Baby." Grandpa doesn't believe—rather he didn't—in bringing up babies that way so I was careful not to leave baby with mother too often because my father gave him so many things to eat. I have him converted now because baby is a good example for the "Better Babies" in this neck of the woods. The only one I know of, in fact. I have been sneered at but I don't care. My baby goes to bed at six every night. What a difference from the other way of rocking for hours when you want to be doing something else. I know from experience because I rocked three youngsters at home years ago. And I vowed me a vow, etc. that if I ever had any of my own they would not be rocked. I like to watch my little boy find his Teddy and Kitty and run off to bed with them. After I put him in bed he pulls his pillow from under his head, hugs those three most precious of belongings, and falls asleep, unless daddy gets home early, because in that case daddy loves to rock him. We can forgive him that, he only sees his boy a few minutes morning and noon as a rule.

With love to everyone, JACKIE.

IRVING, ILL.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I have taken COMFORT over a year now and think it a good paper. I like the stories and all the departments, as well as the letters in the Sisters' Corner.

We live on a farm near Irving but are going to town soon as we like there better. I'll have more time then for myself and children.

EUGENE AND ZELDA RUSHFORD.

We have two children, Eugene, four and Zelda, two years old. I am sending their picture and hope to see it in COMFORT. They enjoy the Cubby Bear stories.

My maiden name was Alma Weller. I should like to hear from my old friends.

MRS. JOHN RUSHFORD.

ATHENS, OHIO.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND ALL:

I knocked once before but wasn't admitted and if I fail this time I fear my patience will be exhausted.

I live in a small but rather crowded city. Just now we are living in a three-room flat and there are so many buildings in front of us that we cannot see a patch of ground or a tree, nothing but roofs. I lived on a farm, earlier in life so find this rather confining for me as well as my two little ones. I take them for a walk every day and get the groceries. We hope to find a house where we can have a lawn for them to play on. Can any of you country sisters imagine yourselves transplanted to three rooms, with not even a place to burn waste? My husband takes it to the place where he works and burns it in the fire there.

I have been earning a little pin money this winter by stitching felt novelties for a manufacturing company here. They pay by the piece so I can do it at home as we live very near their place of business.

Sisters, do you know if you polish your brown shoes before you wear them they will not spot so badly?

For earache, warm a little glycerine, put it on absorbent cotton and put into ear. Sweet oil will have the same effect but it is not so good as it gets rancid and musty and must be washed out with a syringe.

You asked for ideas for parties. I stayed with a dear friend when I was a senior in high school and she gave a St. Patrick's Day party while I was there. The invitations were in keeping with the day but I cannot remember the witty verse she used. She had a dummy at the door, a figure dressed in men's clothing to represent St. Patrick. His right hand was a white canvas glove stuffed with wet cornmeal. A lady dressed as Mrs. St. Patrick, saw that each guest shook that clammy hand. He wore a tall hat that was used later in a game. She placed a chair a short distance from the hat and each one tried to pitch more corks into it than anyone else. The prize for the winner was a green pig bank

The rooms were decorated with shamrocks cut from green crepe paper. They were pinned on the curtains and walls and such places as the room afforded. For refreshments she served sandwiches made with meat filling and lettuce leaves, with limeade (or coffee if they preferred) and lime drops. The napkins were of paper with shamrocks and pipes on them. Everyone had a good time.

Mrs. Wilkinson is frowning and if I don't leave of my own accord she will tell me to go.

Sincerely, BUGABOO.

Bugaboo.—If I frowned (though I didn't mean to) it was because I saw that you were leaving without telling us more about the party, the games you played and how you played them. We like to know everything, and I'm specially interested in Mrs. St. Patrick.—Ed.

NORTH CAROLINA.

DEAR COMFORT FAMILY:

I enjoy the Sisters' Corner very much as I am often in need of help as are most mothers.

I have two little girls, the older being four years old. Sisters and especially teachers, is it best to teach children the alphabet and such things as are in picture books before they start to school? My little girl loves her books and wants me to teach her the letters. I'd like to hear this subject discussed in COMFORT, also the best age at which to send children to school? Do you approve of waiting until they are seven years old?

It amuses me to hear the sisters discuss family affairs. If I told you that I didn't have any trouble with my husband you would be like the neighbor who asked me if I ever got mad at my husband. Then I told her I didn't have any cause to get mad at him and she told me in plain English that she didn't believe it. I didn't care but nevertheless it is true.

Mrs. Johnson, I think if I were you I'd find out what was attracting my little boy from home. Perhaps there is a toy of some kind that he is fond of but doesn't have at home and which might be gotten for him. I think that to keep children at home one must make the home interesting for them. If they can't find something to amuse them at home they will surely find it away from home.

I would be glad to hear from the sisters, especially those living in Florida.

CONTENTED WIFE.

DUNCAN, ARIZ.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I have read COMFORT for several years and hope to continue taking it. Although I have often thought of writing to the Sisters' Corner this is my first attempt. The cause of this is an article which appeared in the December number of one of our popular magazines on "Why Eligible Bachelors Won't Marry the Modern Girl." One bachelor said she was too easy, another that she smokes and drinks; her dress is daring; she wants to be popular with the men and in the very next sentence he says, "She observes that the girls who receive the most attention are those who are not too proper." That is only too true. It is this kind of a girl who is generally most popular with the men. And that is one great reason why so many girls let the barriers down and become daring. They get tired of being wall flowers and wish to become popular. This same man says, "There is a certain fascination about that kind of girl, one can have a certain kind of good time with her." It is true they do have a certain kind of good time with this kind of girl and while they may not admire or respect her very much, I notice they like mighty well to be with her. He admits she is the most popular. Who makes her so? It certainly isn't the women either modest or daring. These men go on having their certain kind of good times with these girls until they get too old to care for such a fast life, or the girls get tired of them, then they turn to innocent girls, the kind all sensible men wish for a wife. These innocent girls who have been left out and made wall flowers while the eligible bachelor was having a certain kind of good time with the daring girl. One man said, "There are some things we want fresh from the stock, not from the soiled counter." Is not that just what a good woman wants, but does she get it? Not often. She is supposed to accept the first one of these eligible bachelors without considering the fact that he has been through the whole show, and that he has had his certain kind of good time with the girl of the daring ways and dress and made her the most popular girl.

Be fair, eligible bachelors, and give yourself to the girl you choose with as clean a moral character as you demand of her.

I would like to hear from some of the sisters if they care to write.

I am a happy wife and mother and like all the others, have to face many hard problems in trying to raise my children the way I think a child should be raised.

Best wishes to all. MRS. ALICE MONTGOMERY.

OROVILLE, 701, 6th Ave., CALIF.

DEAR SISTERS:

Let me tell you how to amuse the kiddies on long winter evenings. I have three, a boy of sixteen and two girls, fourteen and eight years of age. Sometimes Father joins us in our play. One of our games is a guessing or initial game. Someone will say, "I went to the grocery store and bought a c.o.m. (can of milk) and the others guess what it was. Buy anything you want but give only the first letter of article bought. It needn't be a grocery store either. Then we take some long word and write down as many different words as we can make from it. This is educational as well as interesting and causes trips to the dictionary for the correct spelling of words. Sometimes we have a candy pull which is lots of fun and helps keep the children at home. Make home pleasant for your children or they will go to someone who will. Never be so busy that you cannot stop and listen to what they have to say and to advise them. It is better for them to come to you than to go to someone else.

A word to young mothers. When baby cries, find out the cause. Maybe a pin has become unfastened and is sticking into him; a fretful cry is usually caused by sickness; sharp cries with drawing up of legs and throwing out of arms denote pain, usually colic. Warm the feet, as cold feet will cause colic. Put warm flannel over the stomach and keep bowels in good condition. A begging cry is hunger and most any one can tell a mad cry. Another thing, don't put things out of their reach. Make them understand that they are to leave things alone. I left my books and knickknacks around and when they were old enough I taught them they must not touch them. A few gentle slaps on the hands soon make them understand. I was a full half day with my boy but I won. Be firm and kind. Teach them at home, then you can take them any place. I commenced with mine as soon as they began to creep. It seems hard to hurt their tender little hearts but it hurts mother the most for baby soon forgets all but that he must let things alone. I have cried after their first little, hard lesson but you won't be sorry and your children will thank you for it. Make them understand that when you say No, you mean No. Have a box with their playthings in it and when they are through have them pick up everything and put them back in the box. Sometimes this is hard but when you have taught them this, lesson No. 2 is learned and it will save you many steps.

On wash day do your housework while waiting for the water to heat. It will be much better than leaving it to do after you are tired from washing.

I expect by the time this is published it will be near Easter so I will tell you of the way I color eggs. Take onion skins and boil with a few eggs. It will give them different shades of brown, according to number of skins used. I color others with crepe paper, after they are boiled but still hot, by moistening the paper and wrapping it around the egg. Take several pieces of different colors and place here and there around the egg. Leave paper on until egg is cold. My children still like Easter eggs. What do we live for, sisters, if not for our children? I hate to see a woman mothering a dog or a cat when she might be giving some child a home. Adopt one or more if you haven't any of your own. My husband and I are one hundred per cent. Americans and intend to make true Americans out of our children. I tell you our American race is running down by American women marrying foreigners and by the American women not having children, they leave that to the Japs.

Another thing I hate to see is when our rich women do have children, how they leave them to the care of nurses and teachers. I think it is every mother's duty to care for her own children. And another thing is married women holding down good jobs when there are married men, with families, out of work. Of course some women have to work but I am referring to the woman whose husband earns a good salary but who wishes to work in order to buy more clothes for herself. Our boys went overseas to fight for us and their jobs should be given back to them.

I would like to hear from any sister who cares to write and will answer those who enclose stamp.

Good luck to all. MRS. J. M. COMER.

MACKEY, INDIANA.

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Shall I tell you how I enjoy spending the cold winter evenings? Give me a roaring hot fire, an easy chair and my favorite magazine, COMFORT. I have read and received help from every department and think it well worth the price.

Here is a subject I do not remember hearing discussed, although I know every housekeeper has had experience with tramps. Some people do not think it right to feed them as they say it encourages shiftlessness, but does not the Bible command us to feed the hungry? The teachings of our beloved Uncle Charlie taught us to open our hearts and pocketbooks to the poor and needy. We never know how soon our luck may change and we may be like the other fellow, down and out. I try to abide by the golden rule and, to my knowledge, have not a single enemy.

I live in the Hoosier State in a small town where everyone knows everyone else. The women have formed a "Community Club." We meet once a month and sew; have sales, ice cream suppers, etc., and the money is spent to benefit the community. We have just bought a new piano for the church. Mackey is going to have a new school building before long. There is a common and high school building now but it is not large enough to accommodate the pupils as they are doing away with country schools and bringing the children to town. A large wagon with windows and seats along the sides, and a small stove to keep them warm, is used for this purpose.

Mothers, do not scold or shame your children for asking questions in regard to Nature's laws. Tell them the truth in the right way, and what is right and wrong. Do not be afraid that you will begin too young. Children love secrets and it is better to have such secrets with their own mothers than with others.

As I enjoy best the letters which describe homes and home surroundings, I'll give a brief description of ours. We have eight lots, the two-story house being located

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 20.)

"Good home-made food promotes happiness and contentment"

The Royal Baking Service

from The Royal Educational Department

EDITOR'S NOTE—With what immense satisfaction do we enjoy a piece of good home made cake! How infinitely better it is than any we could possibly buy! Many cakes look tempting but when tasted are very dry and disappointing, lacking that flavor which good flour, baking powder, shortening, eggs and above all, home baking seem to give.

Wouldn't you like to become a better cake maker? You can, so easily In fact, you may even become an expert and turn your baking knowledge into dollars, for everybody loves home made cake. The Royal Educational Department is ready to help you with suggestions and special instructions whenever you need assistance.

Cake Troubles

"WHY does my cake rise up in the middle?" "How do you make chocolate icing glossy?" "How must I change a cake recipe when baking in high altitude?" Hundreds of women are writing this department daily such questions as these. You also perhaps may be bothered by similar baking troubles. If so, write the Royal Educational Department. It is prepared to help you as it is helping thousands of women all over the world. Following are a few of the commonest difficulties—

Question:* What makes my cakes split open and the batter pour down the sides?

Answer: The oven is too hot. A crust forms before the cake has had a chance to rise completely, and the uncooked batter forces its way through the top, making a very unsightly cake with poor texture. Send for the Glazed Paper Oven Test. It is a sheet of correct oven temperatures and will be of great assistance to you.

Question:* Is it necessary to use pastry flour for cakes?

Answer: While pastry flour is excellent for all recipes in which baking powder is used, it is not necessary and moreover not available for everyone. All recipes on these pages and in the New Royal Cook Book were made up with an ordinary good bread flour and the proportion of liquid is correct. All flour, however, should be sifted before measuring (two or three times is even better for cakes) and never packed down in the cup, but piled in very lightly.

Question:* How can I get a fine-grained cake?

Answer: Cream butter or other shortening before adding sugar—use fine granulated sugar if possible. Beat the batter well after adding each ingredient, and when the beaten egg whites are added last, mix them lightly, but very thoroughly, into the batter. On the other hand, hard beating at this stage tends to toughen the cake. Bake the cake in a moderate oven, increasing the heat slightly after it has been in the oven about 10 minutes.

The Birthday Cake

Remember grown-ups as well as little folks will appreciate a birthday cake. It must be of superfine quality. This inexpensive Pound Cake (recipe below) is delicious; for one still less costly you might try the Royal Cream Loaf Cake (page 12 New Royal Cook Book) which is so light and fine you would never dream that it requires but two eggs.

Of course the birthday cake must go as far as possible. Everybody will want a piece, perhaps two, so here is a way of cutting it that will surprise you by its economy.

With a sharp knife, beginning at the outside, cut around in circles until you reach the center, then slice through each circular piece as illustrated.

Small families, however, will not eat a whole cake at one time; therefore instead of the usual way, cut desired number of pieces from center of the cake as illustrated below. To keep the rest fresh push the two remaining pieces close together like a whole cake. This will keep it moist and soft several days.

Send for the New Royal Cook Book today—it's free and complete, containing all departments of cookery. Address—

ROYAL EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT
Royal Baking Powder Company, 121C William Street, New York

This is the fifth of the Royal Baking Service

Cut these out and put in your cook book

Pound Cake

1 cup butter
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 teaspoon lemon extract
5 eggs
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon Royal Baking Powder

Cream butter thoroughly; add sugar very slowly, beating well between each addition. Add flavoring and yolks of eggs which have been beaten until pale yellow. Beat egg whites until light and add with flour which has been sifted with the baking powder two or three times. Beat mixture well for several minutes, until very light and fluffy. Bake in greased loaf pan in moderate oven about one hour. Cover with the following frosting:

Ornamental Frosting

1½ cups granulated sugar
½ cup water
2 egg whites
1 teaspoon flavoring extract
1 teaspoon Royal Baking Powder.

Boil sugar and water without stirring until syrup spins a thread; add very slowly to beaten egg whites; add flavoring and baking powder and beat until smooth and stiff enough to spread. Put over boiling water, stirring continually until icing grates slightly on bottom of bowl. Spread on cake, saving a small portion of icing to ornament the edge. This can be forced through a pastry tube, or, through a cornucopia made from ordinary white letter paper.

Royal Tropic Aroma Cake

(Illustrated above)

½ cup shortening
1¼ cups sugar
1 cup milk
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg
2 eggs
2½ cups flour
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
1 teaspoon cinnamon

Cream shortening; add sugar and beaten eggs. Mix well and add (sifted together) half the flour, baking powder, salt and spices; add milk and remainder of dry ingredients. Bake two-thirds of this batter in two greased layer tins, and to the remaining third add one tablespoon cocoa which has been mixed with one tablespoon boiling water. Use this for middle layer. Bake layers in hot oven 15 to 20 minutes. Put following filling and icing between layers and on top of cake.

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon cocoa
2 cups confectioner's sugar
3 tablespoons strong coffee
1 teaspoon vanilla extract

Cream butter. Add sugar and cocoa very slowly, beating until light and fluffy. Add vanilla and coffee slowly a few drops at a time, making soft enough to spread.

Get The Free Book Of STYLE Bargains

Madame Merrick Styles at Lowest Bargain Prices!

Our big style book and guide to economical buying will be mailed to you FREE, postage prepaid to your door, if you write for it. Here are 5,000 stunning, genuine Madame Merrick selected styles. 5,000 astonishing bargains to delight you. Everything to wear for each member of the family at GUARANTEED Lowest Prices. The catalog explains how we have slashed our profits to give you lower prices. Study the bargains in this column.

STYLISH SMART JUMPER DRESS
ONLY 77c
(Waist not Included)
Delivered FREE

77¢ Prepaid

Here's the season's most startling bargain. A popular, stylish jumper dress, made of good quality linene, fetchingly piped in white on collar and pockets, for only 77c. Imitation patent leather belt is included, but not the waist. Comes in Copenhagen Blue, Rose or Green. Women's sizes, 32 to 44 bust. Misses, 14 to 20 years (32 to 38 bust), correct, fashionable skirt length. Order color and size you want.
120SD300—Delivered FREE 77c

Blue Bird Table Cloth Bargain

$1.00 PREPAID

Here is a novelty at a price you can't equal. A fast color, printed table cloth in beautiful Blue Bird pattern on good quality material that will wear well. A beautiful thing for any home. Size 60 x 60 inches. Order quick! Actual $1.75 value!
120SD305—Delivered FREE for only $1.00

We Prepay Postage! The catalog price you pay is the total cost—no added postage. We prepay delivery charges right to your door, no matter where you live. Another important saving to you.

Have Nice New Curtains for Every Window!

69¢
For 10 Yards, Prepaid

Imagine such a bargain! 10 yards of wonderful scrim, in the popular Blue Bird pattern, at a money-saving price. Enough to freshen up your home this spring cleaning time, and make it look spick and span new. Splendid quality at a price unheard of. Width about 24 in. and comes in a pretty blue color on a white ground. $1 value.
120SD306—
10 Yards, delivered FREE, only 69c

TRADE Where You Save

This 298 Page Catalog Explains All

And It's FREE

MAIL COUPON TODAY

CHICAGO MAIL ORDER CO. Dept. 120
26th St. and Indiana Ave., Chicago
Please mail me AT ONCE, FREE, and postage prepaid, your BOOK OF BARGAINS and Style Guide, with Madame Merrick's fashion suggestions.

Name.....
Address.....
P. O......State.....

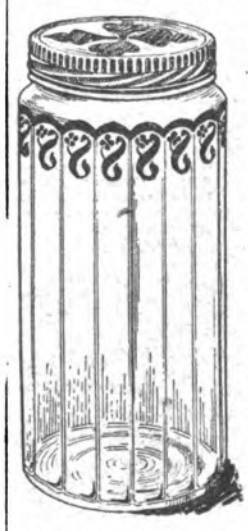
CHICAGO MAIL ORDER Co. Chicago
Indiana Ave. & 26th St. Dept 120 ILL.

Making Home Attractive



By Eveline Vance

Painting Glass and Tin the Latest Home Art Fad

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

THE woman who is always alert to find some new kind of decoration that will add to the attractiveness of her home, and at the same time be of small cost, will enjoy this new form of enamel painting that requires no firing.

The two accompanying illustrations give a good idea of this work, showing its simplicity. The tall piece is the familiar glass jar which comes filled with stick candy, while the low square one when purchased contained cold-cream. The contents of both had been used and the jars cleaned and put away, to be brought forth at a later date and decorated for a church sale, where, as a novelty, they attracted much attention. Without the covers, both of these jars would make lovely flower vases. After acquiring the knack of using these paints, your brush will become very busy painting coat hangers, tin candlesticks, tin candy boxes, and many other articles, besides redecorating vases, lamps, baskets, and other things that you have long been tired of but too good to be cast aside.

PAINTED CANDY JAR.

The materials required for this work are one can of white enamel paint, a tube each of artist's paint in whatever colors you will use, a short-hair sable brush for fine lines, a somewhat larger brush to float on solid backgrounds, a bottle of turpentine for thinning and for cleaning brushes, a large plate to mix paint on, and a palette-knife or an old case-knife worn thin.

As the candy and cold-cream jars usually have a little pressed decoration, they make excellent pieces to begin on. Taking first the candy jar, which had at the edge of the shoulder a circle of scallops pressed in, each one being connected with the base by a vertical indentation in the glass, all of which may be drawn in freely with the white enamel paint which has previously been mixed to the desired color with tube paint. The design beneath each scallop is first lightly traced with a sharply-pointed pencil on the back of carbon paper, then placed, carbon side, against the glass and the design transferred to the glass by means of retracing the design with the pencil, using a little more pressure. This will leave a fine dark line as a guide to paint by.

The jar has a screw top, and the cover is made of tin which is first given a solid background of tinted enamel, and is allowed to dry thoroughly. The design is then outlined and painted on. The scallops and vertical lines on jar should be well dried before attempting the decoration beneath.

The same rules apply to painting the cold-cream jar. Here an initial was applied, and is intended to be used for a baby's powder jar and puff.

BABY'S POWDER AND PUFF.

Where a solid background of dark color is used, the design is transferred by first drawing it on the back of carbon paper, then thoroughly dusting the carbon side with talcum powder, holding it against the surface to be painted and retracing the design. It will leave a fine white line.

Black enameled backgrounds with bright flower and bird decorations are just now much used, and they are wonderfully pretty for painting over old lamps and tin candlesticks. Usually one coat of enamel is sufficient, but if the work appears flat after drying, apply a second coat.

The Selection and Care of Bedding

A comfortable bed is conducive to good health, beyond a doubt. Of first importance is the choice of a spring that will neither stretch at the edges nor sag in the middle. A good mattress is the next consideration. Years ago, if one wanted a comfortable mattress it had to be made of curled hair which was very expensive, and still is, but nowadays it is quite a different matter, with the floss, the cotton-felt and the wool-felt mattresses to choose from. The wool-felt is highly satisfactory and is replacing those made of hair. The floss mattress is also very desirable, and a good quality of cotton-felt, if well made, will give wear and comfort. In selecting a mattress be sure it is tacked on the sides. While this feature makes a mattress cost a little more, it is cheaper in the end, as these tackings keep the mattress from spreading and becoming thin at the edges. If a mattress stretches, you may be sure it is becoming thinner and in time will be lumpy. A bed will never make up square and trim with a stretched mattress. By covering the mattresses while they are new with well-fitted boxed covers, made of shrunken, unbleached cotton, much will be accomplished toward holding them in shape. The covers will also keep them clean and they can be removed and washed when necessary. The covers are tied across one end with tapes a few inches apart.

Next to the mattress is laid a protecting pad. A thin blanket folded once crossways, covered with shrunken unbleached muslin and quilted by machine with a long stitch, makes an excellent one. In case of sickness, a draw-sheet on top of under sheet makes the best pad, as it is easily washed. Take a sheet and fold it once lengthwise, then lay the center exactly at the center of the mattress, crossways of the bed, and very smoothly fold one-half under the mattress as far as it will go. Then walk to the other side of bed, draw the sheet very taut with both hands and fold it under the mattress as on the opposite side. It should be tight enough for the mattress to slightly buckle, which disappears as soon as the patient lies upon it. If a large-size safety-pin is put through, well into the mattress and sheet, at each corner where it turns over the edge, the draw sheet will remain smooth several days, which in turn helps keep the under sheet in place.

CRETONNE SHAM AND BEDSPREAD.

Pillows should be filled with goose feathers or the short down feathers from ducks. Hen feathers are likely to lack "spring," and lay in hard lumps. In case pillows become soiled from sickness, they can be washed through several heavy suds, rinsed through several clean waters, and hung to dry where they will get sun and wind.

Short or narrow sheets must be avoided, for they soon are in folds and wrinkles and prevent perfect rest. Nothing causes so much soil to the rest of the bedding as short sheets. Before cutting sheets, measure the length and width of mattress, including the depth of boxing, and then allow thirty inches larger each way, which will give fifteen inches to turn under. As sheets wear out at the center, tear them in two lengthwise, overhand the two selvages and put a narrow hem on the torn edges.

Warm, light-weight bed coverings are conducive to well-rested bodies. All wool blankets, or comforters made of wool wadding, are the most satisfactory. That woolen blankets are hard to wash is an argument made against them. Many housewives nowadays make slips like pillow-cases and put their woolen blankets into them before they are used. With a long stitch the blanket is caught to the edge of slip on all four sides. Being made of shrunken print, they are readily removed and washed. With this treatment, blankets keep new and clean indefinitely. The wool-wadding comes in full sizes, all ready to tack between covers.

Attractive Bed Coverings

While the first consideration is one of comfort, a distinctive daytime covering for her bed is the wish of every woman who loves attractive surroundings. White is always restful to the eye, but it soils, oh, so easily, and I suppose for this very reason we have returned to our great-great-grandmothers' ideas of colored coverlets and bedspreads. Daintily checked ginghams, striped seersuckers, chintz or cretonne are the most favored fabrics, because they do not soil or crush easily, and can be given a fresh appearance by simply pressing.

The one illustrated shows a plain color attractively combined with a floral pattern. Both materials are of cretonne. The plain centers of sham and bedspread are cut the same width so that a straight line will be continuous from head to foot of bed. In cutting the figured border, the corners are mitered. At the foot, the sides and end pieces are left open below the rail and hang each side of the bedpost.

Corns

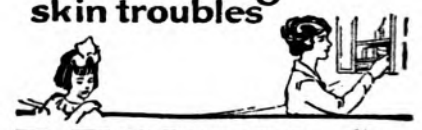
Lift Off with the Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between toes, and calluses, without pain, soreness.

TALKING MACHINE FREE

A REAL MACHINE WHICH REPRODUCES TALKING, SINGING AND DANCE MUSIC PERFECTLY

This is the old reliable company—we treat you right.



We pay the postage on everything.

Plays any size or make disc record. Strongly and durably made, will give you pleasure for years. Fully guaranteed. We give machine with record free for selling only 40 packets of Garden Spot Seeds for us at 10c per pack. No money required. WE TRUST YOU. Write for seeds today. When sold, send $4.00 collected and Talking Machine, complete, is yours.

Lancaster County Seed Co., Sta. 21, PARADISE, PA.

First Aid For cuts, burns, scalds and all itching skin troubles

RESINOL No home should be without it

Soothing and Healing

Love Will Find the Way

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6.)

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE AWAKENING OF JUNIUS.

"Mr. Beckwith is down-stairs, Miss Gordon."

The servant made the announcement standing at the door of Anne Gordon's boudoir, and she rose swiftly, a sweet, happy color surmounting her cheeks.

It was the man whom she loved who awaited her, and her heart thrilled with delight as she heard his name even from the lips of the servant.

How quickly he had responded to her little message, and how grateful she was to him that he cared for her! She was so humble, so sweetly submissive in her great love, that it seemed to her she was scarcely fit to touch the tips of his fingers. She forgot her own youth, her beauty, her glorious womanhood; she forgot that there were few women under heaven even comparable to her in her great, unselfish, generous affections, and it seemed to her that she was receiving all and giving nothing in return.

There was a smile in her eyes that changed all the sadness into sunshine as she leaned over Janet Reade and kissed her cheek.

"You will excuse me for a few minutes, and rest here until I return," she said gently. "I sent for Mr. Beckwith in order that he might help us with his advice. Have courage; all will be well."

As she spoke the words her lips trembled slightly, for she suddenly remembered again what might be the fate of the girl whom she had chosen to call her sister. It did not have the power to rob her of all the happiness at the thought of her lover's presence, but there was little of the dancing light in her eyes that had been there at the maid's announcement when she entered the room where June awaited.

She went up to him swiftly and placed both her hands in his. She leaned her forehead for a moment against his lips, and forgot to observe the coldness of his greeting. She was not even aware that he did not kiss her, so absorbed was she again in her thoughts for another.

"I am so glad you came so quickly," she said, drawing herself back and looking at him.

"You sent, did you not?" he asked, with a little weary smile. "I shall always try to respond just as promptly to any request of yours. How excited you look, Anne, and how unusual it is! Has anything happened?"

"Yes. Sit down while I tell you. You have always been so interested in her that I know you will feel as excited as I do."

"Her? Who?"

"Marian."

He started slightly and his eyes dropped; a little pallor crept up through his cheeks; but in her innocence Anne Gordon thought nothing of it. She leaned forward and took his hand eagerly.

"Ah, don't look like that, June!" she exclaimed, with tender earnestness. "I felt so sure that I could count on you; I felt so sure that you would help me in everything. The subject wearies you, dear; but for my sake you must do what you can. Won't you promise me, June?"

How like a hypocrite he felt! For one brief moment he was tempted to tell her the truth, but the temptation vanished, and he held his tongue. He lifted her hand and pressed it to his cheeks, not his lips.

"What is it that you wish to tell me, Anne?" he asked gently. "I thought that subject was to be dead between us?"

"Yes, I know; but, you see, all the circumstances have changed."

"All what circumstances?"

He had turned his eyes upon her suddenly, intently; his lips were slightly parted, and his breath came through them with a little curious sound.

"Those that surrounded Marian."

"Changed? How?"

The two words were scarcely more than hoarse whispers. She observed his earnestness, and it gratified her. There was no room for jealousy in that stanch and loyal heart.

"She was not guilty of that of which we accused her, June."

"Not guilty? What are you talking about, Anne? You don't usually speak in conundrums."

His tone was almost sharp. She had never heard him speak like that before, but she did not resent it in the least. She only drew his hand more closely within her warm clasp, and told him the story as nearly as she and Janet Reade had been able to put it together. She told it connectedly, if a little excitedly, and he listened in silence, never interrupting her by word or exclamation until she had finished. Even then he did not speak until Anne said:

"Are you not sorry for her, June? Do you not see how the poor child was sacrificing herself to save that worthless father? We must do something to save her, dear—you and I—and I have sent for you to tell me what we had best do first."

He was ghastly; his eyes were burning in their intensity. He did not look at her. He felt that she would have read every thought in his anguished soul if he had. He looked straight ahead, and tried to infuse his voice with some naturalness, though without much success, as he said:

"And this robbery? What night was it that you say it was committed?"

"Do you remember the night we heard Melba in 'Lucia'?"

He nodded, incapable of speech.

"It was the night after. You remember the following day was Marian's birthday. She went home that afternoon. It was that night that her father committed the robbery, and the following morning, before I had discovered the loss, the jewels were returned."

And it was the same morning that Marian had written him that fatal letter which lay then in the back of his watch. It was under the awful agony upon her that she had enclosed that little flower, telling him that she was as withered in soul as the tiny talisman she had enclosed.

And he had not understood it! He had not trusted the purity of her angel soul above all else in the world! He had not trusted the little heart-broken messenger that she had sent! He was only too ready to believe her false.

And she had told him that lie, that had lain like lead upon his soul, in order that she might spare him pain!

That thought was apparent to him now. He seemed to read all her unselfishness, all her generosity, all her love in that one act. She had

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 19.)

Corn
ift Off with the sn't hurt a bit! Dr zone" on an aching co
orn stops hurting, the right off with fingers.
lls a tiny bottle of "
cents, sufficient to re
corn, soft corn, or co nd calluses, without pa
KING MACHINE
L MA-WHICH UCES
SING.
ER.
ake disc
trongly and dur-
le, will give you pleasure for ye
ed. We give machine with rec ily 40 packets of Garden Seed be r pack. No money required. Wr rite for seeds today. When sold and Talking Machine, easily
r County Seed Co., Sta.21, PEORI
'st Aid Fo
ts, burns, scal
l all itching n troubles
'SINOL
ning and Healing

Lessens Woman's Work

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 13.)

needs of the worker to carry on her varying tasks in a way that will provide comfort for her family, and save herself from that form of drudgery caused by lack of conveniences, many of which, when once acquired, last a lifetime.

The long counters, built on two sides of the kitchen, are invaluable. Closets and drawers are built beneath them, but at intervals they should be left open to receive the blue-flame oilstove, the fireless cooker, the high stool, the kitchen wagon, or other articles that otherwise would be in the way when not in use.

Another special feature is the cooking center which is built in to the right of the sink. In the compartments enclosed overhead are stored the dry supplies used in cooking, while in the long one to the right are hung the various sized stew-pans, a rack for kettle covers, muffin-pans, cake-cooler, frying-pans, and baking-pans of various sizes. If arranged with care this high closet will hold a large equipment.

Between the underside of counterboard and top drawer is a stationary bread-board, made with a cleat across the back end to prevent its ever being pulled way out of the opening, which is just wide enough to allow the board to be pushed in and out without binding. It may be made the full depth of the counter.

In the drawers beneath, which are made with compartments, are kept such equipment as egg-beaters, graters, strainers, potato-ricer, various cutters, apple corer, can opener, corkscrew, kitchen teaspoons, etc.

To the extreme right is a flour bin which is hinged in at the base, while the top is cut with a backward curve which enables the bin to be pulled forward for use, and pushed back flush when not in use. In winter these are particularly useful, as a large amount of flour is at hand and will keep at the kitchen temperature.

Under the sink are two doors and to the left two drawers. Behind the right-hand door is kept the molasses, vinegar, sugar bucket and other large-size containers. Behind the door at the left is kept soap, stacked without wrappers so it will be continually drying, ammonia, starch, silver and brass polish, and other supplies of this class. If these spaces are at all inclined to gather moisture, the doors should be made with lattice-work laid in squares.

In the drawers are kept clean holders, neat piles of old cloth for all kinds of household purposes, a box containing a hammer, a few nails and screws of various sizes, hooks and a small screwdriver, and brushes for various purposes. Of the three larger drawers to the left, in the upper two are kept such supplies as pertain to both dining-room and kitchen, including kitchen towels, napkins and covers, doilies, tray-cloths, bibs and eating aprons, kitchen aprons, thin boxes of paraffin paper for lunches, paper napkins, etc., while in the lower is kept clean wrapping paper and bags spread smoothly, and string carefully saved. The closets overhead are for dishes.

The whole secret is to save steps by grouping similar things and placing them near the part of the room where they will be used.

The two panels under dish closet indicate an opening, with hinged or sliding doors, through which articles may be passed into the adjoining room, which may be either the dining-room or pantry, and thus save a journey around through the door at the left end of the counter.

The Dropleaf Table

To the right of the stove, and under the lamp shelf a collapsible table has been built. One of its purposes is to provide a center for lamp filling and cleaning, which should never be carried on near dishes or sink. After all trace of the lamp work has been removed to the shed, the table is ready to serve for other kinds of work which the general-purpose kitchen always provides, and which should be kept apart. As a place on which to set a meal for the belated one, this side table is a great comfort to the housewife, for it allows her to transfer just the necessary dishes and food and then proceed with the general clearing away. When used temporarily for sewing, this table is invaluable to the woman who must keep so many "irons in the fire" at once. With sufficient light from above, it also provides an excellent study table.

Being collapsible, it can be dropped against the wall and the space used for other purposes when necessary. In constructing this table, a strip is first securely fastened to the wall, and the leaf fastened to this with strong hinges. When raised, the leaf gets its support by means of wooden brackets hinged to the wall. These are cut from the same thickness of lumber as the strip, so that when they are turned back against the wall the leaf will hang straight down. If the leaf is more than three feet long, it should be supported by two brackets.

Every kitchen needs a cozy corner near a window with a comfortable chair and a wall desk, where writing materials, household accounts, cook-books, and literature having reference to farm machinery and agriculture is kept.

These wall shelves occupy the space between the outside boarding and the plastering inside, and this may be extended by boxing in the frame to the desired depth. The door is hinged at the lower edge and provides writing or reading leaf when open. A length of chain, on each side, with one end fastened half way down the inside of door, and the other on the inside of the frame about two-thirds the way up, provides support and drops inside when the door is closed. A stout, non-stretching cord may be used in place of the chain.

An ironing board that is always ready for service is an indispensable equipment. It is unfair for any housewife to be obliged to spread her ironing pad and cover upon a table, for not only will her work be unsatisfactory but her progress will be slow compared with ironing at a proper height on a tightly-covered board. Unless one has a board of the portable, folding type, a wall board is recommended, which many prefer to any other kind. By studying the illustration on cover, it will be seen how simple an arrangement it is. A cleat is fastened to the wall and the widest end of the board hinged to it, so when not in use the board swings upward, flat against the wall, where it is held in place by means of a strong hook which catches into a staple on the underside of board near the end. The hook swings from a small cleat on the wall. When in use the board is supported by a strong strip, one end of which is hinged to the underside of board while the other rests on the floor against the baseboard.

Proper Height of Working Surfaces

The top of the stove, tables, kitchen counters, the bottom of the sink, or any other surfaces upon which a given task is to be performed, should be at such a height from the floor that the housewife can work easily without being obliged to stoop or raise her arms unnecessarily.

If the surface is too low, as is so often the case, the worker must continually raise and lower the upper part of the body with each motion, while if it is too high she must lift her arms in such a way as to bring unnecessary strain on the muscles. Either of these means a needless waste of energy and greatly increases the labor connected with kitchen tasks. They can be avoided by raising or lowering the table, etc., as need be, which in many cases may be done by placing the table upon blocks of wood, preferably hollowed on top to prevent the legs of the table from slipping. A still better plan is having the table legs spliced if too short or, if too long, cut off. Likewise, the stove can be blocked up, its own weight holding it in place.

No one set rule for heights of working surfaces will apply, since all depends on the stature of the worker and the length of her arms. However, there is a general rule that may be followed with the addition of a little judgment on the part of the worker, which is, that most surfaces, including the bottom of the sink, should be from thirty-one to thirty-six inches from the floor, for workers that range from five feet one inch to five feet eight inches tall. For the ironing board, the workable height is a little lower, in order that the weight of the body may be utilized in obtaining pressure. It should not, however, be so low that the worker will have to bend over too much. If a sink is too low, and cannot at once be changed, a wooden rack can be used under the dishpan to raise it to an easy working level. Another feature connected with the sink is that there is little spattering if the height is right.

If it can be avoided, no counter or table top should be made of soft wood, as it requires far too much bleaching and scrubbing to be profitable. Zinc for working surfaces is the best, and if fitted and soldered at the corners, is sanitary and will last indefinitely. It should also be cut large enough to be bent upward six inches where it meets a wall, a square cut from the corners, the edges brought together and soldered. All front edges should extend over and under the edge of board and then hammered into place. Where this plan is carried out, no tacking is necessary. Next to zinc, a top of hard wood occasionally treated with a coat of boiling hot linseed oil is the most satisfactory.

Rain Water in the House

Probably nothing counts more materially as a labor saver than rain water conducted into the farm kitchen, yet so many will get along without it, or perhaps catch a tubful at the corner of the house.

For the vast amount of benefit received, it costs comparatively little to build a cistern and connect it by means of gutters and conductors with the roofs of the buildings. If at the beginning of each rain the conductors are turned aside and the water allowed to run upon the ground until the dust is washed from the roofs, the water will remain white and clean in the cistern. Or, if water is scarce, the first that runs can be caught in tubs, and when strained be useful for many purposes.

On the cover you will see an illustration which shows how a molasses barrel or hogshead may be installed to carry a limited amount of rain water into a shed sink where the children and farm hands may wash and thus save confusion at the kitchen sink. The barrel cover is in two parts, the smaller being about one-third of the cover which is nailed in place, and receives the conductor. The second part of the cover is hinged to this and fits closely to keep out insects and dust.

Miscellaneous Equipment

An emery-wheel, on which kitchen knives may be ground, is almost indispensable, and a rack made by nailing two boards at right angles and cutting grooves into which the various sized knives may be slipped when not in use, is a great convenience to the housewife. Such an emery-wheel clamps to the corner of a bench or table and is removable, if so desired, when not in use. The cost is small.

A meat-grinder, or sometimes better called a food-chopper, as its mission is to grind many kinds of food besides meat, is a real necessary which saves both time and material.

Reliable scales for weighing are another kitchen necessary when canning and preserving days come, besides all the year through there will be many occasions when it is important to know the correct weight of an article.

A kitchen press of which there are many types, is another labor saver when it comes to making jelly, grape juice or a little sweet cider.

The Kitchen Floor

Fifty years ago little attention was given to kitchen floors beyond having them of sound lumber, level and fairly tight. They were usually left bare and unfinished, or at most given one or two coats of paint which soon wore off in the most used places.

There are just two practical ways of having a kitchen floor: hard wood, or covered with oil-cloth or linoleum.

If made of wood, hard pine, when properly filled as soon as laid, makes a good wearing floor, and in most localities costs less than maple, birch or oak. But on immediate filling of the wood depends its time of usefulness, for if allowed to fill with dust, dry out and open at the seams, or is given soap and water before it is treated, it will splinter and be very unsatisfactory. The following treatment will be found effective: Sandpaper until smooth, brush clean, then dust with a clean dry cloth. Bring to a boil some boiled linseed oil, which may be bought prepared. Have ready an equal quantity of spirits of turpentine. Take the hot oil out of doors, and there mix it with the turpentine. This must never be done indoors as it is very inflammable. Apply generously and rapidly while the mixture is hot, making an application two days in succession. The floor should now be allowed to dry for not less than two days, and on the third another coat of hot oil and turpentine applied. Let dry until the surface appears firm, which will take several days, then finish with some guaranteed floor filler varnish that is elastic. Two coats should be used, letting several days elapse between coats. If kept brushed with a long-handled hair broom and the spots wiped up with clear soft water, a general washing will seldom be required. The floor should be varnished once a year in warm weather, and prepared by washing in tepid water without soap.

While the hard-wood floor is all very well, nothing equals covering the floor with a good grade of linoleum when it comes to labor and dollar saving. To be sure, linoleum costs more than oilcloth at the start, but in the end it will cost less. It should have a good coat of floor filler varnish once a year.

The length of time that linoleum wears depends in no small degree as to how it is laid. Careful measurements of the room are first taken, then the linoleum cut. Avoid seams coming in much-used places. When it is necessary to use narrow strips, push the whole breadths over the important spaces, and use the narrow pieces at the edges where there is no wear.

Any unevenness or rough places in the floor will wear the linoleum, so this feature must be given careful attention. Lay the linoleum, but do not tack it to the floor for six weeks or two months, as it stretches with use. Keep watch for any places that buckle, then trim around the edges until it will again lie flat.

If you cannot afford to cover your entire floor with linoleum, cover the center at least, letting it run a little way under the stove, up to the sink and counters. Follow above directions for tacking.

Saving needless labor is just as true economy as careful spending of money.

Running Water Piped Into the House

Though mentioned last, yet most important of all for health and comfort, not only of the housewife but of the entire household, is running water piped into the house from a pure and abundant source of supply. Many farm houses are thus equipped, and every one should be if by any means possible. If a natural source of supply such as a pond, reliable spring or never-failing brook is available, or sufficient water is obtainable from a well, a windmill or gasolene or kerosene engine will pump it to the elevated tank whence it may be piped to flow by force of gravity to the house. Thus supplied, and with the further adjunct of a water front or coil in the fire-box of the cook-stove, hot and cold water may be on tap at the kitchen sink and the ineffable luxury of a bathroom and flush-closet can be installed in the farm home.

The Book of Opportunity

The new Larkin Catalog brings you the opportunity to obtain without expense charming Dresses and Coats, handsome furnishings for your home and hundreds of other things for which you long. Our Catalog describes and clearly illustrates all the famous Larkin Products and Premiums. Every offer fully guaranteed. Easy to order. Let us send you this valuable book—FREE.

GIVEN TO YOU
as a Reward for Spare Moments

The stylish Serge Dress and handsome Rocker shown here are good examples of the valuable Rewards given to you for conducting a Larkin Club of friends and neighbors. Thousands of home-loving women are clothing themselves and making their homes attractive with Larkin Premiums obtained through this pleasant, spare-time occupation. Beautiful Premiums may also be obtained by your Club-members just through buying every-day necessities on the Larkin Factory-to-Family Plan. By our Plan the money that stocks your pantry will also furnish your home.

Larkin Spring Catalog FREE

Pictures and describes 800 famous Larkin Products—Pure Foods, Soaps, Toilet Articles, Clothing, etc.—and the 1700 valuable Premiums given with them. New offers. More prices reduced. Tells how to become a Larkin Secretary and earn big Rewards. Coupon brings new Catalog with complete details about spare-time profits.

MAIL COUPON TODAY
Larkin Co Inc. Buffalo, N. Y. Chicago, Ill. Peoria, Ill.
Please send your new Spring Catalog No. 76.
Name.....
Address.....
GP448.....

Love Will Find the Way

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18.)

tried to make him believe that she did not care, thinking he would suffer less.

And he had been only too willing to believe.

He recalled then how she had looked into his eyes that morning in the park, how happy she was! He knew that she loved him with all the strength of her pure nature. And then he thought of how she must have suffered before she could bring herself to write the note that she intended should separate them forever.

And yet, even that must have been small to her in comparison with the cause.

A little groan welled up from his heart, and found egress through his lips. Then suddenly he remembered—Anne Gordon—his betrothed wife!

It was with an awful start of horror that he could scarcely keep within bounds. He did not know how long she had been silent. He did not know what the last words were which she had spoken. He felt a violent trembling upon him, without any power whatever to control it.

He did not speak; because, in the first place, he was afraid of himself, and then he did not know what he was expected to say. He did not know whether she had asked him a question or not.

He waited, the silence becoming unbearable; and then at last she broke it.

"What do you think of it all?" she asked.

"I don't know," he answered vaguely.

"But you don't expect me to give her up, June, because her father is a scoundrel?" Anne asked, wistfully.

He caught her hands in a grasp that hurt her. He was scarcely aware of his own vehemence, but it touched her good and honest heart.

"Give her up?" he exclaimed. "No, no—never! We must find her. We must do what can be done to rectify the horrible mistake that has been made. And there is no time to lose, Anne."

She lifted the hand that had hurt her and kissed it.

"I was sure you would say that," she said tenderly. "It is like my June. You will help me—or, rather, we will help each other. How good you are! But there is another thing, dear, which I have—feared, and yet have not allowed myself to think."

"What?"

"Can't you guess? Remember what she has suffered, dear. Think! First the robbery, and then finding herself under the hideous disgrace that must have come upon her. You know how sensitive she is. June, what thought do you suppose would be the first to enter the head of a foolish girl, when she believed that she had lost everything which life held most dear?"

He did not reply. He sat there staring at her as if he had suddenly lost his senses. She leaned forward and whispered a sentence into his ear.

"Would it not be suicide?"

He did not say anything. He arose mechanically and picked up his hat.

She felt a strange influence upon her, and in her endeavor to shake it off she laughed nervously, discordantly.

"But that is foolish," she exclaimed. "She has not done it. We won't believe it—you and I. We will find her, June, and she will be happy with us, dear—our sweet, much-cherished sister!"

He looked at her for a moment with something like madness in his brain, and then turned away.

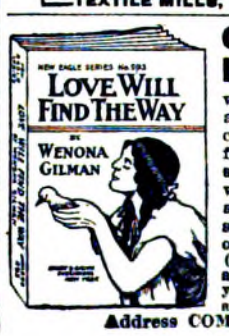
"I will go," he said dully, "and see what it is possible for me to discover."

TO BE CONTINUED

FREE DIAMOND RING OFFER
Just to advertise our famous Hawaiian im. diamonds—the greatest discovery the world has ever known. We will send absolutely free this 14k gold f. ring, set with a 1-2k Hawaiian im. diamond—in beautiful ring box postage paid. Pay postmaster $1.48 C.O.D. charges to cover postage, boxing, advertising, handling, etc. If you can tell it from a real diamond return and money refunded. Only 10,000 given away. Send no money. Answer quick. Send size of finger.
KRAUTH & REED, Dept. 130
MASONIC TEMPLE CHICAGO

Big Band Catalog sent free
Whatever you need—from a drumstick to the highest priced cornets in the world. Used by the Army and Navy. Send for big catalog; liberally illustrated, fully descriptive. Mention what instrument interests you. Free trial. Easy payments. Sold by leading music stores everywhere.
LYON & HEALY
79-85 JACKSON BLVD., CHICAGO

10 Buys 100 Millions Billions in use to-day
Engel "Art Corners"
No Paste Needed
Use them to mount all kodak pictures, post cards, clippings in albums
Made in Square, Round, Oval, Fancy and Heart of black, gray, sepia, and red gummed paper. Slip them on corners of pictures, then wet and stick. QUICK-EASY-ARTISTIC. No muss, no fuss. At photo supply, drug and stat'y stores. Accept no substitutes; there is nothing as good. 10c brings full pkg. and samples
Erwin Engel Mfg. Co. Dept 100C, 4711 N. Clark St., Chicago



High School Course in 2 Years
You can complete this simplified High School Course at home inside of two years. Meets all requirements for entrance to college and the leading professions. This and thirty-six other practical courses are described in our Free Bulletin. Send for it TODAY.
AMERICAN SCHOOL
Dept. H 317 Drexel Ave. & 58th St. CHICAGO

MUSIC LESSONS FREE

You can read music like this quickly
IN YOUR HOME. Write today for our FREE booklet. It tells how to learn to play Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Banjo, etc. Beginners or advanced players. Your only expense about 2c per day for music and postage used.
AMERICAN SCHOOL of MUSIC, 15 Lakeside Bldg., CHICAGO

REMNANTS 66c A Yd.
Beautiful assortment of serges, Tricotines and silks at less than wholesale. Blues, Wine, Gray, etc. Remnants of 4 and 5 yard lengths, sufficient to make suit or dress.
MONEY BACK IF NOT SATISFIED.
Save money. Make your own clothes. These remnants will save you up to $1.50 a yard. WRITE FOR INFORMATION.
TEXTILE MILLS, DEPT. 1708, KANSAS CITY, MO.

Get The Book FREE! If you would like to read the whole of this wonderful story at once and learn its thrilling conclusion, rather than wait for the monthly installments as they appear in COMFORT, we will be glad to make you a present of the complete story in book form. Send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, and we will send you a copy of the book free and postpaid.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Let Us Send You

This lovely silk embroidered Navy blue cotton serge Jumper dress prepaid to your door for only $1.39. Greatest offer ever made. Order Today Sure. Don't send one penny now. Wonderful dress bargain will be shipped to you by return mail prepaid

On Approval

Every woman and miss should have at least one of these stunning Blue Serge dresses. Jumper dresses are all the rage this season. Dress is modishly cut in the latest stylish low waist line effect and handsomely trimmed with rich silk embroidery in contrasting shades. Lovely broad sash girdle. Sizes: Misses, 14 to 18 years; Women, 32 to 46 Bust.

Embroidered Blue Serge Jumper Dress $1.39 Prepaid

Worth $3.00

Smashing reduced price good only while our present limited supply lasts. Wonderful money-saving opportunity. Hurry or you may be too late. Send your order in this minute to avoid disappointment.

SEND NO MONEY

No, Ma'am, just your name, address, and size is all we want. You pay only our slashed price of $1.39 when you receive handsome dress. Rush your order in. YOUR MONEY BACK IF YOU ARE NOT DELIGHTED. You risk nothing.

POSTAGE PAID We pay delivery charges. Another big saving. You pay only our 30-Day bargain price of $1.39 on arrival of goods. World's greatest dress offer. Order today at our risk. State size.

Big Catalogue Mailed Free

BERNARD-HEWITT & CO.

Dept. X 533, CHICAGO, ILL.

Queen Anne Vanity

Dresser 20c a Day

Figured Walnut, full length mirror. Complete suite and 1228 other beautiful Furnishings on easy payments in our FREE 128 Page Larkin Book of Better Homes.

- ☐ Furnishings
- ☐ Symphonic Pianos
- ☐ Symphonic Player Pianos
- ☐ Symphonolas

(Check offer interested in)

Symphonic Pianos, Symphonic Player Pianos and Symphonolas (the phonograph with natural tone, which plays all Records) sold to tens of thousands of music lovers past nine years. Get our Book describing these famous musical instruments by checking above.

NO Money Down — 30 Days FREE Trial—1 to 4 Years TIME

Check offer now. Cut out this ad. Give your full name and address. Mail TODAY.

Desk FCT 322 Larkin Co Inc. Buffalo, N.Y.

6 L'ace Curtains FREE

for selling only 40 packs vegetable seeds at 10c per large pack. Or this handsomely decorated

31 pc. Blue Bird Dinner Set given according to plan in our catalog. Similar to sets retailing at $10. Send today. Easily sold. Earn Big Money or Premiums. Send no money. We trust you with seeds until sold.

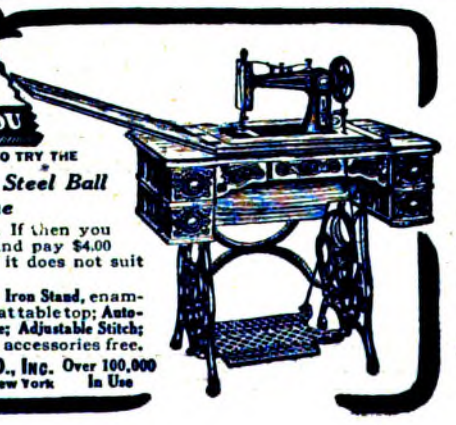
AMERICAN SEED CO., Box E-32, Lancaster, Pa.

Tire Agents Wanted An auto owner in each locality to use and introduce Mellinger Extra-Ply and Cord Tires. Make big money part or full time. No capital or experience needed. Sample Sections Furnished. GUARANTEED 8,000 & 10,000 Miles (No Seconds). Hand made. Finest materials. Shipped prepaid on approval.

FREE TIRES FOR YOUR CAR to one user in each locality. Be first to write quick for special Agents Offer and Low Wholesale Prices.

MELLINGER TIRE & RUBBER CO. 923 North Oak St., Kansas City, Mo.



FREE 15 DAY TRIAL

SEND NO MONEY

EASY PAYMENTS IF IT SUITS YOU

JUST WRITE TODAY AND SAY YOU WANT TO TRY THE

Faultless Drop-Head, Steel Ball Bearing Sewing Machine

When it arrives use it free for fifteen days. If then you are fully satisfied with it, send us $3.95—and pay $4.00 each month for 7 months—$31.95 in all. If it does not suit you, ship it back at our expense.

Genuine Oak Woodwork, beautifully finished; Iron Stand, enamelled glossy black; Headfolds inside, leaving flat table top; Automatic Bobbin Winder; Self Threading Cylinder Shuttle; Adjustable Stitch; All up to date improvements. All tools and accessories free.

25 Year Guarantee — NATIONAL FARM EQUIPMENT CO., INC. DEPT. 38, 98 CHAMBERS ST., New York — Over 100,000 In Use

MARRIAGE

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 10.)

"Oh, Hal, you may be talking sense—I confess I don't know. But is it unreasonable for a man to expect his wife to keep his house in order? And should the strain of boiling coffee six minutes and an egg four give brain fag to an intelligent woman?"

"That is beside the point," dismissed Harriet. "And you speak of partnership. Do you think that Richard admitted you to full membership in your family firm? Never. You are merely the office boy, Norah. Buck up, my dear. I know you are sick——"

"I am not sick, Hal. There is nothing on earth the matter with me but my infernal spiritual rebellion. Where is my trunk?"

Norah reached Gray late that evening to find the president of the college waiting for her.

"Now, none of that," he said kindly as he observed her dilating eyes. "Doctor Landis is no worse. We took him to the hospital today. You are coming home with me and after I have told you all about it, I will turn you over to Mrs. Linton for comfort."

Seated in his library, Doctor Linton told Norah how her husband had driven himself during the past weeks.

"He was giving four lectures a week at the summer school, but it was the book that he agonized over. We find that he worked on it till far into the nights and I fancy he was none too regular about his meals."

Norah shuddered.

"It will be months, Doctor Rand says, before he can resume his regular work. We are," he added, "as you probably know, not a heavily-endowed college."

Norah's color rose and she started to speak but he restrained her.

"The trustees met this afternoon and decided, in consideration of his value to us, to pay, themselves, his salary for next year, at the same time giving him leave of absence."

"Oh!" Norah breathed. "Charity!"

"That is unkind, Mrs. Landis."

"Oh, it is, Doctor Linton. Forgive me. They are splendid. I thank them all. Will you tell them so? But we can't accept it. At least," she faltered, "I do not think that we can. You see, I am confused tonight. But deeply grateful. I must think."

"Of course." And after a warm handclasp he turned her over to his wife who was waiting with a bowl of hot broth.

Norah was at the hospital early the next morning but Doctor Rand was before her.

"How is he, doctor?" she asked before he had done greeting her.

"He'll be better now," he hedged.

"Doctor Rand, will it harm him if I talk to him—about business?"

"I hope it will do him good. The man is worried and the quicker we eliminate worry the faster he will mend. Twenty minutes, Mrs. Landis, and not a second more."

Landis turned his fever-bright eyes to her as she entered and she ran to the bed and sank on her knees, laying her cheek against his.

"Dick," she sobbed, "I've been so wicked."

He ran a hand over her ruddy hair. "You!" he cried. "I am the one who has been wicked, Norah. I have been thinking since you left me——"

"Dick, please!"

"I must go on, Norah. I wanted to come up to Twilight Park to tell you this, but you gave no sign that I would be welcome.

"I was stupid, dear. I granted man the right to choose his work; I denied that right to woman as soon as she became a wife. I see now that I had no right to assume that all women would thrill to do housework any more than that all men should choose to be carpenters."

"But I do want to keep your house, Dick. I will scrub for you, cook or brew or mend for you—smiling. Because I love you."

"Hush, dear! It is your emotion and not your reason that is speaking now. Let me finish my general confession. I crushed your eager spirit. I pitchforked you into a ready-made environment and bade you get your happiness by being my fireside goddess. This isn't sick-bed repentance, Norah, and I can prove it. Dear, I have rented the house you loved on the edge of town. They're putting in a skylight and hollyhocks have been set out against the garden wall. We'll swing it together, Norah."

"Dear." Her voice was very low and tender. "You see, you're smashed. And they want you to rest for a year."

She felt his body sag under the covers and a spasm of pain contorted his features.

"But the trustees have offered to pay your salary themselves. That is what they think of you."

"I'm much obliged," he muttered through closed teeth, "but I'll see them damned first."

"That is what I said," sparkled Norah. "Oh, not profanely, Dick, but very demurely."

"We must give up the house," he said listlessly.

"Dick, we're married. We're a family unit. Why should it humiliate us to pool the fruits of our talents? You would work for me till the last gasp. Is it fair to deny me the same privilege—at work I love?"

In health he had done his sum of surrender. Incapacitated, the results were not the same. It was one thing to let Norah work with him. It was quite another to permit her to work for him. But he had surrendered—gallantly. To revoke that surrender would, he felt, degrade him in the eyes of the woman he loved.

However, he protested. "Norah, it is a man's privilege to take care of his wife."

"Of course it is, foolish. Just let me catch you trying to shirk it."

His lips relaxed a trifle.

"Mother's furniture," Norah hurried on, "is stored in New York. And I have my things from the studio. We can furnish that house so attractively! I'll be at work before you can turn around. I had a letter from an art editor only three days ago. I haven't answered it. I'll wire my reply inside an hour. Honey, maybe they won't let you teach for a year, but I'll contract to make you fit to write. We'll nurse the hollyhocks together and then while you write I'll draw. And we'll roam over the hills and dream; and come back to the firelight—to dream. And if it humiliates you, no one need know. It is our business——"

"As if I cared! Norah, I'm proud of you. And you shall be proud of me."

"I have always been," she said simply.

"But prouder. I can feel something racing through my veins that I know is power. My book will be a success——"

"Time's up," the doctor entered to announce.

Norah rose, her face radiant. "What if it is?" she queried impudently. "Who said it wasn't? And who cares, anyway? I warn you that you needn't come around trying to bully us, Doctor Rand.

The old man chuckled indulgently.

"Now, Dick, I'm off to send some messages. Can I do anything for you?"

"If you've time, Norah——"

"All the time there is, Dick."

"You might run out for a look at the skylight—and the hollyhocks. And then come back to tell me about them. Doctor, get out of here, I'm going to sleep."

He watched Norah's vibrant figure disappear through the door, turned to the kind-faced old man with a whimsical smile, and burrowed his head in his pillow for his first dreamless sleep in weeks.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 17.)

in about the center, leaving a large space on the sides for gardens. There are three large shade trees in front, while the barn, chicken yard and a small garden are in the back. I have a small kitchen, only eight and one-half by eleven feet. The walls and ceiling are painted a pretty light green, darker green linoleum on floor, work table covered with green oilcloth, green portieres in doorway, green blind with cream curtains with rose and green border are at the window. I use a coal oil range during the hot months. This is my summer kitchen. I have a larger room to use for winter. At present it is papered in pale grey with grey linoleum and white curtains. I have a screened in porch and as the pantry is in the end of this it makes a good work-room on hot days.

Can any of the sisters tell me how to keep pot flowers blooming through the winter? I have no luck with mine.

I would be glad to hear from anyone who cares to write.

VIOLA STUCKEY.

FLINTSTONE, MD.

HELLO SISTERS:

I'll tell you how I look, as I'm a newcomer and you don't know me. I am five feet, two inches short, dark brown hair and eyes, weigh 110 pounds and am an everlasting reader. Was nineteen years old the 4th of last June. COMFORT was the first paper I ever read and it has been a valuable friend always.

Last summer, while on one of my rambles, I came upon an old deserted house and while exploring around I came to a large pile of papers and magazines of all descriptions. Searching eagerly through them I said to myself, "This is a curious collection if COMFORT isn't here." Suddenly I found my friend but would never have recognized it but for the name. The paper was older than I am. Not even a Sisters' Corner mentioned, no League of Cousins, no Cousin Marion, no Katherine Booth, but searching hurriedly through the paper I found much that was good. Later, laying the paper by the side of its grownup self I remarked seriously, "You certainly have improved since a child."

Mother left us before I was twelve years old and I have been housekeeper for my father, brothers and sisters since. I have two sisters and three brothers younger than myself. They are all going to school and I have been a few days this winter. Am a Freshman in the high school here.

We have a farm of 450 acres, four miles from high school but a bus carries the children there and back every day. I doubt if I will go to school much more this winter for my health isn't the best so if you want to brighten my days, write me letters.

VIRGIE HELEN STONESTREET.

NEBRASKA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND EVERYBODY:

Have just been reading the December number for the second time and when I read "Aunt Sally-Lou's" letter I thought I would take a chance on the waste basket.

I, too, think Molly-Joe should get married.

I am another who has always had to give up and stay at home. First I had to quit school and take care of the children and keep house when mother died. Then I gave up the man I expected to marry and stayed home and let my sister go to work for herself. In a few years the same man hunted me up but I had to give him up again because my father said he couldn't spare me. Now father is gone and I have no home. Am keeping house for a cousin but I would give almost anything for a home of my own.

With best wishes,

MISS OMAHA.

SOMEWHERE IN TENNESSEE.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS AND BROTHERS:

You sent me a lot of advice, but before my letter appeared I had gone to work away from home. It was hard to leave the dear ones but as they are most grown they would soon have left me. As it is I can go back when I get ready and if matters had gone on as they were I would have let my temper get away and that would have fixed things for good, so I am thinking I did the best thing.

Mrs. Wilkinson sent me a great bunch of letters that had been sent her for me. I tried to answer all who sent stamps. They went to my home before I received them and were opened and were greatly mixed up when they came to me. If I slighted any of you please do not think I was to blame. Every letter was precious to me.

Some of the sisters seem to think marriage is the answer to all troubles. I do not think so. Why can't one live happy and carefree single as well as married? Anyway, I intend to try it.

B. of Goshen, I hardly know how to take you. You seem to be more than one person. Won't you write me another letter?

Tonight I am at my aunt's home. I must make the most of my time for I must soon hie me back to my work. There were offers of work from several states but I am finding lots to do in my native state and to leave it would be most as hard as to leave Father.

I don't believe I have ever described myself but I can do it in three words,—jolly, fat and homely.

Oceans of good cheer to everybody. MOLLY JOE.

LIMESTONE, R. R. 2, TENN.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

May I have the floor for a few moments?

I wish to thank everyone for the nice letters I have received recently and am very sorry that I cannot write everyone a personal letter, but it is impossible. I have received more than two hundred letters and I shall try to answer all who sent stamps. I have put each letter carefully away and shall remember every one of you as personal friends. I pray for the unfortunate ones and I wish for you all greater and more abundant blessings than in the past years.

MRS. BONNIE BOVELL.

IOWA.

DEAR COMFORTABLE FOLKS:

Well, I find that some school teachers have sent in their letters and so I've decided to join the ranks after many years of silent reading. Indeed, old COMFORT is all and more than its name implies and the COMFORT Sisters' Corner is no mean part of that magazine, either.

I am twenty-one years of age and started on my fourth year of teaching last week. I always wanted to teach but find it really is a hard life. One has to be so careful as one never knows how even her most innocent actions are going to be misconstrued by the neighborhood. I've never had any serious trouble but many well-meaning teachers find themselves in some dilemma before they know where they are at fault.

Nettie Hudson, Deepwater, Missouri, I've found no "cure" for whispering although I think little extra tasks given to the offender helps. I am convinced that a child, if he is just the average, will whisper some.

Sunny Wright, I enjoyed the little home-out-west poem more than I can tell you and it now rests in my scrapbook. I have quite a number of poems in my book and am trying to find the two containing these lines:

"On a cross beam under the old south bell,
The nest of a pigeon is builded well," and

"It's a lot of fun in summer,
A-bringing home the cows."

Peggy of Port Huron, you've said just how to manage the "man." I have no man but I believe the Sunday Smiles would cheer the grumbler and one need never get into the rut of showing no affection.

This is my first visit so I'll step out of the way and let some worthier sister come in. But since home, husband and children are the leading subjects in the circle I will send from my scrapbook a true-to-life verse. Hope you like it.

Man of Mine

"The world knows not the heart of you,
As I do, man of mine,
It sees you quiet, stern and true,
I know you, tender, fine,
O man of mine!
To others you are gruff and cold,
To me, oh man of mine,
You are the lover as of old,
Changed not by fickle time,
O man of mine!
We've lived together many years,
We two, O man of mine,
With many smiles, with many tears,
But hearts like Silver Pine,
O man of mine."

—Beth Nichols.

Lovingly, SILVER SANDS.

LIMA, P. O. BOX 468, OHIO.

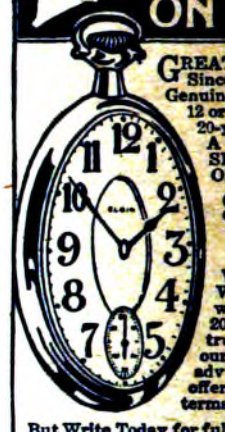
GOOD MORNING MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I say Hurrah for we are to have a Sisters' pin and I'll order a dozen and give eleven of them to that many shut-in sisters. Who could feel any prouder of the greatest lodge pin than we would feel of "our" pin? At every glance we could think of a united Club of loving sisters wherever COMFORT finds a monthly rest. I think it is a wonderful idea.

First let me give a description of myself before I proceed with the letter.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 30.)

Now $1.00 Down



KEEP the New Edison Amberola—Edison's great phonograph with the diamond stylus reproducer—and your choice of records, for only $1.00. Pay balance at rate of only a few cents a day. Hear it in your own home before you decide. Only $1.00 down. Seize this opportunity.

Write for Book

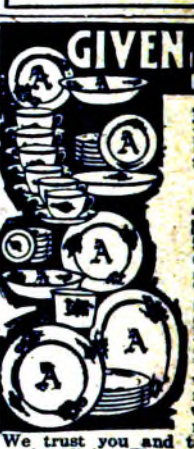
Get our New Edison catalog. Your name and address on a post card or letter is enough. Find out about this offer—while this offer lasts.

F. K. BABSON, Edison Phonograph Dists. 19th St. and Marshall Blvd., Dept. 3703, Chicago, Ill.

ELGINS ON CREDIT

GREATEST Watch Value Since The War! A New, Genuine Elgin; Thin Model, 12 or 16 size; complete in 20-year gold-filled case. A beautiful $20 Elgin, SPECIAL This Month, ONLY

$14.95



We Have Trusted Wage Earners Everywhere for more than 20 years, and we will trust you; and that all our friends may have advantage of this new offer, we have made the terms Only $2 a Month.

But Write Today for full details and Big Free Catalog of hundreds of Bargains at new prices. SEND NO MONEY — just your name and address.

HARRIS-GOAR CO.

Dept. 196, KANSAS CITY, MO.

GIVEN 42 PIECE INITIAL EMBLEM DINNER SET

Rose border pattern, with your initial or lodge emblem Given to you for telling your friends about

KIBLER'S ALL 'ROUND OIL

The perfect furniture polish and light lubricating oil. Truly named the oil of a thousand uses.

To get this beautiful set simply order and sell 10 containers at 50c each. Return the $15.00 and the dinner set is yours.

We also give Rogers silverware, lace curtains, rugs, bedspreads, glassware, etc. or cash commission.

We trust you and take the oil back if you can't sell it. The express charge will amount to about $1.00, which is paid by person receiving oil. We include more than enough free goods to cover same. Do not order oil unless you give your correct express office and agree to lift package on arrival. SEND NO MONEY.

The Kibler Co., Dept. A 24, Indianapolis, Ind.

Women! Corset Comfort Guaranteed

This Corset Sent on Trial

Have better health—perfect corset comfort—an ideal figure without tight lacing by wearing the wonderful

M & K Uplift Corset

Its patented, scientifically constructed Uplift belt gently lifts and supports the abdomen in its natural position. Stops backaches, headaches, bearing down pains and tired-out feeling. Reduces stout figures—supports the slender. Thousands of women would wear no other. Doctors prescribe it. Dressmakers like it. Write for Trial Offer, illustrated description and expert confidential advice. Address

KATHERINE KELLOGG M & K CORSET CO. 322 Kellogg Bldg., Jackson, Mich.

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9.)

"The name is baffling in its strange and incongruous consonantal combinations, Uncle Lisha," he said to me today, rubbing his head in a discouraged manner against my bookcase. "There is a tinge of Welsh amid the more musical Aryan syllables of the first name. This would lead one to believe this cousin is not entirely Oriental in ancestry and that he or she was not born in either Russia or the Far East." I told Bill, who seemed to need some encouragement and bolstering, that I felt certain he was right in thinking you were not a native of any part of the East. Cfoojf, you old Bolshevik, you have got Billy completely buffaloed and his brain is going around in circles. If none of the cousins is quicker-witted than Bill in discovering your true whereabouts, I predict there will be few cotton seeds arriving for you at the little post office of Njmops—to blossom later on amid the snows of the vast steppes of Op. Eblpub. I have just further worried Billy by telling him I feel certain that Njmops is a part of the Tbshfou province of southeastern Op. Eblpub, not far from the village of Hxjoofs. At which Bill threw a pile of three dictionaries in a corner and exclaimed: "This is only more of your absurd frivolity, Uncle Lisha. You know very well that I am endeavoring to approach this problem in a scientific attitude and as a geographer and student of anthropology." Poor Bill! You really ought to write to him, Cfoojf, and set his mind at rest.

SOMEWHERE IN THE WEST.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

I want to write a few words to your department. I have read the letter of our Indian cousin, Marcial Davis, and I want to say he is making a bad mistake. He says the young man who goes West to see things wild and woolly will be disappointed, but he is sure wrong about this. Say, Brother Davis, how about the Indian uprising in the "Four Corners country" the past summer of 1921? The "Four Corners country" is where Utah, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona all join. And here lately there has been a lot of cattle rustling down on the border that keeps ranch owners and cowboys on the job. The West isn't dead yet, Cousin Davis, and never will be as long as the world stands and there are people in it. There are plenty of "two gun" men yet. Holdups are not uncommon and it is not unusual for men to pass out with their boots on. I guess that less whiskey has stopped quite a lot of killing, but just slip across the border into Mexico, Cousin Davis, and you will see enough drinking and shooting to last you a while. The West will always have its cattle and cowboys, as a big part of the land cannot be put to any other use.

Well, this will be all for this time. I hope you will print this so COMFORT readers can get a better idea of the West. I hope Brother Davis will visit some of the big roundups and "rodeos" and he will learn a lot about the real West.

Sincerely, A WESTERN COUSIN.

Well, Western Cousin, your letter will remove a great weight from the hearts of Eastern palefaces who are dreaming of the wild and woolly West and yet who have been led to believe that the only wild things left in the West are prairie dogs and the only woolly articles the inhabitants of sheep ranches. It is true you have unkindly concealed your place of residence so that Cousin Davis or adventurous Eastern nephews of mine will not know exactly where to start for in order to hear the bullets whistle, but I suppose it would be the best course to take a stand down on one of those Four Corners you mention and just wait for things to happen quick. Here in the East one might stand on a corner for threescore and ten years without gaining the reward of dying with one's boots on, but on the corners you write about, Western Cousin, it is easy to see that an honorable obituary would soon be in order and no empty boots would be left for waiting relatives. I hope they keep a sheriff or two as traffic cops down on these busy corners to handle the crowds and keep the bullets going straight.

But seriously, Western Cousin, I think you are right in arguing that as long as a "cattle country" exists the oldtime traditions (a mild term!) of the West will endure and its inhabitants occasionally or oftener depart feet first. But the fact remains that this cattle country is getting more circumscribed each year and we have to rely more and more upon the border conditions of the land "down by the Rio Grande" to keep up the order of the old West and a gun in each hand. In Cousin Marcial's Montana country, as well as in your Southwest, big industry in the way of various mining projects have largely changed the main conditions of gaining a livelihood, but I am sure that Cousin Marcial will be glad to hear that by taking a little walk before breakfast down into Mexico, he can get some excitement to remind him of the old times and furnish him with a breakfast appetite. I do not want to see the old West go, Western Cousin, and so your letter pleased me, but I am going to watch out and keep my gun loose in its holster when, at any future time, I may be standing on the corner of either Utah, Colorado, New Mexico or Arizona. I regret to say that Billy regarded your letter with scorn. "Huh," he grunted, "there are plenty of "two gun" men right here in Brooklyn. Did you read last night's evening papers, Uncle? Why, there were seventeen men in Greater New York who died yesterday with their boots on—and not all of 'em were standing on corners, either." But Billy likes to act superior and pretend that nothing can surprise him. But don't mind him, Western Cousin; I'll look out for him. Write us again and tell about the last time you rode in a rodeo.

HATFIELD, ARKANSAS.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

Can I please come in a few minutes again? I wish to tell the cousins I have moved from Bates to Hatfield—which is about ninety miles south of my old home. I live now on a forty acre farm by a big ranch. I never did live on a farm so large before. This is surely a pretty country; you can see big farms all around and the mountains are high above us. There are five different ones around here: one is Rich Mountain, another Backbone and a third is called Eightstep. I forget the names of the others. It sure looks lonesome when I look so far across the mountains and see the hotel way off on Rich Mountain. There are just lots of fruit here of all kinds—grapes, peaches, pears, apples, plums, strawberries, cherries, etc.

We live four miles from Hatfield and it is really a big town, with eleven stories; besides the drug store, bank, eight shops, etc. Come down here, Cousins, and bring Uncle Lisha with you to see me. You can all help me eat the fruit here next year.

Uncle Lisha, I made a mistake and sent you the wrong news to COMFORT last April. I am not stone deaf. I can hear everything but talking, and I can read lips so well that it is the same as if I could hear talking. I received lots of nice letters from cousins all over the country. I am certainly sorry I could not answer them all as they were too many for one to care for. I found two of my real cousins that I have never seen. I am surely thankful I wrote to COMFORT and found so many friends.

I live in a country where there are many kinds of wild animals around in the mountains. We don't have any church or Sunday school here and I sure miss it. But we have parties every Saturday night. I do not attend these, nor dances either.

Isn't it fun to be in the country where you can have all your good times at home, and stroll over the meadows and through the lanes as free as a bird in spring? Please don't let Billy get this, Uncle Lisha, and I will close with best wishes and love to you and all the cousins.

Your devoted niece, DELLA GRACE TOLLESON.

We are all mighty glad to get word of you again, Della, and to hear of your new home down among the Arkansas mountains of plums and strawberries. I see you have moved near a big and astoundingly interesting town. I should very much like to see a place like Hatfield built as you say it is "with eleven stories," and with a few scattering outlying banks and drugstores outside of the main building. In New York, with our subways and tunnels, the city has really grown to be two or three stories in height, but I think it will be many years before we can expect to reach the number of stories you have in your new home town. Still it must be inconvenient in some ways, Della. Suppose one of your farmer neighbors has a team to take to a blacksmith who has an anvil-office on the ninth story of Hatfield. This would offer difficulties. But I suppose when they built the town on this plan they installed a good system of passenger and freight elevators. Probably, although you do not say, each story of the town is called a street, and you have First Street, Third Street, Eleventh Street, and so on. There ought to be a fine view of Eight-step Mountain for the people who reside on Eighth Street in Hatfield, Della. When I come to Arkansas I shall really be more interested to see this big village building than I shall be in helping eat up the season's crop of apples and peaches. However, I promise you I can do my share at this, and if Billy comes along he will be a great aid in preventing any of the fruit harvest being wasted.

I think it is rather disgraceful, Della, that they have not been able to find room for a church on any of Hatfield's eleven stories. I think your town ought to have a place of public worship, even if it has to be built outside of your municipal building. Perhaps folks thought it would be inconvenient to find an opening for the church steeple, but this could have been arranged by having the church on the top story and then the steeple would have had loads of room and could have gone up as high as it liked. The next time you write I hope you will be able to tell us something has been done about this.

You did not say anything in this letter about your father, the doctor, Della. Did he end up by having everybody in Bates so healthy that he had to start off to find a section of Arkansas that needed more curing? If your father is wise he will open an office on the first floor of Hatfield, and then when he wishes to call on his patients he can leave his car in the garage and just take the elevator for Ninth or Eleventh Street.

I am glad you found so many family cousins and COMFORT Family cousins through having written your April letter, Della. There is a big and happy crowd of us, and we are growing bigger all the while. No eleven-story building could house us, I assure you, unless perhaps each story of it covered eleven hundred acres and was eleven feet high.

DAVIS CREEK, CALIFORNIA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

I am a girl thirteen years of age and in the eighth grade at school. I live on a little farm near Davis Creek. I have a pony named Ribbon and I ride him after the cows. Neva is my chum, and we visit each other and ride horses lots. We fix our hair in puffs and wear ribbons on our hair. I have two sisters and three brothers, but I am the youngest of all. This is my first letter to COMFORT and I hope to see it in print.

Your niece, CRYSTAL WEBB.

Crystal, it must be a sight to see you full of ribbons on Ribbon's back chasing wild cows along the bank of Davis Creek. I hope you have your pony's mane nicely puffed, too,—so that only the tips of his little ears stick out like bits of ribbon. Cows that are driven home in this gay style should be very proud, and should show their appreciation by putting ten or fifteen extra quarts of milk in the pail. I hope that Neva makes you a "puffectly" good chum, Crystal, and that you enjoy your ribboned rides together. Billy, who must have his joke, says he doesn't see how you can "ride horses lots" as you say you do. He says it must take a pretty big saddle to cover a five-acre field, and that he never saw a horse lot—or even a cow pasture—that moved very fast. There are many Eastern cousins, Crystal, who have written saying they wished they could go West and be cowgirls. When they read your letter they will see that chasing lady cows is an interesting and decorative job. I hope you won't get all puffed up over my praise, Crystal, but I'll say it's clear that as a cowgirl you take both the bun and the blue ribbon!

HAMILTON, KANSAS.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

I suppose I must describe myself as nearly all the cousins do. So here goes: I am twenty-two years of age, am five feet, six inches tall, and I weigh 225 pounds. I have dark hair and blue eyes. I also wear a triple coat of tan. We are subscribers and readers of COMFORT. I am always interested in the cousins' letters and also in the fancy work department—as I do quite a bit of crochet work.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 24.)

The Busybody

By John A. Pensaw

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Cannett, Pub., Inc.

EVERY community has its busybody, someone who is always trying to find out other people's business instead of minding his own. Quite as likely it may be a she that is prying into the private affairs of other folks and probably gossiping about them.

These people may be very mannerly, but little do they realize that hunting news is a bad habit which shows lack of good breeding.

If you have this habit try to overcome it, because in some people's estimation you are not rated very high.

There are all kinds of busybodies. Here are some of the most prominent.

The city block generally has several of this kind, viz: Women who spend most of their time running about gathering news, first from one neighbor then another. They also sit outdoors or at a parlor window so as to miss nothing that goes on. They are particularly interested when some new family moves into the block, and are very anxious to see what kind of furniture they have. They perform the same tactics when a funeral is taking place in the block. At night when sitting outdoors these people must rubber-neck when they see a light in a neighboring window.

The suburbs have the same kind of busybodies.

In the country it is a little different. Everyone gathers at the general store, and here is where one goes to hunt news.

Where you earn your living there are busybodies, people who like to find out how much you earn and where you spend all your money.

If these people would mind their business they would save the company money. In hunting news they waste their own time and interfere with the work of others.

In our churches, lodges, social clubs and gatherings we have busybodies. People who only attend to see how much they can find out about the other persons present.

There is also the family busybody who likes to know how much you paid for this or that, and a lot of other detail.

Some people use their children to collect news for them. Don't teach your child to be a busybody.

There are many other kinds of busybodies too numerous to mention.

Perhaps the busybody cannot be convinced that he is a busybody, even though most frequently mentioned as the person to be seen if any news of a local or personal nature is wanted.

We hear this very often: "Go ask So-and so; he or she always knows what is going on."

Still others realize that they are busybodies, and yet they make no effort to mend their ways.

We all like to know the news—it may be interesting, but generally it is none of our business.

If you are a professional busybody, break yourself of the habit; get out of this class.

Montgomery Ward & Co.

The Oldest Mail Order House is Today the Most Progressive

Write for Your Free Copy of this 50th Anniversary Catalogue

Twenty-five Million Dollars' worth of new merchandise is being manufactured for this catalogue

New, fresh merchandise, bought wherever ready cash will buy goods of Ward quality, at the lowest prices in years. And this big complete catalogue, this 1922 Guide to the Lowest Prices on all lines of merchandise, is yours FREE—simply for the asking.

Lower Prices Our Duty to You

Our important work today is making prices come down for You, our customers. We have no big stocks of merchandise bought at high prices to sell you at high prices.

Every price in this catalogue is based upon today's low cost of new, fresh merchandise—and offered at the lowest prices at which good goods can today be manufactured and sold.

Our catalogue, therefore, becomes your 1922 guide to the correct low prices. It tells you how little you need to pay for almost everything you buy.

Everything for the Home, the Farm and the Family

Everything that goes into the home to make it more modern, comfortable and complete, from wall paper to curtains, lighting fixtures to rugs—everything at Money-Saving Prices.

For Women: All the newest and best New York Fashions—selected by Ward's own New York fashion experts.

For Men and the Farm: Everything a man needs from clothing to tools—everything for the farm and farmer's use. Everything at guaranteed lowest prices.

We Want You to Have this Book

Our customers will be sent their catalogue as usual. We want you, the readers of this magazine, who do not buy at Ward's, also to have a copy.

We want you to know this great new-old institution of Montgomery Ward & Co., the advantages it offers you, and the money it can save you.

We want you to learn for yourself the spirit of Ward's—alert, progressive, and marching with the leaders among all the low-price making business houses of America.

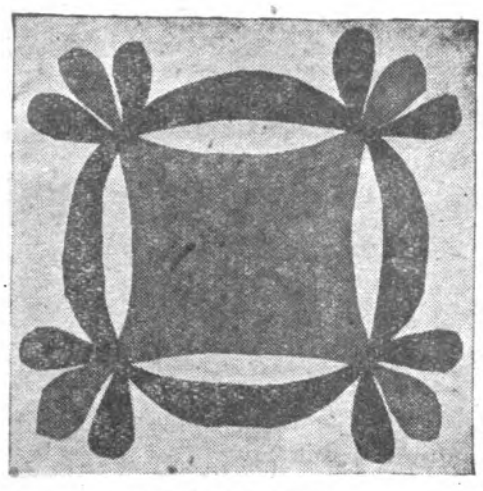
One copy of this, our Golden Jubilee Catalogue, is Yours FREE. It will go to you simply for the asking. Fill in the coupon below.

Mail this coupon to the one of our five houses that is nearest to you.

H-19

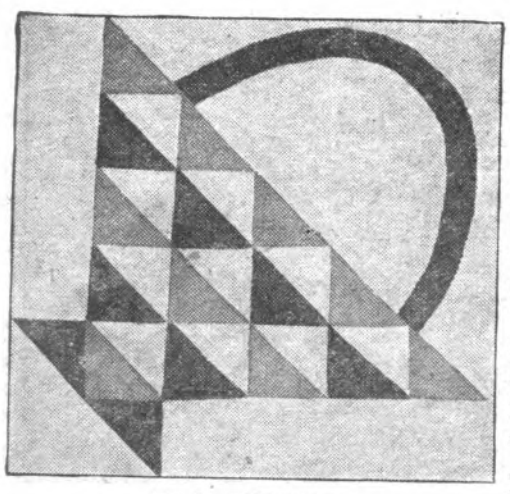
To:
MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
Chicago, Kansas City, St. Paul, Fort Worth, Portland, Oregon
(Mail this coupon to the house nearest to you)

Please mail my FREE copy of Ward's 50th Anniversary Catalogue.



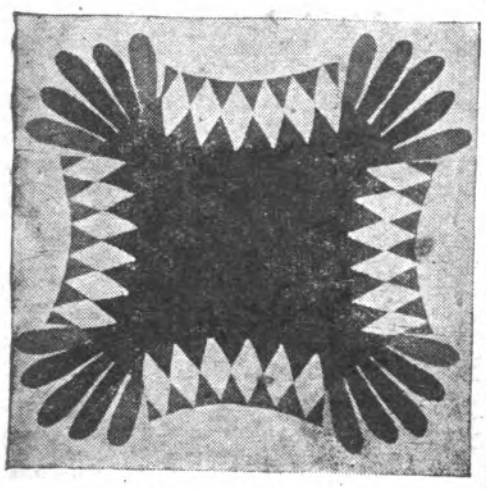
Name _____

Address _____

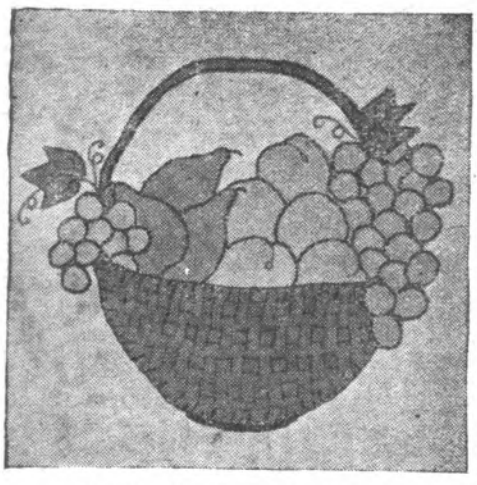


Montgomery Ward & Co.

Chicago Kansas City St. Paul
Fort Worth Portland, Ore.



Things That Were Old but Now Are New



NO. 1. SOUL KNOT.
MRS. S. A. HAWKINS, MO.

NO. 2. FRUIT BASKET.
MRS. JENNIE WILLIAMS, ALA.

NO. 3. AN OLD FAVORITE.
MRS. MAY MCKIBBEN, ALA.

NO. 4. MODERN FRUIT BASKET.
MRS. M. E. RICHARDSON, ALA.

Fascinating Work for the Modern Needlewoman

ALTHOUGH exposed for over a century to the competition with machine-made quilts and bedspreads, the making of quilts is one of the few fireside handicrafts which has not vanished.

This seems to be principally because making patchwork has always held a strong place in the affections of the truly domestic type of women, the sort with whom the home always comes first, from youth through to old age.

The fashion which has prevailed for many years of dressing beds all in white was the cause of patched and pieced quilts having a decline in favor, but it also served the old art a good turn, by keeping many exquisite examples of handwork from hard wear.

Now these beautiful old quilts are proving to be such an incentive to modern needlewomen, that in our cities as well as in smaller places and rural communities more home-made quilts are being made than before.

Anyone who has a genuine old heirloom in the family is considered very fortunate in these days, when the old-fashioned quilts are the new fashion in quilts, and the lovely old relics of grandmother's time are again coming into their own.

Many of these old quilts measure three or more yards square, generous proportions being necessary to amply cover the heaped-up feather beds. Now, under such different conditions, the smaller sizes needed require correspondingly less work.

As an occupation or a spare-time recreation patchwork and patchwork applique is steadily increasing in popularity.

Women who constantly engage in either one or another sort of fancy work evidently have tired a bit of knitting after providing for the boys in service so faithfully, so naturally welcome a change.

As an art patchwork of any sort is something which is not at all difficult to do, but it does require time, patience and neatness.

In its very simplest form, that of piecing, a knowledge of plain sewing only is necessary. The work, however, can be just as simple or as complicated as one wishes to make it, but in either case usefulness and beauty are combined, with the advantage of giving to the worker the self-approval of the industrious.

For those who take up patchwork, and especially quilt making, there is already practically no limit to the beautiful designs which can be copied if one has not the gift of originality.

Often a very simple design by being repeated makes a most effective whole. A good example of this is the "Fruit Basket" shown in our first column. On an old quilt made over 90 years ago this much favored pattern appears, having six rows of baskets on either side with the handles turned toward the center. The border was of light and dark half squares like the row forming the base of the basket, and the edge of six-inch white squares.

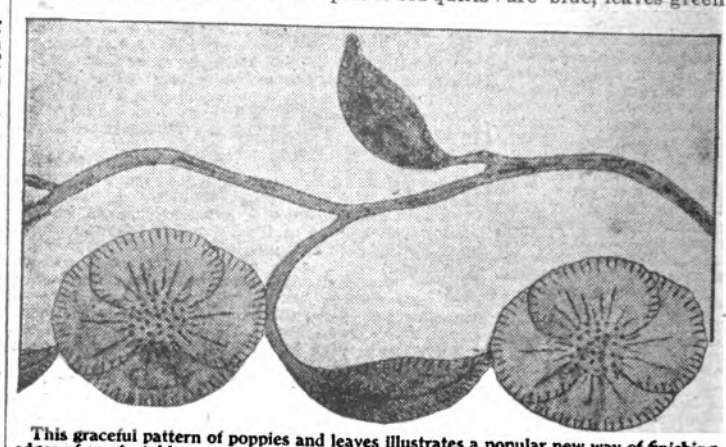
This quilt was most beautifully quilted in the shell pattern.

"The Tree of Paradise" or "Temperance Tree," which originated in Indiana or thereabouts a century ago is another pattern which is particularly good to repeat.

"The Double Tulip or Bouquet" patchwork shown in No. 9 is another old favorite. Four blocks are joined with the stems coming together in the center, then these larger blocks are set together to form the quilt.

"The Soul Knot" and "Pine Burr" are two other old designs, made up of red and green combined with white, which are a little more intricate, the first being a patched or applique pattern and the second one pieced.

Although old quilts are made up of two patterns alternating, perhaps a patched and a pieced one, or often a quilt is formed of a combination of blocks the same in size but all varying in design. Many curious effects were obtained in this way.



In the present hand-made coverlets the interlining, lining and quilting are more often than not omitted. When a lining is used however it is usually of white cotton, and may be in one piece or made up of smaller pieces joined together. The quilt, to quote the usual old expression, is now "ready for the frames."

In earlier days, of course, quilting frames were very common. In its usual simple construction it consisted of four narrow pieces of wood, two somewhat longer than a quilt and two shorter for the width, with holes bored in the ends of each piece.

These pieces were then made into an oblong frame by fastening the corners with bolts or wooden pegs, and when in use usually rested upon the backs of chairs.

As but few modern quilt makers have these or would undertake the task of quilting, we will not touch on this part of the work, which is really a subject in itself. It is, however, interesting to know that patchwork has become so popular and the desire for copies of old quilts so great that there is a premium on the art of quilting. This is because there are so few needlewomen really capable of doing this fine work. Perfect quilting requires patience and much practice. It is usually paid for by the number of spools of cotton used. The price, which always was $1.00 a spool, has now advanced, and in some localities is as much as $5.00 a spool, as there is such a demand for expert workers.

Enthusiasts who have spent weeks and perhaps months doing their piecing have sometimes to wait a year before their quilting can be done.

This graceful pattern of poppies and leaves illustrates a popular new way of finishing edges of scarfs, table covers and curtains with applique in colors. Original design submitted by Kathryn Homer, Ohio.

Modern Quilts

The most popular form of this new fad for quilt making is the patchwork or applique method, the revival of the fine old art of piecing together fabrics of various kinds and colors or the laying of patches of one kind upon another.

This modern applique method which is so generally combined with simple embroidery stitches offers the widest possible opportunities in its adaptability for almost every sort of decoration.

A bit of it composed of bright colors adds an individual touch and is especially in keeping in rooms with old-fashioned furniture.

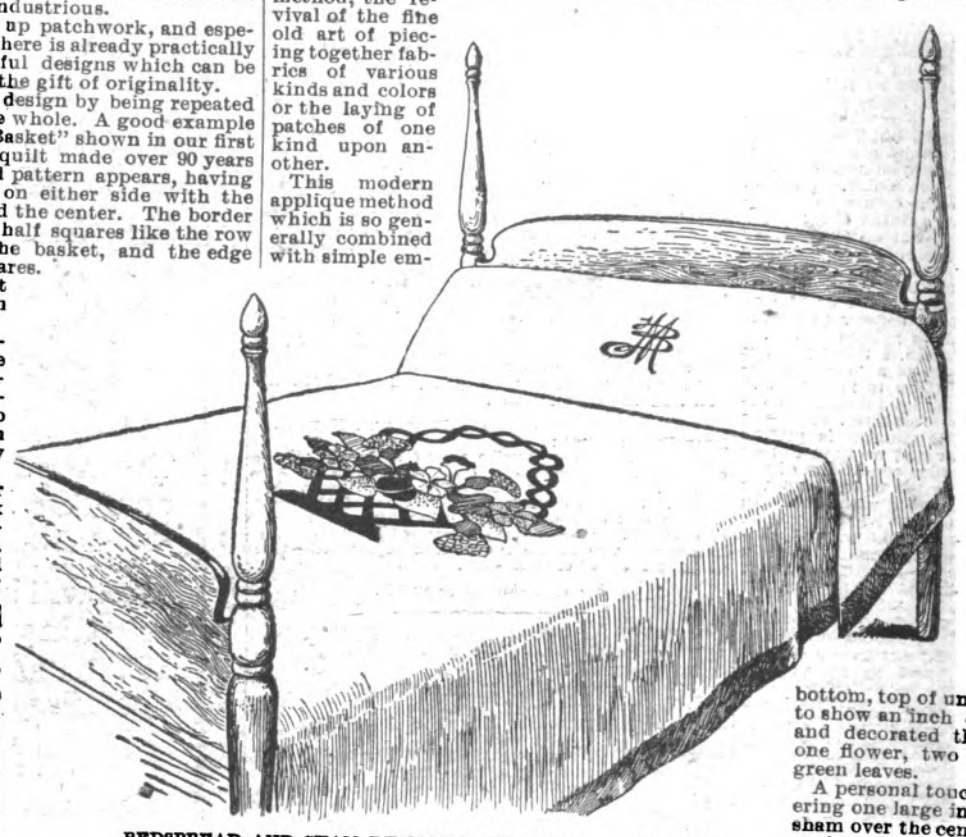
Among the original designs submitted by COMFORT readers in our contest No. 4, No. 5, No. 6, No. 7, No. 8, No. 11, No. 13, No. 14, No. 15 and No. 16 illustrate the tendencies of modern work. These patterns are all particularly good in outline, pleasing in color combination and prove beyond a doubt that our women are still as original and apt in utilizing materials at hand as were their grandmothers.

Designs No. 4 and No. 16 are motifs which can be put to numberless uses, baskets being very popular for pillows, scarf ends, chair backs, etc.

In No. 4 the basket is tan color worked with black, the grapes, pears, plums and peaches as natural in coloring as possible. No. 16 has a basket of black chain-stitching and outlining, blossoms of lavender, blue, pink and yellow, outlined wtih black.

No. 8 is a very realastic design, which should be copied in natural colors.

No. 5 is a particularly graceful pattern, bells are blue, leaves green and outlining black.



No. 6 is an original pieced block. Moon yellow on blue square border, yellow and white.

No. 7, No. 13 and No 15 are new floral designs. The first has blue for background, center daisy is laid over green leaves and the centers are yellow. This idea could be worked out for a child's crib quilt very attractively.

Use blue cotton flannel for foundation, apply daisies to center and border with the half daisies. The other two designs are particularly good, the graceful cherry spray having green leaves, stem and black cherries, while the cherry is of red and green, both being on a white background.

No. 14 is an unusually attractive whole secured by repeating one simple pattern, that of a horn.

This is used four times of four different colors appliqued with mercerized cotton of the same shade, in satin stitch. Fine buttonhole stitch could be substituted if one desired without affecting the design as a whole.

BEDSPREAD AND SHAM DESIGNED BY MRS. L. A. VERNON.

Applique Chamber Decorations

Bedroom sets are very popular as they are so practical, pretty and easy to make although the various articles are large in size.

The ivory tone background given by using unbleached cotton is most desirable, and the effect pleasing combined with the various colors used for leaves and blossoms.

The bed-set illustrated this month is the work of our First Prize Winner, Mrs. Vernon.

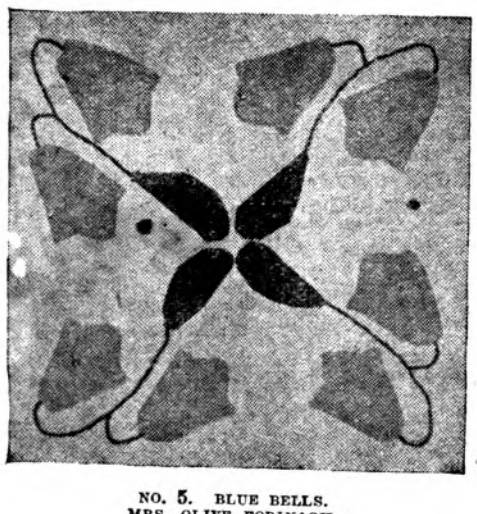
The quaint tall-handled basket which decorates the center of the spread or coverlet is of black, narrow bias bands being used. This is in striking contrast to the cream background and tends to make the gay blossoms and leaves stand out very vividly.

A three-inch double hem of pink chambray finishes this and the ends of the pillow-sham, the bureau scarf ends, edge of table cover and bottom of curtain and valance.

The blossoms alone are used across the ends of scarf and curtains, arranged in a trailing vine of flowers, while the basket appears on the sofa pillow and cushion back of rocker. A very pretty pincushion has a pink bottom, top of unbleached enough smaller to show an inch of the pink all around, and decorated through the center with one flower, two buds and a few small green leaves.

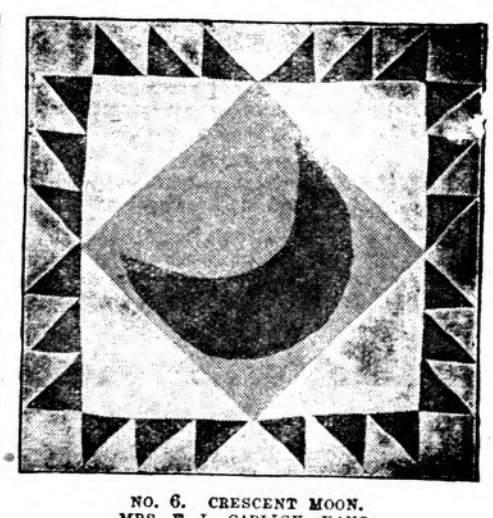
A personal touch is gained by embroidering one large initial on each side of the sham over the center of each pillow, or if preferred a monogram may be used in the center of the sham.

Also on the center front of the bureau scarf, just above the hem, a smaller monogram is frequently used.



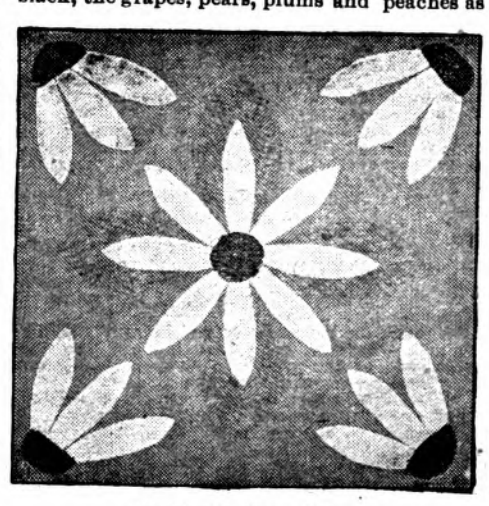
This modern applique which is so generally combined with embroidery stitches offers the widest possibilities for every kind of decoration.

It offers a suitable field for the display of artistic ability in the planning of runners for the breakfast or tea table, luncheon sets, tray covers, towels, curtains and scarfs.



All such articles which are designed for household use require decorations which will stand up well under wear and of a form which does not require endless fine stitches to accomplish an attractive effect.

The use of black in a decorative way is much employed on household articles. The suggestion may not seem an attractive one, but it works out well.



A little black skillfully employed, as in Mrs.

NO. 5. BLUE BELLS.
MRS. OLIVE FORINASH.

NO. 6. CRESCENT MOON.
MRS. F. L. CADLOCK, KANS.

NO. 7. SHASTA DAISY.
MISS EDNA R. WURZBACH, TEXAS.

NO. 8. BUNCH OF GRAPES.
MISS ELLEN RICHCREEK, VA.

Work Finished in Applique Embroidery

Vernon's work, tends to make the whole design stand out more vividly, and adds richness.

Scarfs and pillows are finished with black sateen bands, while entire black table covers and pillow tops are very pretty decorated with a few bright posies

Another advantage of this material for a background is the fact that it will fit in harmoniously almost anywhere.

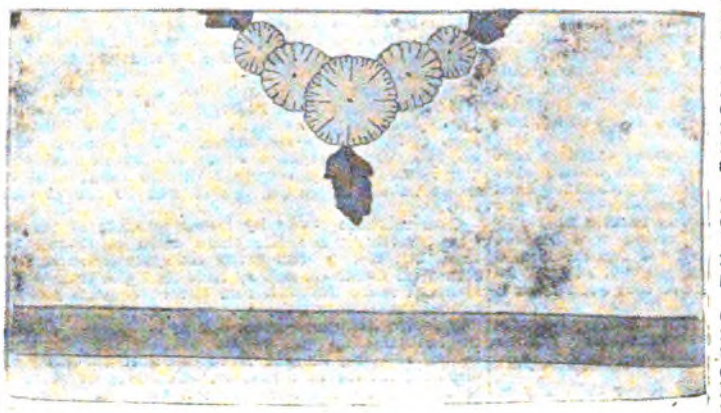
An Unusual Library Set

A novel and very uncommon set which will give distinction to any simply furnished living room or library, offers one a good opportunity to employ black effectively as part of the decorative scheme.

For this purpose the best material to use for the various pieces is either a coarse natural tone Russian crash or a heavy linen, as either of these materials are very durable and the soft neutral tone background serves well to set off the vivid bits of cotton employed in the decorations.

At first thought the idea of employing black somewhat generously seems rather a daring one, yet when properly used the result is most attractive and helps greatly in developing an effect, which as a whole one is not likely to tire of.

A table scarf, sofa pillows, chair backs, a desk set, book covers, book ends and a telephone pad are all articles which offer an opportunity for exercising the present fancy for applique.



One will have to be guided in the size and shape of these various articles by individual requirements, but general suggestions can be given for their decoration.

For the principal design for the larger pieces of a library set either a basket, a jar filled with flowers or a bouquet tied with a ribbon could be used. In a basket design either bands of black bias may be employed as in the one here shown, or the lattice work of the basket may be of black outlining or chain stitching.

colors, flowers, buds and green leaves, suggestions for which will be found in the different designs on these pages.

Work in the black by adding three-inch hems of sateen or linen to the ends of the scarfs, finish the sides by rolling narrow hems and hold in place with black French knots or cross-stitching.

This makes a very pleasing finish and tends to connect or hold together the black used on the ends.

LINGERIE OR GENTLEMAN'S SHIRT CASE. DESIGNED BY MRS. LIDA SHANKLIN, TEXAS.

Pillows now are of all shapes. In making square or oblong ones for this set end bands or entire borders of black may be used. A round one completely of black, finished with the blossoms in the center is very handsome.

Black may also be employed for book covers and ends.

If the work is carefully and neatly done, one

Detail of Basket Design on Bedspread.—A very quaint old-fashioned effect is obtained by selecting finely figured cottons in different colors for the buds and blossoms. The color scheme in the work illustrated follows, but this combination could of course easily be changed to suit one's individual taste and requirement: No. 1, lavender bud; No. 2, pink; No. 2, medium blue, yellow French knots in center; No. 4, lavender; No. 5, green buds tipped with orange; No. 6, lavender; No. 7, yellow, black French knots in center; No. 8, light blue; No. 9, old pink, yellow French knots in center; No. 10, medium blue; No. 11, pink bud. Designed by Mrs. Vernon.

A bowl or jardiniere employed in a design, similar perhaps to the one in the sofa pillow by Mrs. Creech illustrated in January COMFORT, may be of a good yellow or golden brown tone, If a bouquet is preferred an attractive addition is a ribbon bow effect, made by using bias bands of cotton of two shades, to simulate a two-tone ribbon.

In either case there is an array of brilliant cannot fail to secure a beautiful effect in decorations of this sort.

A Dainty Luncheon Set

(For illustration see page 29.)

This table set is as practical as it is pretty. For its foundation cross-barred dimity was selected and finished with a three-inch band of fadeless Peter Pan cloth in old rose. This is double and is applied like a hem rather than being used as a facing.

The napkins are made to match, measureing 12x12 inches, one dainty bud being used to decorate a corner of each, as shown.

The decorations in the corners of the cloth are of bright colors selected to give life to the design as a whole.

These should include light and dark yellows, orange, three shades of rose, two or three of blue and a lilac or violet.

The arrangement of the colors may well be left to the taste or fancy of the maker, always remembering to work for a harmonious effect, as a whole.

The set illustrated is particularly good for common use as it combines the virtues of durability, simplicity and good looks.

Similar sets featuring colored applique may be finished with either tatted or crocheted edges, either of the following being narrow and particularly suitable.

Edging No. 1

Single crochet closely into edge of linen circle. For the grade of linen selected use any number cotton best suited. This first pattern is most suitable of No. 70, 80 or 100 cotton.

Begin with 10 s c in first row, then 1 double picot or a p with a p thus: * ch 5, sl st for p, sl st over 2 sts in first row, ch 9, turn, fasten at opposite side of p, then 10 s c in 10 sts, repeat around from *.

2nd row—Start in center of ch 9, ch 7 sts, very tightly, form p, ch 9 sts from p by working 1 d c, into outer ch of first double p, repeat, making 2 more double picots, ch 3, 1 d c into third st in edge from first double picot. Repeat around.

Edging No. 2

Ch 9 after completing first row, sl st to form ring, ch 1, 2 s c in ring, 1 p of ch 4, 2 s c, 1 p, 2 s c, 1 p, 2 s c.

This fills first ring, 1 s c around stem to close, 1 s c in next 9 sts of first row, ch 9, join in ring with sl st. Half fill this ring with 2 s c, 1 p, 2 s c, 1 p, 1 s c, ch 12, fasten with sl st in top of finished ring.

When slip stitching, remove hook from work and insert it where chain is to be joined, pick up dropped loop and draw it through. This makes a much neater joining and avoids turning.

Over the ch 12 work 2 s c, 4 p with 2 s c between and finish with 2 s c. Now finish the second half of the ring last made, 1 s c around stem to close securely and repeat pattern. Pull into shape and press over Turkish towel. This pattern is also handsome for edging scrim or muslin curtains.

Old Quilt Patterns

To go back now to the subject of patchwork again and especially the old original designs it is most interesting to note how popular rose patterns were. The "Rose of Sharon" was a favorite and beautiful pattern, usually developed of yellow, green and red calico hemmed onto white.

In the middle of the last century the "Confederate Rose" and the "Rose of Dixie" were far famed. Then in the new West originated the "Harvest Rose" and the "Prairie Rose," patterns which vied successfully with the older "Whig Rose," "Democrat Rose" and the old "Rose of Lemoine," which was very graceful and beautiful.

Almost as popular as the rose were the rosebud, the poppy, the lily and the tulip.

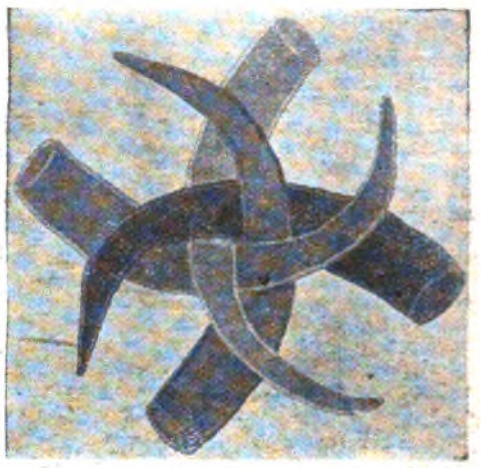
Patterns which were named for birds and animals were almost as popular as those for the flowers as the following but partial list shows:

"Bluebird,"	"Bear's Paw,"
"Chimney Swallows,"	"Flying Bat,"
"Dove in the Window,"	"Leap Frog,"
"Wild Goose Chase,"	"Puss in Corner,"
"Duck and Ducklings,"	"Snail's Trail,"
"Goose Tracks,"	"Toad in Puddle,"
"Bird's Nest,"	"Bunnies."

The glories of the sky were reflected in such names as "Rising Sun," of which there are many different designs, "Sunshine," "Sunburst," "Rainbow," and all the stars.

"Blazing Star,"	"Feather Star,"
"Shooting Star,"	"Cluster of Stars,"
"Star of the West,"	"Eight-Pointed Star,"
"Western Star,"	"Five-Pointed Star,"
"Rolling Star,"	"Flying Star,"
"New Star,"	"Union Star,"
"Evening Star,"	"Morning Star,"

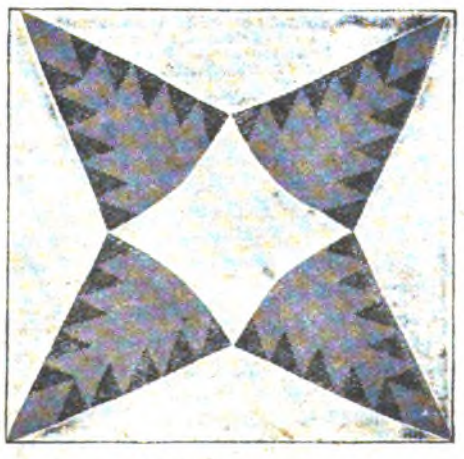
Other patterns were given the name of their originators and were always known as "Mollie's Choice," "Aunt Eliza's Star," "Mother's



(CONTINUED ON PAGE 29.)

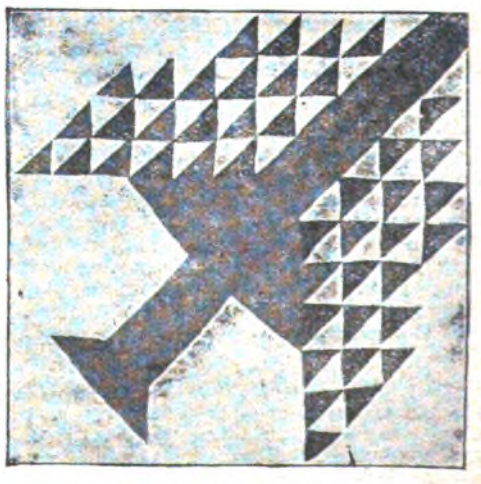
NO. 16. FLOWER BASKET.
MISS IDA SMITH, N. C.

NO. 15. CHRYSANTHEMUM.
MRS. A. E. STRICKLAND, MISS.



NO. 14. HUNTER'S HORNS.
MISS MAUDIE SARGENT, ALA.

NO. 13. WILD CHERRIES.
MRS. EMMIE SMITH, ARK.



NO. 9. THE DOUBLE TULIP OR BOUQUET.
MRS. MACOM PAULK, GA.

NO. 10. PINE BURR.
MRS. M. E. COLLINS, OREGON.

NO. 11. MOON AND STARS.
MRS. MAT LOONEY, ARK.

NO. 12. TREE OF PARADISE.
IDA L. SOUTHARD.

The wonderful way I found to pay my bills

By Mrs. John Neu

I believe I am the happiest woman in the world today and sometimes I think I could cry out of sheer joy when I think of what our new prosprity has meant to all of us. And it all came about through taking up a home occupation that was as pleasant as it was profitable.

You see, my husband's slender earnings caught us with very little money on hand and we needed many things,—oh, so badly. How to get this money and still attend to my family duties I did not know until one day I happened to see an advertisement telling how I could really work at home during spare time and earn a substantial sum each week. "If this is true," I thought, "what a splendid thing it will be. I can still attend to my household duties and, by good management, find lots of spare time to earn the extra money we need."

My Prosperity Began

Immediately I wrote for the Profit Guide Book which, the advertisement said, would tell me all about it, how it was done—and everything. And such a revelation! I never dreamed that there could be any home occupation so pleasant and so profitable. They said the work was easy and that they would pay me generously for every pair of standard Allwear Hosiery I could send them. They offered me a three year contract and as I found them to be a very reliable, long-established company with bank references and hundreds of satisfied home workers, I didn't waste any time but sent right away for the Gearhart Standard Knitter, taking advantage of the splendid offer the Company made me. That was my start.

I Became Independent

If I was hopeful at first I was overjoyed when the Knitter arrived, for it was so easy to set up and operate that I was soon turning out several dozen pairs of exquisite knitted socks each week. Then my husband and the children became interested and often helped me. That increased my earnings still more. And I shall never forget the liberality of the Gearhart people in paying me such excellent prices for my work. They furnished the yarn, too, so I did not have to put out any money at the start for material. If you were ever in the predicament I was in before I took up this work you can imagine what it meant to be able to rise above the never-ending scrimping and saving to make ends meet.

I am proud of what I have done with my Gearhart Knitter. I would not give it up for worlds. A little spare time each day—and then a substantial check from the Gearhart Company has enabled me to buy many things — clothing for myself and the children, and household things we needed so much.

WHY NOT YOU?

Yes, you can do it, too. You will find that knitting your share of the famous ALLWEAR knitted hosiery is no menial task. It is not impossible that, if your ambition lies in that direction, you could soon operate several machines with the aid of your family or even hired help.

Remember, no experience is needed to start. At once, in the comfort and privacy of your own home you can still be your own boss. No one need know until you shall have achieved the success awaiting you. You knit the socks, each pair in surprising quick time on the Gearhart Standard Knitter and the Gearhart Co. pays you liberally for all you can do. Sell to stores, friends and neighbors also, if you wish. Everybody wears and appreciates good hosiery.

Write today for the Free PROFIT GUIDE BOOK, samples of knitting and other particulars. It may be the turning point of your life, the means of reaching the goal of your fondest hopes. Address GEARHART KNITTING MACHINE CO., Inc., Dept. CO-630, Clearfield, Pa.

Correcting Cross-Eyes in Infancy

By Mrs. J. W. Chamberlain

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

CROSS-EYES are dangerous as well as unbeautiful. If they are corrected the eyesight as well as the appearance is vastly improved. And according to the latest researches of specialists, there is no reason that any child should grow up cross-eyed, if properly attended to. The squinting infant generally becomes the cross-eyed man or woman, with all that means in loss of attractiveness, superstitious prejudice and, worst of all, loss of visual power.

The trouble in a large number of cases is that parents are very careless about the child's eyes and that the mother can hardly be persuaded that her little infant is "looking cross-eyed." If she continue to ignore it, dangerous results may follow, and the obliqueness of vision will become fixed, whereas it could have been remedied, and the full strength of the eye preserved, so that no one would ever guess that there had been such a tendency.

It is in line with the general tendency of prevention that infants should be carefully watched and their eyes tested for this unpleasant and costly defect.

The testing of the infant's eyes for obliquity of vision is not as easy as in older children or adults, but there are some special tests by which even the youngest child may be tried. It is difficult at times to tell which is the eye that crosses. The crossing of the eyes cannot be proved before the seventh month, as the child is learning to use its eyes during the first six months. It can see, but uses its eyes carelessly for the first few months, because it is gradually learning to use both eyes together, and get what is called "binocular vision."

We can tell when the child is using this double vision by holding up a bright object and noting whether the child directs both eyes toward it, or only one. Cross-eyes are caused either by some inequality in the eye muscles, or by fevers which have weakened these muscles, or even by convulsions, or severe frights. Heredity also plays a part, for it has been found that as many as 52 per cent. of cross-eyed children had parents with defective eye muscles.

One specialist among the eye specialists, who has made an extended study of cross-eye in infants, calls attention to the fact that in the beginning the squint is not constant. It appears toward evening, or when the child is tired. The child seems restless and irritable. This is due to the effort which the eye muscles are making to maintain binocular vision. Then the squint becomes more frequent, and it is uncertain which eye crosses. The parent thinks that the child does it purposely and scolds the child—but in vain. At last one eye becomes permanently crossed, for the muscles have given up the task in which they should have been assisted at the right time by treatment.

When uncertain as to which eye crosses, take the child into a dark room, hold a lighted candle three feet from his eyes. He will immediately look at it, and the reflections will be plainly seen on the cornea of each eye. In the normal eye the flame will be reflected in the exact center, while in the squinting eye it will be far to one side.

The mistake made by many parents is to attempt nothing for the child until it begins to read, but it has been using its eyes under heavy strain all the time, and by that time the treatment is much more difficult, and the cure often means lifelong spectacle wearing. The most good can be done with infants. Each eye is tested separately by covering up the other. White marbles are taken, ranging in size from one-half to one and one-half inches in diameter. The largest marble is thrown on the floor with a twist to make it "break" its direction; then the next smaller, and so on until the smallest has been used. The eye of the child is watched in each experiment to see if it follows the marble. In this way the perfection of vision of each eye is tested, and then each eye is examined under a special instrument. When it has been decided which eye is the weaker, treatment follows. The specialist puts one-fourth to one-half per cent. solution of atropine in the better eye to temporarily paralyze it so that the child will be compelled to use the weaker eye, in this way strengthening the muscles by use. When the infant is a year old he may be given spectacles without any great danger if they are properly made, and in this way the weakness of the muscles of the weak eye will be overcome, and both eyes will do the work they should, and the spectacles may be abandoned.

Other exercises may follow as soon as the child can be made to understand what is required of it, and thus by proper treatment the weakness may be completely overcome and in many cases the eye-glasses can be put aside, because the eyes have become normal. But by all means call in a good eye specialist if you note the least indication on your child's part to squint or "cross" his eyes.

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINTED FROM PAGE 21.)

I live on a farm of 220 acres, and I think it is a country farm. I should dislike to think that it was a city (or even a small town) farm. Most of our land lies on a slope, as this is a hilly country, and also very rocky. The wind blows most all of the while from the southwest. Sometimes we have a north wind, but not very often and not of very long endurance.

I am the youngest of a family of twelve. I have four brothers and five sisters living, all of whom are married. I have twenty-five nephews and nieces. My father is real old, and so "lets" his land to the neighbors and they farm it for a percentage of the grain.

Now, Uncle, you will be sure and say something about my size, I know. But truly I am not to blame. I never eat soft gingerbread, although I can make it and bake it most beautifully. I also never eat fat meat nor Jamaica molasses. So, Dearest Uncle, what must I do to reduce? I am quite an optimist and a great one to laugh. I take life, and nearly everything connected with it as a joke. I am sure I would be real fond of Billy if I had half a chance. I imagine he must be some relation to my guinea pigs, as they seem to be fond of the same things—such as hay, grass and horse weeds. If Billy would come out here for his vacation he could sleep in a guinea pig hutch every night. Uncle, what kind of a hutch do you keep Billy in? I hope you will not let him eat this.

Your loving niece, DORA V. KESTER.

No, no, Dora; soft gingerbread will not make anyone fat. Why, I have eaten acres of the delicious substance and am still as charmingly thin as Bill Turpin. The real difficulty, Dora V., is that you take altogether too much laughter every day. You admit to being a great consumer of jokes and chuckles. These things are the surest sort of pound producers. You must begin at once to put yourself on a scowl diet. Eat six sour prunes before breakfast every morning. Each time you swallow a prune, scowl hard and say: "I hate prunes," in a firm, deep voice. Take two or three good-sized scowls between meals, washing them down, at first, with a few swallows of unsweetened lemon juice and water. Every time you feel tempted to joke or laugh, pinch yourself hard, or have someone do it for you. After being pinched, take a deep breath and scowl three times, repeating in a low, gloomy tone: "This is a hard world." After a week or two of this you will find yourself losing much of your former greedy laughing habit, and scowling will become much easier. If you do bake gingerbread, let it burn on the top and scowl as you take it out of the oven. Try breaking a few cups from your best set of china, or upsetting a dish of preserved strawberries on your pet tablecloth. These methods will aid in making your scowls taste better. If I could get Billy to agree to come out and stay with you for a month, this would be the best way in the world to get you used to a scowl diet and prove to you that life is not at all a joke. You would understand then why I am slim and graceful and do not know what "optimist" means unless I look it up in the dictionary. But you have made any scheme of a visit from Bill impossible by talking about "guinea pigs" and "hutches." Billy was much put out. I can't tell you all he said, but he went so far as to suggest that the "V" in your name stood for "Volume!"

Just now, Dora, the New York City Health Department is holding a sort of "fat reducing contest." Perhaps you will feel lighter and happier to hear that one of the women contestants weighs 281 pounds and has the appropriate name of Sarah Strong. This selected squad of fat men and women are being put through a month's course of diet and exercise prescribed by the physician at the head of the Health Department. The course is not easy and includes all kinds of indoor and outdoor stunts—running, walking, and even climbing trees! If you want to know what the experts prescribe in the way of food to make the fat fly, here is one day's diet for the squad:

Breakfast.—Any fresh fruit, except bananas; any cereal, with tablespoonful of bran sprinkled over; skimmed milk, no sugar; one coddled egg; two slices whole wheat bread toasted, no butter; tea or coffee, with skimmed milk if desired, but no sugar.

Luncheon.—Clear broth; chopped onions and celery sandwich made with two slices of rye bread, pepper and a little salt, but no butter; tea or coffee with skimmed milk if desired, but no sugar; buttermilk.

Dinner.—Clear soup; chicken (roasted or broiled), do not eat skin; spinach, baked onions, and celery; two bran muffins, no butter; cottage cheese; tea or coffee with skimmed milk if desired but no sugar.

You will see that this includes Bill's favorite bran muffins—but no gingerbread! The most successful of the bran-eaters and tree-climbers has so far succeeded in making sixteen of her surplus pounds disappear. But somehow 16 taken away from 281 seems to leave a fairly hearty remainder. Anyway, Dora, even if scowls and bran fail to reduce your Volume, you can take my word for it that it's worth being a heavy-weight if you can have a light heart and laugh often. The laughers are usually fat because they get the cream out of life—and cream is fattening stuff which scowls only make sour!

HARTMAN, R. R. 1, ARKANSAS.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

Hello! Here I come for a little chat. I wonder how many will welcome me in? I am a little boy six years old. I have brown eyes and hair. I live on a farm. Mother and I live with my grandparents. I have never seen my daddy yet. He went through the Great War. He was on the front when piece was made. He has been at Washington ever since almost. I hope to see him some day.

I have two bunnies, chickens, and a pup I can drive just like a man. We have four good mules, two wagons and two fine red cows.

Well, if Billy the Goat lets this pass I will right again sometime. I hope some of the cousins will write to me or send me cards.

Your little nephew, MAURICE OGLIVIE, JR.

Hello, Maurice, kick the snow off your boots and come right in! And bring the pup along, too, so he can melt the icicles from his young nose. You must remember that it's a lot colder up here in Brooklyn than down in Hartman, Arkansas. This is the time of year when Billy wears his triple-warp, double-strength, camel's-hair underwear and puts a pair of felt insoles in his new shoes. But then Bill's rheumatism makes him have to coddle himself a bit. Probably your little dog is tougher and can get along comfortably by growing a nice warm shirt of all-wool pup-hair. Maurice, I certainly hope you'll see your father some fine day when he gets back from Washington. You say your dad was on the front in the Great War when "piece was made." I suppose he must be staying down in Washington now helping President Harding get all the "pieces" put together again. There were a lot of pieces" made during the war, Maurice, and Billy the Goat says the one who was made into the most pieces was Mr. Kaiser, formerly of Potsdam, Unter der Linden. I'll bet your dad will be delighted to see you and it's just possible he may hug and kiss you when he meets you for the first time. You must be ready for this and not be embarrassed, even if it does seem getting rather familiar on so early an acquaintance. After this ceremony is over, you can take him out and introduce him to your young doggie road horse, your bunnies, the two fine cows and—the most extraordinary of all—your "four good mules." Maurice, if you have any Golden Rule mules you have a rare variety. You will have to get your newly-acquainted daddy to present a pair of these kind and courteous mules to the National Zoological Gardens at Washington.

You say that if Bill lets this letter of yours by that you will "right" again, Maurice. Well, I hope you will stick right to this promise and will "right" us all again right soon. You will be able to tell us, perhaps, if you met your dad all right and if he was right glad to meet a brown-eyed, brown-haired junior edition of himself for the first time.

LOS ANGELES, 2290 West 24th St., CALIF.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA AND COUSINS:

This is my first attempt to write and I hope Billy the Goat won't make his supper off my letter.

I might as well describe myself. I am almost sixteen years old. I am five feet, six inches in height—and good looking—as some say. I am also in high school which is a little town by itself with 2,925 pupils. Some crowd.

I live in the "Land of Eternal Sunshine" in Los

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 42.)

Exceptionally Fine Texture

Linene Dress

Beautifully Embroidered

A $7.00 Value

FOR ONLY

$3.29

Delivered FREE

This is One of Betty Gordon's Most Dashing Spring Fashions

Betty Gordon offers here the season's greatest dress bargain—this stunning, smart new Spring Style Dress of exceptionally fine texture Linene with beautiful and attractive embroidery is offered at a price far below what you would ordinarily pay for such a quality garment. Think of it—a real $7 value for only $3.29—and sent to you without a penny in advance.

SEND NO MONEY

Betty Gordon will send you this wonderful dress without one penny in advance—just your name address, size and color you choose—and we pay all delivery charges to your door. Just pay postman the special bargain price, $3.29, when he delivers dress at your door. If, for any reason, you are not delighted and pleased with your bargain, return dress and get every penny of your money back. Dress is of good quality, fine texture Linene, beautifully embroidered with wool chain stitch and wool French Knots in flower pattern. The modish vestee is of white pique and is trimmed with six pearl buttons. Vestee, pockets and cuffs piped with contrasting Bargain! color material. Long, flowing self material sash. Opening at left side of vestee. Colors: Copen Blue, Rose and Tan. Sizes: Misses, 14 to 20 years; Women, 34 to 46 inches, bust measure. Order by No. 3A350. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE AND COLOR.

ACT NOW! Send Your Order Today

Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Back

Betty Gordon Co.

Gordon Bldg., Dept. 7505 Chicago

Help Wanted

We require the services of an ambitious person to do some special advertising work right in your own locality. The work is pleasant and dignified. Pay is exceptionally large. No previous experience is required, as all that is necessary is a willingness on your part to carry out our instructions.

If you are at present employed, we can use your spare time in a way that will not interfere with your present employment—yet pay you well for your time. If you are making less than $150 a month, the offer I am going to make will appeal to you. Your spare time will pay you well—your full time will bring you in a handsome income.

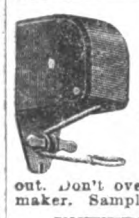
It costs nothing to investigate. Write me today and I will send you full particulars by return mail and place before you the facts so that you can decide for yourself.

ALBERT MILLS, Gen. Manager Employment Dept. 6429 American Bldg., CINCINNATI, OHIO

5 Magazines — Good — $1

Woman's World, (Monthly)
Good Stories, (Monthly)
American Woman, (Monthly)
Mother's Magazine, (Monthly)
The Farm Journal, (Monthly)

Our Price $1.00 ALL FIVE FOR 1 YEAR



ORDER BY CLUB NUMBER 412

A Dollar Bill will do—We take the risk

Send all orders to

Whitlock & Summerhays

25 North Dearborn Street, CHICAGO

AGENTS 98 Cents Per Hour

Demonstrating and Taking Orders. No experience necessary. SEIBERT made $8 first day, with new patented Moore Automatic Self-Winding Clothes Line and Reel, approved by Good Housekeeping, prevents dirts, knots and tangles—used indoors or out. Don't overlook this—let us prove it best money maker. Sample Free to Workers.

UNIVERSAL APPLIANCE COMPANY, Dept. 323, 57 Elm St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

REMNANTS SILK, VELVET, GINGHAM, ETC.

WONDERFUL BARGAIN IN 4-POUND BUNDLES

of beautiful Silk Remnants for fancy work, quilts, portieres, pillows, etc. Send 10 cents for a big package of lovely silk, including free quilt designs and catalog describing our 4-pound silk, velvet, gingham, and other remnant bargain bundles; also instructions how to earn money at home by sewing.

AGENTS WANTED To sell our Remnant Bargain Bundles

UNION S. WORKS, 207 Factory St., BOONVILLE, N. Y.

HOW TO REMOVE INK STAINS

Safely at home from Silks, Cottons and Woolen Goods. The three receipts sent prepaid for 50c.

E. L. Townsend & Co., Box 222, Barnard, Kansas.

FREE

A 42-PIECE BLUE BIRD FULL SIZE DINNER SET

NO MONEY NEEDED. WE PAY FREIGHT.

SELL ONLY 12 BOXES OF SOAP,

each box containing 7 cakes fine Toilet Soap and with every box, give as premiums to each purchaser all of the following articles: a Pound of Baking Powder, Bottle Perfume, Box Talcum Powder, 6 Teaspoons, Pair Shears and Package Needles, and this artistically decorated Dinner Set is Yours. Many other equally attractive offers and hundreds of useful Premiums or Cash Commission for your time.

SPECIAL EXTRA PRESENT FREE

As an inducement we give a High-Grade Granite 10 qt. Dish Pan, 3 qt. Sauce Pan and 3 qt. Pudding Pan FREE of all cost or work of any kind, if you order promptly. You advance no money. We trust you. You have nothing to risk. Write today for our Big FREE Agents Outfit. Don't delay.

LOWER PRICES ON ALL GOODS

THE PERRY G. MASON CO., 384 Calvert & 5th St., Cincinnati, O. Founded 1897.

Some Novel Uses for Applique Patches

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29.)

color in all the poppy shades placed very naturally against a green stock and leaves.

The centers of the flowers and the edges were worked with black mercerized cotton. Unbleached or a lighter weight cotton may be used for the curtains as one prefers, but nothing will give better service or be any prettier than the natural creamy tone of this inexpensive standby.

A Child's Slip-On

This little slip-on or kimono dress for a young child, which is illustrated on page 24, is as pretty and convenient a little garment as one could wish for every-day use and particularly good for the hot days of summer, when one wishes to be free from too warm clothing. The model was a light brown gingham, the neck, sleeves and hem being buttonholed. The appliques represent ripe red cherries attached to a brown twig and a couple of green leaves which are shown in this design.

Pockets, the form of the flower pot could be used for an apron or house dress, giving either an attractive as well as a convenient finish.

Chintz Waist Cover

A simply made article, which makes a useful little remembrance, is a cover for a dainty waist.

A square of about 27 inches of either chintz or flowered lawn or dimity, four yards of narrow lace for edging and a collapsible hanger will be required.

Hem and edge the square with lace, then fold and in the center make a small hole, finish this by buttonholing, then slip over the hanger. Arrange points evenly and fasten securely in the center of the hanger.

IT'S EASY WITH THE BROIDERFAST

Does beautiful embroidery in one-quarter the usual time. Gives your lingerie, outer garments and household linen the exquisite charm of beautiful needlework. Works a wonderful beaded effect for sport blouses or coat suits. Embroiders chain stitch or French knots.

Send only one dollar for holder, three sizes needle-points and full directions. Money back in three days if not satisfied. Agents make big money. Terms accompany first order.

Dept. 9—Broiderfast Sales Co., Ft. Worth, Tex.

AGENTS $60 A Week Women-Men

Women! Men, too! $60 a week and more easily made. Dignified, pleasant work. Goods sell in every home. Our line—at unheard of low prices—is just what women love: beautiful embroidered dresser scarfs, towels, pillow cases, bed spreads, window curtains, etc. All colors guaranteed fast. Goods produced by most modern and largest company in U. S. Your business grows by leaps and bounds. Inexhaustible market. Our agents sell big orders in small localities. No limit to what you can do. Some sell $10,000 worth a year. Only agents wanted who can prove their responsibility because we have a money back guarantee plan. Exclusive territory given. This is best agents opportunity ever offered. Write quick for full information.

WALTER H. HILDEBRAND & CO., 932-34 North Ave., Chicago

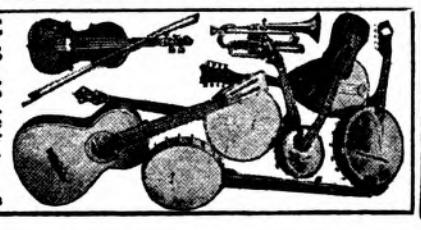
GIVEN Just to prove quality of goods, we will send you beautifully embroidered, full size pin cushion cover, upon receipt of 10c to cover simply postage and packing. Your choice of colors—white, blue, rose or gold. These are given—not sold. Only one will be sent. Write now!

Save 25 to 50 per cent by buying DIRECT FROM FACTORY. 38 styles to select from. 40 year guarantee on the famous WING Piano. Founded 1868. 53-year reputation for high quality and fair dealing. Play a Wing Piano or Player in your OWN home on 4 weeks trial. Send for valuable NEW BOOK of Complete Information about Pianos —Free. Learn how to judge quality, tone, finish of any piano. See why the WING stands every quality test. Easy terms arranged if desired. Write today for Book. The N. Y. World says: "Everyone should have this Book."

WING & SON (Estb. 1868) Dept. 33, 9th Avenue & 13th Street, New York

NEW Self-Heating IRON

AGENTS MAKE $12 A DAY



New scientific development makes ironing remarkably easy. No wires or attachments—all self contained. Gives clean, quick heat, easily regulated. Costs one cent for 3 hour's use. Saves steps. Cuts ironing time in half. Sells fast. Mrs. Wagner, Ohio, sold 25 in few hours spare time. Meyer, Pa., made $164.00 in one week. You can do as well. No experience necessary. Work all or spare time. You simply take orders, we deliver by parcel post and do collecting. Commissions paid same day you take orders. Send for Catalog and FREE OUTFIT OFFER. Write today

AKRON LAMP CO. 453 Iron St., Akron, O.

FREE PROFESSIONAL TONE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

and lessons sent on free trial. Violin, Tenor Banjo, Hawaiian Guitar, Ukulele, Mandolin, Cornet, Banjo Mandolin, Banjo Ukulele, Guitar, Banjo Guitar or Banjo. Wonderful new copyrighted system of teaching note music by mail. Four lessons will teach you several pieces. Over 100,000 successful players. Do not miss this free trial offer. Write for booklet. No obligations.

SLINGERLAND SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Inc., 1815 Orchard Street, Dept. 121, Chicago, Illinois

Stella Rosevelt

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 12.)

when, she knew but too well, Josephine had learned to love him with all the fire of her proud, passionate nature.

If it had been a girl in a position equal to that which Josephine occupied whom he had chosen, the disappointment would not have been less severe, but the mortification would not have been so galling.

This was what had made Star's face so radiant, then, during the past week, making her seem to bloom into new beauty, and glorifying her with exceeding happiness. She had noticed, but could not understand it.

This was the meaning of the unusual attention which she had bestowed upon her toilet last Saturday—for Josephine had told her of that little scene upon the veranda—and also of her protracted absence that day.

For half an hour she sat there, white as alabaster with passion, her eyes glowing with hate for the innocent cause of all her disappointment.

"Not in her room, eh?" she muttered at length, vindictively. "I'll find the little vixen, and if it is possible to widen this breach, it won't be my fault if it is not done."

With a cruel expression on her still white face, she arose and swept noiselessly from the room by the same way that she had entered, and passed down the steps of the veranda out into the grounds.

Gathering her rustling skirts in her hand, she passed inside the lodge, mounted the stairs with a noiseless tread, and paused before Mr. Rosevelt's door.

Bending close to the keyhole, she heard sounds of sobbing, mingled with low, soothing words spoken by her uncle.

She softly opened the door, and standing upon the threshold, her face grew dark and wrathful at the picture which she saw within the room.

Mr. Rosevelt sat in his armchair by the table which stood between the two windows of his room, while Star knelt upon the floor at his side, her golden head bowed upon the arm of his chair, sobbing as if her heart was breaking.

The old gentleman had laid one hand upon her bright head, and was soothing it gently as he tried to quiet her with low, fond words.

"Dear child," he said, tenderly, "don't grieve so; you have been very brave so far; bear it a little longer, and all will be well. I know you have tried to hide it from me and everyone else, but I've seen and known what you have had to contend with ever since I came here. You've had no love, no sympathy, and your poor starved heart was well-nigh broken under it. But cheer up, my dear; you have been a blessing to me. I have been very lonely and forlorn many times, but I should have had a sorrowful time of it, indeed, if my bright little Star had not shed her genial rays upon my pathway."

"Indeed!" interrupted a voice from behind them, in its most sarcastic tones, causing Star to spring to her feet with a low cry of surprise, as she turned her flushed, tear-stained face toward the intruder, while Mr. Rosevelt looked up at his niece with a grave, displeased countenance.

"Indeed!" Mrs. Richards repeated, her anger waxing hotter and fiercer as she imagined that Star had been pouring the story of her love and trial into her uncle's ears. "You have both been sadly abused and heart-starved, haven't you? For a couple of dependants you fare very badly, don't you? And this is the gratitude and appreciation that you show. Stella Gladstone, go back to your room and remain there until I come to you; I wish to have a private conversation with you. As for you, Uncle Jacob, I am surprised that you should take sides with a sentimental schoolgirl against those who are providing most bountifully for her."

Mr. Rosevelt reached out his hand and took one of Star's.

"Remain where you are," he said, with a quiet authority which amazed while it enraged his niece.

Then turning to her, he continued, in the same quiet tone, but with a deliberation which made every word tell:

"Ellen Richards, you are a heartless, arrogant woman. You need not speak yet, for I am going to relieve my mind, once for all. I am your father's only brother, and when you were a child I helped him provide the very bread that appeased your hunger. When, later on, I became a rich man, and you were married and settled, you fawned upon and flattered me, protesting that there was nothing in the world that you would not do for 'dear Uncle Jacob.' Every time I returned from abroad, bringing you rich and elegant gifts, you urged me to quit my roving and come to live with you—your 'home and heart would always be open' to me, you said. It was the same with your brother Henry; words cost nothing, and his protestations were as fluent as your own. But when misfortune overtook me, and I returned to remain and to take him at his word, everything was changed. He received me coldly, giving me the poorest accommodations his house afforded, when before the best were none too good for me. Finally, he and his family, by their coldness, neglect and disagreeable hints, drove me to desperation, and I left them. I came hither, hoping that your woman's heart would prompt you to receive a sick and failing old man with the kindness and sympathy which he so much needed and craved. But I met with even a worse reception. You have ignored me when you could, and when you could not, you have taken pains to make me feel like an intruder and a dependant, although your husband evidently would be glad to be kind to me, if he could do so and keep the peace. This child alone," the old man continued, looking tenderly up into Star's sad face, "has given me love and sympathy. Her kindness and little attentions have been like a bright spot in the darkness and loneliness of my life since coming to you; while your treatment of her has been culpable——"

"Has she dared to complain of me to you?" cried Mrs. Richards, crimson with anger; for every word that he had uttered had been a reproach to her, and while she did not quite dare vent her wrath upon him, she was glad of this allusion to Star, for upon her defenceless head she felt free to relieve herself.

"No; she has never complained—she has even tried to conceal your treatment of her—but I have eyes and can see for myself. I know how she has had to battle for even her education, and that you would have made a drudge and a slave of her, had you dared and your husband allowed you to do it. It is disgraceful, Ellen, for you to treat your cousin's child in such a manner, when you owe so much to her mother——"

"How do you know? Who has been telling you all this? I am all out of patience!" Mrs. Richards interrupted, passionately. "Everybody is continually throwing at me the fact that Anna Cudleigh once saved my life. Hundreds of people have saved the lives of others and considered it their duty to have done so. If I were drowning and Anna saw me, it was natural for her—it belonged to her to save me if she could, as I should have done, no doubt, had the circumstances been reversed."

"True; but this view of the case does not lessen your obligation, nor license you to abuse the trust that has been committed to you," Mr. Rosevelt answered, sternly. "You bound yourself to this child's dying father to 'do the best you could for her,' to give her a home, and see that her education was properly attended to, and you owed it to him and to her to keep your promise."

"I owed her nothing," cried the enraged woman, losing all control of herself; "and you, Uncle Jacob, are overstepping all bounds by interfering with what is none of your business."

"The girl saved my life almost at the sacrifice of her own, and I shall make it my business to do what I can for her while I live," Mr. Rosevelt answered, with dignity.

"Well, you will find, I reckon, that you have not helped her cause very much by taking up weapons against me for her," snapped his niece, vindictively, and with a glance of dislike at Star. "Saved your life!" she continued, sarcastically. "Well, perhaps she did; but, in my opinion, that is all sentimental gush, for she is an artful jade, and has doubtless palavered and cooed over you until she has pulled the wool over your eyes in fine shape."

"What could have been her object, Ellen?" asked the old gentleman, dryly. "Certainly not the expectation of getting any portion of my fortune, since appearances must have indicated to her as well as to you that I had nothing to give her. If she had known me, and done all this when I was considered rich, there might possibly be some reasons in your accusations."

This shaft told keenly, for his niece colored guiltily to the roots of her hair.

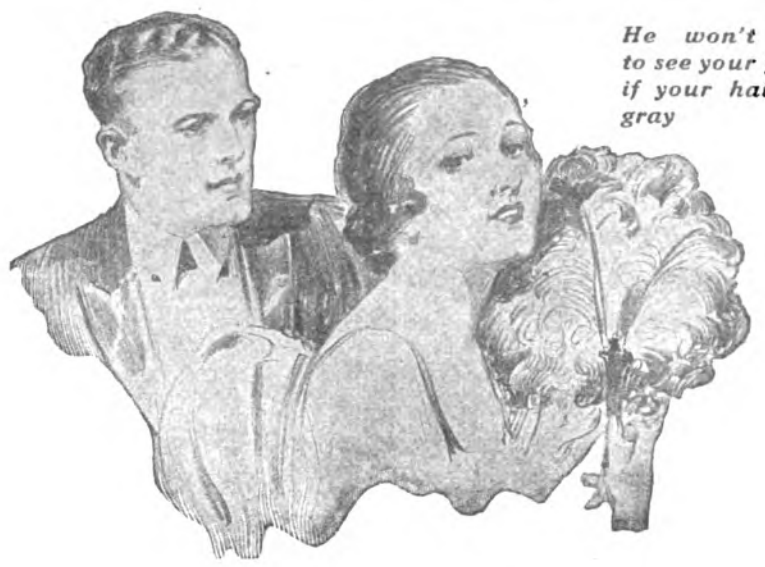
"Your irony is ill-timed, it appears to me, Uncle Jacob," she said, sullenly, "especially as you are indebted to me for the bare necessities of life, not to speak of its comforts."

"Indebted to you, am I, Ellen? I do not believe in recriminations, but allow me to ask, do you know the cost of those diamonds which you have on, and have you forgotten where you got them?"

Mrs. Richards' brilliant color forsook her in an instant, and she became as white as the mass of snowy lace which rose and fell with the angry pulsation of her heart.

"I do not begrudge you your jewels, Ellen," Mr. Rosevelt continued, more gently, perceiving how keenly she felt his reproof, "but when you twit me of being indebted to you for the simple necessities of life, it is rather more than I can tamely submit to. I was fond of making presents in the days that are gone, and I felt repaid for my diamonds by the joy that lighted up your face when I gave them to you; but I confess it is a little hard to be considered a burden by you now, while I am deeply grieved to have Star's young life made so unhappy."

"I tell you you do not know the girl; she is as artful as she can be, and I can prove it to you," Mrs. Richards exclaimed, glad to have the subject changed, for she was considerably conscience-smitten over the diamonds.



"I do not think you can prove anything of the kind, Ellen," Mr. Rosevelt returned, quietly.

"Listen, then," she retorted, eagerly, "and I will tell you how tonight I have discovered her to be guilty of the most shameless conduct."

Star started and flushed at the accusation. She had not a suspicion that her secret had been discovered.

"It seems," continued Mrs. Richards, "that while going back and forth, to and from school this fall, she has been flirting in the most desperate manner with a young man—a perfect stranger to her, and one so far above her socially that it was rankest presumption in her to do as she has done. She has even entrapped him into—or rather, I should say, she has misconstrued his conversation with her to mean a declaration of love for her, and now that he has found her

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 34.)

He won't try to see your face if your hair is gray

Keep Its Color Natural

Gray hair prevents interest and does you an injustice, for it adds 10 years to your age. It is a handicap, socially or in business, for this is the age of youth.

But—graying hair can be restored, easily, safely and surely—restored to its original youthful becoming color. The process is simple, the method reliable. Results are certain.

You be the judge

Mail the coupon for the free trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer offered in this advertisement. Test as directed on a single lock of hair. Watch the gray disappear and the natural color return.

Note how simple and easy the process—no skill required. You are independent of hair dressers or beauty specialists and can keep your own secret.

In from 4 to 8 days restoration will be complete. All gray streaks vanished—color beautifully even and natural. Then, restore all your hair without delay. You know positively and beyond doubt how to keep your hair its own becoming youthful color the rest of your life.

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer

Don't risk results

Mary T. Goldman's is a tested laboratory product, efficient and reliable. Results are certain. Don't risk the future of your hair experimenting with unknown products, for the result is all too often streaked, discolored hair with no remedy but the slow process of natural growth.

Use Mary T. Goldman's and your natural, evenly colored hair will be a lifelong delight. Test it first—know for yourself that success is certain.

MARY T. GOLDMAN
1166 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Mary T. Goldman,
1166 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Please send me your FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. The natural color of my hair is black.... jet black.... dark brown.... medium brown.... light brown....

Name .....

Address .....
Please print you name and address plainly.

Free Book

"Success in Music How To Win It"

LET Sousa, Pryor and eight other world-famous musicians tell you secrets of their success; how to discover and cultivate your musical "bump"; double your income and pleasure playing in band or orchestra.

FREE TRIAL
Any Instrument

Conn instruments are used by world-famous artists. Known everywhere as easiest of all to play. Try any instrument FREE. No obligation; easy payments when you buy. Send coupon for free book and details of free trial plan.

C. G. CONN Ltd
310 Conn Bldg. Elkhart, Ind.
Agencies in all large cities

C. G. Conn, Ltd.
310 Conn Bldg., Elkhart, Indiana.
Gentlemen:—Please send me "Success in Music" and details of your free trial plan. (Mention instrument.)
Name
Street or Rural Route
City, County
State
Instrument

FLOWERS THAT NEVER DIE

The Japanese [everlasting] Straw Flower NEVER FADES. Will keep indefinitely after being cut. It is an ornament when growing and especially prized for all kinds of decoration. For vase in winter it cannot be beat. To introduce our catalog of rare plants and seeds, we will send a package of the seeds, mixed colors, for 10c

Will Grow Anywhere. With the above we will also GIVE another pkge. of Flower Seeds. [Our Own Selection].

Japan Seed House,
Box 505,
South Norwalk, Conn.

Dress Designing Lessons FREE

Women—Girls—15 or over, can easily learn Dress and Costume Designing during their spare moments IN TEN WEEKS

Dress and Costume Designers Frequently Earn
$45 to $100 a Week
Many Start Parlors In Their Own Homes.

Every woman who now does plain sewing should take up Designing.

Send Coupon Immediately

Coupon
Mail to FRANKLIN INSTITUTE,
Dept B 651,
Rochester, N. Y.

Kindly send me sample of lessons in Dress and Costume Designing as taught in 10 weeks' spare time.

Name.....
Address.....

FREE BOOK
KELLOGG'S Great Crops of STRAWBERRIES and How to Grow Them
THE KELLOGG WAY

Write quick for this valuable 68 page book of strawberry information and art. Written by America's most successful strawberry grower. Explains how he makes poor soil rich without manure or fertilizer and gives his secrets for growing the big crops of summer and fall strawberries that won him fame and fortune. Pictures in colors and tells all about his wonderful new Everbearer that won the $1,000.00 Cash Prize. Shows 34 pages of strawberries, strawberry fields and gardens in natural color. Gives 30 tested recipes for making the most delicious strawberry dainties. Contains nothing but proven facts. Gives you the benefit of more than 40 years of successful strawberry experience. Send for this valuable book and learn how easy it is to make big money growing Kellogg Strawberries The Kellogg Way. Worth its weight in gold--costs you nothing. Just send your name and address--a postal will do. The book is FREE.

R. M. KELLOGG CO.
BOX 223 THREE RIVERS, MICH.

A WOMAN FLORIST
3 Hardy Roses 25c
On their own roots
ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER
Sent to any address postpaid; guaranteed to reach you in good growing condition.
GEM ROSE COLLECTION
Crimson Queen, rich velvety crimson.
Alexander Hill Gray, pure yellow.
Columbia, glowing pink.
SPECIAL BARGAINS
3 Carnations, the "Divine Flower," all colors, 25c
3 Choice Ferns - - 25c
3 Chrysanthemums, 25c
4 Beautiful Coleus, 25c
3 Flowering Cannas, 25c
2 Choice Dahlias - - - - - 25c
2 Choice Hardy Iris - - - - 25c
5 Lovely Gladioli - - - - - 25c
5 Superb Pansy Plants - - - 25c
8 Pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 25c
Any 5 Collections for $1. The Entire 11 Collections for $2. Postpaid.
Once a customer, always one. Catalog Free.
MISS ELLA V BAINES, Box 217, SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

3 Glorious ROSES
Everblooming, Guaranteed True to Name. All bloom this summer. Mailed postpaid for 25c
Radiance—Intense pink.
Alex. Hill Gray—Yellow, fine bud.
Crimson Queen—Velvety crimson.
5 Pkts. Flower Seeds
The following collection blooms from early summer to late fall: Aster, Petunia, Pansy, Phlox and Salvia. Generous pkts. Extra special value postpaid 10c.
I will mail 5 pkts. of Daisy Seed (5 colors) for 15c, or I will mail the 3 Collections, the 3 Roses, the 5 pkts. Flower Seeds and the 5 pkts. Daisy Seed all for 40c.
COMPLETE CATALOG FREE
Lists over 400 roses, all the newest and best. Dahlias, Ferns and everything for house and garden. Send for your copy now.
MISS JESSIE M. GOOD, Box 234 SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

Free for Testing
Guaranteed Everbearing Strawberries
A pair of mated Everbearing Strawberry Plants FREE if you will report your success with them. Will bear loads of big red strawberries from June to November of same year plants are set. We have been breeding Everbearing strawberries for the past 12 years and have counted 480 berries, blossoms and buds on a single plant in September. A postal will bring the plants and 5 kernels of Burbank's new Golden Pop Corn. Also our colored catalogue of "Blizzard Belt" Products with seed for a Silk Leaf Poppy Garden thrown in for good measure. Send 10 cents for mailing expense or not as you please. Write today and get acquainted with our Hardy "Blizzard Belt" Seeds, Trees and Plants. THE GARDNER NURSERY CO., Nurserymen and Seedsmen, Box 507, Osage, Iowa.
Five Dozen genuine Progressive Everbearing Strawberry plants mailed at proper planting time for $1.00 if ordered now direct from this advertisement.

TREES & PLANTS THAT GROW
CATALOG FREE
Great Bargains. Standard Varieties. Best Quality. Low Prices.
Satisfaction or money refunded.
60 years in business proof of our responsibility. Write for catalog now.
PETER BOHLENDER & SONS
Spring Hill Nurseries
Box 114 Tippecanoe City (Miami County) Ohio

Army Auction Bargains
LUGER pistol, cal. 7.65 m-m $21.50
Army saddles $6.50 | Army knapsacks .75 up
Altered Mauser rifle cal. 30 U. S. $16.50
Full set Army steel letters and figures, $1.00.
15 acres army goods. Illustrated catalog for 1922—372 pages—including full and highly interesting information (specially secured) of all World War small arms, mailed 50 cents. Circular 16 pages 10 cents. Established 1865.
FRANCIS BANNERMAN SONS, 501 Broadway, N.Y.

We Pay $7 a Day
taking orders for Insyde Tyres—inner armor for automobile tires. Positively prevent puncture and blowouts. Guaranteed to give double tire mileage. Use over and over again. Old worn-out casings will give three to five thousand more miles service. Enormous demand. Every auto owner a prospect. Write quick for agency.
AMERICAN ACCESSORIES CO. B-1733 CINCINNATI, OHIO

FREE "Linene" COLLAR
For trial, a sample of our New Style Copley, if you send 2 cents for postage and state size wanted.
Reversible Collar Co., Dept. E, Boston, Mass.

Glass Cloth A transparent waterproof fabric as efficient as glass for hotbeds. Sample 3 x 9 feet prepaid $1. Catalog free. TURNER BROS., Bladen, Neb.

Farm and Garden for March

"IN like a lion and out like a lamb" certainly describes the month of March to the dot. Warm spring rains, belated blizzards, blustering gales and smiling skies all have their day, making this month the "quick-change artist" of the whole year. And the old saying, "Madder than a March hare," applies to more than the changeable weather; we have known farmers that it described exactly, farmers who had not been before-handed with their work, then tried to do at least three things at one time with a growl and a frenzied rush. For March is the get-ready month, the time of year when everything is made shipshape for the busy summer to come, and the right time for the farmer to roll up his sleeves and take a reef in his belt as he prepares for the race. Here are some of the many things that fall into the list of March jobs:

Cleaning Seed Grain

The farm housewife is not the only one who does spring cleaning. The farmer himself has quite a bit of cleaning to do; first and most important is cleaning seed grain, and during March is the time to do it.

Clean, strong, pure seed is the best kind of crop insurance we can think of, and in this connection we recall that the fanning mill has been called the grain farmer's best friend. From the standpoint of efficiency, there is little to choose between the hand-driven or the power-driven types of fanning mill; the popularity of the latter is due to the saving in time and labor involved. A good modern mill in working order will effectually separate out the large plump grain from the small undersized kernels and chaff. It may be necessary to run the same grain through two or three times to be sure that all dirt and weed seeds are taken out, but it is time well spent.

Experiments have shown that if only from 5 to 10 per cent. of the grain, this being the plumpest, is kept for seed a decided crop improvement results. While in an ideal season the small kernels may germinate and grow well, in cold and wet springs where germination is delayed and the seed "lies" in the ground" for a week or two, the large kernels possess vitality and reserve growing power that is lacking in the small ones. For this reason it pays to use only the best. This same rule applies to the farmer who will have to buy seed—and those who find themselves in this class should lose no time in placing their orders with a reputable seed house, ordering varieties that have proved their worth.

Testing Seed Grain

Testing seed for germination on the farm is rapidly coming to be the rule rather than the exception, nor can we think of any other single thing that has done so much to take the guesswork out of farming. Seed houses now offer for sale seed not only that is true to type, of a pure strain, but they include the germination test. Many states make the labeling of seed with the true germination test compulsory, backing the farmer in his growing desire to buy commodities of known quality.

For those who have never tested seed, let us say first that there is nothing to be afraid of. The operation is simplicity itself; so simple, in fact, that children can do it. By the way, here is a place where the little ones can lend Dad a helping hand, and will be glad to do it. In rural schools and country high schools everywhere children are now taught, along with many other things in their work in agriculture, how seed tests of several kinds are made. Perhaps the most popular and common test is made with the rag-doll tester, which we will describe briefly.

The rag-doll tester is made with a long narrow strip of cloth, preferably flannel, eight to 10 inches in width and about five feet long. Down the center of the strip, running to within six inches of each end, small squares are marked or ruled. There should be either two or three rows of squares, about two inches each. Lines are best drawn with waterproof ink, and the squares each numbered in order beginning with "1" and on up until each bears a number.

To use the tester, let us illustrate with wheat. If the grain is in bags, take five or 10 kernels from each bag, depending on the amount of seed on hand. Mark the bags with a numbered tag, and place the selected kernels in the corresponding squares in the tester. If seed is stored loose in a bin, then take samples from all parts and proceed in the same way. When the kernels have been placed in their respective squares, five to each square, sprinkle the flannel until well saturated with water. Then, beginning at one end, roll it up tightly, taking care not to misplace the grain. When it is rolled up, tie at two or three points with string or tape. Wet each day by standing the end of the roll in water for a few minutes. Keep in a warm place for at least a week, then open and examine. Grain that shows strong and thrifty sprouts and uniform germination should be chosen for seed; that showing weak sprouts, no sprouts, or lack of vitality, should be traced back to the bags and set aside as of poor quality. If there is still a doubt, run a second test of these bags, taking 100 kernels from each, then reading the percentage by counting the number that sprout.

Treating Seed to Prevent Disease

To the large majority of COMFORT readers we can tell little that is new about treating seed, for most of them have learned how to treat seed—have been doing it for years, in fact. But each spring we receive inquiries on when and how to treat. For those who were just about ready "to take their pens in hand" and ask the question, we give the following instructions and suggestions:

Formaldehyde treatment is by far the most common and has the greatest general usefulness on the farm. This consists of using one pint of commercial formaldehyde or formalin mixed with 40 gallons of soft water. The mixture is used in one of two ways; it is either sprinkled over grain, or kept in a barrel into which sacked grain is dipped.

For the first method, the grain is spread out on a clean, tight floor. With a sprinkling can, one man saturates the grain as another rapidly and thoroughly spades it over and over to assure a thorough wetting. After mixing thoroughly the grain is shoveled into a pile and covered with sacks soaked in the solution, left for 24 hours, then spread out again and dried, when it is ready for seeding. The grain should be dry before seeding to assure that it will run evenly and easily through grain spouts in the drill or seeder.

The second method, that of dipping sacked grain into a barrel of formaldehyde, is more commonly employed by farmers who have relatively small quantities of grain to treat or who wish to keep it for some time after treating and before seeding. We recall one farmer in the Red River Valley of North Dakota who called this method "Baptizing" wheat. His plan was to attach a block and tackle to a beam above the barrel in the granary and thus hoist, lower, then lift out the sacks of grain with its help at a saving in time and work. By the way, the ordinary gunny-sacks work better than more tightly woven grain bags, as they permit the solution to enter readily and to drain out rapidly when they are lifted.

Though it is a bit early in the year to speak of seed potatoes, and the treatment of same for scab and other diseases preventable by the formaldehyde "bath," we will call attention to the fact that they are treated in the same manner as we have described above. They are then allowed to stand for at least a day to allow the solution to soak in and dry off, then are cut into the sections desired for seed. As a caution, remember that formaldehyde solution becomes weak if allowed to stand long; therefore it should be used while fresh. Furthermore, it must be replenished from time to time to keep the desired strength.

Spreading Manure and Fertilizer

Few farmers fully appreciate the importance of hauling and spreading barnyard manure early in the spring before heavy rains set in to leach away its fertility. To most, handling manure is a tedious but necessary chore, one to be rushed through as quickly as possible. We admit that when manure has been allowed to accumulate throughout the winter months it is a real task to get it out of the way in the spring before plowing is commenced.

From 80 to 90 per cent. of the fertility contained in crops grown and fed to livestock on the farm is found in the fresh manure. Of this a considerable portion is lost by leaching and exposure to the weather if piled in an open pile in the barnyard—as is usually the case. Still, if hauling and spreading is started early in the spring while the ground is still frozen, and before rains begin, much of the crop-producing value of manure can be saved. Also, it is easier to haul with either a manure-spreader or ordinary wagon over frozen ground than through soft mud, as you will agree. For these reasons we advise that manure hauling be listed as one of the most important March jobs, and that the time to get at it is now unless you have started already.

Regarding commercial fertilizers, let us say just a word. Stable manure, though rich in most kinds of plant food and especially in nitrogen, is low in phosphorus. Likewise most soils are deficient or low in this necessary fertilizing element. Therefore the addition of phosphorus in some form is highly advisable, and proves to be a paying investment wherever used. Results of a 15-year test run by the Ohio Experiment Station showed that the addition of 40 pounds of acid phosphate to each ton of manure, when eight tons were spread to the acre, gave an increased value of $1.51 per ton over the treatment cost, and increased the manurial value about one-half.

The importance of even distribution is frequently overlooked. It has been found that as much good results from eight tons per acre of manure carefully and evenly spread as from 12 tons carelessly spread. An uneven stand of any crop is sure to result the first year if the work is done in a slipshod manner. The manure-spreader does the work easily and well; the same results may be attained with the pitchfork if the operator is willing to go slowly, breaking up clods and lumps as he goes, then following with a harrow with the teeth set on a backward slant. If manure is spread by hand with a pitchfork, do not make the common mistake of leaving it standing in piles on the land. Spread at once and direct from the wagon-box. The results of the other method are seen later in the season in the shape of small rank patches that dot the field here and there—and surrounding crops suffer from the lack of plant food.

Spraying the Orchard

By no means, all of the readers of COMFORT have orchards to spray, and more's the pity, but we are willing to wager that many an orchard in dire need of spraying fails to receive due care, and more's the pity once more.

The time and kind of spraying varies widely

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 35.)

$13.95 Goodyear All-Weather Coat FREE
Goodyear Mfg. Co., 353-R, Goodyear Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., is making an offer to send a handsome, Rainproofed, All-Weather coat to one person in each locality who will show and recommend it to friends. If you want one, write today.—Adv.

2247 BEANS FROM 1
IMPROVED 1200 TO 1 BEAN
This is what C. H. Fuller, 30 Loomis St., Montpelier, Vt., grew from 1 of my 1200 to 1 Beans. One plant produced 358 pods. See his report in my Seed Book. It is a great Bean.
My Improved Stock is better than ever—grows strong and erect, branching freely, producing handsome well-filled pods up from the ground, which literally load the plant. Beans being pure white of the finest quality.
Plant after danger of frost only one Bean in a hill and they will mature a crop in from 70 to 80 days. The yield will surprise you. Packet 60 Beans 10c, 3 pkts. 25c.
Fancy Prolific Pickles—One of the choicest strains Cucumbers for pickles, also good for slicing. Very early, producing great quantities of fruit, bear all summer. Packet (over 100 seeds) Six Cents.
27 Varieties Flower Seeds—Special Mixture for outdoor culture prepared specially for a gorgeous Flower Bed, of 20 square feet, wonderful colors. Packet naming the 27 kinds (over 3,000 seeds) Eight Cents.
Special Offer—I will mail one packet each, 1200 to 1 Bean, Giant Tomato, Fancy Prolific Pickles, 27 Varieties Flower Seeds, all 4 packets for 10c, or 3 packets of each for 25c.
1922 Seed Book free, 17 Novelties in colors, hundreds Best Vegetables and Flowers. Lowest Prices. Write today.
F.B. Mills, Seed Grower, Box 30, Rose Hill, N.Y.
Giant Tomato—One of largest grown, vines very strong, will carry enormous weight of fruit, specimens often weighing 2 and 3 lbs. each, very solid, few seeds, crimson color. Pkt. (100 seeds) 5 cents.

Walsh NO-BUCKLE HARNESS
No Buckles To Tear
No Rings To Wear
1-22
30 DAYS FREE TRIAL
Post Yourself
INVESTIGATE—Get facts on Walsh no-buckle harness, before buying any harness. Let me send you this wonderful harness on 30 days free trial. See for yourself this harness which outwears buckle harness because it has no buckles to tear straps, no friction rings to wear them, no holes in straps to weaken them. Highest possible quality of leather.
Try Walsh Harness on Your Team
Return if not satisfactory. Costs less, saves repairs, wears longer, fits any size horse perfectly. Made in all styles, back pads, side backers, breechingless, etc. LIBERAL TERMS, cash or note, no extra charge for credit. Write for FREE catalogue and new reduced prices.
JAMES M. WALSH, Pres.
WALSH HARNESS CO.
Dept. R-4,
137 Keefe Ave.
Milwaukee, Wis.
FREE Walsh Harness Book Tells the Why and How WRITE FOR IT TODAY

INNER TUBE FREE
6,000 Miles Guaranteed
SEND NO MONEY
Here is the greatest tire offer ever made. Never before such low prices. Brand new Inner Tube given Free with every one of our special reconstructed tires guaranteed for 6,000 miles. We ship at once on approval. Pay only when convinced.
Inner Tube FREE
Less Than ½ Price

28x3	$6.40	34x4	$9.95
30x3	6.75	32x4½	10.10
30x3½	6.95	34x4½	10.95
32x3½	7.25	35x4½	11.25
31x4	8.25	36x4½	11.75
32x4	8.95	35x5	12.10
33x4	9.25	37x5	12.25

Write Today No money now—just your name and number of tires wanted. Pay on arrival. Examine and judge for yourself. If not satisfied return at our expense and your money immediately refunded. Be sure to state size and whether clincher or straight side. Don't delay—send now. Immediate shipment.
Seven Ply Tire Co., 115 E. 29th St., Dept. 356, Chicago

Paint Without Oil
Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.
A Free Trial Package Is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.
A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He named it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.
Write to A. L. Rice, Inc., Manufacturers, 11 North St., Adams, N. Y., and a free trial package will be mailed to you, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write today.

WITTE
Makes New Prices

All Sizes Lower. Kerosene or Gasoline. Prices f. o. b. K. C. Carload fgt. to PBG. Write for CATALOG.	2 H-P. (was	$59)	Now $39.95
	6 H-P. (was	180)	Now 119.90
	12 H-P. (was	352)	Now 249.00
	30 H-P. (was	1091)	Now 699.80

WITTE ENGINE WORKS.
3643 Oakland Avenue, KANSAS CITY, MO.
3643 Empire Building, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Save ½ Shoe Cost
Can't Come Off
Can't Slip
FLEXIBLE STEEL SOLE AND HEEL PLATES
Make sole and heel out-last uppers. Bend to fit shoe. Non-skid; corrugations prevent slipping. Weight 2 oz. Tacks with plates; put on yourself; money back if not satified.
By mail postpaid. Set (sole and heel plates) Men, Women or Boys' size. 50c
Agents, dealers, cobblers wanted.
SHOE SHIELD CO., Dept. 100, AUGUSTA, KY.

1000 SHOT ALL STEEL MAGAZINE AIR RIFLE GIVEN
WE GIVE TO BOYS
Choice of Six Guns (on four easy plans) for selling our Magic Healing Wave-o-lene at 25c Box.
WE TRUST YOU! Order Seven Boxes Today On Postal Card—we send promptly, Prepaid. Easy to sell—used in every home. Return money as instructed, choosing your Gun according to one of the plans shown in our Big Premium List. Also 200 other Gifts or Big Cash Commission if you prefer. If you are prompt—a special Free Gift.
WAVERLY CO. 202 Temple Bldg., Monongahela, Pa.
HAMILTON 22 CAL. HUNTING RIFLE WITHOUT COST
350 SHOT REPEATER
SEND ORDER TODAY. FREE!

WHITE FLAME
BURNERS make your old kerosene lamps and lanterns give a brilliant white light better than electricity or gas. Doubles your light. Saves oil. No Mantle to Break. Guaranteed Safe and Reliable. Delights every user. Send now for complete sample postpaid 60 cts., stamps or coin. 3 for $1.25. Money back if Not Satisfactory. Live Representatives Wanted. Exclusive Territory.
WHITE FLAME LIGHT CO. 76 Clark Bldg. Grand Rapids, Mich.

WANTED
Railway Mail Clerks
$1600 to $2300 Year.
MEN—BOYS OVER 16 SHOULD SEND COUPON IMMEDIATELY
Steady Work
No Layoffs
Paid Vacations
Common education sufficient
Send coupon today—SURE.
Franklin Institute, Dept. B213, Rochester, N. Y.
Sirs: Send me, without charge, (1) sample Railway Mail Clerk Examination Questions; (2) schedule showing places of all coming U. S. Government examinations; (3) list of many Government jobs now obtainable.
Address .....
Name .....

Auto Owners WANTED!

To introduce the best automobile tires in the world. Made under our new and exclusive Internal Hydraulic Expansion Process that eliminates Blow-Out—Stone-Bruise—Rim-Cut and enables us to sell our tires under a

10,000 MILE GUARANTEE

We want an agent in every community to use and introduce these wonderful tires at our astonishingly low prices to all motor car owners.

Write for booklet fully describing this new process and explaining our amazing introductory offer to owner agents.

Hydro-United Tire Co.
Dept. 167, Chicago, San Francisco, Pottstown, Pa.

STANDARD TIRES
LESS THAN 1/2 Price

Send No Money

Don't miss this chance to cut your tire cost in two and get a reliner with each tire FREE. We ship at once on approval standard Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone, Mason and other adjusted tires in excellent condition and Your Money Back if you don't like them. They can readily be guaranteed for 5,000 miles. So sure are we you will like these tires that we request no deposit in advance. These are not sewed together tires known as the double tread and reconstructed tires.

SEE THESE LOW PRICES

Sizes	Tires	Tubes	Sizes	Tires	Tubes
28x3	$4.95	$1.25	34x4	$ 8.50	$2.50
30x3	5.25	1.50	32x4½	9.50	2 75
30x3½	6.25	1.60	34x4½	9.25	2.95
32x3½	6.75	1.75	35x4½	9.65	3.15
31x4	7.75	1.95	36x4½	9.95	3.25
32x4	7.95	2.25	35x5	10.50	3.45
33x4	8.25	2.40	37x5	10.75	3.65

Remember, a reliner Free with each tire. When cash is sent with order 5 per cent discount allowed. Examine—judge for yourself. If not satisfied, return goods at our expense. Specify straight side, clincher, non-skid or plain wanted.

CLEVELAND TIRE AND RUBBER CO.
3154 Michigan Avenue Chicago, Illinois

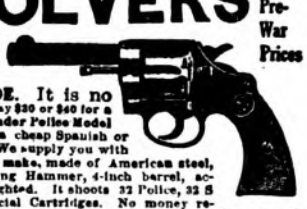
U.S. Army Munson Last Shoe

Made of pliable Chrome Leather. Broad, Solid Oak Leather Heels, Double Thick Soles. Dirt and Water Proof.

$2.85 Bellows Tongue. Sizes 5½ to 12.

Guarantee

You must be entirely satisfied or we will refund your money.



Pay Postman

Send no money. Just send your name, address and size. Your shoes will be sent by return mail. Pay postman $2.85 and postage on arrival.

CIVILIAN ARMY & NAVY SHOE CO.
Dept. 359, 461 8th Ave., New York.

REVOLVERS At Pre-War Prices

Price Only $15

AMERICAN MADE. It is no longer necessary to pay $30 or $40 for a good Swing Out Cylinder Police Model Revolver, or to buy a cheap Spanish or German imitation. We supply you with a genuine American make, made of American steel, Blue finish, Rebounding Hammer, 4-inch barrel, accurately rifled and sighted. It shoots 32 Police, 32 S & W or 32 S & W Special Cartridges. No money required with order. Simply write us saying you are 21 years old and can legitimately own a Pistol, and we will ship it by Parcel Post, you simply pay the Post man $15.00. Or you may order through your dealer. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Booklet FREE.

KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., Dept CT. 96 Chambers St., NEW YORK

FORDS run 34 Miles on Gallon of Gasoline

Wonderful new carburetor. Guaranteed to reduce gasoline bills from one-half to one-third and increase power of motors from 30 to 50%. Start easy in coldest weather.

Sent on 30 DAYS' TRIAL

Fits any car. Attach yourself. Fords make as high as 34 miles to gallon. Other cars show proportionate saving. Send make of car and take advantage of our special 30-day trial offer. Agents Wanted.

AIR FRICTION CARBURETOR CO.
3330 Madison Street Dayton, Ohio

Make Your Bike a Motorcycle

The low cost Shaw Attachment fits any bicycle. Easily put on. No special tools or knowledge necessary. Write at once for Free Book, also about Shaw Motorbicycle, a complete power bike at big saving.

SHAW MANUFACTURING CO.
Dept. 32, Galesburg, Kansas

FREE TRIAL

Let us send this fine Razor for 30 days free trial. When satisfied after using, send $1.85 or return razor. Order Today.
JONES MFG. CO. 160 N. Wells St. Dept. 648 Chicago

Sales Agents

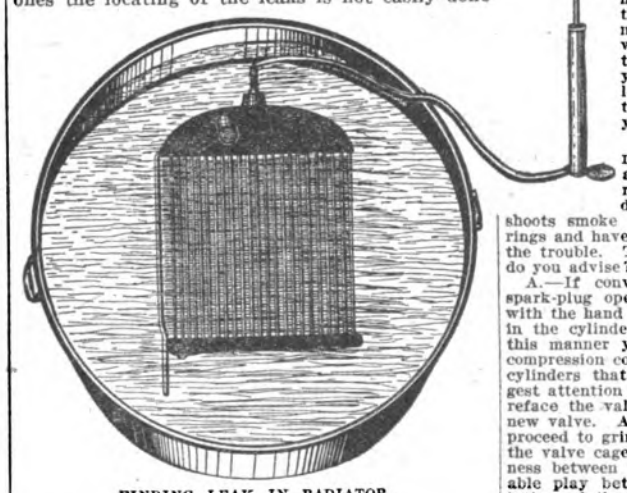
wanted in every county to give all or spare time. Positions worth $750 to $1,500 yearly. We train the inexperienced. Novelty Cutlery Co. 78 Bar St., Canton, Ohio

Automobile and Gas Engine Helps

Questions relating to gasolene engines and automobiles, by our subscribers, addressed to COMFORT Auto Dept., Augusta, Maine, will be answered by our expert, free, in the columns of this department. Full name and address is required, but initials only will be printed. That we may intelligently diagnose your trouble please state the year in which your car was made.

Helpful Pointers

Locating Short Circuit



MANY manufacturers at one time took a great fancy to the use of armored cable. Later developments proved that much of this material was poorly insulated and as the cable inside commenced to chafe it soon found a ground that was very difficult to locate. The external appearance may be very satisfactory, yet there may be many grounds inside that do not show up. Whenever short circuits are experienced on a car having armored cable it is well to disconnect the armored cable and stretch another cable which you know is O. K. By testing the different cables in the manner outlined it will be possible to locate the faulty cable, providing a short circuit exists in same.

Loose Connections

Vibration is the chief factor in the loosening of terminal nuts, bolts, etc. Regardless of how tightly the nut is screwed down, the vibration keeps working at the nut and finally turns it off. Lock washers placed under the nuts will remedy the difficulty. Whenever possible to use lock washers it is advisable to do so. When the nut is turned down the lips of the washer bite into the metal and in this way insure a lasting connection. Many cars that have flickering lights have electrical connections that have been loosened by vibration.

Leaky Radiator

This is the season of the year when many owners find that the water in the cooling system of the motor has frozen and caused leaks in the radiator. The best way out of such a condition is to have the radiator repaired by someone who specializes in work of this kind. However, should it so happen that it is not convenient to send the radiator away or if the owner makes a practice of doing his own repair work, the first step is, of course, to locate the leaks. If they are small ones the locating of the leaks is not easily done as they may be almost invisible to the eye. If the radiator be removed from the car and subjected to air pressure, the leaks are certain to show up. To accomplish this end it is first necessary to seal all the openings such as the water connections, overflow pipe, etc. Pieces of tin carefully soldered over these openings will answer the purpose well. At the radiator filler opening it is necessary to provide means for attaching an air pump. An old inner-tube valve soldered in the center of the tin will be satisfactory for this purpose. After sealing the openings as above suggested, attach a pump to the tire valve-stem, place the radiator in a tub filled with water and commence pumping. The principle is the same as in testing for leaks in an inner tube. Wherever there is a leak bubbles will rise to the surface of the water. See illustration.

FINDING LEAK IN RADIATOR.

Rim Adjustment

Making a tire change is not an enjoyable operation and the average driver is apt to use strong-arm methods without any system. I refer particularly to the tightening of the wedges which hold the rim in place on the wheel. If one will only give the matter a little thought he will understand how it is possible for a rim to run crooked on the wheel if each wedge bolt is tightened fully before taking up on the next one. The only proper way to put on a new mounted tire is to tighten one bolt slightly and then turn the wheel to the opposite bolt. Tighten this bolt a little and progress in this manner until each bolt has approximately the same tension on the rim. You next tighten the bolt to the limit, passing then to the opposite one and so on until all are securely drawn up.

Reverse Current Cut-Out

Cars equipped with battery and generator must provide some means for preventing the battery from discharging back through the generator when the car is standing or the generator is not being driven at a generating speed. This is accomplished by means of a device known as the reverse current cut-out. As its name implies, its purpose is to prevent the current flowing in a reverse direction. Just as the valve prevents the air from escaping from the inner tube when the pump is removed, so does the cut-out prevent the current in the storage battery from flowing back through the generator. When the generator produces sufficient current to charge the battery, the cut-out points are magnetically closed and in this manner connect the generator to the battery. However, the instant that the generator voltage drops below the counter-voltage of the battery, the cut-out points spring open and prevent any discharge back from the battery. Cases have occurred where the cut-out points would stick, and when such a condition takes place the circuit remains closed and the battery will discharge back through the generator until drained of all current. Should you find that with all switches turned off the ammeter shows a heavy discharge, it is well to immediately investigate the reverse current cut-out points as they may be sticking together and holding the circuit closed.

Ammeter Reading

It sometimes happens that an operator will notice his ammeter and find that it reads on the discharge side when it should be showing charge. He knows that the wires have not been changed and is therefore at a loss to account for the condition. The proper course to pursue in a case of this kind is to first make certain that the ammeter is reading wrong. This is done by stopping the motor and turning on the lights. You then know that current is being taken out of the storage battery and the ammeter should show a discharge reading. If, however, the ammeter shows a charge reading then it is known that the instrument has changed its polarity. Some ammeters change their polarity, a condition that has never been explained to my satisfaction. The changing of the ammeter polarity does not in any way affect the electrical circuit but in case you desire that the instrument register properly you have only to change the flow of current through the instrument by taking the cables off the posts at the back of the ammeter and changing them around.

Starting Small Screws

It is often difficult to hold a small screw with the fingers and use a screwdriver at the same time. Especially is it difficult if the screw is to be fitted in an inaccessible place. It will be found much easier to make a loop at the end of a thin flexible wire. Make the loop approximately the same diameter as the body of the screw. By placing the screw in the loop it can be held steadily and inserted in the hole. After the threads have caught, give the wire a pull and it will straighten and leave the screw free.

Answers to Correspondents

MAGNETO TROUBLE.—Can you tell me what is the trouble with a Ford car when, in driving along, it suddenly stops although there is plenty of gasolene in the tank and the engine seems to be getting it all right? It will run on battery, but not on magneto.
A. C. E., Selfridge, N. Dak.

A.—Since you state that the car operates satisfactorily when using battery ignition, it would seem to indicate that either the magneto is not functioning properly or that the connections are such that you are unable to collect the current generated. I would first suggest an inspection of the cable leading from the magneto plug. If this is not broken, loose or shorted it will be advisable to remove the magneto plug. I have seen two types of plugs for this make of car. One incorporates a coil spring and brush. The brush may be sticking and not making contact, in need of cleaning or broken. The other type of plug has the wire coiled in spring manner and makes contact at the end. The wire may not be making contact, and in this case should be stretched a trifle. If you are unable to obtain current after following these suggestions, it would be well to have someone who is experienced on your make of car look over the magneto.

CYLINDERS MISS WHEN RUNNING SLOWLY.—My 1918 model Buick runs smoothly as long as it is pulling or the motor is racing, but when running idle and slowed down down it hits on only one cylinder and shoots smoke from the exhaust. I have put in new rings and have ground the valves, but it did not remedy the trouble. The ignition seems to be all right. What do you advise? A. F. VAN M., Ouitague, Texas.

A.—If convenient, place a pressure gauge in the spark-plug opening and while turning the motor over with the hand crank read the pressure that is developed in the cylinder. Test each cylinder separately and in this manner you will be able to determine the exact compression condition in each cylinder. If you find any cylinders that are down in compression, I would suggest attention to the valves. Recut the valve seats and reface the valves. If the valve head is warped use a new valve. After machining the parts in this manner, proceed to grind in the valves to a perfect seat. While the valve cages are out determine the amount of looseness between the valve stem and its guide. Considerable play between these parts will result in the diluting of the mixture by auxiliary air which will be drawn down the loose guide. I have known of people who have made stuffing glands that fit the top of the guide, others have bored out the guide and fitted a bushing while others have installed new cages and valves. Whichever step you decide upon, bear in mind that there must not be too much play in the intake valve guides on account of the air which will travel down them and dilute the mixture to a point where it will not ignite. This condition is usually noticed at slow motor speeds only. Make sure that the spark-plugs are clean and the plugs set at the proper distance apart. You probably have a gauge for setting them. Clean the breaker points and be sure that the two surfaces come in contact for the entire area and not in one point only. Space the break with your gauge.

WEAK MAGNETO, ONE CYLINDER WEAK.—My 1919 model Ford will not run with ignition coming from the magneto until the car speeds up to about 15 or 20 miles an hour. I believe the magneto is weak. If so, could I charge it with the generator that is on the car? (2) Cylinder No. 4 does not furnish as much power as any one of the others. I have changed coils, spark-plugs and timers, but it does not help this cylinder. May it be that this cylinder is not getting enough gas? (3) I have heard of a Ford car that has been fitted with a sixteen-valve, high-compression head. What do you advise? H. C. M., Pendleton, S. C.

A.—I assume that the car operates satisfactorily at slow speeds when using battery ignition, which would seem to indicate that the magneto is weak. Several issues ago I ran an article in these columns relative to the recharging of magnets. This method called for the use of dry cells and if I remember correctly I used a cut showing where the connections should be made. I have received a few letters from readers stating that they had tried the method suggested and found it successful. Look back in your old issues for this article and cut. The generator on the car cannot be connected up in any manner, to my knowledge, to recharge the magnets. (2) A proper carburetor mixture is necessary for the even firing of the cylinders. However, I would suggest that you test the compression of No. 4 cylinder before taking other steps. The valves may need regrinding or new rings may be required for the piston. Make sure that the plug in this cylinder is whole, clean and the points set to the proper gap. The spark may be weak and the timer may require cleaning, the coil vibrator adjusting, etc. The cylinder may be pumping oil and in need of new rings. If you find that the cylinder is not pumping oil, develops good compression and the spark is hot, you might try another carburetor adjustment. Mark the old adjustment so that you will be able to return to it if necessary and then try giving the motor just a trifle richer mixture. Try several adjustments and if they do not help then return to the original setting. (3) I do not believe the results you would obtain by installing a 16-valve system would warrant the expense involved. When an engineer designs a motor he endeavors to make the valves as large as possible so that the motor can take in and expel the gases as easily as possible. For ordinary passenger car service the engineer usually finds that two valves per cylinder serve the purpose very satisfactorily. However, when we turn to the racing cars you will appreciate that the motors turn over at very high rates of speeds. Sixteen valves in four-cylinder racing motors are very common and you will appreciate that the advantage gained is that the motor can take in and expel the gases very quickly, a feature that is necessary in that special class of cars, but not needed in cars designed for ordinary road travel.

JERKY ACTION.—Owing to an inquiry in the January number of COMFORT regarding jumping action of a 1914 Ford, and as I am an expert on Fords and a reader of COMFORT, I wish to tell this gentleman that the head of exhaust valves may be loose and yet run. I have run 80 miles with No. 3 exhaust valve stem not working. The way to test this out is to take out each plug one at a time. Take out No. 1, lay it on top of engine over plug hole, start engine, and if it still jumps put it back. Take out No. 2, and so on until all have been taken out. At the end of this operation, if you can find no relief, clean magneto plug, regulate coils, put in new flappers where worn down, regulate carburetor, and you have your trouble stopped; if not, your magneto fields are worn out and need rewinding, which causes a short circuit in your crank-case and missing on the magneto plug at this point.

Be sure to have timer in first-class condition, well cleaned and refilled with vaseline, before starting on this test. I hope these suggestions may prove helpful. Truly yours,
ARTHUR B. JOHNSON, Kansas City, Kans.

THANKS.—We are pleased to print the foregoing advice sent in by a reader, and we thank him for his kindness in doing so. We welcome suggestions from other readers who can help solve auto troubles.—EDITOR OF AUTO DEPT.

ENGINE TROUBLE.—The engine of my 1917 model Ford when driven up hill in high will shake and almost stop; at such times it sounds like a one-cylinder engine. It is four years since the valves were ground. Do you think they need grinding? L. D., W. Va.

A.—Being denied the opportunity of looking over your car, it is impossible to state right to the point what the cause of your uneven operation might be. Test the cylinders separately for compression and if found weak then you certainly will have to grind the valves, and use new rings on the pistons if necessary, etc. You must have good compression in order to be assured of satisfactory operation. Take out the spark-plugs, clean them carefully and set the points at a gap of approximately the thickness of a thin dime. Clean the timer carefully, notice if it is worn and make sure all wires are tightly connected. You will find an article in this issue sent in by a mechanic who claims to be a Ford expert. Note what he says about testing each plug to determine if there is a hot spark. If you are certain of the mechanical condition of the motor then mark the present carburetor adjustment so that you can return to the present setting if necessary. Now change the carburetor adjustment a little at a time and note the effect on the motor. Try several adjustments first in one direction and then the other but if the operation does not improve then return to your original carburetor setting.

NOTE.—These columns belong to readers of COMFORT and we desire to fill them with matter that will be most beneficial to the majority. We desire to outline principles rather than to take the construction of any one make of car as an example. At different times we have printed articles on motors, clutches, transmissions, axles, universals, and, in fact, treated briefly in a descriptive way practically every assembly entering into the construction of a car. We have tried short quizzes, given news concerning current and past events, but we would now like very much to know what our readers desire most. We would appreciate very much hearing from readers of these columns as to what in their opinion would prove most helpful to the owners. In this manner we should be able to find out the information most desired by our readers, and we can of course make up our program accordingly. Let us have your cooperation in this matter.—EDITOR.

$1 Brings You a Tailor-Made-To-Order-Suit

Save $15 to $25

A snappy suit or overcoat in latest, most stunning style—fine, durable material—made to your measure by the best tailors money can employ—only $1.00 to send with order. Satisfaction in fit and quality guaranteed or your money back. That is our straight, out-and-out proposition, backed by our established standing, large capital and reputation for fair dealing. A clear saving of $15 to $25 on local tailors' prices.

5 Months to Pay

Yes, we give you five months' time to pay. No big deposit, no full payment when suit or overcoat is done—no security. Wear the suit while paying a little every month. Your word is good with us. See for yourself. Select your fabric and style from our big Free Style Book. Then send only $1 and we send a suit or overcoat you will be proud to wear.

FREE Style Book

Be sure to get this splendid book. Shows you the latest, most stunning styles for men. Actual cloth samples come with it—most elegant fabrics, in many beautiful weaves and patterns. Book also fully explains our great 5-Months-to-Pay Credit Plan. Mail coupon, letter or postal today

STANLEY-ROGERS CO.
145 W. 39th Street, Dept. 1484, Chicago

Please send me FREE your new Style Book showing latest Metropolitan Styles, also Cloth Samples and full particulars of your $1 down with 5-Months-to-Pay offer.

Name.....

Address.....

Town..... State.....

2 Tires for $11.25

FREE Tube with Each Tire

Most sensational tire offer of the year! Two tires for less than the usual cost of one—and a free tube with each tire! This is a special lot—all standard makes—selected for record-breaking sale. No double treads or sewed tires. Our big volume means best tire values! Thousands of steady customers everywhere are getting full mileage out of these slightly used tires and you, too, can get 8000 Miles

Size	1 Tire	2 Tires	Size	1 Tire	2 Tires
30 x 3	$ 7 00	$11.25	32 x 4½	$13.50	$22.90
30 x 3½	7.95	13.65	33 x 4½	13 95	23.45
32 x 3½	9 00	15.45	34 x 4½	14.45	23.90
31 x 4	10 00	16.90	35 x 4½	14.95	24.45
32 x 4	11.50	19.75	36 x 4½	15.45	25.45
33 x 4	12 25	20.90	35 x 5	15.90	26.15
34 x 4	13.25	22.45	37 x 5	16.45	26.55

SEND NO MONEY! Shipment C. O. D. Express or Parcel Post. Examine tires on arrival and if not fully satisfied return same at our expense and your money will be promptly refunded, including shipping charges. State whether Straight Side or Clincher. DON'T DELAY! ORDER NOW!

ALBANY TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY
2721 Roosevelt Road Dept. 30C, Chicago, Illinois

Eggs All Winter At Spring Prices

EGGS are cheap in spring and expensive in winter. But you can have all the eggs you want in winter at spring prices if you save them in RUTLAND Egg Preserver.

Buy eggs when they are plentiful and low (about March, April, May and June). Store them in RUTLAND Egg Preserver. Use them in winter when eggs are scarce and high.

Preserving eggs in water glass is highly recommended by the Government. Be sure of satisfaction by getting RUTLAND, the perfected egg preserver having the water glass principle. It's absolutely DEPENDABLE. Make the full solution and put the eggs in it from time to time as desired. Eggs are so costly it doesn't pay to take chances.

RUTLAND keeps fresh eggs from 9 to 12 months. A pint preserves 8 dozen; a quart, 17 to 20 dozen. Sold at drug stores, general stores and poultry supply houses in air-tight tins, pint, quart and gallon sizes. Insist on RUTLAND.

Rutland Fire Clay Co.
Rutland, Vt.

$13.95 Buys 140 Egg-Champion Belle City Incubator

Hot-Water, Copper Tank, Double Walls Fibre Board, Self-Regulated Safety Lamp, Deep Nursery. With $7.95 Hot-Water 140-Chick Brooder — Both for only $19.95

Express Prepaid

East of Rockies and allowed to points West

With this Guaranteed Hatching Outfit and my Guide Book for setting up and operating, your success is assured. Save time—Order now—Share in my

$1000 in Prizes

Or write for Free Poultry Book, "Hatching Facts." Jim Rohan, Pres.

Belle City Incubator Co.
Box 136 Racine, Wis.

150 EGG CHICK Incubator and Brooder made of California Redwood. Incubator covered with asbestos and galvanized iron, triple walls, nursery, copper tanks in incubator and brooder. 30 days' trial—money back if not O. K. FREE Catalog.

FREIGHT PAID East of the Rockies

Both for $19.75

2

260 EGG INCUBATOR AND BROODER $28.75

Ironclad Incubator Co. Box 21, Racine, Wis.

130 Egg Incubator and Brooder $17.75 Both For Both Machines Made of California Redwood

If ordered together. Freight Paid east of the Rockies. Hot water—copper tanks—double walls—dead air space—double glass doors—shipped complete, all set up ready to use.

180 Egg Incubator and Brooder - $22.00
250 Egg Incubator and Brooder - $30.00

Made of California Redwood—last a lifetime. Positively the best value on the market today. Order the size you want direct from this ad. 30 days trial—money back if not pleased. If not ready to order now, don't buy until you get our 1922 catalog. [2]

WISCONSIN INCUBATOR CO. Dept. 20 Racine, Wis.

Baby Chicks

NEW LOW PRICES SEASON 1922

MILLER BABY CHICKS ARE BRED FOR HEAVY EGG PRODUCTION

Customers report pullets lay all winter. 20 varieties to select from. 1,000,000 chicks via prepaid parcel post safe delivery guaranteed. Pleased customers in every state. 19th season. Catalog FREE.

MILLER POULTRY FARMS
Box 608 LANCASTER, MO.

BABY CHICKS

Hatched in the World's largest Incubator and from stock on our own farm, holding official World's record. We also have best thoroughbred utility stock at our usual moderate prices, twelve popular breeds. Write nearest address, today, for catalogue—FREE.

Smith's Standard (Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.)

THE SMITH STANDARD CO.
Boston, Mass. Dept. 89 154 Friend Street
Philadelphia, Penn. Dept. 89 833 Locust Street
Cleveland, Ohio. 1989 West 74th St.
Chicago, Ill. Dept. 89 427 So. Dearborn St.

BABY CHIX lower than pre-war prices. Full-blooded stock. 11 varieties—Postpaid anywhere. Guarantee 95% alive delivery. Customers report hens as laying 288 eggs a year from our stock. Get our low prices before ordering. Large instructive catalog free.

FARROW-HIRSH CO.
Peoria, Illinois.

BABY CHICKS

We furnish Pure Bred Chicks of the finest quality from high egg-producing stock. Flocks built directly from laying contest winners. We have seventeen breeds. Write for our free illustrated catalogue and price list.

J. W. OSSEGE HATCHERY, Dept. 43 Glandorf, Ohio

POULTRY GUIDE Miller's American —tells all about raising chickens, care, feeding, etc. Quotes special low prices on eggs for hatching, poultry, baby chicks, incubators, brooders, and poultry supplies, fully illustrated, sent FREE

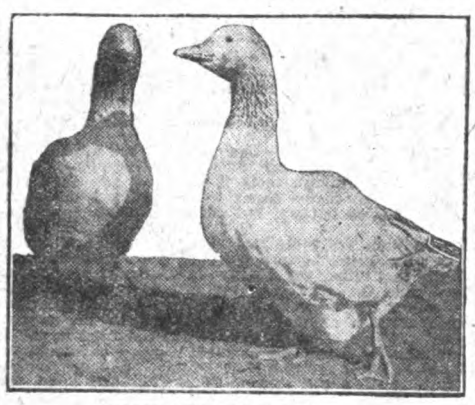
J. W. MILLER Co., Box 3, Rockford, Ill.

Poultry Book Latest and best yet: 144 pages, 215 beautiful pictures, hatching, rearing, feeding and disease information. Describes busy Poultry Farm handling 53 pure-bred varieties and BABY CHICKS. Tells how to choose fowls, eggs, incubators, sprouters. Mailed for 10 cents.

Berry's Poultry Farm, Box 31, Clarinda, Iowa

BABY CHIX Lowest Prices. Full blooded, best laying strains. Ass't, Leghorns, Rox, Reds, Anconas, Minorcas, Wyan., Orp. We pay postage—Quick delivery. 95% alive delivery. FREE CATALOG and price list. Universal Baby Chick Co., Peoria, Illinois.

64 BREEDS Most Profitable chickens, ducks, turkeys and geese. Choice, pure-bred, northern raised. Fowls, eggs, incubators at reduced prices. America's great poultry farm. 29th year. Valuable new 100-page book & catalog free.



R. F. NEUBERT Co., Box 575 Mankato, Minn.

BY KATE V. SAINT MAUR.

Young Ducks, Geese and Guineas

DUCKS' eggs bring good prices during February and March. You can easily get them to laying by then, as it depends principally on feeding. Ducks, like geese or cattle, must have a good percentage of bulk material and green stuff, as well as concentrated grain feed. Clover hay, or even mixed hay, chopped and steamed, about half a pailful with a pint of coarsely-ground cornmeal, and the same of bran mixed through it, is about right. If hay is short, chop corn-stalks small, and steam. Chopped vegetables of all kinds are good, but pumpkins, potatoes and beets are fattening; so, unless the weather is very cold, omit the corn when they are fed, using more bran or screenings in its place.

PROFIT IN RAISING GEESE.

Ducks make such bad mothers that it is better to hatch their eggs under hens or in incubators. The first few eggs a duck lays each season are seldom fertile. Eleven are a full setting, and it requires twenty-eight days for their hatching. Examine the nest for two or three days after setting the hen, for bad eggs. A weak germ that dies causes the egg to decompose, and the odor once smelled can never be forgotten.

Examine the nest when the hen comes off to feed, and take away the eggs that are dark and mottled. If you fancy an egg looks wrong, pick it up and smell it; that and its sticky touch should assure you, for the egg is porous. If you have been using an incubator to hatch chicks, you can test with a proper tester, and this must be done all the time from the fourth to the fifteenth day.

When the hatch is over at the end of the twenty-eighth day, have ready a box about a foot deep and three feet long, the top off and one end taken out. Place the open end against the coop door, so making a little run, with a board floor covered with an inch of dry sand or earth. Baby ducks need even more protection from damp than chicks; therefore, if the weather is bad, keep the coop and run under cover, and if fine, the shade of a tree is necessary, for the little fellows can't stand the full sun. After a week the hen can be removed, but keep them within bounds on short grass, not letting them out until the dew is gone.

For twenty-four hours feed nothing. First week: Half a pint of rolled oats, some cracker or stale bread-crumbs, two hard-boiled eggs chopped fine, half a cupful of coarse sand just moistened with milk. Feed four times a day just what they will eat in ten minutes.

Second and third weeks: Half a pound of ground oats, the same of wheat bran, one-fourth of a pint of cornmeal, the same of coarse sand, two tablespoonfuls of beef meal, a pint of finely-cut green clover, rye or cabbage moistened with scalded milk. They must be fed four times a day.

Fourth to sixth week: Boil a quart of hulled oats for an hour, add a pint of cornmeal, wheat bran, half a pint of grit, the same of beef scraps, and a quart of green clover or any kind of green food. Feed four times a day.

Sixth to tenth week: One quart of cornmeal, a pint of wheat bran, a pint of boiled oats, a pint of beef scraps, half a pint of grit, a tablespoonful of charcoal and a pint of clover. Feed three times a day.

They should be ready to kill the eleventh week.

Do not let the ducks, young or old, get frightened if you can possibly help it. They are nervous things. No matter what you feed, if they are frightened or made to run daily, they will not fatten. If you go about them gently, they are the easiest things to drive any distance, for where one goes, all follow; hurry them, and they will scatter, and it is good by to them for hours.

The feed for those to be kept for stock is the same up to three weeks old, but from that on one quart of ground feed, one quart of bran, half a pint of grit and half a pint of beef scraps. Mix moist with milk, water, sour milk and buttermilk, and feed night and morning. If on a free range, this is all they want. If not, you must add clover or vegetables, and feed three times a day. Remember always to have fresh, clean water before them.

When ducks are ten or eleven weeks old they should be in condition for market. Early green ducks should not weigh more than four and one-half pounds, while later ducks cannot be too heavy. As a rule, early ducks mature very unevenly, making it necessary to sort them over often.

Ducks are fit to dress for only a short time. They "go back," as it is termed, for they shed and grow a new lot of feathers, which takes all the fat and all your profit. Hence the importance of turning them into money as soon as possible.

In dressing, it is most desirable to dry pick. Although some still scald, dry-picked stock sells better than scalded, especially when the market is dull, for it can be frozen, while scalded stock cannot. For dry picking have a box for the feathers. It may be of any size you wish on the ground, and should be of such depth that the top edge is one or two inches lower than your face when in a sitting position. To use for cooling the ducks, saw a coal-oil barrel in two; use one-half for cooling, the other half for clear water to put them in after washing.

To kill, catch the feet in the left hand, and the neck near the breast with the right hand, then with a swinging motion (the same as in using an axe) strike the back of the head against a post with sufficient force to start the blood from the ears. Now with a quick motion place the body under your left arm, catching the back of the head and the top of the bill in the left hand. Using a knife with a five-inch blade, make a cut crosswise at the base of the brain, then turn the edge to the roof of the mouth, and slash outward, being careful not to split the bill. Let the blood run for two seconds.

Sit down. Place your knees against the neck just tight enough to keep it in place. If too much pressure is put on, it will stop the flow of blood and give the flesh a red appearance. Hold the feet and wings in the left hand. Commence picking at the vent, then the breast and neck. The feathers are left on half the neck, and on the wings from the first joint out. Pick clean as you go, for once the duck gets cold it will be hard to pick. Experts use a shoemaker's knife, ground thin and stropped the same as a razor, to shave the pin and small feathers off.

After picking, put them into ice water or cold spring water until the animal heat is gone; then wash the feet, and all clots of blood from the throat and mouth; then put into another vessel of water, which takes all the stains off and gives them a nice clean appearance. After they are clean, you can put them into a barrel or box with crushed ice, and if left for twelve to twenty-four hours in this condition they can be shipped a long distance with but little ice. To make dressed ducks show up good it is necessary to take them out of clean water at the finish. The second vessel should have clean water put in as soon as it gets cloudy.

When packing the shipment, use flour or sugar barrels. Pack with back down, putting the head under the wing. Pack close, leaving a space on top for ice. Raise the top hoop, place burlap on top, drive the hoop on again, with the burlap under, and nail firmly. Before using, the barrel should be thoroughly washed. Bore two or three one-fourth inch holes in the bottom to drain.

A goose will lay from ten to twenty eggs and then want to sit; but if you coop her in sight of her companions, four or five days will suffice to break her up. If she lays a third clutch of eggs, let her keep them and set.

When the weather is mild, set five eggs under a hen; or, if she is very large, seven might be risked. It takes from twenty-eight to thirty days for goose eggs to hatch. As the skin is very tough, it is well to sprinkle a little water around the nest, and even on the eggs themselves, during the last two weeks, especially if the weather is dry and hens are doing the incubating.

The youngsters need nothing for the first thirty-six hours. Then feed scalded cornmeal — the coarsest kind—and wheat bran; chopped green clover or young green oats cut fine, tops of green onions, lettuce leaves or any tender young greens.

If the weather is fine, put the coop containing Biddy and her family out on the grass, making a small yard in front for the first few days, to prevent their wandering too far away. Move the coop and yard to a new place as they eat the grass. Like young ducks, their drinking water must be in a vessel that permits them to put the whole beak into the water, or they are apt to get the air passages clogged up with soft food, causing the gosling to smother; but on no account must they be permitted to get their bodies into the water, as they chill and cramp so easily.

It is much better to buy two- or three-year-old birds from a reliable dealer for stock, than to obtain eggs for setting and wait for them to develop. After the breeding season is over, geese and goslings need little grain if on grass land. Late in the fall geese do well if turned into the corn stubble or the orchard, where they will clean up all the windfalls—which does much to stamp out grubs and insects.

COOPS OF THIS KIND ARE ALWAYS FREE FROM VERMIN.

Guinea Fowl

Ducks and guinea fowl are very profitable on a farm, or where they can have plenty of range, for guinea fowl will find the larger part of their own feed. Even when the eggs are hatched under hens, the hen can be released at the end of four weeks, and the youngsters will come up at night with full crops; and until marketed in the fall they need have nothing but a little cracked corn at night, just to bring them home regularly and keep them tame.

Guinea fowls commence laying when the first warm days come in April. As it is their natural instinct to be very secretive about laying, some patience and diplomacy are necessary to locate their nests. The usual spot selected is a hollow spot in the ground, and by the root of a tree or fence post screened by brush. Don't attempt to approach it while they are in sight. Go away, and return later armed with a long-handled spoon. The eggs are almost the color of the earth, and often covered with fallen leaves, so it needs a sharp eye to detect them. Be very careful not to touch the nest with your hand. Guineas seem able to scent the human hand about the nest; they can also count up to three. For that reason leave that number of eggs in the nest, removing the others with the spoon to insure there being no telltale clew left to arouse Mrs. Guinea's suspicion.

When you have fifteen stolen eggs, get a box a foot square, turn it on the side, and across the bottom of the open front nail a cleat, behind which place a nest of soft hay. Stand this nest box inside (at one end) of another box, two and a half feet long, with sides a foot or more deep. Make a cover of wire netting for the larger box, to open like a lid. Scatter sand on the floor, nail up a small drinking pan in one corner, and you have a safe, rat-proof coop for Biddy and her eggs. Another motive for the outer box is that baby guineas are so very little, so wild, and so easily frightened, that they are apt to quit the nest as soon as hatched, get lost, become chilled and die.

It takes from twenty-five to twenty-six days to incubate guinea eggs. The brood coop to be used the first two weeks should be on the same principle as the nest boxes, and even when they are on the grass run, you must exercise the greatest caution to avoid anything like cracks and crevices for crawling through the eyes of needles, that special care is necessary. If some knot-hole or some depression in the ground has escaped your notice, and a baby does stray off, go about two yards away and keep perfectly still. Don't be impatient. It may be ten minutes before you hear anything. Then, unless all hope is over, you will hear a plaintive little cry. Do not move until it has been repeated four or five times, and you are quite sure where it comes from. Then make a sudden dive and secure the truant, which is usually under a tuft of grass or in some little hole. If you move about while hunting for him, there won't be a sound, and you may search all day with little success.

Bill of Fare for Baby Guineas

Give nothing for the first twenty-four hours, then the daily bill of fare should be as follows: First feed, 7 A. M.—Crushed hempseed, half a cup; stale bread-crumbs, half a cup; moisten with raw eggs.

Second feed, 9 A. M.—Millet seed.

Third feed, 11.30 A. M.—Chopped onion tops, half a cup of cornmeal that has been steamed as for chicks, half a teaspoonful of crushed mustard seed, mixed and fed crumblingly.

Fourth feed, 2 P. M.—Pinhead oats, crushed a little finer than when it is bought.

Fifth feed, 5 P. M.—Liver that has been half boiled, cracked wheat and corn, equal parts.

These bills of fare can be varied with pot cheese, custard, chopped lettuce or apple, bread-crumbs moistened with milk, hard-boiled eggs; but every day they must have milk (more than chicks need), and pepper or mustard seed crushed and fed in soft wood. Keep a small pan of powdered charcoal and sand in the run and, of course, water in a drinking fountain that will only allow the beak to get wet.

Correspondence

Subscribers are entitled to advice of our Poultry Editor, free, through the columns of this department. Address Poultry Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. BE SURE to give your full name and address, otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

J. M. H.—Two drakes will be sufficient for nine ducks.

R. E. W.—You can use the male birds you raised last spring, but next season you must have entirely new ones. Of course, there is always some risk of getting birds that are related, if you buy from nearby farms. Why don't you send for a setting of eggs this coming summer, from some well-known poultry plant in New York, New Jersey or Pennsylvania? It is cheaper to buy a setting of good eggs, from which you may raise three or four good male birds, than it would be to buy even one well-bred bird, and you could mate what pullets you get from the setting to one of your own cockerels, which would give you still another strain of birds to use the following year.

B. W.—Limberneck is caused by birds eating putrid meat or drinking stangnant water. Limberneck is really the effect of gastric poisoning on the nervous system. When birds get only a small portion of objectionable material, they are likely to work it off and recover, without any medicine, but it is safer not to risk it. Give a tablespoonful of castor oil as soon as you notice any trouble. That will clear out the intestines, and remove the cause of poisoning. Feed very carefully for

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31.)

Sleep on it FREE

Smashed Prices on Feather Beds

Positively the biggest feather bed bargains you ever saw! Prices slashed! Nothing ever like it. All fine quality feathers and best grade ticking. Order on free trial at our risk. Sleep on the feather bed 30 nights. Send it back if you're not more than delighted! Select your feather bed from our big bargain book. Prices Guaranteed Lowest in America. Write today—a post card will do.

Lewis Feather Bed Co., Dept. 333 Nashville, Tenn.

Feather Bed Outfit NOW ONLY $13.95

Send us $13.95 and express office and we will send you One 40-pound New FEATHER BED, One Pair of 6-Pound New FEATHER PILLOWS, and One Pair of full size BED BLANKETS or BED SPREAD. All new, clean, sanitary feathers, best 8-oz. A.C.A. featherproof ticking.

Biggest bargains you ever saw. About half store price. Money-back guarantee. Mail Money Order today. Catalogue FREE.

Southern Feather & Pillow Co., Dept. 51, Greensboro, N. C.

POULTRY AND PIGEONS FOR PROFIT

Foy's big book—an Encyclopedia of Poultry information. Many colored plates. Written by a man who knows. Low prices on Incubators, Brooders, Baby Chicks, Fowls and Eggs for Hatching. Write today. Sent for 5 cents.

FRANK FOY, BOX 6, CLINTON, IOWA.

Mankato Incubator Direct to user at lowest price. Made by experts of 28 years experience. Has triple walls, best material, hot water, copper tank, large oil tank—one filling to hatch, self regulator, safety lamp, double heating system etc., safe, simple, set up ready to use. Big book and catalog free.

Freight Prepaid

Mankato Incubator Co., Box 748, Mankato, Minn.

DOLLARS IN HARES

We pay $7.00 to $18.50 and up a pair and express charges. Big Profits. We furnish guaranteed high grade stock and buy all you raise. Use back yard, barn, cellar, attic. Contract and Illustrated Catalog Free.

STANDARD FOOD & FUR ASS'N
405 A. Broadway New York

PURE-BRED POULTRY Most profitable varieties. Also Eggs and BABY CHICKS, BELGIAN HARES, Incubators, Brooders, Grain Sprouters, Supplies. Highest quality. Low Cut prices. Illustrated Catalog mailed FREE. Address

Nichol's Poultry Farm, Box 21 Monmouth, Ill.

RAISE GUINEA PIGS for us. We buy all you raise. Big profits—large demand—easily raised. Pay better than poultry or rabbits. Particulars and booklet how to raise FREE.

CAVIES DISTRIBUTING CO., 3180 Grand Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Chicks and Eggs of High Record Layers, S. C. White and Black Leghorns, Anconas and Barred Rocks. Very reasonable. Catalogue free. Van Driest Farms, Box P, Cedar Grove, Wis.

BABY CHICKS Superlative Quality. 12 cents each and up. 17 leading breeds. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Catalog Free. Springfield Hatcheries, Box E, Springfield, Ohio

Some Novel Uses for Applique Patches

UTILITY OR SCHOOL BAG, BY MRS. JANIE BECKER.

Work Finished in Applique Embroidery

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23.)

Own,"Grandmother's Dream," while localities often gave rise to a name such as

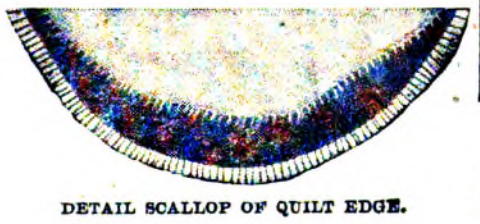
"Philadelphia Beauty,"	"Road to California,"
"Rose of Dixie,"	"Star of Texas,"
"Mexican Rose,"	"Kansas Trouble,"
"Texas Tears,"	"Arkansas Traveler,"
"Irish Puzzle,"	"Oklahoma Boomer,"

besides many others combined with squares, triangles, cubes, chains and circles, such as the pieced design illustrated in patterns No. 3, No. 10 and No. 12.

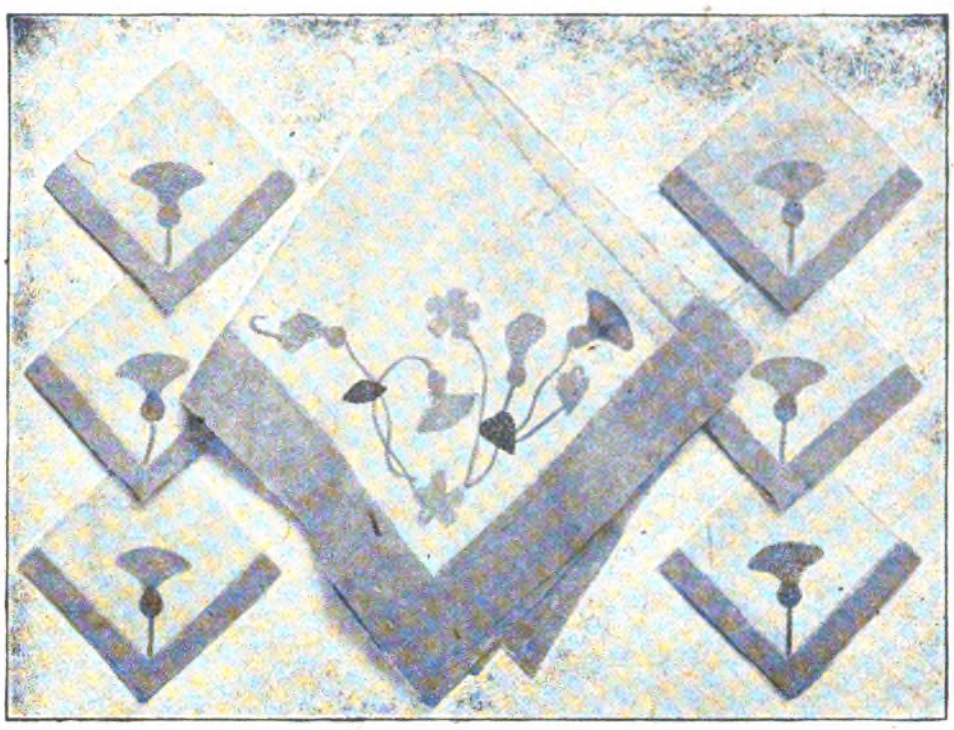
Applique is certainly used on almost all sorts of articles for household use and also wearing apparel. First, because dainty and attractive effects may be secured so simply and inexpensively and second because the work is so easy to do.

UNBLEACHED HOUSE DRESS, BY MRS. M. E. BROWN, TENN.

There are, however, a few important points to remember and one is that the material for the foundation and the appliqued design should be of equal weight or flexibility and the material to be applied especially should be of a finely woven quality which will not fray easily.



SCHOOL BAG, BY MRS. JANIE BECKER.



The next step in the work after the cutting is the basting which should be very accurately and carefully done to insure success.

If one is decorating a large piece, such as a bedspread or table cover, only a part of the design should be basted in place at a time. If the entire piece is basted over with the design it is very likely to get out of position and the edges of the different parts are much more apt to fray from frequent handling.

After carefully basting a section, hem down all the edges unless one is planning to use an outline stitch or otherwise finish them, then only a line of fine running stitches will be necessary. Work these around just back of the edge, taking the stitches toward the center of the forms to avoid fulling or blistering of the different parts.

DETAIL SCALLOP OF QUILT EDGE.

White cross-barred dimity luncheon set edged with pink hems and decorated with graceful corner designs of buds and blossoms. This original work by Mrs. L. A. Vernon was awarded the first prize in our Patchwork Competition. For description see page 23.

Over this run-in line of stitches one may then either work in outline, buttonhole or satin-stitch. Chain-stitching is also used on heavier materials.

In finishing with the satin-stitch work over and over very closely, but with short stitches just covering the running stitches and the raw edge of the applique.

Buttonhole stitches should also be short, only about one-eighth of an inch, with the heading or straight edge towards the outer edge of the appliqued piece.

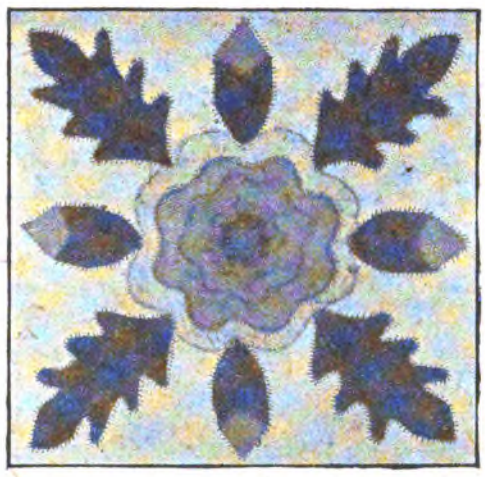
The stitches should always be at right angles to the outline and care should be taken to place them as even as possible.

School Bags

The two school bags for children are cleverly trimmed with appliqued designs which make them very attractive.

Both are of khaki twill with stitched-in bottoms to increase their carrying capacity. The larger one seems to be planned especially for some little boy who loves boats. A strip of blue cotton, chain-stitched, serves for the sea on which sails the little boat of light tan, with white sails, the mast even completed with a tiny flag which might have a star appliqued in the center.

On the smaller bag is a white bunny just about to nibble up the clover set so temptingly before him.



This bag requires a piece of material 15 inches wide by 27 inches long, having a selvage for the top of the bag if possible. The bottom insert measures five and one-quarter by eight and three-quarter inches.

For handles a strip two by eleven inches will be needed. Fold through the center lengthwise, turn in edges and stitch, sew securely to the top of bag as shown.

Both of these bags were made and submitted by Mrs. Janie Becker, Mich.

Pink Rose Quilt

Our illustration gives one but a vague idea of the beauty of this piece of work which was submitted by one of our southern readers.

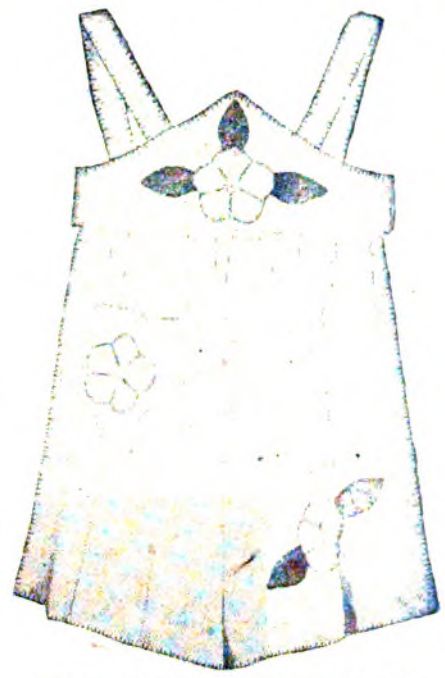
ONE 18-INCH BLOCK OF PINK ROSE QUILT.

The single block, however, shows the manner of making quite clearly, and below will also be seen one section or scallop of the edge.

In this particular piece of work three shades of rose, one green and a lemon yellow was used.

The rose, which measures six inches in diameter, has a scalloped edge and is of the three shades of pink, shading from light to dark in the center.

These are laid over each other and the edges finished with buttonholing with mercerized cotton to match, the straight kept on inside, through the work.



This gives an unusually attractive finish. In the heart of the rose the yellow follows the third pink, then an inch center of green, buttonholed with the same shade and quite completely covered with French knots of yellow.

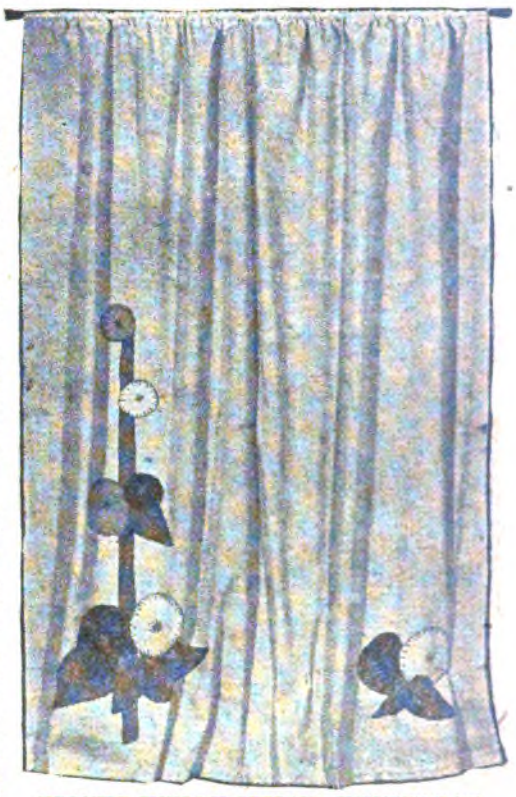
The four leaves are shaped as shown, these and the buds being of green buttonholed with green and tipped with two medium shades of pink.

The scallops are of green overlaid with the deepest pink and the edge bound with white and buttonholed over completely with the green, keeping the straight edge of the stitch on the inside.

PINK ROSE QUILT, BY MRS. G. W. SEARLES. LA., SPECIAL PRIZE WINNER.

FUDGE APRON, BY IRENE HARPHAM.

Unbleached Dress and Apron



There has never been planned a more comfortable and practical pattern for a woman's house dress than the loose kimono-sleeve model which gives one their entire freedom. Now, besides being practical, we are very glad to illustrate for our readers such a dress as this which is also uncommonly pretty.

Both this and the attractive apron shown in this column are of ordinary unbleached cotton cloth. The dress has the neck, the bottom of the sleeves, top of the pockets and end of the sash finished with a narrow binding of blue gingham which can be of any of the colors used in the decorative scheme. In this instance the appliques are of groups of fruit, apples, plums, pears and grapes, in natural colorings, being used combined with a pretty dark green for the leaves.

The various pieces may be felled down with cotton of the same color or black may be used for buttonholing as one prefers.

All the edges of the apron are finished with black buttonholing.

The wild rose motifs and leaves which decorate the bib, pocket and lower corner of the apron are also appliqued in this way, the contrast giving a very smart effect to the garment as a whole.

NURSERY WINDOW CURTAIN, SUBMITTED BY MRS. FLOSSIE WAHTER, OKLA.

Nursery Curtain

Above is shown a pretty poppy-trimmed window curtain for a child's room. The original was very unusual with its bits of gay

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 25.)

THIS LITTLE SLIP-ON WAS SUBMITTED BY MRS. WILLIAM SOMERS, OKLA.

FREE!

400 Leading Styles 7 Dressmaking Lessons valuable fashion notes and style suggestions—all offered you free in the Fashion Bulletin of the School of Modern Dress

Don't miss the opportunity of getting this splendid style book free. It will help you in planning your new dress or suit, help you find the garment that is most appropriate and becoming. And its suggestions will save you money.

With the Fashion Bulletin we will send you also complete information regarding the remarkable new sewing methods of the School of Modern Dress. These new methods are enabling women to have three charming dresses for what one used to cost—and to make from $25 to $50 a week at home, if they wish. Make money and save money right at home! We'll tell you how.

Materials and Equipment Free

A decided advantage offered students of the School of Modern Dress is the valuable equipment given free. In the information we are going to send you, you will find out how you can get an Oriental sewing basket with important sewing aids, and materials with which to make your first six garments, entirely without cost in connection with your course. Every student also receives an excellent dress form.

Easy Payment Plan

Perhaps the most important feature of the School of Modern Dress is the pay-as-you-save plan. You actually make six garments while you are studying the course, and the savings effected so balance the easy installment payments that you probably won't even miss the money!

Write at once for the Fashion Bulletin and the full information. Remember it's all free, and it places you under no obligation whatever. Mail this coupon now. The School of Modern Dress, Inc., Dept. 73, 821 Jefferson Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The School of Modern Dress, Inc.,
Dept. 73, 821 Jefferson Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

I want to know all about the School of Modern Dress, and how I can make money and save Money at home. Also how I can get the Oriental Sewing Basket with equipment, and materials with which to make six garments free in connection with the NEW-WAY Course. Include free a copy of the new Fashion Bulletin containing 7 dressmaking lessons and over 400 leading styles.

Name .....

Address .....

Comfort 3-22

"Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

Through the columns of this department free information pertaining to Etiquette, Personal Appearance and kindred subjects will be given in answer to questions by our subscribers, but not more than two questions the same month by any one subscriber. Address Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and give your own full name and address. Name will not be published.

PANSY, Scottsville, Ky.—In taking seats at a hotel or restaurant table, a girl and her escort, if unaccompanied by other friends, would preferably select a table for two where they might sit opposite each other. Convenience and common sense might break this rule in restaurants where only large tables were in use, and in such a case a couple might suitably sit side by side. Were several couples dining together, they would arrange themselves in the most pleasant manner for all concerned—which would mean that a girl's escort would be seated next to her, for the sake of conversation and courtesy. (2) It is considered the best form at a quiet home wedding for a girl to be married in her going-away gown, which is preferably a tailored frock, with hat, shoes and gloves selected to properly harmonize. The conventional bride's costume, with its glory and beauty of lace and silk, is best reserved for the larger function of a church wedding. This is not an iron-clad rule, however, and if a bride wishes more convention in a home ceremony, she and her family can arrange accordingly. As for the groom, he will be found always in favor of the least possible fuss and furbelows. But surely a girl is, of all times, permitted to have her own way at her own wedding.

L. B., Oklahoma.—A lady removes her gloves while eating. In the case of long gloves, these may simply be slipped back over the hand. (2) Small individual cakes are always eaten from the fingers, but layer cake or any pastry of a soft or crumbly sort is best attacked with a fork. Fried eggs would be eaten with a fork. A general rule is that a knife is not brought into play unless absolutely necessary. In eating chops, steaks or other meats, only the mouthful to be eaten is cut at one time. The napkin is spread upon the lap, and in all ordinary cases is left unfolded at the end of the meal. A lady would rise from a restaurant or hotel table first, to be promptly followed by her escort who would assist her with her wraps, etc. We all learn by imitation. Watch those around you, and do not be afraid to ask the questions that will remedy your inexperience.

H. C., New York.—A girl does not let "a gentleman friend" kiss her because such a most personal privilege and sign of affection is properly reserved by her for the man she intends to marry. Boys are only too willing to "go" with girls they find easy to kiss and fondle, but a girl is foolish who cheapens herself in this manner and becomes a member of any "petting party." The right sort of boy will respect more and like better the girl whose kisses are not easily won nor carelessly distributed to every comer. (2) During the period when a girl is not yet engaged, she may receive attention—or "keep company," as you have it—from and with as many young men as her beauty and charm may bring about her; but no girl of fifteen rightly "keeps company with any else but her schoolbooks and the lessons and duties which will in five or six years make her a talented and attractive wife for somebody more worthwhile than a "good night"-kissing youngster. Advice, like medicine, is often hard to take, but can bring results if swallowed.

F. M. B., Coffee Creek, Mont.—When you are introduced to a girl, extend your hand with a bow, a smile and a "how do you do." And then say anything that seems most natural and necessary at the time. In a case of embarrassment, the person making an introduction can often kindly aid by a sentence that will loosen conversational channels and make talk flow easier. Remember this when it is you who have introductions to make. (2) The general rule is that a girl would not accept such expensive gifts as articles of jewelry from a young man to whom she was not engaged. You must use your own judgment about keeping or returning this ring. As to what the gift "means," you know the boy and we do not, but we think it ought to mean he likes you a lot.

A. M., Olney, Texas.—If you have known this boy all your life and he "respects" you and your parents, it is only in accordance with this friendship and respect that he should signify what these signs of affection you mention really mean, and if they have any serious intent and basis. Why not consult with your mother concerning the attentions of this boy and how seriously you should regard them? You do not give your age in your letter, and so we cannot tell how much judgment of your own we can grant you. Read the reply to H. C., New York, in this issue.

R. E. B., W. Va.—You may send a note of thanks to this young man who has sent you this present, or you may wait to thank him at a time when you meet. The first course would be the more courteous. Make your thanks simple, short and sincere. (2) If you meet this young man caller at your door, shake hands in greeting him and ask him in. See that he lays aside his hat and overcoat, but do not assist him with these. It would be courteous and correct for you to have your parents come to greet your caller.

L. L. S., Madera, Calif.—Although both the maid of honor and the bridesmaids at a church wedding serve chiefly as charming parts of a lovely spectacle, yet they constitute in theory the bride's personal attendants and should therefore hold themselves ready to be more than ornamental and to be of any possible service before, during and after the ceremony. This is particularly applicable to the duties of a maid of honor. In the bridal procession to the altar, the maid of honor walks in advance of the bride and behind the two or four bridesmaids. She takes her place at the left of where the bride will stand and is then ready to aid the bride in any small manner—in holding the bridal bouquet, for instance; or by assisting in the management of the bride's train when the procession turns back up the church aisle after the ceremony. In this return march, the maid of honor follows directly behind the newly-united couple. A formal church wedding is a rather difficult and conventional affair—so much so that it is customary to hold a rehearsal in order that when the ceremony occurs no untoward incidents may happen to mar the performance, which is a name quite suitable to be given to such a well-staged and elaborate spectacle as a modern wedding has become in these days.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20.)

I am five feet, five inches tall and weigh 98 pounds, freckled face, pug nose and an over abundance of red hair. Twenty-five years old and Irish. I have read COMFORT ever since I was ten years old and at that time I used to wish I could be a member of the Sisters' Corner. As time rolled on I realized my inability to be of real help, but now I want to talk about dressmaking and collecting. This may not be interesting to many of you. To be a successful dressmaker does not mean that one must go away to school. I studied with a leading modiste but my best success as designer and fitter came from home study. I try to have a complete line of fashion plates, tailor's chalk, oodles of pins and a fifty-two inch tape measure. I begin first in taking complete measurements of the individual to find if or where there is any fault in the human form. After having complete measurements and deciding upon style to be followed see if you have enough cloth, allowing for seams, hems, draperies, etc. I finish all my dresses before putting in the hem. Put the dress on individual and have her stand in a natural position, measure desired number of inches from floor and mark with chalk every two inches. The fitter must move around the person being fitted. I have some designs and patterns that I would be glad to give to orphan girls and widows or mothers with small children. I have a little shop with three girls helping me, all red heads.

One line of work that I do is rather unusual; at least, I've never seen it mentioned in the paper. I am a collector. I had no experience in that work but answered an ad. I asked for a trial and found that I liked the work and could do well. I called in the homes of the poor and the rich. I have heard people condemn collectors and think hard of people who did not pay their debts the moment they were due. I had an experience that changed my mind. I was sent to a distant town to collect a large bill for a business firm or have the man arrested. In response to my rap a frail little woman came to the door and invited me into the little three-room house where the husband and father lay sick with typhoid fever and in the cradle lay twin girls, seventeen days old. That little mother gave me a cup of tea and I sat down with her two-year-old boy. She told me her troubles and that her one great worry was the bill I held against them. Did I tell her I was the collector? I did not but went back to the firm who cancelled the debt and later helped to care for the widowed mother and three babies. That gave me a wonderful lesson. So often we find fault, condemn and backbite when could we see inside the other heart we would wither with shame.

To hear the sisters tell of getting so many letters gives me courage to hope that I too will hear from the sisters.

With love and prayers for every COMFORT sister,
AUDRA JENKINS.

DRAIN, OREGON.

ZIP! BANG!

Here I come from the wild and woolly West and I'm going to plant myself on Mrs. Wilkinson's doorstep 'till she lets me in. She has been awful to me. This is my third or fourth call and slam! went the door in my face every time. I'm like the Irishman, viz: Two Irishmen were trying to make the best rhyme and one said, "There was a man, his name was Wimple, upon his nose there was a pimple." The other said, "Once there was a man whose name was Wimple, upon his nose there was a boomp, if it hasn't moved it's there yit." And that's the way I will be on Mrs. Wilkinson's doorstep and to get rid of me she must listen to me.

So many of the sisters seem to think the proper thing to do is to keep dolled up for hubby's sake, lest his love grow cold. I want to know how they do it and what kind of a weak mortal their husband must be. To save my life I could not stay dolled up and work and I flatter myself that I do a lot of work. I have spaded ground and planted lettuce, radishes, turnips, peas and cabbage in order to have an early garden. I also have my sweet peas planted. I have canned lots of fruit and made about 75 pints of jelly as well as chow chow and green tomato relish. We killed two hogs and a baby beef (seven months old calf) and I canned ten one-half gallons jars of beef, seventeen quarts of sausage, 12 quarts of vegetable soup and two quarts of pork. We will make bacon of most of the pork. I have thirteen quarts of salmon canned also. I am real proud of it all as we used to live in town and had no meat to can or enjoy. It's lots of work but how one does like to tell about it.

Are you quite tired, or, as my small daughter says, have you had "nuff"?

Husband is working in a logging camp so I do a man's work as well as a woman's, and keep my two boys in school.

BLOWING BUBBLES.

STAR, R. R. 1, MISS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND FRIENDS:

I want to tell you of some of my homemade furniture. To the sisters who cannot afford a kitchen cabinet, make one of a flour-and-meal box. Mine is 37x24 and 16 inches high with a partition in the middle. It has a strip of two inches wide on top of the box at the back to which the lid is hinged. It can be painted or covered with oilcloth.

To make an inexpensive bed for a child, get two strips of lathe, one by two inches, and as long as you desire the bed to be. Mine is five feet long and three feet wide. Saw four posts from the same sized piece of wood, also two end pieces as wide as you wish the bed to be. Nail together like a cot. If you have a piece of burlap as long as the bed and wide enough to go over and under the sides, and tack in place, it will do but I used sacks that oats came in. To keep the child from rolling out of bed, get two pieces of one by twelve planks or boards and let them extend up on each side as deep as you want the bed to be. Paint the bed and it is neat and does not take up much room.

If any of you care to write I will try to answer those who enclose stamped envelopes.

MRS. ALLIE NEELY.

MANOR, PA.

DEAR MRS. W. AND COMFORT SISTERS:

Will you allow a lonely stranger to come into your happy circle? I have been a subscriber for only a few months but COMFORT and I have become close friends in that short time and I'm hoping you all will become friends too.

I wonder if there are any soldiers' wives in this great circle of sisters? If so, I would be pleased to hear from them, and especially from Marines' wives. My husband is an Ex-Marine. At present he is attending a Government school for disabled soldiers. He lost the sight of one eye but we are thankful that the other was spared him. I wonder if people realize what a wonderful work the Government is doing in training our disabled soldiers and fitting them to be useful citizens again. Besides educating them they are paid a monthly salary. We have a small home (rented), which we find pleasant and happy, owing to our temperaments and tastes being similar. We are great readers and are fond of history, especially our own.

Undecided Mother, by all means give your little girl dancing lessons. I have a foster sister on the stage and she is one of the dearest girls I ever knew. Through her I've met quite a number of actresses and actors and found them to be ladies and gentlemen of the highest character.

Mrs. Wilkinson, your corner is the first thing I look for when COMFORT comes. It seems to me we have everything we desire in COMFORT.

Pleasant thoughts to one and all.

A MARINE'S WIFE.

WICHITA FALLS, R. R. 4, BOX 26, TEXAS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

I am the mother of three darling children, two girls, the oldest seven and the next four years old, and a baby boy seventeen months old. I am proud of them. I don't say I have the best husband and I don't say he is the worst, but with all his faults, which are many with the best of us, he suits me and I suppose with all my faults, which are great, I suit him for we have been married eight years and are a happy family. Let me tell you sisters that in order to have a happy home, Christ and Love must dwell therein.

Husband and I have had trouble, lots of it, but what hurts the most? Seeing our little ones suffer is, I believe, the worst hurt of all to a parent. Our little girl has been a cripple for two years from neuritis and I guess will be a cripple for life. And you cannot realize how sad I feel when I see her with other children and know she cannot run and play with them, unless you have had the same experience. Her big sister is going to school and she gets very lonesome through the day. Her name is Ruth. It is for her sake that I am writing this letter. She loves flowers and they are scarce and hard to get here as it often gets too dry for them. Will the sisters who have them to spare, send me some house plant cuttings and some flower seeds with name and state plainly written as Ruth has a good memory and will like to know from whom and where this and that plant or flower came. I would appreciate this favor for her sake and thank you from the bottom of my heart.

This is a beautiful country, crops chiefly wheat, oats and cotton. We have two hundred acres of wheat and fifty acres of oats. Good well water is hard to get, salt

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 34.)

Drives Pimples From Skin

The Wonderful Influence of Stuart's Calcium Wafers to Beautify the Skin by Ridding it of Pimples, Boils, Rash, Blotches, Muddiness, Etc.

When you use Stuart's Calcium Wafers you go directly after those embarrassing pimples, blackheads and other such blemishes. It is not a round-about way. You get results every minute. You are sure of it in a few hours. They clear the blood, they drive from the system the impurities that cause pimples. The calcium goes to the skin, acts as a tonic, stimulates the tiny nerves, pores and blood vessels to renewed activity, and lo! before you realize it the skin is peachy, firm, clear and the picture of a sweet, rosy complexion. Get a 60 cent box today at any drug store of Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

Don't Send 1 Penny

Just send your name and address—no money—and I will send these stylish patent leather Sally Oxfords and lace hose to you. You don't pay one penny until they are delivered at your door by the postman. This is a great big, amazing money-saving bargain.

Patent Leather Sally and Lace Hose $3.98

These oxfords are made of fine chrome patent leather which will give excellent wear. Very newest Sally style with cut-outs and two buckled straps. Cuban heel; leather sole. Newest fashion. Color: Black. Sizes: 2½ to 8. Widths: D, E and EE.

The hose are made of fine lisle with beautifully designed lace pattern in front. Double heel, toe and garter top. Mock seam back. Color: Black. One pair of hose with each pair of oxfords.

Delivery Free Just send your name and address—no money. When the oxfords and hose arrive, pay the postman $3.98 for them. We have paid the delivery charges. If you don't find them better than you expected, send them back and we will cheerfully refund your money at once. Could anything be fairer? Order by No. 69

WALTER FIELD CO., Dept. P 1077, CHICAGO

5 Great Novels

By Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth

Given Away You all know Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth; her novels are the most interesting and entertaining of any published. Here is an opportunity for you to get five of her great books: The Crime and the Curse. The Wife's Victory. The Fatal Secret. John Strong's Secret and The Little Rough Cast House.

Remember, we do not send merely your choice, but all five of these books, aggregating 160 double column pages, just to introduce our publication, "Everyday Life." Send 25c to pay for a year's subscription and 10c extra to help pay postage, packing, etc., 35c in all, and we will send our paper for one year and also all five of these great Southworth books. You'll be surprised and delighted. If already a subscriber, you can have subscription extended on this offer or send that of a neighbor.

Special Offer Send 50c for 8 years' subscription and 20c extra to pay postage, etc., 70c in all, and we will send you the five Southworth novels and also five great novels by Charlotte M. Braeme—or 10 books in all and our paper 3 years for 70c. If already a subscriber send a subscription of a neighbor or extend your own.

EVERYDAY LIFE, 337 W. Madison St., Dept. S-W-5, Chicago

BUNIONS

STOPS PAIN—REMOVES HUMP—TRY IT AT MY RISK

Here is good news for bunion sufferers. I don't care how bad your bunion is or how you have doctored without success. I positively guarantee that my new combination treatment—PED-O—will end the ain and banish the ugly hump, or I make no charge for the treatment. No pads, no plasters, no clumsy appliances; but a new, different method that gets results. Don't doubt—don't hesitate. You will be amazed and delighted. Send postcard for full treatment. If results are satisfactory, it costs you $2.00; if not, it costs you nothing. Address:

H. D. POWERS, Originator,
Dept. B 113 Battle Creek, Mich.

GRAY HAIR RESTORED TO ITS NATURAL COLOR

Not an experiment but an absolute success. Rhodes' Hair Rejuvenator will positively restore gray and faded hair to its original color, youthful beauty and rich lustre. It is a scalp and hair food that relieves dandruff, and all scalp humors. Nourishes the roots of the hair and makes it grow luxuriantly. Harmless and undetectable. It is not a dye and will not stain the skin or linen. It relieves itching and sore scalps.

MAKES HAIR GROW

Let us convince you. Send 5 cents postage for free trial bottle, book on the Care of the Hair, etc. Large bottle by parcel post $1.15 (includes postage). Address the hair and scalp specialists,

A. T. RHODES & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Silk Embroidered
SUIT-EFFECT Dress

LESTER ROSE CO'S Exclusive Creation

"Style Always a Season Ahead"

This charming ONE-PIECE DRESS looks like a SUIT. It's the latest style-creation of America's greatest designer. Here are youthful lines for women of all ages and figures! And such a wonderful bargain, we offer it on approval, NO MONEY in advance!

Twill Weave SERGE

Dame Fashion says "wear this tuxedo style in 1922." Next season you will find this suit-dress at $25 to $50 in big city fashion shops. Nowhere else can you secure this exclusive style at our low price.

Here Is Biggest Bargain of 1922

We have smashed the price on this elegant Dress to advertise LESTER-ROSE bargains to 50,000 new customers. We positively guarantee you will find it the biggest value for the money.

$3.95 Postage FREE!

Revers, Vestee, Pockets, Sleeves and front of Skirt are all beautifully SILK EMBROIDERED in harmonious colors and gorgeous pattern shown. Silk braid edges Revers, Collar, Pockets and top of Vestee. Rich embroidery extends entirely around "coat" and skirt. Girdle defines waist line; then terminates in long streamers. Invisible closing under left Revers; snap fasteners. Sleeves are latest BELL-SHAPE.

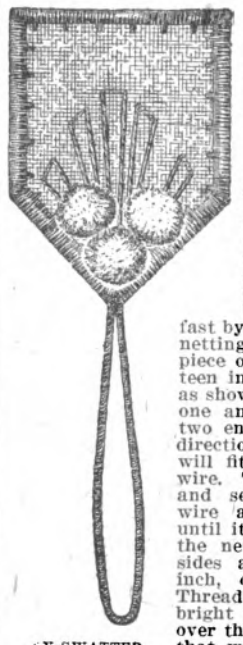
Get Yours First!

Don't wait—write immediately while this money-saving offer remains in effect. Order by No. 5395. Misses' sizes 14, 16, 18. Women's sizes 32 to 46 inch. Navy blue only.

Full Cut Elegantly Tailored.

DON'T SEND ONE CENT!

Simply WRITE for it—SEND NO MONEY! State name, address, size. Pay $3.95 for dress when delivered. We pay the postage! A postal will do. WRITE TODAY!



LESTER-ROSE CO. Dept. 372, CHICAGO

Fight the Fly Nuisance

By Estelle Garland

Making a Fly-Swatter

AMONG fastidious housewives there has has always been a warranted objection to an unsightly fly-swatter lying about like a necessary evil. But now all this has been changed for the useful fly-swatter has become a "thing of beauty" and its sure aim "a joy forever," and the one who wrote the following lines in recognition of its true service deserves a medal:

FLY-SWATTER.

"With murderous intent
My steps are bent
Toward the small
But harmful fly,
For a swat in time
It saveth nine,
Here's a Swatter,
Pass not one by!"

To make, take a piece of wire screen netting seven inches long by five and a quarter wide. Turn under both sides of the handle end of netting two and one-half inches, bringing the two edges together at the back and making them fast by working a strand of the netting in and out. Take a piece of small bail wire seventeen inches long and double it as shown in illustration. Bend one and one-half inch of the two ends outward, in opposite directions, and at an angle that will fit the turned-in edge of wire. Take strong linen thread and sew tightly around the wire and through the mesh until it is secure. Turn under the netting around the three sides about two-thirds of an inch, or about four meshes. Thread a darning needle with bright yarn and sew over-and-over the entire edge, to a depth that will cover the turned-under edges, making a longer stitch every eighth mesh. Three rosettes of different colored yarn are sewed near the handle, and the wool carried onto the wire mesh in long stitches. Wind the handle with the yarn.

To wash, work up and down in a warm suds until clean, then rinse and hang in the sun to dry.

Screening Doors and Windows

A careful screening of windows and doors during the summer months, with the supplementary use of "fly killers" of various kinds, is a protective measure against house flies known to everyone. It requires diligence on the part of every member of a household to keep out flies in sultry weather. If they do sneak in, don't leave food around where they can feast on it and be glad they came. Swat upon sight!

"Lives of house flies all remind us
That the Fates are rather mean;
We never see them in the movies,
BUT—
They're always on the screen."

Fly-Papers and Poisons

Sticky fly-paper, such as found in our general stores, is effective and safe. Great care must be exercised if fly-poison preparations are used, as many of them contain arsenic.

A very effective and less dangerous fly poison is made by adding three teaspoonfuls of the commercial formalin to a pint of milk or water sweetened with a little brown sugar.

The U. S. Public Health Service recommends a one per cent. solution of sodium salicylate as almost equally effective. This is prepared by dissolving three teaspoonfuls of the pure chemical (a powder) in a pint of water, some brown sugar being added to render it more attractive to flies.

A convenient way of exposing these poisons is shown in the accompanying illustration. Here an ordinary drinking glass is partly filled with the solution. A saucer or plate is then lined with white blotting paper cut the size of the dish and placed bottom up over the glass. The whole is then quickly inverted and a small match stick placed under the edge of the glass. As the solution evaporates from the paper more flows out from the glass and thus the supply is automatically renewed.

Fly poison never should be left where children can by any possibility reach it. Fly poison has been the cause bringing many children to an untimely grave.

"Most flies must like fly-paper,
Or else they're out of luck;
At first they fight to get away
BUT—
On it they're soon dead-stuck."

The Fly Menace and How to Fight It

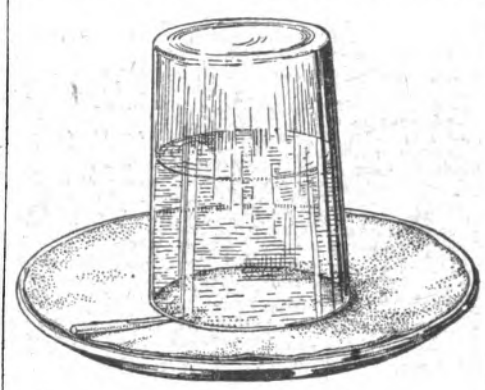
Fly time is approaching and it behooves one and all to start the spring cleaning out-of-doors as well as within, for the presence of flies is an indication of uncleanliness, unsanitary conditions, and improper disposal of substances in which they breed. Not only are flies annoying, but they are actually dangerous to health, because they may carry disease germs to exposed foods.

In order to combat successfully the fly menace, it is important to know where and how these insects breed. Several species of flies are found in houses, some of which so closely resemble the true house fly that only by careful observation can they be distinguished. Among these is the biting stable fly, which differs from the house fly in the important particular that its mouth parts are formed for piercing the skin. There is another stable fly which almost exactly resembles the house fly, but it does not bite, and breeds in decaying vegetable matter and in excrement.

Occasionally the blow-fly or meat fly, the bluebottle, and the green-bottle flies, all of which breed in decaying animal matter, are found in houses.

Still another species, and smaller than any of those so far mentioned, is the "lesser house fly," and is distinguished from the ordinary house fly by its paler and more pointed body. There is also a jet black species known as the window fly, its larvæ being found in cracks of floors where it feeds on other tiny insects.

In late summer and autumn many specimens of a small fruit fly, known as the "vinegar fly," make their appearance, attracted by the odor of overripe fruit.



The true house fly, which is found in nearly all parts of the world, outnumbers all other species together, many, many times over. This fly is medium-sized with four black stripes on the back and a sharp elbow in one of the veins of the wings. The house fly cannot bite, its mouth parts being spread out at the tip for sucking up liquid substances.

The eggs are laid upon horse manure, this substance being its favorite larval food. It will also breed in human excrement, and because of this habit it is very dangerous to the health of human beings, carrying as it does the germs of intestinal diseases, such as typhoid fever and cholera, from the excreta to food supplies. It has also been found to breed freely in hog manure and to some extent in cow and chicken manure. It will also lay its eggs on a great variety of decaying vegetable and animal materials, but a vast proportion comes from horse manure.

The eggs usually hatch in eight to twenty-four hours, the time depending on temperature and moisture. The maggots thus produced feed on the manure until they develop into flies. Experiments have shown that the shortest time between the disposition of eggs and the emerging of the adult fly is between eight and twelve days, and that under these favorable conditions a new generation would be started every eleven to fourteen days.

Carriage of Disease by the House Fly

The house fly's body and legs, especially the latter, are covered thickly with hairs and bristles of various lengths. From a mind picture of its hirsute equipment it is readily seen how, as the fly crawls over infected material the insect bedraggles loaded with noxious germs and thus acts as an effective carrier of contamination to human foods. While the danger from the disease germs carried by the fly on its body and legs is very great, those which it swallows, when feeding on polluted matter, and afterwards deposits in its spittle or excrement on any food it can get to, are a still greater menace to health, as they are found in greater numbers and retain their vitality longer within the fly's digestive tract. "Fly specs" contain very many germs, and, if the fly has been feeding on infected matter, these may cause sickness or death if taken into the human system. Watch a fly light on a lump of sugar or on any other solid food and see it deposit a tiny globule of spittle, work it over until the spittle is sweetened, and then suck it back again, but it leaves part of its germ-infected spittle on the remaining food to be eaten by human beings. The fly will feed on the most filthy substances wherever they may be found, and then carry the pollution and deposit it on food in the kitchen, dining-room and pantry, and on dishes.

FLY-POISON FOUNTAIN.

There must not be too great an interval in generation between the man who tills the earth for grain and the man who breaks for others the bread of life.

Poultry Farming for Women

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28.)

a few days, small quantities of stale bread which has been soaked in scalded milk, and squeezed dry. Try to find the source of trouble—the decayed offal or stagnant water in an old paint can.

P. F. S.—The house illustrated in last December's COMFORT is twenty feet wide and thirty-five feet long. The partition of matched boards runs the full length of the house, twelve feet from the front. This forms a scratch room in front and a rest room at back, which is lighted from the windows in the elevated roof. A dropping board runs along the partition in the roosting room. Roosting frames with nine-inch legs stand on the dropping board. Front openings are covered with wire netting, and have oiled muslin curtains on rollers to let down in stormy weather.

H. P.—Please read answer to P. F. S.

C. G.—Please read answer to P. F. S. If I can get a working ground plan, it shall be mailed to you.

J. E.—Carrots and parsnips should be chopped up fine; beets also, if they are the small table variety. If the large mangel variety, cut through the middle, and fix cut side foremost between two studs, so that the birds can pick at the inside. Cabbage is better tied or nailed up, so that the birds will have to jump up and down to work at it. The exercise is just what they want in the winter.

D. R. P.—The male should be darker than the pullets. Neck, rich brilliant red, with distinct black stripes through the center of each feather. Back and saddle, same as breast—glossy black. Body and fluff, black; tail, black. Undercolor, black or dark slate.

C. H. R.—Too much rich food or new unseasoned grain has brought on severe liver trouble. From your description, I fear the case had gone on too far before you wrote me. If you had given two tablespoonfuls of castor oil at first, and reduced the grain to just a little oats or wheat, fed as much green vegetable as the bird would eat, and given nothing but sour milk to drink, you might have pulled him through.

C. R.—The construction of the Cornell trap-nest which we use is as follows: The nest is 12 inches wide, 12 inches high and 20 inches long, inside measurements. Light materials should be used so far as possible. Most poultrymen are less likely to neglect cleaning the nests often if they are light and easy to handle. In building these nests we use for the corner posts, white pine ⅞ inch by 1¾ inch. The sides, bottom, front and rear pieces are ½ inch pine. The pieces on top are 5-16 inch thick or heavier. The door or trap is made of ⅞ by 1¾ inch pine. The screen over the opening in the door is known as 3 by 3 mesh galvanized wire cloth. The screen in the back is for ventilation. Galvanized wire cloth can be made for this, but a cheaper screen will answer the purpose if one wishes to use it. The trigger or trip is made from No. 7 wire. For making this, all that is necessary is a piece of wire about two feet long, a wood worker's bench vise, a pair of pliers and a hammer. From the middle of the wire measure four inches each way, place the wire in the vise, and bend at right angles at the point marked. From these angles measure ½ inch towards the ends of the wire and bend at right angles in the opposite direction. From this last angle measure four inches toward the ends of the wire and bend the wire toward the center. The ends should be cut off so that they will measure about 1½ inch from the last angle. The board with grooved ends is fitted on to the wire to prevent the hens from sitting on the wire. The screw-eyes which support the wire trip are put in and the wire is then sprung into place. The only criticism that we have had regarding this nest is that when it is first installed, occasionally a door will be found closed without a hen in the nest. This seems to be due to the fact that a hen starts to enter the nest, trips the door and backs out. However, as the hens become accustomed to the nest, this happens less frequently.

Try the New Way To Kill Lice

A hen worried to death with lice can not lay if she wants to. You might as well "throw money to the birds" as feed high priced food to lousy chickens. It's a dead loss—don't do it. Use "LICECIL." No dusting, no dipping, no painting. Hang up the bottle. It acts like magic. Testimonials from every state in the union tell of wonderful results from its use.

Simply put a few drops in nests and on roosts and hang uncorked bottle in coop or hen house. Powerful evaporating vapors which leave bottle are three times heavier than air descend in a misty form, penetrating feathers, cracks and crevices everywhere. Lice, mites, chiggers, bed bugs ants, roaches, etc., have no lungs—they breathe through the pores of the body, and are destroyed by Licecil vapors. Will not injure chicks. Bottle, $1.00; 3 bottles for $2.50; 12 bottles, $9.00. Prepaid. Money back if it fails. American Supply Company, Dept. 97, Quincy, Illinois.

The End.

Japanese Rose Bushes Five for 10c

The Wonder of the World

Rose Bushes with roses on them in 8 weeks from the time the seed was planted. It may not seem possible but we Guarantee it to do so. They will BLOOM EVERY TEN WEEKS Winter or Summer and when 3 years old will have 5 or 6 hundred roses on each bush. Will grow in the house in the winter as well as in the ground in summer. Roses All The Year Around. Pkge. of Seed with our guarantee only 10c. To introduce our 1922 Catalog we will GIVE with the above, a pkge. of Flower Seeds. [Our selection].

Japan Seed Co., Box 605, South Norwalk, Conn.

55 EGGS FROM 57 HENS were received by Mr. C. E. Graham after feeding ARROW EGG TABLETS. They will double your egg supply and prevent cholera, and produce stronger chicks.

Don't send a cent: Cut out this adv. and mail to us, giving your name and address, and we will send you two $1.00 boxes ARROW EGG TABLETS. When they arrive, pay the postman $1.00 for one box, the other is yours free of charge. Our free baby chick offer continued to March 31st. Full information mailed with your order. Write today. ARROW CHEMICAL CO., Rocky Ridge, Maryland.

Money in Poultry and Squabs Start small, grow big, get winter eggs, keep healthy fowls, raise prize winners. Our stock pays best, low prices on leading varieties. Big Free Book tells how. Crescent Poultry Co., Box 2, Des Moines, Iowa

Money Making Poultry

Our specialty. Leading varieties pure bred chickens, turkeys, ducks and geese. Prize winners. Best stock and eggs. Lowest prices; oldest farm; 37th year. Fine catalog FREE. H. M. JONES CO., Box 22, Des Moines, Iowa.

CHICKS 10c UP 12 Pure Breeds. Finest quality. Best guarantee. Big catalog free. BOOTH HATCHERY, Box X-268, Clinton, Mo.

Watch & Bluing REALLY GIVEN AWAY

This stem wind and set, Handsome Engraved Back, guar. timekeeper and fine ring given for selling only 16 pks. Bluette, our famous wash bluing at 15c or 24 pks. Sachet Perfume at 10c. Order choice.

10-Year Guarantee

Chicago Bluing Works 1920 Sunnyside, Dept. 201, Chicago

The Wonderful ADLER Player Piano

An instrument in which the music lover finds his ideal of superb, fascinating tone quality—an instrument which stands among the great achievements of piano making and which has won first prizes at important expositions—is now sent to you direct from the factory on so that you may learn by actual use in your own home of the wonderful musical quality of the Adler Piano—and see that in design and construction it is unsurpassed. So perfect is it in workmanship and material that we guarantee it for 25 years.

30 Days' Free Trial

We invite you to make this trial free of expense to you. To play a few chords and hear the wonderful, sweet, singing tone, and to observe the artistic performance of the player—no is the only way you can realize the superb quality of these instruments. Description cannot compare with actual demonstration.

Save $100 to $150

By selling direct from the factory we are able to give you an Adler at a saving of $100 to $150. You can pay on easy terms if you wish—but first learn from the free trial what a wonderful instrument the Adler is—then decide

FREE—the ADLER BOOK of Pianos and Player Pianos

Send for this remarkable book which tells you the points to look for in buying a Piano or Player Piano and which also explains why the Adler stands in the front rank of artistic pianos. Just your name and address and the book is yours. Send for it.

C. L. Adler, Pres., Adler Mfg. Co.
2390 W. Chestnut St. Louisville, Ky.

SIX Nottingham Lace Curtains GIVEN

Three pair, full size just enough for three windows—wonderful value—Send no Money. Simply sell 40 packets of our Garden seeds at 10c, and return $4.00 collected and these beautiful curtains are yours. Many other premiums given. Large Catalogue. Write quick.

THE WILSON SEED CO. Dept. 313, Tyrone, Pa.

AGENTS: $58 a Week

2 in 1 Reversible Raincoat

One side dress coat, other side storm coat. Tailored seams, sewed and strapped. Two coats for the price of one. Brand new. First season. Not sold in stores.

Guaranteed Waterproof

Right now is the big season. No experience or capital needed. We ship by parcel post and do all collecting. Commission paid same day you take orders. Our new, big swatch book, 48 pages, shows all new and distinct patterns. Write today for agency and sample coat.

Parker Mfg. Co., 617 Storm St., Dayton, Ohio

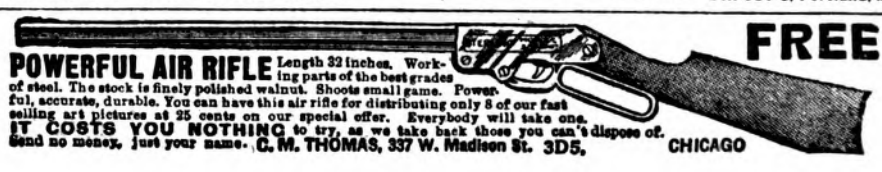
BIG BUSH AUTOMOBILE OFFER

Get a Bush Car and Bush Agency. Big Values—Low Prices will make you money. Write today for our Big Offer. Address Dept. 3A, BUSH MOTOR CO., Bush Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ROCK BOTTOM PRICES NOW

WATCH, RING AND CHAIN GIVEN

We positively give a genuine American Stem Wind and Set Watch, beautifully designed case, warranted time-keeper, 5-year guarantee; Sparkling Set or Plain Ring all for selling 25 of our easy to sell Jewelry articles at 10c each. When sold send $2.50 & we'll send Watch & Ring. Home Supply Co., 428 W. 59th Street, Dept. 105, Chicago



WHY NOT SPEND SPRING, SUMMER, FALL GATHERING Butterflies, Insects? I buy hundreds of kinds for collections. Some worth $1 to $7 each. Simple outdoor work with my instructions, Pictures, Pricelist. Get ready now. Send 25c, NOT STAMPS, for illustrated PROSPECTUS. MR. SINCLAIR, Dealer in Insects, Dept. 27 OCEAN PARK, CALIF.

FREE American Watch or choice from premium list. Sell 30 pkgs. NEEDLES at 10c. Seneca Supply Co., D-12, Oneonta, N. Y.

BOYS—GIRLS EARN BIG MONEY. Box 851-C, Portland, Maine.

POWERFUL AIR RIFLE Length 32 inches. Working parts of the best grades of steel. The stock is finely polished walnut. Shoots small game. Powerful, accurate, durable. You can have this air rifle for distributing only 8 of our fast selling art pictures at 25 cents on our special offer. Everybody will take one. IT COSTS YOU NOTHING to try, as we take back those you can't dispose of. Send no money, just your name. C. M. THOMAS, 337 W. Madison St. 3D5, CHICAGO

FREE

NEW TYPEWRITERS FOR LESS THAN HALF

Unusual Offer Made by Oliver Typewriter Company

You can now buy direct from the factory, saving the cost of selling. A brand new Oliver is now sold for half the usual price. It even costs less than a rebuilt typewriter! You'll be amazed at the details of this astounding offer. Get the facts at once by mailing the coupon.

This is the identical Oliver which has won such world-wide fame. Over 950,000 have been sold. Now comes our most liberal offer of all.

FREE TRIAL—EASY TERMS

Learn how to save, learn about our self-selling plan. Mail the coupon at once for complete information, which does not obligate you in the slightest. This is your greatest opportunity to buy a brand new typewriter at a tremendous saving. Send the coupon below.

NOW The Oliver Typewriter Company, 1603 Oliver Typewriter Building, Chicago.

Please send details of your Special Price Reduction Offer.

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

Grave Crosses of Iron

HONOR your beloved departed with Badger grave crosses. Send at once for catalog showing many beautiful designs. You will be surprised at low cost. Designed in Europe. Every one a real masterpiece, beautiful in simplicity and dignity. A fitting memorial to your beloved departed. Shipped all complete with name and inscription cast in iron. Easily set up. Lasts for ages. Thousands of satisfied customers.

Satisfaction guaranteed or no pay.

Write for catalog.

BADGER WIRE & IRON WORKS
1111 CLEVELAND AVE.
MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Don't get all tired out with lame back and frown wrinkles

WASH TUBS Made into Semi-Automatic Washing Machines

Change your wash tub into up-to-date washing machine of Dodge & Zull Syracuse Easy Washer vacuum principle for 25c week. Wash tub of clothes in 5 to 10 min., clean, without wear with Vac cup attachment. Prepaid. 30-day free trial. Easy paym'ts. Send postcard—save work. Burlingame Mfg. Co. 323 Sunset Ave., Syracuse, N. Y.

BIG NOVELTY BARGAIN! 10 Cts.

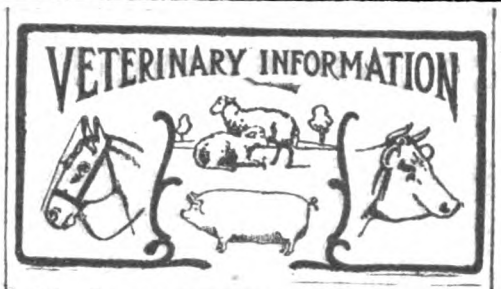
THROW YOUR VOICE

Into a trunk, under the bed or anywhere. Lots of Fun fooling the Teacher, Policeman or Friends. Barrels of Fun.

THE VENTRILO, a little instrument, fits in the mouth out of sight, used with above for Bird Calls, etc. Sent with full instructions; anyone can use it, NEVER FAILS. Also a 32 PAGE BOOK ON VENTRILOQUISM. Formula for Secret Writing, 12 Money Making Secrets and the marvelous

NOVELTY X-RAY WONDER

With it you can apparently see the bones in your fingers, lead in pencil, etc; lots of fun with this outfit. Also 10 Big Magic Tricks Free with every order. All the above Novelties by prepaid mail for 10¢



VENTRILO COMPANY
Dept. 370. South Norwalk, Conn.
LARGEST and OLDEST Mail Order House in Connecticut.

WRIST WATCH GIVEN

Dandy Wrist Watch guaranteed 5 years given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10 cts. each. Gem Set Ring sparkling like $100.00 Diamond also given as big extra prize for promptness. Order 20, when sold send the $2.00 and choose wrist watch or other valuable prize according to big list sent with pictures. HAT ART CO., Dept. B 18, CHICAGO.

MONEY Made quickly by smart men. Artol Co., 115 Nassau St., N. Y.

Subscribers are invited to write to this department asking for any information desired relative to the treatment of animal troubles. Questions will be answered in these columns free by an eminent veterinarian. Describe the trouble fully, sign full name and give your address; direct all correspondence to the Veterinary Department, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

No attention will be given any inquiry which lacks the sender's full name and address, but we will print only initials if so requested.

Sharp Objects Kill Cows

AS every reader is well aware, cows often chew and swallow bones, bark, clothing, crockery, dirt, stones and other foreign objects. Some of these things do little harm in the stomach, but unfortunately the cow sometimes swallows nails, and fatal pericarditis results. Shingle nails most often cause this traumatic or accidental inflammation of the heart-sac. When the barn roof is repaired or replaced, old shingles and nails often fall into the cattle yard and if left may cause trouble. Other nails, bits of wire, pins, needles and hairpins have also caused the death of many a good cow. In one instance that came to our attention a farmer bought from a peddler a wire brush with which to scrub out the concrete feed troughs in his cow stable. Shortly afterwards some of his cows became sick and seven died. Post-mortem examination showed that death in each case had been caused by pericarditis due to a wire having penetrated the wall of the stomach, transfixed the diaphragm and lodged in the sac of the heart. In other cases a wire or nail had transfixed the leaves of the third stomach (omasum) and caused fatal impaction. There is no medicinal remedy for traumatic pericarditis. Were it known that sharp objects were present in the second stomach (reticulum), where they generally lodge, it might be possible to remove them with the hand passed through an opening cut in the wall of the paunch (rumen). This operation would, however, be too late to save life after the symptoms of pericarditis had set in. Prevention is therefore of paramount importance.

The condition may be suspected when a cow shows the following symptoms: fever; fast pulse, which later becomes weak; deranged digestion and diarrhea; dull or metallic sounds (bruits) heard on listening to the heart; dropsical swelling of the brisket and gradual emaciation. The cow may also cough spasmodically when made to run. After death a large quantity of foul-smelling fluid is usually found in the sac of the heart.

WORMS.—My kitten is eight months old and eats but little and is very thin. She is playful and a good mouser. Some time ago she was sick, vomiting a milk-ish fluid. She tried to stand but would shake and nearly fall over. Her fur is rough and not smooth and silky like other kittens. I gave her castor oil. MRS. J. L.

A.—The kitten is no doubt infested with worms. To destroy them, give 10 to 15 drops of syrup of iodide of iron once daily for two or three days and repeat next week. If constipated, give a dose of castor oil in milk after the above medicine has been given.

WORMS.—I have a pup that is very poor and restless. Doesn't eat much and picks his food over. He has good teeth. His eyes are dull and he does not show any signs of worms. S. B.

A.—It is to be suspected that worms are the cause of the thin condition, therefore we should advise you to withhold food for 24 hours and then give one grain of freshly-powdered areca nut for each pound of body weight. Give it mixed in cream or soup. Follow the powder in two or three hours with a dose of castor oil to clear the bowels. Worm medicine for dogs may also be bought, ready for use, at the drug store.

WART.—I have a cow with a wart or sore between her eyes. It has been there for years. It will heal up, then gather and discharge. Can you give me a cure for it? MRS. W. B. M.

A.—The best treatment in such a condition would be to put the cow down or restrain her in stocks and then cut out the growth. The wound should then be cauterized. If you cannot have this done, apply lard or vaselene around the growth and then cauterize the latter with a lunar caustic pencil or a stick of caustic potash.

HORN FISTULA.—I have a cow that was taken sick last August. The trouble seemed to be in her head and I sawed her horns off and one of them discharges pus. Sometimes the horn closes up and there is a swelling over the eye until it is opened. She was giving three gallons of milk a day, but is getting poor. What can I do for her? W. T. W.

A.—There is no such disease as "hollow horn," so the horns need not have been sawed off. The horns of all adult cattle are hollow. As the horn core has become infected, you should saw off the stub and then flush out the cavity once daily with warm water containing one dram of permanganate of potash to the quart. Use a fountain syringe for the purpose. When pus ceases to form, cover the part with pine tar and a layer of oakum or cotton. Have the cow tested with tuberculin, as she may have tuberculosis.

HEPATURIA.—I would like to know what to do for my cow. When she urinates the water is like blood. What is the cause and is there a cure? MRS. B. P.

A.—This disease is common in your state and is supposed to be caused by micro-organisms (coccidiæ) in the feed or water. It is usually contracted on wild pasture. Keep the cow in the stable and yard and feed sound "tame" feed and give water from a deep well. Twice daily mix a teaspoonful each of powdered alum and dried sulphate of iron in the feed. Apply to the State Agricultural Experiment Station for a bulletin on the subject.

SUSPICIOUS CASE.—I have a mare five years old. When I bought her, a two-year-old, she was healthy and fat. Last spring sores broke out on her hind feet and discharged. She began to run down and now she is very thin. Her hair seems dead. I feed her stock powder and soda. Can you advise me what to do? A. S.

A.—We should not feel justified in prescribing treatment as the symptoms are highly suggestive of farcy, the skin form of glanders. That disease is not only contagious and incurable in horses and mules but communicable and fatal to man. A diseased animal has to be destroyed in accordance with state law. You should at once take the mare to a qualified veterinarian for examination. He will, if necessary, apply the Mallein test.

BLACK TONGUE.—Will you kindly advise me if there is any cure for dogs with "Black Tongue" and if so, what? Can anything be done to prevent their taking it? MISS R. B.

A.—The new theory is that black tongue of dogs may be a form of hemorrhagic septicemia, therefore it would be well to have your veterinarian give your dogs protective treatment with a bacterin. Keep the dogs from eating garbage or carrion of any kind and from drinking contaminated water. If a case occurs, swab or spray the mouth two or three times daily with distilled or boiled water tinged light blue with bluestone, or pink with permanganate of potash. Also give powdered borax in one-half teaspoonful doses two or three times daily to bring up the phlegm.

LAMENESS.—I have a mare and on her left hind foot, above the hoof, is a loose, hard lump, running around the hoof a little, making her limp when trotting. MRS. J. R. P.

A.—Clip the hair from the hoofhead and growth and then blister with a mixture of one dram each of biniodide of mercury and powdered cantharides and one and one-half ounces of lard. Rub it in for 15 minutes and then tie the mare up short so that she will be unable to lie down or bite the part. Wash the blister off in 48 hours and then apply a little lard daily. It may be necessary to repeat the blister several times at intervals of two or three weeks.

BLACKHEAD.—Is there any sure cure for yellow diarrhea in turkeys? The head turns purple as the disease advances. (2) I have yearling colt that has what is called Roach Back. Is there any way to reduce the enlargement or crooked spine? W. A.

A.—We take it that the turkeys die of blackhead. If so, the livers will be found covered with yellow diseased spots. There is no certain remedy. Do not feed corn but allow sour milk at all times. Tinge the drinking water light blue with methylene blue, or pink with permanganate of potash. Keep young turkeys off the ground at night, in a dry room or floor. Burn diseased birds. Start afresh, on new, clean ground, with eggs from a sound flock. (2) Having the colt ridden by a heavy person daily may help, but such a malformation usually proves permanent.

FOULS IN CATTLE.—I have several cows coming down with foot rot. What is the cause and what can I do? MRS. L. C.

A.—Wading or standing in wet and filth and getting grit and bits of corn-stalks, cobs and particles of grit or manure lodged between the toes causes "fouls" or "foot-rot". Rotting and under-running of the horn of the foot by pus when the part becomes invaded by the filth germ bacillus necrophorus. The disease usually is curable. Stable affected cattle. Cleanse the feet and cut away every bit of rotten or under-run horns of sole or wall. Then immerse the foot for five minutes in hot water containing two ounces of sulphate of copper (bluestone) to the pint. Afterwards cover the parts with oakum saturated with a five per cent. solution of coal tar disinfectant and held in place by bandaging. Renew the dressing once daily until doing well; then apply pine tar two or three times a week. It will then be necessary to keep the cattle out of filth.

Genuine

BAYER

ASPIRIN

WARNING! Say "Bayer" when you buy Aspirin.

Unless you see the name "Bayer" on tablets, you are not getting genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians over 22 years and proved safe by millions for

Colds	Headache	Rheumatism
Toothache	Neuralgia	Neuritis
Earache	Lumbago	Pain, Pain

Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proper directions.

Handy "Bayer" boxes of 12 tablets—Also bottles of 24 and 100—Druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

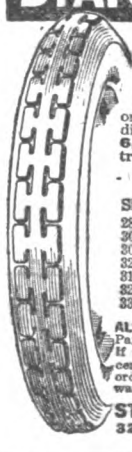
BARGAIN SALE

2 Tires for $11.10

FREE Tube With Each Tire

Think of it! TWO tires for less than ordinary price of one—and a good tube with each absolutely free. Don't miss this mammoth sale! Special over-stock lot that will go fast. Order quick to avoid disappointment. No double treads or sewed tires. Thousands of satisfied users everywhere are getting splendid service out of these slightly used tires. We are sure you too can get

9000 Miles



Size	1 Tire	2 Tires	Size	1 Tire	2 Tires
30x3	$ 7.00	$ 11.10	32x4½	$12.50	$22.75
30x3½	7.85	13.50	33x4½	13.25	23.30
32x3½	8.50	15.30	34x4½	14.45	23.75
31x4	10.50	16.75	35x4½	14.85	24.30
32x4	11.50	19.60	36x4½	15.45	26.30
33x4	12.25	20.75	35x5	15.80	26.05
34x4	13.25	22.30	37x5	16.45	26.40

State whether Straight Side or Clincher

SEND NO MONEY So sure are we that you will be fully satisfied with these excellent tires we send them without a penny in advance. We ship C.O.D. Express or Parcel Post. Examine these tires carefully on arrival. If not more than satisfied send them back and we will refund every cent of your money including shipping charges. Order direct from this Ad. NOW!—before it is too late.

NATIONAL BARGAIN TIRE HOUSE
Dept. B-193, 3824 Ogden Avenue Chicago

SAVE 60% ON STANDARD TIRES

Send No Money!

Cut your tire bill. BUY STANDARD make Tires such as Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and other adjusted tires at 40c on the dollar. They are in first class condition and may readily be guaranteed for 6,000 Miles. These are NOT double tread or reconstructed tires.

Our Low Prices:

Size	Tires	Tubes	Size	Tires	Tubes
28x3	$4.75	$1.10	34x4	$7.95	$2.25
30x3	4.65	1.30	32x4½	8.75	2.40
30x3½	5.65	1.40	34x4½	9.00	2.50
32x3½	6.20	1.50	35x4½	9.15	2.60
31x4	7.00	1.60	36x4½	9.35	2.70
32x4	7.40	1.85	35x5	9.65	2.80
33x4	7.70	2.15	37x5	9.85	2.90

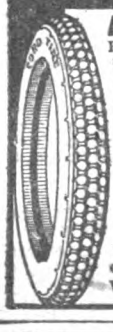
ALL TUBES GUARANTEED FOR ONE YEAR. Pay on arrival. Examine before you pay and if not satisfied return at our expense. 5 per cent discount allowed when cash accompanies order. Specify whether straight side or clincher wanted. Order at once. Immediate shipment.

STANDARD TIRE & RUBBER CO.
3284 S. Morgan St., Chicago, Illinois

BEAUTIFUL HOME FREE

Stop Paying Rent! This offer is so liberal it is hard to believe, but it is true—every word is true. There are no strings to my offer and I will positively give a house away just as promised in this offer. You can get a home FREE if you send me your name quick and do as I say. Surely you have longed for the day to come when you could cease paying rent to a heartless landlord and call your home your own. I am now offering you the golden opportunity to free yourself from the clutches of the money-grabbing landlord, and at no cost to yourself. Picture a handsome six-room house, nice lawn and pretty shrubbery and flowers growing in well-arranged beds. Don't you want a place like this, and FREE, too? Of course you do, so send me your name TODAY—before you lay this paper aside.

The House Can Be Built Anywhere You Want It Don't hold back—don't say "no such luck for me." You can have the house built wherever you say—California, Maine or anywhere in the United States. It makes no difference where you want to live. This offer is open to all.



I Will Even Buy a Lot for You

Perhaps you do not own a lot, or have no place to build, but don't allow this to prevent your sending in your name and address, because I will arrange to buy a lot for you if you don't own one. A wonderfully beautiful and comfortable home can be yours if you promptly answer this advertisement and do as I say. Don't take chances of some other person getting ahead of you, but rush your name and address to me at once. An offer like this may never come to you again.

Costs Nothing to Investigate You run absolutely no risk whatever. It costs you nothing to investigate this wonderfully liberal offer. All I ask you to do is to rush me your name and address—a post card will do. Just say "I want one of your free houses."

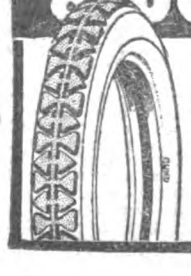
C. E. MOORE, Pres. Home Builders' Club, Dept. 122, Batavia, Ill.

NEW CORD TIRES Guaranteed 8000 Miles

Brand New—High Grade—Strictly Firsts

Here is your opportunity to buy New High Grade Cord Tires dirt cheap. Fresh stock—strictly firsts. Manufacturer's name and serial number. In original wrapper. The greatest tire sale this season. Values which cannot be duplicated anywhere offered at tremendous sacrifice.

Standard Make Tube Given With Each Cord and Fabric Tire



These big sturdy, substantial cords, are built of new strong, fresh material by a well known manufacturer, who guarantees every tire to be free from defects and workmanship Our slashed prices are far lower than any other standard tire, yet we absolutely guarantee our cords to give full 8000 miles service.

Sizes	Cords	Fabrics	Size	Cords	Fabrics	Sizes	Cords	Fabrics
30x3	$ 9.95	$ 7.10	33x4	$17.50	$11.25	35x4½	$25.75	$15.30
30x3½	11.75	8.45	34x4	18.95	11.95	36x4½	26.15	17.70
32x3½	14.40	9.25	32x4½	23.50	13.90	33x5	26.75	19.00
31x4	15.65	10.50	33x4½	24.10	14.50	35x5	28.00	20.50
32x4	16.90	10.70	34x4½	25.00	14.95	37x5		21.50

Send No Money—All tires sent, no money, down for your examination. Pay only after convinced of the tremendous bargain value. State whether Cord or Fabric are wanted. We allow special 5 per cent discount if full cash is sent with order.

Webster Tire Corporation, 110 S. Dearborn St., Dept. 16, Chicago, Ill.

8,000 Mile Cord Tires

Brand new, absolutely first cord tires. Guaranteed 8,000 miles and adjusted at the list price on that guarantee. The prices below include a brand new United States Tube.

30x3	$ 9.50	32x4	$16.10
30x3½	11.25	33x4	17.00
32x3½	13.50	34x4	18.60
31x4	14.10	32x4½	21.10
33x4½	$22.15
34x4½	23.20
35x4½	24.05
33x5	25.25

Send no money. Just write today and tell us the size of your tires and the number you want. Tires will be shipped C. O. D. with section unwrapped for inspection. All tires have non-skid tread.

CHARLES TIRE CORP. Dept. 521, 2824 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

Let Us Send You

This lovely 3-piece combination consisting of a beautiful full cut bungalow apron, stylish deep flounce petticoat and attractive dust cap to match, all for only 98c. C. O. D. on arrival. Mailed postage paid to your door.

Worth $2.50

On Approval

Yes, Ma'am, we take all the risk. Your money back if not delighted. Greatest price slash in years. Order today sure.

3-Piece Set

Cap, Apron, Petticoat 98¢

POSTAGE PAID

Order Quick! Only a limited quantity. Don't lose out. Made of good quality percale with neat figures and stripes on light background.

SEND NO MONEY

No, Ma'am, just give us your name, address and bust size and receive by return mail the greatest value giving bargain ever offered. Pay on arrival only 98c for complete outfit consisting of

Full Cut Bungalow Apron
Stylish Petticoat
Attractive Dust Cap

All 3 Pieces for only 98c

Big Catalogue Mailed Free

BERNARD-HEWITT & CO.
Dept. W 533 CHICAGO, ILL.

Reduced Prices

and THREE YEARS TO PAY for this beautiful

MEISTER PIANO

Eight exquisite styles to choose from and the one you select will be sent you on

30 DAYS FREE TRIAL—ALL FREIGHT PREPAID

A guaranteed saving of $100 to $150.

If you like the piano we will sell it to you on small monthly payments to suit your convenience as low as $8.00 per month. No cash deposit asked. No interest on payments. No extras of any kind. Stool free with piano. Write today for our catalog, illustrated in the natural colors of the wood. It's free. If you are interested in player-pianos send for free catalog. We have a fine selection. Rothschild & Co., Dept. 11-I, Chicago

We Pay $7 a Day

Taking Orders for Reversible Raincoat

Two coats in one. One side black raincoat—other side fine dress coat. Guaranteed waterproof. Latest style.

$45.00 a Week Guaranteed for 3 average orders a day

No experience necessary. No capital needed. All you do is to take the orders. We deliver by Parcel Post, and do all collecting. Your commission paid same day your orders are booked. Get started at once. Work full time or spare time. Easy to get orders on account of two coats for the price of one. Big season now on. Send immediately for sample coat to wear and to show customers.

Thomas Mfg. Co., R-330 Dayton, Ohio

Agents Sell dresses

Men and women everywhere earn real money taking orders for JOLLY MOLLY street and house dresses. Mrs. Burge made $37.50 one week. Easley sends $111, one day's work. Every woman wants one or more of these attractive, low-priced dresses. New line now ready. Write for proposition. The Domestic Products Co., 31 Davies Bldg., Dayton, O.

Your Hair Bobbed Without Cutting It

Be occasionally Bobbed and keep your friends guessing. My new device will do this for you in a jiffy. $2.00 will bring it you, postpaid, my device complete with full instructions. Satisfaction guaranteed.

MME. GRACE BOND, Hairdresser Specialist
2380 Amsterdam Avenue New York City

GIVEN AWAY!

Boys, earn this wonderful moving picture machine complete, fitted with film. Given away for selling 40 packages of our Sachet Powder at 10c each. When sold, return $4 to us and moving picture machine is yours. We send you the powder without any charges. Send your name and address. POLK NOVELTY CO., Dept. C-2, Brockton, Mass.

FREE 10 DAYS' TRIAL 1922 THIN MODEL WATCH

Men's, Boys' or Ladies' sizes, 1922 Thin Model, beautiful polished Nickel-Silver case, open face style, stem wind & set. Guaranteed 5 years. Send name and address and we send this watch C.O.D. When it arrives, pay postman only $2.98. Wear it 10 days. If not satisfied we return your money.

Gold Filled Chain & Knife free with order.

SHEF COMPANY, 60 Station D, Dept. 50, New York

VIOLIN FREE

Beautiful violin, with bow, book of instructions, and rosin given for selling 25 pieces of jewelry at 10 cents each. Write today.

Eagle Watch Co., Dept. 620, East Boston, Mass.

FREE BOYS AIR RIFLE

This fine Rifle for selling only 15 packages Colored Post Cards at 10cts. a pair. Write for Postcards today. Columbia Novelty Co., Dept. 33, East Boston, Mass.

Comfort's Home Lawyer

Through the columns of this department subscribers may have free advice from our eminent legal adviser on all questions of law except divorce matters.

Address Home Lawyer, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Sign your true name and give your address. Name will not be published.

MRS. C., Illinois.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that if the man you mention died without a will, leaving his widow and daughter as his only heirs at law and next of kin, his whole estate, subject to debts and expenses, descended to these two, and that upon the subsequent death of his widow, unmarried, leaving only the one daughter, the whole property would go to such daughter, unless the mother left a will making some other disposition of the property; we do not think it necessary for this daughter to have deeds in her own name to the real estate, as her title comes through inheritance instead of by deed.

C. M., Virginia.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that you cannot substantiate a claim against your older brothers and sisters for your care and attention to your younger brothers and sisters; we think that under some circumstances you may be able to collect from your father's estate for such services as you may perform for him during his last sickness.

MRS. J. M. S., North Carolina.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and having a surviving widow and children, the widow, in addition to certain small allowances, is entitled to receive dower of a one-third interest for life in his real estate, and if there be not more than two children, one-third of the personal estate, absolutely, but if there be more than two children, the widow shall receive a child's part of the personal estate, absolutely; we think children of the decedent by a former marriage have the same intestacy inheritance rights as the children of the surviving widow. Wives must survive their husbands before they become their widows, so that when the law makes inheritance right provisions for a man's widow it always means the wife who survives him, and not a wife who predeceased him.

MRS. E. S., Indiana.—We do not think there is any Federal law governing the distribution of your father's estate, we think his estate will be distributed according to your state laws, and that if he possessed testamentary capacity and was not under undue influence, and if his will was legally drawn and executed, and reflected his true intent, he could disinherit such of his children as he saw fit; we do not think the election by the widow to reject the terms of the will would affect the rights of others under the will, unless the will was set aside.

MRS. S. L. A., Nebraska.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving one or more children, and a widow who is not the parent of the children, such widow, in addition to certain small allowances from the personal estate, would receive one-fourth part of the estate.

G. J. K., Michigan.—We do not think you can collect damages from your neighbor for the loss of your wood, unless he started the fire which burned same, or unless he was negligent in allowing same to spread upon your property.

MRS. A. G., Texas.—If both your father and mother signed the mortgage upon the property you mention, we think the holder of the mortgage can foreclose same upon default, against both your father's, and against the interest of your mother's estate in the property.

MRS. M. M., Missouri.—In the absence of a will making some provision for you, we do not think you have any interest in the estate of your mother's mother, if your mother survived your grandmother.

MRS. H. G., Missouri.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that your son by a former marriage would have no inheritance rights in your husband's estate, unless your husband makes some provision for him by will.

MRS. N. M., Ohio.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving a widow and children, such widow, in addition to certain small allowances from the personal estate, would receive a life estate of one-third of the real estate, and one-half of the personal estate if the same does not exceed $400, and one-third of the residue if it exceeds this amount absolutely.

A. N. D., Maine.—We do not think you now have any chance of recovering property abandoned by your ancestor in Ireland about the year 1814.

E. K., West Virginia.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will and leaving a surviving widow and children by two marriages, his surviving widow in addition to certain small allowances would receive dower of a one-third interest for life in his real estate and one-third of his personal estate absolutely, after payment of his debts and the expenses of administering the estate, the balance of the estate going in equal shares to his children by both marriages, the descendants of any deceased child taking their parent's share.

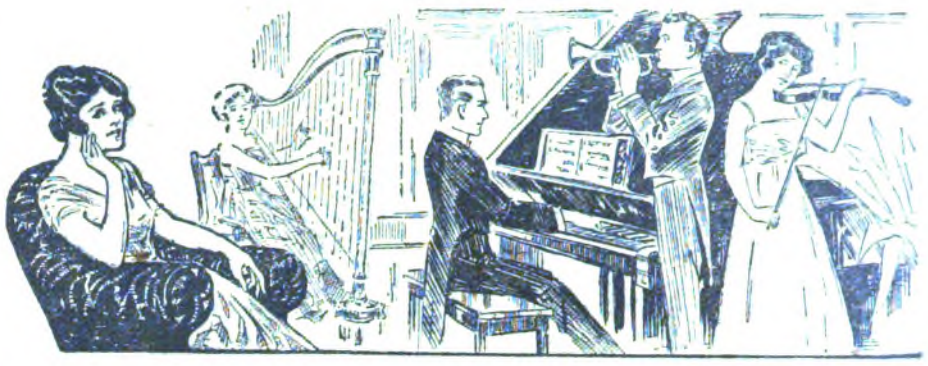
S. W., Pennsylvania.—We do not think any of the persons you mention can be punished for the acts you mention after a period of seventeen years; we think it is unwise for you to allow the talk about these old dead matters to disturb you.

MRS. S. L. S., Oklahoma.—Under the laws of Missouri, we are of the opinion that a married woman cannot, by will, bar her husband from his interest in her real estate in case there are children born to the marriage, and in case the husband survives the wife, unless, of course, such husband accepts the provisions of the will.

MRS. S. S., Georgia.—Under the laws of your state, we do not think the deed of the property you mention could, after a lapse of 20 years, be set aside on the ground that your mother's signature was forged to such deed, unless you can substantiate the fact that the present owners of the property had knowledge of such forgery.

MRS. J. D. V., Ohio.—We do not think the person against whom you made the statements of the facts you mention can collect damages from you, provided you properly defend any action brought against you for that purpose, and fully substantiate your defence that the statements made by you were accurate and truthful.

MRS. F. A. B., Missouri.—If, as we understand from your communication, the Court has refused to pass the account of the executor or administrator of the estate you mention, we think it will be necessary for such executor or administrator to make good the amount of the disallowed items of his account so that the same may be passed by the Court.



R. W. M., Indiana.—If, as you state, your mother destroyed your deed to the property conveyed by your parents to you, after delivering same to you and receiving payment for same from you, we think you can compel her to execute a new deed of the property to you in the proper action brought for the purpose.

MRS. N. S., Minnesota.—If your debtor refuses to pay the amount of the note you hold, we think it will be necessary for you to bring an action against him to compel him to do so, but if he has no property, except such as is exempt by law from levy under execution, it will be difficult to collect from him, unless you can prove by the proper evidence that he has transferred property to avoid his just debts, in which event, you should be able to set aside such transfer.

MISS V. M. W., Michigan.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the capacity of females to make contracts (except of marriages) is fixed by your common law as regards age at 21 years of age.

MRS. L. B. B., Oklahoma.—If you can substantiate by the proper evidence that your brother procured the quit claim deeds of your share of your father's property from you without consideration, and upon misrepresentation to you, we think you can have such deeds set aside in the proper action brought for the purpose, unless the property was transferred to an innocent third party purchaser for a valuable consideration, in which event, you will have to look to your brother or the person who deceived you for the damages you have suffered.

Don't Be a Wall Flower!

Learn Music at Home

No longer need the ability to play music be shut out of your life! Now at last you can learn music—how to play any instrument—at home—yet without having a teacher at your elbow. By our wonderful home study method we have made it easy for you to play by note the Piano, Organ, Violin, Banjo, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, 'Cello, Piccolo, Trombone, Clarinet, Flute, Harp, Saxophone, Ukulele, Hawaiian Steel Guitar, Harmony and Composition, Tenor Banjo, Drums and Traps, Automatic Finger Control, Voice and Speech Culture, or learn Sight Singing.

No tiresome, "dry" exercises, no inconvenience, no trick music, no "numbers," yet simple, wonderful, easy for even a child. Now you can bring into your own life and the lives of others endless pleasure and happiness through your music. Instead of being a forsaken "wall flower" you will be the most popular person in your set. By our new plan more than 250,000 gentlemen, ladies and children in all parts of the world have learned to play successfully and skillfully.

Special Offer Now

We want to have one pupil in each locality AT ONCE to help advertise our wonderful, easy system of teaching music. For a limited time we are therefore making a special advertising offer to give you music lessons in your own home, and charge only an amount about equal to the cost of sheet music, postage, etc. We can do this because our course makes friends—pupils recommend it to others and then we make our profit. We make this offer on condition that you give them our name when they ask you.

Send No Money

MAIL COUPON TODAY

Learning music successfully by our home study method is a positive proven fact. The lessons are so interesting, it is more like a game than a study. Thousands who never knew one note from another before taking the lessons have developed into expert musicians. The average yearly enrollment for the past few years has been over 25,000 pupils. We grade you before you start and fit the instruction to your special needs. A beginner gets entirely different lessons than one who has had lessons.

Let us send you our new 24-page book, which describes the secret principles of our wonderful New System of Music Teaching from beginning to end, and contains scores of letters from pupils who have become expert players as a result of the course. Instruments supplied when needed — cash or credit. Write today. Mail coupon or postal.

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
43 BRUNSWICK BUILDING, NEW YORK

MAIL THIS COUPON
U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
43 Brunswick Building, New York

Please send me your free book, "Music Lessons in Your Own Home," and particulars of your Special Offer. I am interested in the following course:

.....
(Name of Instrument or Course)

Name .....
Please Write Plainly

Address .....

City ..... State .....

Fine Laundering Done at Home

By Leslie Gordon

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

"IT is almost as cheap to buy a new summer dress as to have it washed a couple of times," complained a friend to me recently as she puckered her brows over a long laundry bill.

And, truth to tell, the laundry bill is a big item in the cost of living at present. The daintiest of tub frocks and the most fascinating of blouses soon lose their beauty unless they make frequent visits to the wash-tub; and this also is an expensive process nowadays.

Now the art of the "blancheuse de fin," as the French call their very cleverest washerwoman, is not a secret process at all, but is well within the comprehension of anybody who is willing to take a little trouble, so why not save a considerable sum of money by "doing up" the best frocks at home?

The manageress of a laundry that makes a specialty of this fine work gave me a few points the other day that will be just as useful to the home laundress as they are to the professional.

"Take this voile frock, for instance," said she, holding up a distracting pink-and-white creation for my inspection. "The ordinary laundress would send it home either limp as a rag or with so much starch in it that it would be ruined. This is all wrong, when it is just as easy to make the material look as it did when it came from the shop. The secret lies in first carefully washing the frock in the ordinary ma[illegible] and then rinsing it through water in which [illegible]um arabic has been dissolved in proportions [illegible]e of about half the size of a nut[illegible] to a quart of water. If you co[illegible] the new gry[illegible]an old clean toothbrush in kerose[illegible]ough they [illegible]pot lightly with this and nine times [illegible]innot lo[illegible]al effort and will remove the spot wi[illegible] cows [illegible]al effort and the odor also evaporates [illegible]e spare[illegible]washed.

"To keep delicate-tinted w[illegible]deal I mad[illegible]om fading, a little care must be [illegible]rou week I [illegible]should never be hung in the sun, bu[illegible]asing until [illegible]d in the shade or in the house. [illegible]reen cottons or linens from fading by adding half a cupful of vinegar to two and one-half gallons of water and dipping the frock in this and letting it drip dry in the shade. Half a cupful of salt used in the same way will fix the color of pale blue dresses or washable mourning materials.

"Knitted or crocheted shawls or scarfs or sweaters can be washed to look like new. If the shawl is folded as flat as possible, placed carefully in a pillow-case and run through at intervals with basting thread to keep it in position it can be washed with the ordinary flannels. But if it is a very delicate shawl it is best to wash it separately in soap-suds made by dissolving a cake of shaved white soap in enough boiling water to make a gallon and to this adding one tablespoonful of oxgall. Souse it up and down with the hands but do not rub it. Squeeze out the water by patting between the hands and rinse in three waters. To wring it place between two dry sheets and twist lightly. Press while still hot with a warm iron."

Only $10 DOWN A YEAR TO PAY

30 DAYS' TRIAL
3 YEAR GUARANTEE

Get Your Kirstin now! Take a whole year to pay in small monthly payments. Earn as you pay by being our Demonstrator. Clear your land! Increase your income! Make your tax-eating stump fields pay big profits.

Kirstin One Man STUMP PULLER

Weighs less—costs less. Greater power, speed, strength. A few pounds pull on the lever means tons on the stump. You can pull big stumps alone—quick, easy, cheap—without extra help. 50-page illustrated book—"Land Clearers' Guide"—free. Tells best clearing methods under all conditions. Low prices to demonstrators on one-man and horse-power pullers. Write today.

A. R. Kirstin Co., 1803 Ind St., Escanaba, Mich.

Try this mixer 30 Days FREE

Reduced to $38.00

Right now is time to get your Kwik-Mix Special offer and reduced prices this month only. Post yourself—see how easy it is to build your own concrete floors—sidewalks—foundations—etc.—do better work—save contractor's profit. Load it on one side, close to materials—dump finished mixture on other side into wheelbarrow—a great time and labor saver. Mixes wheelbarrowful a minute—all steel—lasts a lifetime. Just right for farm and small contract work. Make ten to twenty dollars a day spare time concreting for neighbors.

Send No Money

Pay only $39.00 after 30 day trial. $1.00 discount for cash with order, or easy terms, $4.75 a month. Order from this ad or write for full particulars and Free Book on Concrete.

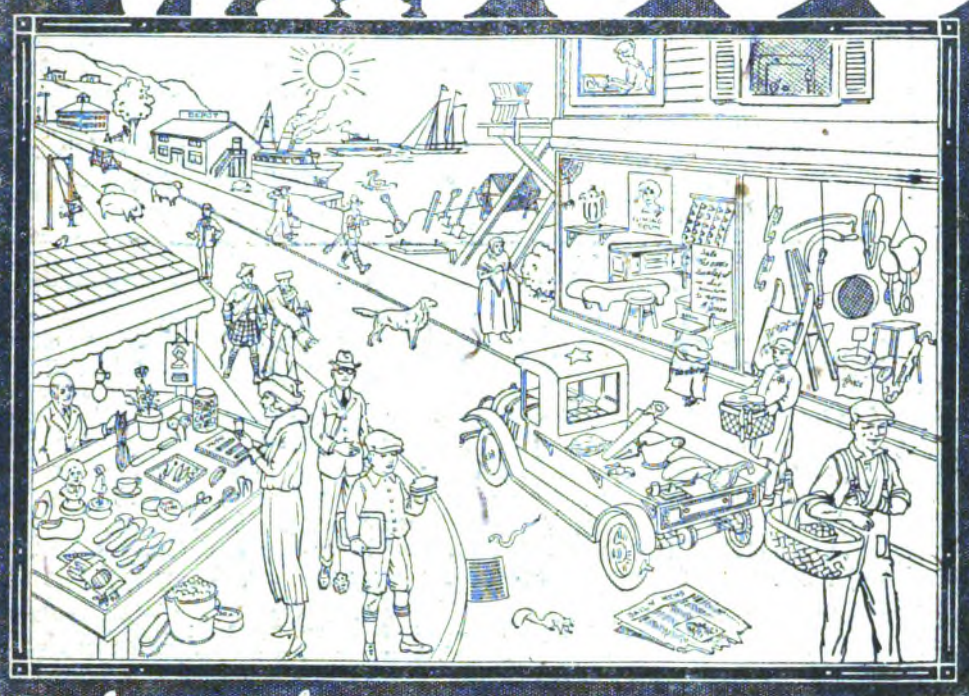
Badger Wire & Iron Works
1024 Cleveland Avenue
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

KWIK-MIX Concrete Mixer

3 Beautiful Shirts $3.19

SEND NO MONEY

THIS WONDERFUL BARGAIN cannot be duplicated anywhere. THREE beautiful dress shirts for only $3.19. Value $4.50 guaranteed. Each shirt beautifully made. Soft Cuffs. Coat Style Pronto. Highest quality materials. A genuine money saving bargain to introduce my line of shirts to new customers. SEND NO MONEY NOW. Pay Postman $3.19 plus postage upon arrival. Every penny returned AT ONCE if not delighted. All shirts are white with assorted color stripes. Latest New York style. Send postal or letter now while this offer lasts. Not more than three shirts to a customer.



F. V. Frankel, Dept. D-463, 353 5th Avenue, New York City

SELL US YOUR SPARE TIME

We will train you to write show cards. No canvassing or soliciting; we supply you with steady work; distance no object; you can earn from $15 to $50 a week.

Wilson Methods, Limited,
Dept. L, 64 E. Richmond, Toronto, Canada

Win $5000

Bank Guarantee

State Bank of Philadelphia
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

E. J. REEFER:

This will acknowledge your deposit of $20,000 with this bank which we will hold as a guarantee that the prizes awarded by the judges to the winners of your puzzle contest will be paid.

It is understood that the Cashier of this bank will serve as one of the judges of this puzzle contest as a guarantee that E. J. Reefer will award these prizes.

Yours very truly,
H. C. KRAUSKOPF
PRESIDENT.

How many objects in this picture Begin with "S"?

Big Picture FREE on Request

Open to Everybody!

Send us a list of all objects beginning with "S" (saw, spoon, etc.) you can find in this picture. Largest and nearest correct list wins 1st prize. 104 other cash prizes.

Costs Nothing to Try

While this contest is for the purpose of introducing Reefer's Yeast Tablets, you do not have to purchase any in order to win a prize. But will you be content to strive for $50 when the same list of words might win $5000? Read every word of this announcement. It tells you —

How to Win the $5,000

If your list of "S" words is largest and nearest correct and you have not ordered any Reefer's Yeast Tablets, you will win $50 as First Prize. (See column 1 of Prize List.) If you send in an order for one $1 package with your list of words and your list is awarded First Prize, you win $750. (See column 2 of Prize List.) If you order two $1 packages and your list wins First Prize, you will get $1500. (See column 3 of Prize List). And if you order five $1 packages and you are awarded First Prize, you will get $5000. (See column 4 of Prize List). And besides, there are 104 other big cash prizes. Second Prize in column 4 is $2500—Third Prize is $1250, etc. Just think of it—105 chances for you to win.

Reefer's Yeast Tablets

Most people are undernourished even though they eat ample wholesome food. The modern cooked food diet does not contain the three natural Vitamines so necessary to health. Lack of pep, that dull, listless, tired feeling, headaches and constipation, poor appetite, absence of firm flesh, all are due to undernourishment.

The three Vitamines which your body must have are found in their most tasty and convenient form in Reefer's Yeast Tablets—sold only direct to you from Reefer's Laboratories. Send for some today.

BEAUTY—Health—Vim—Vigor

The world is just now waking up to Nature's own beauty secret. Sparkling eyes—a clear complexion—the radiant charm of perfect health—can only be had as a result of complete nourishment. Unless all three natural Vitamines are present, even the most wholesome foods cannot be properly assimilated by the body.

Vitamines will help to give you the bouyant freshness of youth, vim and vitality, a springy step, a snappy walk, a healthy appetite, a keen sense of joy in living. Think how wonderful life would be without that continual "tired feeling," with plenty of energy to work hard and play hard, with strength and vigor. No matter how old or how young you are, you need vitamines. That is why you should take Reefer's Yeast Tablets.

Start Now—Win All You Can Get your list in early. Send in your order for Reefer's Yeast Tablets at the same time. Remember, an order for five packages qualifies you for the $5000. Get started NOW.

E. J. Reefer Dept. 3043 — 9th and Spruce Streets Philadelphia, Pa.

105 Prizes

	If no Reefer's Yeast Tablets are ordered	If one $1.00 pkg. Reefer's Yeast Tablets is ordered	If two $1.00 pkgs. Reefer's Yeast Tablets are ordered	If five $1.00 pkgs. Reefer's Yeast Tablets are ordered
1st prize	$50	$750	$1500	$5000
2nd prize	35	375	750	2500
3rd prize	25	200	400	1250
4th prize	25	125	250	600
5th prize	25	75	150	400
6th to 55th prizes each	2	4	8	25
56th to 105th prizes each	1	2	4	10

Observe These Rules:

1. The contest is open to every man, woman, girl or boy living in America, except employees or relatives of employees of E. J. Reefer, 9th and Spruce Sts. There is no entrance fee of any kind.
2. You must use only one side of paper. You must number your list of objects in regular order—1, 2, 3, etc. Your full name and address must be written on each page in the upper right hand corner. Use a separate sheet for anything you may wish to write outside of your list of names and your name and address.
3. English words only will be accepted as they appear in the English dictionary. Obsolete words will not be counted. Both the singular and the plural of a word will not count; either one of them may be used.
4. Compounds or words which are made up of two or more complete English words cannot be used.
5. The same spelling of a word will be counted only once even though it is used for different articles or objects, or parts of them. Each article or object can be given only under one name.
6. Two or more people may co-operate in answering the puzzle. However only one prize will be given to any one household. No prizes will be awarded to more than one of any combination outside of the family where a number—two or more—have worked together.
7. If a contestant sends more than one list under the same name, an assumed name, or a pre-married name, then all lists of such contestant will be disqualified. If more than one list is sent by any group or by any members of the same group who have co-operated in the preparation of such lists, then all lists of such contestants will be disqualified.
8. All answers must be received through the mail by E. J. Reefer, 9th and Spruce Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., and must be post-marked by Post Office closing time, April 10th, 1922.
9. The first prize will be awarded for the answer containing the largest and most nearly correct list of the names of visible objects and articles beginning with "S" shown in the picture. No other consideration, such as neatness, style or handwriting will have any bearing in making the decision.
10. The full amount of any of the prizes will be awarded to each contestant in the event of ties.
11. The decision will be made by three judges entirely independent of and having no connection with E. J. Reefer. They will judge the answers submitted and and award the prizes at the end of the contest. Participation in the contest carries with it the acceptance of the decision of the judges as final and conclusive.
12. All answers will receive full consideration whether or not "Reefer's Yeast Tablets" is purchased. At the close of the contest, when all lists have been graded, the names of the prize winners will be announced and the list of words will be sent upon request to any participant who sends us a stamped, addressed envelope.

Copyright 1922, by E. J. Reefer

Stella Rosevelt

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25.)

out and turns with disgust from her artful designing, she has shamelessly taxed him with unfaithfulness and treachery."

Star turned and regarded her accuser in perfect amazement. She could scarcely credit her sense of hearing.

How did Mrs. Richards know anything about her meetings with Lord Carrol, alias Archibald Sherbrooke, or of her interest in him? And who had represented it in this disgraceful light?"

"This young man," the cunning woman went on, "is no other than Lord Carrol, who, for the month that we were at Long Branch, paid the most devoted attention to Josephine, and accepted our invitation here with the intention, as we supposed, of formally declaring himself to her and securing her father's consent to their marriage."

A convulsive tremor ran through every fiber of the young girl's being as she stood there and listened to this artful tale, and Mr. Rosevelt, who still held her hand, was sensible of it, and wondered what it could all mean.

He had not a suspicion that Lord Carrol and the handsome young artist whom he so admired were one and the same, but he knew that something must be very wrong to move Star so and make her look so deathly white.

"You look astonished," Mrs. Richards said, "and well you may, and your surprise will increase when I have told you all."

"I am sure," he answered, glancing from one to the other, "that there must be some mistake."

"There is no mistake," replied his niece, coldly, and fixing a merciless glance upon Star, "for Lord Carrol has just had an interview with my husband, during which he told him the whole story. He says his first meeting with Stella was caused by an accident, and that she appeared so bright and intelligent that whenever he met her afterward he spoke with her and treated her kindly. He did not even have the least idea where she lived until tonight, after dinner. He went out for a quiet smoke, when she presented herself before him, accused him of coming here as Josephine's lover, and denounced him as a traitor in the strongest terms and most unmaidenly manner, and telling him, greatly to his surprise, that she was an inmate of the house where he was a visitor. Of course, after such a denouement, he could do no other way than to seek Mr. Richards and explain everything, lest this rash girl should, out of a spirit of revenge and disappointment, destroy all his prospects with Josephine."

It was a cunningly distorted story, and Star, as she listened to it, bowed her head and covered her face with her hands, while a low cry of despair broke from her lips.

She had not dreamed that the man whom she had learned to love, who, with his open, handsome face, his frank, manly ways, had won her deepest respect, her strongest affections, could be guilty of so cowardly an act as to betray her thus.

And yet he must have done so, else how could Mrs. Richards have known anything about the matter?

Yes, without doubt, he had feared that she would openly denounce him before the family where he had so unexpectedly found her, and so had given this version of the great wrong that he had done her in order to shield himself.

His own prospects of winning the rich heiress must not be interferred with, so he adopted this coup d'etat of going to Mrs. Richards and, with apparent frankness, confessing that his trifling attention to a silly girl had resulted in leading her to believe she had won a wealthy and titled husband.

This was ju[st] Mrs. Richards had wished to make St[ar] and she succeeded only too well, for t[he] as well-nigh crushed to the earth [with] ame, and humiliation, and wounde[d]

And ye[t] felt that Archibald Sherbrook[e] ot think of him in any other cha[r]en guilty of a most cowardly ap[pe]t, had steeped his soul in sin by [the] art to break it, and thus ruining [her] she loved him still.

(CONTINUED.)

Get The Book FREE! If you would like to read the whole of this wonderful story at once and learn its thrilling conclusion, rather than wait for the monthly installments as they appear in COMFORT, we shall be glad to make you a present of the complete story in book form. Send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, and we will send you a copy of the book free and postpaid.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

The sole meaning of life is to serve humanity by contributing to the kingdom of God, which can be done only by the recognition of the worth of every man.—Tolstoi.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30.)

and gyp water being unfit to drink. People use cisterns and dig stock tanks and when these dry up, haul water for miles.

A sister, MRS. P. E. BOSWELL.

NORFOLK, NEBR.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I'm sure you are all at home this time for it is only 7.30 A. M. and you must be unless you are more ambitious than I am.

I have wasted(?) one precious "wash" hour, reading the Sisters' Corner, and forgot to put the lights out. Now can you beat that? Pearl Vesey was what attracted me, otherwise my washing would have been out an hour earlier.

I am very happy today for tomorrow brings my dear old mother to me and I am so glad. I haven't seen her for ten months. I said old, didn't I? No, she isn't old, mothers never should be, even if they are seventy-five. They may feel so but we should make them feel young. My brother is forty-two, with curly black hair and big brown eyes that are full of fun and bubbling over with laughter, and love, and—well that describes her exactly.

I have never found a letter from this part of Nebraska.

Do I have to describe myself? I am twenty-three years old, five feet, nine inches tall, 230 pounds weight, black stringy hair, small eyes, brown, and worse yet, I wear a number nine shoe and am a full-blooded Irish-woman, that is, what isn't some other nationality.

Now I must make a bed for mother. She can't sleep on my hard couch, and I've just enough room for Daddy and me and three-year-old Billie.

Love to all, SARA.

TAMPA, 2903—9th St., FLA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Have you room in your corner for an old, but silent sister? I have been reading COMFORT for most twenty-five years, and am lost if I miss a copy.

I am from way down in sunny Florida, although I was born and raised in the North (Minnesota). This is a beautiful part of the country and I shall try to tell you about Tampa, Florida, which is the county seat of Hillsboro County, on Tampa Bay, at the mouth of the Hillsboro River, and on the Atlantic Coast Line and Sea Board Air Line Railroads. The city has an attractive location and a healthful climate, and it is a popular winter resort. Special features of interest are the De Soto Park, where the U. S. Volunteers camped during the Spanish-American War; a very large winter resort hotel, the Tampa Bay Hotel, and during the winter the city furnishes free light and water to all tourists who wish to camp at De Soto Park, on condition they do not work while camping there. Last year there must have been fully two or three hundred machines at the park.

Large quantities of phosphate, fruits, vegetables, turpentine, rosin, lumber, fish and cattle are exported, while the city is second only to New York in the importation of tobacco. Cigar making is the principal industry. The raw material comes chiefly from Havana and the work is done largely by Spanish and Cuban immigrants.

Little Sister sure has the right idea in regards to girls keeping company. Always make your children's friends welcome in the home, and in that way you see who and what they are. I am a stepmother of four children, and everyone said, "No, don't marry him with all those kids, for you will never be happy," but I listened to my own heart, and married him just the same. Of course we have little troubles once in a while, but please show me a couple that doesn't. There are three girls, 18-16-9, and one boy 13 years old. The oldest girl has been married six months and the next one has boys' company, but she brings them to the house and if they are to take her any place, they call at the house for her. She also writes to several and I see the letters she receives and I advise her never to put anything on paper she would be ashamed for all the world to see.

Never make children a promise you cannot keep, for they hold them in remembrance. I am speaking from my own experience. I really believe the children love me most as well as they did their own dear mother whom they lost.

If any stepmother needs help and I can give her some, just write me. One thing I will advise, don't marry a man with children unless you love children for there is a lot to put up with until you win their love, for many will criticize a stepmother, let her do her very best.

I shall be glad to hear from any who care to write to me.

With best wishes to Mrs. Wilkinson and the Sisters' Corner,
MRS. M. T. HAYNES.

HOPPER, MINN.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I have been an interested reader of COMFORT for over eleven years.

Country Lassie, in October issue, I agree with what Mrs. Wilkinson says and cannot add any more to that. Go out among people, be friendly and nice. If you cannot meet people of your own age at home, leave home for a while and visit some relative or find work with some good people. Take up church work and join the young people's society of some church. Keep busy and cheerful and read up on the most interesting of today's subjects.

I am twenty-four years old, five feet, four inches tall and weigh 147 pounds. Have brown hair and hazel eyes. My birthday was January 5th.

I would like to correspond with someone who can read, write and speak French. I have studied the language and want to learn more. I did not get as much education as I wanted before I had to make my own living so now I am going to a night school to make up for what I have lost.

I live two miles from Virginia, Minn. It is an attractively laid out city, with level streets and beautiful trees. There are two good parks and in summer band concerts are given there.

The largest white pine sawmill is located in Virginia. There are several churches and schools.

I have lived in the West also and cannot forget that beautiful country, although I like the East. I lived in Idaho for five years and about that long in Montana. The West needs more churches and more real interested workers to start Sunday schools and Sunday services. There are many good churches there as we all know but many people cannot go to church because they live too far away. Some of the children do not go to Sunday school at all and in many instances do not get any religious training at home. We lived in a neighborhood that had no church.

With all good wishes, MRS. CARRIE VERT.

WATSON, ARK.

DEAR COMFORTERS:

Father Time and Mrs. Wilkinson bid me be brief, therefore I will get down to business.

Miss Hudson, you prevent whispering just as you prevent other misbehavior. There are many ways to promote good behavior in children. Try a Better Deportment Club.

Who was it that wanted to know how to keep onions from rotting? The secret lies in harvesting at the proper time. They should be pulled as soon as they are matured and they are matured as soon as the base of the stem becomes soft and pliable and inclined to bend over, even if the top is green. The dew and rain will soak through the top of the onion and the hot sun fairly cooks them. Pull them, hang by their stems in bunches or scatter on the floor of a cool, well ventilated room and leave them until danger of freezing.

Will some sister send me August, 1921 COMFORT. Write first.

Mrs. W., were you responsible for those delicious pickle recipes in the September issue? If so, I wish to thank you; they are just what I have been wanting. A friend of mine makes an excellent plum sweet pickle. Want her recipe?

Cordially, ETHEL PLANTS.

Ethel Plants.—If my recipes pleased you I am very glad. Of course I want the recipe and as many more as you care to send.—Ed.

Best Ways of Doing Things Around the Home

When eggs are scarce use a tablespoonful of cornstarch in place of one egg.

If a teaspoonful of cold water is added to the white of an egg it will whip easier.

When in need of a substitute for rubber sheeting, use new oilcloth.

When pressing woolen goods, spread a newspaper over the material instead of cloth and there will be no lint to brush off.

Heat the knife before cutting fresh bread.—MRS. MARGUERITE P. SCHLEGEL, Lenhartsville, Pa.

Here are a few laundry helps:

Soak ink stains in sour milk.

Soak blood stains in salt water, wash in warm water with soap, then boil.

For grass stains, saturate the spot with kerosene, then wash in usual way.

For iron rust, soak in lemon juice, sprinkle with salt and let remain in sun for several hours.

Soak tea or coffee stains in cold water, wring, spread out and pour a few drops of glycerine on each spot, let stand several hours. Wash with cold water and soap.

For mildew, soak for several hours in very weak solution of chloride of lime and rinse in cold water. —EULA DAVIS, Heidelberg, Miss.

Old lace curtains, cut in squares and folded several times and stitched, make fine dish-cloths.—OLD GIRL OF MARYLAND.

Put spools on nails if you are to hang clothing on them. This prevents tearing.—MRS. LLOYD GARRETT, Okanogan, Wash.

Paint the inside of your closets with white paint or paper with light paper and you can find things easier.

Make strings of whole cloves and hang in your clothes closet to keep moths away.—ANNA HOGAN, Choctaw, Oklahoma.

When your black kid gloves lose their color and become rusty at the finger-tips, the color may be restored by adding a few drops of black ink to a teaspoonful of olive oil and applying it with a small brush.—BLUE EYES, Reynolds Station, Ky.

To prevent baby from falling out of high-chair, make a belt with shoulder straps; sew two long strips to front of belt to pass between baby's legs, under the seat and fasten to back of belt, not too close together. This allows freedom of movement but prevents standing up or falling out.—MRS. F. C. WARKENTON, Winton, Calif.

The mother who makes her little girl's bloomers may find this idea helpful. Attach an old stocking leg to lower part of bloomer rather than finishing it with an elastic band, as the stocking keeps out cold and adds warmth below the knee, and does not bind as elastic does. Stretch the leg of the stocking to fit the leg of bloomer when sewing it on. It won't rip off and yet it will fit perfectly.—MRS. D. F. EVANS, Moorhead, Ia.

Requests

How to clean a velour coat.

Poems: "The Big Out Doors," and "The Mother of a Soldier."

Wanted: Quilt pattern called "Broken Wheel." —MRS. N. M. TAYLOR, Weatherford, Texas.

Will someone please send me directions for waving switches.—MRS. ELIZABETH BEST, Willard, R. R. 2, Mo.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 41.)

Stay Awake After Eating

Give Your Stomach Help With A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet And Noon Day Meals Won't Bother.

Many people are so afraid of drowsiness after eating that they skip meals or eat so little they are undernourished. Such stomachs merely need the help of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The sense of fullness is relieved and there is no acid effect, no gassiness, no heartburn. Digestion proceeds without those peculiar pressures and sensations of indigestion and you soon learn to forget your stomach provided you do not forget Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Get a 60 cent box today of any druggist and note how much better you feel after eating.

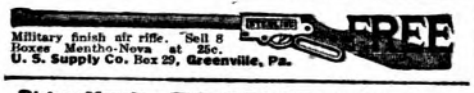
Works Like a Clock
HILL'S CASCARA QUININE BROMIDE
Cures Colds in 24 Hours
STANDARD remedy world over. Tablet form. Use at first suggestion of Cold or La Grippe and avoid illness. Demand red box bearing Mr. Hill's portrait and signature.
At Druggists—30 Cents
W. H. HILL CO., DETROIT
CASCARA QUININE

CHURCH ORGANS
Any size or style shipped for 30 days free trial. Price so low and terms so easy that no Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society need be without a sweet-toned, resonant, durable, highest grade organ. My organs won highest prize at St. Louis World's Fair and National Conservation Exposition. Fifty yeas guarantee. Send postal for big, free book of all styles of organs for homes, Churches, Sunday Schools, etc.
C. L. ADLER, Pres., ADLER ORGAN CO.,
2399 W Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky.

FROST-PROOF CABBAGE PLANTS FIELD HARDENED,
Can be set six weeks before home-grown plants, and will head 4 weeks earlier. Early Jersey and Charleston Wakefield, Copenhagen Market, Succession, Flat Dutch. Prices: 500 for $1.50; 1000 for $2.50, postpaid. By express, $1.50 per 1000. Special prices on large lots.
Piedmont Plant Co., Box B-1, Albany, Ga.

50¢ FOR YOUR OLD BELT
AN UNUSUAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER
Save you money
Write today for particulars
CALIFORNIA LEATHER PRODUCTS CO.,
630 Luckenbach Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.



FREE

This is a well-made violin, and is popular model of medium size. It is finely proportioned and well finished. Body is well arched from the center with ample depth from the bridge. Flamed maple back and sides to match. It is a beauty. We send it complete, bow, rosin, etc., FULL INSTRUCTIONS how to play, for selling only 30 packages of Post Cards at 10c per pack. We trust you. Just write to
Jones Mfg. Co., Dept. 100, Attleboro, Mass.

Prepaid 10 YEAR GUARANTEE Watch and Ring GIVEN
We positively give a genuine Stem Wind, Stem Set Watch, Beautifully Engraved Case, guaranteed time-keeper, for selling only 25 of our Large, Beautifully Colored Art and Religious Pictures at 10c each. Order 25 pictures. We trust you. When sold, return money collected, and this Watch and Handsome Stone Set Ring are yours. It's easy our way.
GAIR MFG. CO. 1925 Sunnyside Ave. Dept. 101 CHICAGO

SCHOOL BOX FREE

with Fountain Pen, Pencils, Knife, Pen Holder, Eraser, for selling 10 packages Bluine at 15c a pckg. Write today.
BLUINE MFG. CO., 562 Milf St., Concord Junction, Mass.

Military finish air rifle. Sell 8 Boxes Mentho-Nova at 25c.
U. S. Supply Co. Box 29, Greenville, Pa.

Dialogs, Monologs, Musical Comedies and Revues, Minstrel Opening Choruses, Darky Plays. Catalog Free.
PLAYS
Vaudeville Acts
How to Stage a Play
Make-up Goods
T. S. DENISON & CO., 623 So. Wabash, Dept. 8 CHICAGO

CIVIL SERVICE Courses for Clerk-Carrier, Rural Carrier, Ry. Mail Clerk, P. M., etc. Unexcelled $15 courses only $6. Sample lesson, illus. catalog FREE.
CIVIL SERVICE CORRES. SCHOOL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

MONEY $ For Wise Men. Key for stamp. E. Kerste, Box 289, Ottawa, Ill.

CARDS, Dice, Magic Goods, Novelties. Catalog Free. D. M. SMYTHE Co., Newark, Mo.

Comfort's Information Bureau

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT subscribers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions addressed to this Bureau. They will thus save time, labor and postage.

No attention will be given any inquiry which lacks the sender's full name and address but we will print only initials if so requested.

MRS. E. B. A., Raymond, Calif.—The inscription you quote is meant to give the impression that your violin was produced in Cremona, Italy, in the year 1736, as the handiwork of Antonius Stradivarius. We are sorry to tell you that we very much doubt the truth of this interior marking of your instrument. As we have often stated in this column, there has developed a considerable trade in the making of fraudulent "old violins." Such inscriptions as the one you mention are inserted to deceive credulous buyers. By the slow hand processes of the ancient masters of violin-making, but a comparatively few instruments were made during a maker's lifetime, and experts declare that there are only some thirty-odd authenticated Strads in existence at this date. Yet every month brings to us inquiries from COMFORT readers who have violins which contain markings which, if genuine, would indicate that their instruments were decidedly valuable. Only an expert could pass upon the value of your violin after inspection and trial.

MISS L. S., Alabama.—There would be no premium on a Mexican silver dollar such as you describe.

MRS. J. H. A., Richmond, Ky.—Wash your fox skin well with warm soap and water, and have all fat and fleshy matter carefully scraped off with a dull knife. Then soak the hide in a liquid made by dissolving four quarts of wheat bran, two cups of salt, a cup of soft soap, and half an ounce of borax in five gallons of cold soft water. Leave the skin in this solution for eight or ten hours or until thoroughly soft. At the end of a day, coat the flesh side of the skin with a mixture made from an ounce of sal soda, a half-ounce of borax and two ounces of hard white soap. These can be melted slowly together without allowing them to boil. Leave the skin in a warm place for another day and then dissolve eight ounces of salt, four ounces of alum and two ounces of saleratus in enough hot water to saturate your fox skin. Do not have hot enough to scald, and soak the skin in this solution for twelve hours. Wring out and dry. Work the skin over a rounded beam until soft and pliable and the inside can also be smoothed if necessary with fine sandpaper and pumice-stone. We hesitate to advise you to attempt the mounting of the feet and head of a fox skin so that it might be used as a scarf. Anything of this sort badly done produces a result horrible to behold. Skill in such mounting of animal heads can only be gained by practice and first results are apt to be hopeless. We do not think you need to fear to send this skin away for mounting and making into a scarf and see no reason why you could not mark it so that you would be sure to receive the same skin back again.

E. L., Nebraska.—All copper two-cent pieces of our coinage are worth a small premium when the coins are in good condition. This premium runs from fifteen cents to $1.50 according to year and condition. A five-cent piece of 1868 is not quoted at a premium. You do not state of what nation's mintage is your silver penny of 1859. We think you must be mistaken in the denomination of this coin.

MARY LOU, Miss.—A girl of twenty-four who has had no experience in ways of city living does not face an easy problem in situating herself in a large town and endeavoring to find work that will support her. The fact that you have an "unfinished" education and no specific training makes your task the more difficult. We do not recommend that you make such a move unless you can first do it under the kindly guardianship of friends who are now living in the city or who will go there with you. You must remember that when you face a great city for work, you confront the competition of many experienced and trained workers in all lines and trades who are already located there. The employment bureaus maintained by the Y. W. C. A. in the larger cities would be of aid to you, we think. Of course, there are many things which inexperienced workers can do, but they are paid inexperienced pay—which does not always buy experienced food, lodging and clothing.

A. D. C., New Rayner, Colo.—We cannot tell you where you can purchase an instrument that will "locate money and other treasure." We have stated in this column many times that devices which may be sold for this purpose are necessarily fraudulent. Money which is located at the end of an eight- or ten-hour day of honest work is that best worth divining. Why seek something for nothing? This is being done by those who sell "divining rods".

M. J., Calhoun, Ga.—Write to the Register of Copyrights, Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., and ask for a copyright application and particulars concerning securing copyright. These will be promptly sent you. 2) The most profitable way for an author to handle a manuscript of novel length is to sell it to a magazine as a serial, retaining at the same time rights to publish in book form and also motion picture rights.

MRS. O. C. B., Decatur, Ill.—Here is a quick and simple method of tanning your rabbit skin: Tack it flesh side up on a smooth board, using tacks that will not rust and stain the skin. First wash with a solution of common salt and then go over the surface with a wash made of two and one-half ounces of powdered alum dissolved in a pint of warm water. Repeat this washing for three days and then, after the skin is dry, remove the tacks and soften the tanned hide by drawing it backward and forward through a smooth ring, or working it over a rounded piece of wood. Rabbit skins are tender and must be carefully handled to avoid tearing.

H. D. C., San Antonio, Texas.—Gold bullion of U. S. Mint standard firmness is worth $20.67 an ounce. The Federal Government would pay no one to engage in a search for treasure which may have been buried in old days by Spaniards or early Texans. If you can discover a hunk of gold whose ownership cannot be ascertained and to which no claimant appears, it will be yours without any interference from Washington. Our Treasury is well supplied with yellow metal and does not need to lay claim to ancient Spanish bullion.

MRS. J. T. W., Star Junction, Pa.—It is only well-known and successful writers of popular songs who are able to get their efforts accepted on a royalty basis by song publishers. You are a beginner, and no house of music publishers will go to the expense of getting out a song whose selling qualities are doubtful, unless a payment is made which will protect the publishers against loss. However, if you undertake to pay yourself for the publication of this song, you should have quoted to you in the beginning what will be the complete expense to you for a certain number of copies. We are sorry that we must say we do not think the song you send us has sufficient popular appeal to make it sell, and we believe if you wish it published that you will have to do this at your own expense.

MRS. J. B. G., Kalamazoo, Mich.—Mrs. Eleanor Hodgman Porter, the popular author who was best known, perhaps, by her "Pollyanna" stories, died in 1920. Her books came out under the imprint of several publishers. One of her last works, "Pollyanna Grows Up," was published by the Page Company, Boston, Mass., in 1920. Houghton Mifflin Company of the same city issued her novel, "Oh, Money! Money!" You live in a good-sized city, and anyone of your local bookshops should be able to get for you any novel by Mrs. Porter you may wish to order.

F. C., Martinsville, Va.—By dredging operations a minimum depth of nine feet at low water has been obtained in the Mississippi River from Cairo, Ill., to Vicksburg, Miss. From there on no dredging has been required. From Baton Rouge to New Orleans the big river has a depth of thirty-five feet. From New Orleans to the Quarantine Station this increases to 62 feet; and from this Station on out to the Gulf waters the depth is about thirty feet through either the South or the Southwest Pass.

The Modern Farmer

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

for different districts and for the several kinds of orchard trees grown in these districts, but for almost all one treatment is advised sometime during early spring before the leaves appear. Each year we receive "rush calls" for spray mixture recipes and instructions; for that reason we offer the following, knowing that we will be asked for them later if we do not:

BORDEAUX MIXTURE: Consists of four pounds of copper sulphate (bluestone), five pounds quicklime and 50 gallons of water. Dissolve copper sulphate in a pail of hot water; the lime in cold water in a separate vessel, and stir until it forms a rich even cream. Pour each separately into barrels half filled, straining through a sieve of fine mesh to keep out lumps. Stir constantly while using, or use a sprayer with an agitator attachment that really works. Make Bordeaux fresh each time it is needed, as it loses strength rapidly on standing for any length of time. To make Bordeaux that will adhere to smooth surfaces, such as scale-infested bark, rosin is added as follows: Melt five pounds of rosin with one pound of fish oil, then add one pound of soda lye as the rosin cools. Stir slowly into five gallons of water. Use as needed by adding two gallons to each 50 gallons of the ordinary Bordeaux mixture described above.

LIME-SULPHUR: Is made with eight to 10 pounds of unslaked lime, an equal amount of flowers of sulphur and 50 gallons of water. Place lime in a barrel, almost cover with water, and when it begins to slake add the sulphur which has previously been crushed and screened to remove lumps. Stir constantly, adding water to form a thick paste. Gradually thin the paste by adding more water as slaking proceeds. When the lime is well slaked, add more water to prevent further boiling or overcooking. When the mixture is cooled off it is ready to be strained into the spray tank, diluted to the required strength, and used.

Steam Sterilization of Starting Beds

This practice is particularly suited to the first step in tobacco growing, but is adapted to disease prevention, weed eradication and insect control in starting frames used for other crops such as young garden truck. As generally employed in tobacco regions, the process consists of running live steam under pressure into a shallow pan inverted over the bed. The soil, preferably new land, is thoroughly worked and leveled ready for seeding. A galvanized iron pan, usually six feet by eight to 12 feet and about six inches deep, is placed upside-down over the bed and forced down into the ground until it fits snugly enough to keep the steam inside. Steam is then forced into the pan through a hose or pipe from a portable boiler or from an ordinary steam threshing engine. The temperature is maintained at about 180 degrees for an hour or more. The pan is then moved and the process repeated until the whole bed has been treated. Tobacco growers figure that one rod of bed six feet wide will supply enough plants to plant an acre, and figure the size of the area treated according to this rule. Steam sterilization is effective in controlling such diseases as root rot; it also kills most of the weed seeds contained in the soil, making the tedious task of weeding unnecessary. Moreover, it does away with any insects or insect eggs which may have lived over winter in the soil. Since the operation is comparatively simple, can be done at a great saving in labor and expense later in the season, and at a relatively small cost to the farmer, it is a practice that is highly recommended and rapidly growing in popularity. There is no reason why it should not be used for many purposes besides the preparation of tobacco beds.

Colony Houses, New or Repaired

Whether spring pigs will arrive in March or May, depending on region or the preference of the owner, makes little difference so far as the colony houses are concerned. We have learned by experience that if they are not put in order before the rush of spring work commences, or if new and much-needed ones are not built about this time, they are quite likely to be forgotten for the remainder of the season. As we have said before, now is the time.

In the first place, let us say that any kind of an individual movable colony house for the sow and pigs is far preferable to none at all. But each of the more common types, such as the Iowa gable roof, the wigwam type, and the ordinary A-type house, have some special feature that is highly desirable. We will not attempt to give the plans and specifications of each style of house, for these can readily be secured by asking for free bulletins from your state agricultural experiment station.

Here are a few suggestions that we have found well worth while: Fit each colony house with skids or "runners" made of 4-4 inch lumber rounded up slightly at the end. These make it easy to move the house from place to place with a tea hitched to a ring-bolt in the base-timbers. Fit one side of the roof to open with hinges like a door; the doors when open provide outside shade, and a glassed sash set in the opening will keep out rain. The sloping sides of a portable house provide protection for young pigs, preventing them from being crushed by the sow. Colony houses supply fresh air and exercise, reduce the dangers of disease, and make it possible to provide green pasture as needed. By the way, in selecting the site for the colony houses, it is well to locate them to the eastward or to the northeast of the main farm buildings, in this way avoiding the objectionable odors which arise from the premises of swine in warm weather. As a profitable and labor-saving way of handling brood sows and their litters, the colony house cannot be improved upon. Therefore the farmer will find it worth his while to put his old ones in good condition or to build new ones while he has time for the job.

Spring Care of Pastures and Cows

Farmers who persist in turning their cattle out to pasture as soon as the new grass begins to show in the spring are "short changing" themselves in several ways, though they may not realize it. First, pastures cannot long stand this kind of treatment; second, cows are certain to suffer from the sudden change. Spared

If pastures get a "square deal" I made spring they will stand midsummer drought week I amply asing until

(CONTINUED ON PAGE

Sale!
Fashion's Smartest Creation "Cleopatra" Sandals only $1.85 Postpaid

Very Stylish
Your money refunded if you wish it.
An up-to-the-minute style, surpassing in beauty and artistic appearance any other offering of the season. Made of rich patent leather, lustrous black satin or kid finished leather with flexible leather soles and stylish Cuban heels. Strap fastens with dainty buckle. Rush your order NOW—don't miss this great bargain. Quality and style cannot be duplicated elsewhere under $3.00. Send only $1.85 or if you prefer send no money in advance—just pay your postman when the parcel arrives. We will cheerfully return your money if you are not more than pleased.
Order Brown Leather 6C27. Black Leather 6C28.
Order Patent Leather 6C30. Black Satin 6C31.
Sizes 2½ to 7. Widths D and E.
Price, delivered free..... $1.85
Boston Store Chicago Ill.
STATE MADISON & DEARBORN STREETS

SENT TO YOU
FREE
An astonishing offer. Seize it quickly. MUSIC WITHOUT NOTES! A sensational success. Over 300,000 people now play piano by this wonderful new EASY FORM MUSIC; even young children learn quickly. Here is your opportunity. Don't miss it.
PLAY PIANO or Organ In ONE HOUR
Simple as a-b-c. No teacher required. No correspondence lessons by mail. No knowledge of note music required. This remarkable book, sent FREE on trial, contains ONE HUNDRED of the world's most famous vocal and instrumental selections printed in EASY FORM MUSIC. Send no money.
PLAY PIANO NEW WAY
If you don't learn in five days to play not merely one but SEVERAL popular pieces, send it back; no obligations whatsoever. Or, if you wish to keep the book, pay only 6½c each for the selections—special half price offer to those who write at once. No extra charges of any kind. Complete course of easy instructions free with the book. Be sure to tell us how many white keys on your piano or organ. Send a postal NOW.
EASY METHOD MUSIC CO., 304 Clarkson Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

Army Denim Worksuit 98¢

Jumper and Overall Pants POST PAID
A wonderful bargain for you. Bought direct from U.S. Government. These U. S. Army reclaimed denim work suits consisting of jumper and overall pants are thoroughly laundered, sterilized, sanitary—restored to good wearing condition—will give months of satisfactory wear.
Send No Money
Order several suits. Give size, name, address. Pay postman 98c for each suit on arrival. Denim hats, 25c. Money back if not satisfactory.
IRVING SALES CORP. Dept. A-11 1800 N. Main St. St. Louis
Successors to Republic Army Equipment Stores.
FREE Send for new 48 page catalogue containing hundreds of Bargains.

Catch Fish Eels, Mink and Muskrat in large quantities with our new, folding, galvanized Steel-Wire-Trap.
It catches them like a fly-trap catches flies. All sizes. Made strong and durable. Write for Price list and our FREE trap offer; and interesting booklet on best bait ever discovered for attracting all kinds of fish. Agents wanted.
WALTON SUPPLY CO., K-12, ST. LOUIS, MO.

MAILED FREE

110 ACTUAL WALL PAPER SAMPLES
THIS old reliable wall paper house announces to its thousands of friends a bigger opportunity than ever to buy high grade wall paper hangings at Factory-to-You Prices
World's largest selection—a grand assortment
4¢ 5¢ 6¢ 7¢ 10¢ per roll and up
Our Guarantee: Your money returned including transportation charges both ways, if our wall paper is not entirely satisfactory.
Write today for free book of samples.
Independent Wall Paper Co.
Dept. W Pittsburgh, Pa., U. S. A.
Over 400,000 Satisfied Customers

ADLER
NO MONEY IN ADVANCE
Organ Offer

Saves You 48.75

Your Own Time to Pay

My 30-Day Free Trial—No Money Down Offer—Breaking All Records.

Greatest Offer Ever Made

The value of an Adler Organ in your own home can never be measured in dollars and cents. Because I want every family to know the elevating power and the delights of sweet organ music, I have originated the wonderful Adler plan of selling organs which has made the "Adler" a household word—more than 100,000 of these famous organs are in the homes of the people. Send today for big, handsomely illustrated Free Organ Catalog. Learn how you can have the World's Best Organ—winners of highest prize at St. Louis World's Fair, also winners of first Medals at National Conservation Exposition, Knoxville, Tenn., 1913, and at the Jamestown Exposition—sent to your home without paying a cent for a

FREE 30-Day Trial

Have it a month free—if it does not prove all I claim—just ship it back to me—and your trial doesn't cost you a single penny.

Easy Small Payments
No Burden
No Interest
No Collectors

Send no money until you decide to buy. Then pay me at your convenience, in small amounts. If, at the end of a year, the "Adler" fails to make good on every claim, I will refund every dollar you have paid me. The Adler is the World's Best Organ at the very lowest price ever made before.

50-Year Guarantee!

I can and will save you $48.75 because I sell direct from the $1,000,000 Adler Organ Factory (greatest in existence) at lowest wholesale factory prices. And I prove it by sending the Adler on free trial. Judge for yourself at my risk.

Mail Coupon Today!

Send No Money

C. L. Adler, Pres.
Adler Mfg. Co.,
2398 W. Chestnut St., Louisville, Ky.
Send me—FREE—your wonderful Organ Book.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

This Beautiful Sleeping Doll FREE

You can have this Beautiful Doll. She has closing eyes, movable arms and legs, turning head, real hair. Dressed as you see her in this picture. Dress can be taken off and put on. She also wears socks and baby bonnet. We will send her free, all charges paid, for selling 15 packs of Post Cards at 10c per pack.

Jones Manufacturing Co.,
Dept. 129, Attleboro, Mass.

BIG VALUE for 10 Cts.

6 Songs, words and music; 25 Pictures Pretty Girls; 40 Ways to Make Money; 1 Joke Book; 1 Book on Love; 1 Magic Book; 1 Book Letter Writing; 1 Dream Book and Fortune Teller; 1 Cook Book; 1 Base Ball Book, gives rules for games; 1 Toy Maker Book; Language of Flowers; 1 Morse Telegraph Alphabet; 12 Chemical Experiments; Magic Age Table; Great North Pole Game; 100 Conundrums; 3 Puzzles; 12 Games; 30 Verses for Autograph Albums. All the above by mail for 10 cts. and 3 cts. postage.
ROYAL SALES CO., Box 522, South Norwalk, Conn.

All this jewelry is yours for selling only 6 Boxes Mentho-Nova at 25 cts. Needed in every household. Sells easily. Order today. When sold return $1.50 and all 6 pieces are yours.
U. S. SUPPLY CO., Box 329, Greenville, Pa.

WRIST WATCH GIVEN

Dandy Wrist Watch guaranteed 5 years given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10 cts. each. Order 20, when sold send the $2.00 and choose wrist watch or other valuable prize according to big list sent with pictures. RAYART CO., Dept. 18, Chicago

LARGE EASTMAN CAMERA & MAGAZINE FOR A YEAR FREE

Camera takes pictures 2¼x3¼. Also very interesting, instructive monthly Photo Magazine, for a whole year. Camera and Magazine are yours for selling only 25 large colored Pictures or 35 packages fancy Post Cards at 10 cents. Order your choice of Pictures or Post Cards. Extra Gift for promptness so write TODAY.
GATES MFG. CO. DEPT 325 CHICAGO

ACCORDION FREE!

Musical instrument that you can derive a great deal of pleasure from. You will be proud to have this accordion. Just write for 30 packs Post Cards to sell for 10 cts. We trust you.
Jones Mfg. Co., Dept. 115, Attleboro, Mass.

MOVIE MACHINE FREE
HAVE YOUR OWN "MOVIE"

Genuine American Moving Picture Machine complete with film, given free for selling 30 sets Colored Postcards at 10 cts. a set. You can earn money giving shows at your own home. Write today.
COLUMBIA NOVELTY CO., Dept. 658 East Boston, Mass.

Skin Like Velvet—Cheeks Like The Rose. Non-injurious home-made rouge. Simple, two ingredients. Make it yourself. Receipe 25c.
ROSE-MARY, 4404 S. Oakley Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In writing this department always sign your true name and give your address; if not, your letter will receive no attention. Name will not be published.

MARCH is such a busy, housecleaning month that I nearly forgot my family of girls. You didn't know that I had to clean house? Of course I have to. Old maids must live somewhere, you know, and a home is a home, even without a husband. While I was having a glorious soapsudsy time I wondered how many of my girls helped their mothers when housecleaning time came around? Every mother's daughter of you, I hope. Don't worry about your hands. A little cold cream will make them look as well as before but nothing in the world can give you back your mother, once she is taken from you.

A WYOMING CHICKEN.—Maybe it isn't proper for a girl to go to the door and talk for a few minutes to her sweetheart when he is leaving, but they've always done it and I suppose they always will. I wouldn't take that privilege from them for all the world, even if I could. You see, I wasn't always an old maid and I can remember certain summer nights, a vine-shaded porch and a moon and—father's cough through the open window that meant it was time for me to come into the house. Ah me, if I had a sweetheart now we'd have to go out on the fire escape if we wanted to look at the moon, and if I were to accompany him to the door of the apartment house where I am living at present, we'd disturb the other tenants by our talking and I'd get reported to the janitor. And there wouldn't be a bit of privacy, either. You didn't know I was such a sentimental, soft-hearted old thing, did you? Well, I am, so I can't scold you, but don't stay too long.

RUTH, W. Va.—I can't force you to obey your foster mother if the care she has given you amounts to so little to you that you have no desire to obey. I don't know how you feel about it, but if I had been adopted by a kind woman and given a good home, instead of being left in an Orphan's Home or with people who might have been unkind to me, I'd be so grateful that I'd want to do everything just as she wished it. In time, doubtless, she will allow you more freedom but now she regards you as the little friendless girl she took years ago, and she wants to care for you now just as she did then. Be a good sport, she was.

E. G., Minnesota.—Giving a fictitious name was merely a girlish prank and he should regard it as such when you tell him the truth, and not feel that you deliberately deceived him. If his love isn't big enough to overlook such a trifle then you don't want it or him either. Tell him yourself, though, and don't let him learn the truth from some well-meaning(?) friend.

ME, Ohio.—If I hadn't passed through the note-writing stage myself I might not be able to sympathize with the girl you mention, but she'll get over it and be none the worse for the experience, but I do hope she will be careful as to what she writes (See Troubled, Oregon). She has splendid ideas along all other lines. There should be plenty of opportunities for her to become acquainted with her schoolmates, and one in particular, and if he is interested he will make the opportunities. Don't accept so much candy; once in a while is all right. Too much candy is bad for the digestion and complexion; besides, it does terrible things to his pocketbook.

M. O., Tennessee.—My dear girl, if he really loved you he would believe you and not make such an unreasonable demand as proof of your purity. Next time he mentions it tell him you don't give a darn whether he believes in you or not and ask him if he considers himself morally fit to judge you or any other girl and then tell him to go chase himself. Not elegant but forceful. Don't take him back unless he humbly asks forgiveness and maybe you'd better not, even then. His youth is the only mitigating thing about this offence. Were he older he'd know better. Don't bother with him, you have plenty of time in which to meet real men, for they still exist, though not plentiful.

V. B., La.—What in the world is the matter with the parents of the girl that write to me. Here's a fine pair that want to marry their sixteen-year-old daughter to a blind man of middle age, just because he has money. She says she can't afford to say "No", but I don't see how she can afford to say "Yes". Of course, I don't know the circumstances, but it seems you are justified in disobeying them.

IDA, Virginia.—Of course I think that love comes before riches, but I can't imagine a sensible girl, such as you seem to be, loving a man of twenty-seven who drinks and smokes but has no money. Perhaps if he hadn't drank he might not be so poor now. Unless a man has pretty much wasted his life and opportunities he should be established in business or in line for something worth while by the time he is that age. Furthermore, if he were the right kind he'd work hard in every way to make himself worthy of you and in time gain the approval of your parents, instead of selfishly and cowardly asking you to elope with him. You are too young to marry now, anyway; but if he makes good in two or three years, and you still love him then, marriage ought not to be the mistake it would be now. The fact that he once drank and smoked should not be held against him then if he has stopped, particularly the drinking of intoxicating liquors, home brew included. I don't approve of smoking but at the same time I don't condemn a reasonable amount of it. It is much better to "do something desperate" now, as you fear you will because of your parents' objection to this marriage, than to marry him and really do something desperate. You are too pretty and clever to throw yourself away on him when there are plenty of regular fellows in the world. Take my advice and see if you aren't glad of it.

Z. Y. X., Tennessee.—Does your mother approve of your marriage? She understands home conditions only too well, and I think you'd better talk things over with her.

V. F. B., Nebraska.—Bless you, my children—that means I give my consent.

TROUBLED, Oregon.—I hope by this time you have recovered the papers that were taken from you. It was extremely dishonorable of your friend to take them and equally dishonorable of those who read them. You are fortunate inasmuch as you have learned "never to put on paper anything I'd be ashamed to have read in public." That's a good motto for everybody to follow, but older and wiser people than you have yet to learn it, and some of them never do. The newspapers would lose a lot of s[illegible] reading if they did. (2) You are not the one to wo[illegible] over losing the friendship of a man with whom you [illegible]sed to dance because he had been drinking. He [illegible]e one to do the worrying over losing your friendsh[illegible] should apologize to you for acting as he did.

MA[illegible].—I'd give anything to have your trusting [illegible]v. A girl that will write her love affairs [illegible] card would tell them over a country telephone. You are years too young to marry. Wait until you are twenty.

VELMA, Indiana.—You need an education much more than you need a husband. You can always get a husband but your present opportunity for securing an education may not last; therefore, make the most of it. You say your parents are good to you and give you a good home. Don't you think you should show your appreciation by obeying their wishes? I do.

PEGGY, Indiana.—No wonder he tries to tease you, for he is just a mischievous little boy, and you are just a little girl and years too young to be in love. Jealous people are always unhappy, so now is the time to break yourself of a jealous disposition. Don't let it grow stronger. If "D" realized that you didn't care how much he looked at, or talked to, other girls, there wouldn't be half the fun in doing it. Indifference will gain more than tears or reproaches. Remember that when you are old enough to have love affairs.

KATHARENE, Ark.—When a girl says she loves two men and asks me which one she had better marry, it is a safe bet that she shouldn't marry either of them. That applies to you, Katharene.

SOMEBODY'S SWEETHEART, Michigan.—Read answer to Peggy of Indiana, regarding jealousy.

BLUE EYES, Minn.—You must have a very strange mother to want you, at the tender age of thirteen, to marry a man of twenty-eight, just because he is rich. You are too young to go away to work, but don't get married, either.

N. AND E., North Carolina.—If I should tell you a sure method by which you could determine which of you the boys like best I'd take away your chief source of amusement, so I'm not going to do it. Think of all the fun you'd miss, wondering which was the best liked. (2) Don't accept jewelry.

MARY FRANCES.—You are years too young to marry, four or five years, anyway.

BLUE EYES, Ark.—Opinions differ as to jealousy. I guess most of us are a wee bit jealous where our affections are concerned. You are rather young to marry, but if you have no parents or home, and are working for other people, marrying might be a good thing. It's a pretty serious proposition, though, so think it over carefully.

BLUE EYES AND CURLY HAIR, Indiana.—In the first place, your father shouldn't have allowed you to go to a public dance, at your age, fourteen, and if you went automobiling after the dance he should blame himself as much as he blamed you. He's somewhat of a failure as a father, I'll say. Tell him so. (2) Don't worry. I don't believe the same fellow will give you another opportunity to bite his finger. He won't try to hug and kiss you again. If another fellow tries it, bite him, too, and more power to you.

TEDDIE, S. C.—As I've said before, don't disturb anyone at his place of business, unless for something of extreme importance. Don't telephone, either. Many a young man's chance of promotion has been ruined by too many visitors and telephone calls—chiefly feminine, and a feminine telephone call is a terrible thing. They never stop talking.

BROWN-EYED COKIE, Kans.—You are too sensitive. He meant it as a joke. Extremely sensitive people are always unhappy. They imagine that slights were meant when none was intended. Don't grow up like that. Life is too short.

That's all for this time. Good by.
COUSIN MARION.

Missing Relatives and Friends

For the convenience of its subscribers, COMFORT reopens the "Missing Relatives' and Friends' column.

To the readers of COMFORT is extended the privilege of inserting three-line notices in this column if they will secure only one new yearly subscriber to COMFORT at 50c. If you wish to find a missing relative or friend you can insert a three-line notice containing not over 22 words in this column by securing only one new subscription at 50c. If a longer notice is required send one 50c subscription for each additional seven words.

I would like to know the whereabouts of James G. Coon, 40 years old, getting gray, limps in right leg, six feet tall, weighs about 180 pounds. He was a drummer. Last heard of, he spent the night and registered at the Haganback Hotel, in Los Angeles, Calif. Write his mother, Mrs. Julia Warren, Dyersburg, 222 East Court St., Tenn.

Mrs. Alice Conard, Ithaca, Mich., will be glad to receive any information of her brother, George Albert Wheatley, last heard of in Galveston, Texas.

Would like the address of anyone knowing the whereabouts of any of James Davis' relatives, who left Wayne County, W. Va., after Civil War. Gladys Davis, Eden, Idaho.

Eld. Henry J. Lyles, Adolphus, Ky., would like to find the whereabouts of his daughter, Bessie C. Married G. W. White, 1912. They had a world traveling job.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Clarence Brown (or Pruiet), age 19 years, last heard of at Dale, Okla., June, 1920, please write his aunt, Mrs. Martha Cowell, Holcomb, R. R. 1, Box 74, Mo.

Mrs. Lula Linsley, Low Moor, Va., would like to know something of Mrs. Julia Knicely, wife of Dr. Willis Knicely. She lived in Indiana or Illinois.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Mrs. Sarah Carlin or daughters, Rose or Katie Carlin, last heard of in Cohoes, N. Y., 1881, please notify their cousin, Mrs. G. E. Duryea, Centerville, S. Dak.

Mrs. C. M. Gribble, Topeka, 415 Larch St., Kans., would like to hear from her brother, Richard Rhodes, about 80 years of age.

Wanted: Information of Valerie Savings, last heard of at Holyoke, Mass. Sister of Charles and Henry Savings. Mrs. L. M. Nagawiecki, LaPorte, 815 D St., Indiana.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of John Beasley, last heard of somewhere in Texas, on the Brazos River, in 1888-89. Any information will be gladly received by his nephew, Francis A. Beasley, Ariton, R. R. 2, Ala.

Wish to know the whereabouts of Luther Carter, last heard of in the State of Washington. Susie F. Hawn, Lancing, Tenn.

Mrs. H. McDowell, Wellman, R. R. 2, Box 90, Iowa, wishes information regarding the whereabouts of her son, William, 41 years old, gray hair, five feet, four inches. Last heard of on his way home; think he may be in Nebraska.

Wanted: To find Miss Ethel Chapman, living with her father, W. L. Chapman; she is about 19 at this time. Write to her mother, Mrs. Anna Whiting, Fort Smith, 610 N. 5th St., Ark.

Wanted: To hear from Martha Booker. Is native of Tennessee. She worked at Peerless Paper Co., of Dayton, Ohio, finishing room, in 1918. Address Farmer, Dayton, care of Box 266, R. R. 16, Ohio.

Wanted: Information of Fannie or Levi Gorman, of Missouri; John Gorman, of Iowa. Hattie Johnson, Delano, Box 23, R. R. 3, Minn.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Ed Israel, last heard from in Knoxville, Tenn., May, 1920, please notify his mother, Mrs. Melvie Israel, Canton, R. R. 1, North Carolina.

I, formerly Katy Gibson, now Mrs. Catherine Craven, born in Alabama, was separated from my brothers, Henry and David Gibson, in Cairo, Ill., nearly 50 years ago after the death of our parents. All of us were children at that time. I desire to find either or both brothers, if now living, or to get any information as to what has become of them. Mrs. C. Craven, Birdville, Box 122, Pa.

Young Jack was talking to the new visitor soon after her arrival. He eyed her critically for a few moments, then looked up and said:

"So you're my grandmother, are you?"

"Yes, dear. On your father's side," remarked the old lady, smiling.

"Well, you're on the wrong side; you'll find that out," replied Jack.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Head off that Croup with Musterole

Keep the little white jar of Musterole handy on your bathroom shelf and you can easily head off croupy colds before they get beyond control.

The moment you hear that warning cough, get out the good old Musterole and rub this soothing ointment gently on the chest and throat.

Made from pure oil of mustard and other simple ingredients, Musterole penetrates right through the skin and breaks up the cold by relieving the congestion.

Musterole does its good work without blistering the skin like the old-fashioned mustard plaster.

Use it for treating tonsillitis, rheumatism, neuralgia, chilblains, colds and croup.

Sold by all druggists, in tubes and jars, 35c and 65c; hospital size, $3.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER

Premo Camera

Reward No. 7944

Films And Instruction Book Free

THIS is not a toy but a genuine "Premo" camera, made by the Eastman Kodak Co., therefore you can depend upon it to produce the most pleasing and satisfactory results. It takes a picture 1¼ by 1¾ inches, is fitted with the best quality Meniscus lens and an automatic shutter adapted for snapshots and time exposures. The pictures may be taken either the long way or the short way of the camera. It uses the regulation roll film cartridge containing six exposures, and this may be put in the camera and taken out again in broad daylight, so that you don't have to go into a dark room every time you want to load the camera. Anybody can make good pictures with this camera. Being small and compact, it is just the thing to carry with you to "snap" pictures of your friends, sports, etc., with. And remember, we send you not only the camera itself but also include One Six Exposure Roll Film Cartridge and Instruction Book, all packed together in a strong box and sent to you Free by Parcel Post, prepaid, on the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For a club of four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you by parcel post, prepaid, this Premo Camera with one Roll Film Cartridge containing six exposures and complete Instruction Book. Reward No. 7944.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Gate Top Mesh Purse

Reward No. 7833

THIS is the new "Gate Top" mesh purse with a ten-inch wrist chain, handsome, stylish, and perfectly safe for the carrying of money and other valuables. A slight pull with the forefinger of each hand instantly opens the purse, a gentle pressure with thumb and finger closes it. Our illustration shows the purse closed. When open the top is as large as the bottom, or in other words, two inches in diameter. When closed it leaves an opening only three-fourths of an inch wide over which the brightly polished German silver cover snaps down tightly so that the contents of the purse cannot possibly become lost. This dainty purse is now extremely fashionable so we have purchased a quantity for the benefit of those of our lady and girl readers who like to be up-to-date in these little accessories. You can have one of them free by taking advantage of the following

Club Offer. For three one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this handsome and stylish Gate Top mesh purse free by Parcel Post prepaid. Reward No. 7833.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Not a Pottery in the Bunch

Boys, 25 Agates Free

How would you like to have 25 Flint Agates all different colors? When the marble season starts, can you imagine yourself kneeling down to a game of "Boston" with a hand full of marbles that will attract the eye of every boy friend in the game? The minute the game starts, you will notice how anxious they will all be to get a shot at your marble. Each marble has a variation of several different colors and is just the right size for accurate shooting. They are beauties.

SEND NO MONEY

I have made arrangements with the manufacturers of these marbles to take practically their entire output and I want every boy reader of this paper to have a set. Just send me your name and address and I will send you 4 packages of high-grade, post cards to give away free on my big, liberal 25c offer. An hour of easy work brings you 25 Agates.
M. BERRY, Marble Dept. 19, Topeka, Kansas

"Don't worry! Sloan's will fix me up"

"SLOAN'S always fixes me up in a jiffy. A warming slap of Sloan's Liniment and pains and aches soon become a memory."

Good for all exposure aches and pains, rheumatism, neuralgia, backaches, stiff joints, sprains and strains. Sold by all druggists, 35c, 70c, $1.40.

Keep it handy

Sloan's Liniment Pain's enemy

$1.97

GUARANTEED WATCH

To advertise our business, and introduce our bargain price list of Elgin Watches, we will send this elegant guaranteed watch by Parcel Post C. O. D. $1.97 ONLY, nickel silver plated case, stem wind and stem set, genuine American lever movement, fully guaranteed a reliable timekeeper. Give your full P. O. address, box or St. No., and watch will be sent at once. Pay your Postmaster $1.97 and it is yours. Satisfaction guaranteed. Boston Jewelry Co. 39 W. Adams St. B31, Chicago, Ill.

Throw your VOICE. Under the table, down in the cellar, into a trunk or any where. Our VENTRILO which fits in the mouth enables you to fool all your friends. Also art of ventriloquism an big book of Jokes. By mail 10 cts. Prepaid. ARDEE NOVELTY CO. Box 188 Stamford Conn.

31-Piece Dinner Set Given

Full size dinner china, guaranteed against crazing; pure white color. Every piece decorated with royal blue band and your initial stamped in pure coin gold — just the set for a family of six. Simply sell 40 packets Garden Seeds at 10c, according to offer in catalog. Send your name. The Wilson Seed Co., Dept. 107 Tyrone, Pa.

Given Away FREE

This Beautiful Kewpie Doll

Given away for selling thirty bottles of our Select Perfume at 15c each. When sold return us $4.50 and the Doll is yours. We send you the Perfume without any charges. Send your name and address to us at once.

New England Novelty Co., Dept. 2-C, Brockton, Mass.

GIVEN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE

Fine moving picture machine with supply of films. Easy to operate, by oil or electricity. Free for selling only 12 boxes of Mentho-Nova. Sell at 25c a box, return the $3 and receive this dandy premium. Satisfaction guaranteed. Order now. Hundreds of other premiums and big Cash Commission.

U. S. SUPPLY CO., Dept. 850, Greenville, Pa.

VIOLIN GIVEN

This special sweet toned Violin given for selling two lots of 20 pictures at 10c each. Order pictures today. This real dazzling Gem Set Ring also given as extra present for promptness.

RAY ART CO., Dept. 48, Chicago, Ill.

TELESCOPE FREE

Opens over 2 feet long. You can see objects a mile away. Given for selling 10 packages Bluine at 15c a package. Write today.

Bluine Mfg. Co., 560 Mill St., Concord Jct., Mass.

NEW KIND OF HEAT!

Famous Oliver Burner gives 3 times the heat without coal or wood—cheaper. Fits any heating or cook stove without change. Burns 5 per cent kerosene (coal oil) 95 per cent air. Safe. Keeps home warmer. Heats instantly by turning simple valve. Sets right in fire box of stove. No fires to make, no ashes nor dirt. 30 Day Trial.

FREE BOOK - Attractive booklet "New Kind of Heat," sent postpaid. Also Special Price Offer. Write Today.

AGTS. WANTED OLIVER OIL-GAS BURNER & MACHINE CO. 2074-C Pine Street, St Louis, Mo.

THIS KNIFE FREE for selling 8 boxes ROSEBUD Salve at 25c each and remit $2.00. Knife has best steel blades, we put your name on. Order salve at once.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO., Box 232, Woodsboro, Md.

CARDS Send 5 cents for large Sample Album of Hidden Name, Silk Fringe, Envelope, Friendship, Joker's, Lover's and all other Kinds of Cards, Post Cards and Premiums. Star Beau Catcher and list 980 Songs given Free. No trash. OHIO CARD CO., B-14 Columbus, Ohio.

GIVEN A REAL HAMILTON .22 RIFLE

For selling only 2 lots of our Beautiful Colored-Art & Religious Pictures at 10c each. Order 25 pictures at once. They sell on sight. You can easily win this 22 Sure Shot Rifle in no time. Guaranteed.

GAIR MFG. CO., 1926 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 601, CHICAGO

A REAL VIOLIN FREE

Not a toy but a genuine Violin, perfect tone, handsome appearance, pleasing model, rosewood finish, highly polished, guaranteed to please you. A fine Bow included.

Given free for selling only 40 packets of Garden Spot Seeds for us at 10 cents a pack. No Money Required. We trust you. Write for seeds today. When sold, send $4 collected and Violin and Bow are yours. We treat you right and pay the postage on everything.

Lancaster County Seed Co., Station 161, PARADISE, PA.

The Modern Farmer

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35.)

feed when needed. For pastures on work land in the regular rotation, a light top dressing of stable manure given early in the spring has been found to be highly beneficial not only to the grass crop during the ensuing season but to any other farm crops that follow during the next two years. Wheat, for instance, yields practically the same handled in this way as if the manure was applied just before it was planted. Therefore manure used as a top dressing for pastures serves the double purpose of benefiting the pasture itself and the crops that follow, and the farmer "kills two birds with one stone." Old meadows or permanent pastures respond favorably to the same treatment if the manure is evenly and lightly spread early in the season.

There are several good reasons why cows show a setback when suddenly turned out to pasture after spending the winter in a warm and comfortable barn with a regular allotment of nourishing feed night and morning. Do not misunderstand us as "knocking" grass as a feed for cows; it is Nature's balanced ration, and cannot well be improved upon. But the needs and the stamina of cows has changed with the advance in civilization; and therefore we find that sometimes pasture alone does not answer all purposes.

In the first place, sudden changes are not good for the milk cow, as any dairyman will admit. Cows fall off in milk flow if changed from one barn or farm to another; even a change of winter feed or of milkers is often followed by a drop in production. The change from good winter feed to poor pasture too early in the season has the same result, and is frequently accompanied by scouring. Make the change to pasture as gradual as possible, allowing cattle only a few hours a day at first, then slowly increasing the time over a period of two weeks. Do not think that you are saving feeding costs, that you are economical, if you shift suddenly from barn feeding to pasture. Measured in money returns, you are not. Be sure that pastures have made a good start before cows are turned out. This will assure a good stand of grass and a longer pasture period. To prevent scouring which is caused by the lusciousness of new grass, feed one to one and one half pounds of cotton-seed cake or meal daily for a week or two, beginning with one-half pound and increasing slowly.

Where the size of the farm permits it, try to set aside one pasture for summer use, and use another for early spring; in this way the first one will be ready again by fall. Also provide a night pasture of from five to 10 acres, depending on the number of head you keep. Have it located conveniently to the barn; it saves a lot of time and cow-hunting in the early morning before milking time. Make it a rule to use this pasture at night and then only. Do not use it as a bull paddock in the daytime, or as a handy place to turn work horses when not in use. If it is kept for the cows alone, and used just at night, it will have grass enough to serve all summer, and will be found well worth while in a number of ways.

If these points are kept in mind, pastures and cows will both be benefited. Fall fresh cows will pick up in milk flow on good grass in the spring and, for that matter, any cow will show increased production due to the succulent feed, but the good results are often offset by neglecting to make the change gradual. Avoid scours and setbacks; give pastures a chance to get started; give cows time to get used to the change. Don't rush the season.

March or May Pigs—Which?

"If you have a warm place to put them, have your spring pigs come in March by all means," says Prof. J. H. Sheppard, of the North Dakota Experiment Station. Giving reasons to back up his statements, he continues:

"March pigs well cared for will have made sufficient size to enable them to make the most of alfalfa pasture when they are turned out, but May pigs will still be nursing at that time.

"March pigs will be the right size to start hogging down corn by the time it is glazed; May pigs gain much more slowly and must have tankage or oilmeal if they are to do anywhere near as well as March pigs when they are turned out on corn.

"March pigs will be large enough to bring the top price on the early market, and will be out of the way before cold weather starts. May pigs must be kept well into the winter when gains come more slowly and at an increased cost. May pigs will weigh only about 150 pounds if turned off ahead of this time, and that is too light to meet the usual best market demand.

"In experiments we have made here, 300 pounds of gain or better from an acre of hogged-down corn with March-farrowed pigs have resulted. This brought a return of $45.50 in 1918, when hogs sold for 16.31 cents a pound. In 1921 the return was $23 per acre of corn when we sold from seven cents per pound."

Judging from the foregoing statement, it appears that March pigs are a better business proposition than May pigs, for the colder regions of the Northwest, and any rate.

Questions and Answers

SOIL FOR ASPARAGUS.—Several years ago I tried to get an asparagus bed started but had little luck. Will you please tell me what is the best kind of soil for asparagus; also the best variety to get. A. W., Mich.

A.—In general, asparagus does best in a deep, rich sandy loam rich in humus and having a loose and friable subsoil. Good drainage is fully as essential as a fertile soil. Probably the most popular variety of asparagus is the Palmetto, as it is a heavy yielder, quite hardy and produces early sprouts of fine quality. In this department last month we printed an article devoted to this subject giving detailed instructions on asparagus culture.

SOY BEAN STRAW FOR ROUGHAGE.—I have a lot of soy bean straw on hand and would like to know what value it has as a feed for milk cows. Is it as good as corn stover? B. C. E., Kentucky.

A. A ration containing soy bean straw was found to be superior to a ration with corn stover, according to experiments conducted by the Tennessee Experiment Station. Soy bean straw produced more milk and butterfat than corn stover, and did so more cheaply. Therefore soy bean straw can be recommended as a valuable addition to the roughage ration of dairy cows, though we suggest that it be used with either clover or alfalfa hay.

CHARCOAL FOR LAWN DRESSING.—I have been advised that ground charcoal applied as a top dressing to my lawn will serve better than ground lime as a means of getting rid of moss, weeds and coarse grasses. Kindly let me know if this is true, and if so at what rate it should be applied, and when. MRS. J. E. J., Mass.

A.—We are not aware of any benefit you can derive from topdressing your lawn with ground charcoal. It has no manurial value and is a very inactive or inert substance. A dressing of ground lime might be beneficial if it is sour. As a rule lawns require a good liberal dressing of barnyard manure, well rotted and evenly distributed in late fall or early spring. Acid phosphate fertilizer has also given very satisfactory results. If you feed your lawn grass liberally it will soon outgrow moss and weeds.

How I Made $1150 in Eleven Months —Right in My Own Home

My spare-time earnings made the first payment on our home. We plan to pay the rest the same way. Read how simple it is to turn spare hours into dollars.

By MRS. FRANK UNGER

WHEN we were first married, my husband and I used to make a little game of paying the household bills. Every Saturday afternoon as regular as clock work, I got out the bills, and he produced his check book and settled up with everybody. We used to call it "wiping the slate clean." Back in those days there was always plenty of cash to meet the bills, and maybe enough left over for a couple of theatre tickets or a little outing.

Then by and by we began to notice that somehow there wasn't any surplus. Prices were increasing and my husband began to look grave as he drew the checks. I too was worried.

Our expenses were steadily increasing. My husband's wages were hardly enough to meet the household accounts, to say nothing of clothing. And so things ran along for months, with us pinching and skimping and trying desperately to break even.

I began wondering what I could do to help. Surely there must be something. To go out and work was impossible, because I had a four months old baby to care for.

How COULD I Make Money?

There was just one thing for me. I must find some sort of home work that would pay good wages. What could I do?

I began looking in the magazines and newspapers for some sort of paying home work. I used to get mightily discouraged in my search for nothing came of it.

Then, one day I opened the paper to look for work, as usual. And on one of the pages this headline caught my eye: "How I Make Money Right at Home." Of course I started to read, and soon I was real excited. It was about a woman whose husband got a small salary—hardly enough for them to live on with everything so expensive. She wanted to make extra money just as bad as I did. But she had two little children so she couldn't do any paying work unless she could find something to do at home. It was my situation exactly.

Mrs. Frank Unger

Then it went on to tell how at last she did find profitable home work — making socks on a hand knitting machine, and how the company paid her for making them, and furnished replacement yarn for each lot of standard socks she sent in. The name of the firm was the Auto-Knitter Hosiery Company, and they were located at Buffalo, N. Y.

"I love my work more each week," says Mrs. Unger.

I wrote a letter to the company, asking for their free information. In just a few days I had a reply telling me all about the machine, and the details of their home work proposition. And then I was more enthusiastic than ever.

My husband was doubtful about it. But finally he said: "Your judgment is usually pretty good. If you really believe you can make money with an Auto-Knitter, why send and get one."

How I Started

And that is exactly what I did. I sent the order just as fast as I could. Then pretty soon my knitter arrived. I often think now how simple it was to learn to run my Auto-Knitter when I sat down and went at it with the Instruction Book as my guide. If I had done this more carefully when I first received my machine, I should have made a perfect sock much quicker than I did. The book makes everything so clear.

I submitted the first faultless sock I made to the Auto-Knitter Hosiery Company. They said it was fine and they would buy all I could make like it. I was as happy as a lark! At last I had a way to make money without leaving my home and baby.

Well, I started to work then in real earnest, putting in every minute I could spare from my housework. The first week I made only one dozen pairs, but the next week I made two dozen, and went on increasing until I could make twelve dozen pairs a week in my spare time. And all the while checks from the Auto-Knitter Hosiery Company kept coming in for each lot of standard socks I sent them. I think the pay for this home work is wonderful. I love my work more each week. And the beauty of it is that I don't have to keep regular hours. I can knit whenever I have a few moments to spare, besides taking care of my baby and doing the housework.

Made Over 7,000 Pairs

My socks have always been cheerfully accepted and paid for by the company, except a few pairs that I could easily make over. I have knit over 7,000 pairs of men's socks. Several hundred pairs were sold to my friends. When I sell one pair in a family it isn't long before all of the men-folks buy from two to six pairs. I sell them at $1.00 a pair, realizing a nice profit.

I have had my machine eleven months, and I have made in all $1,150.00 out of the socks I have knit with it. With this money we have made the first payment on our home, and plan to pay the rest in the same way. In addition I have made my original investment for machine and yarn.

Just imagine what it has meant to us to have more than $100.00 "extra" money coming in each month. And now we are realizing the dream of a lifetime—a little cottage of our own. Our Auto-Knitter has made it possible. To those who want to make extra money at home in their spare time, I heartily recommend the Auto-Knitter. There is nothing like it.

Mrs. Frank Unger, New York

How You, Too, Can Make Money at Home

We asked Mrs. Unger to tell you, in her very own words, her experiences with the Auto-Knitter, because we wanted you to know what can actually be accomplished at home with spare-time work. Her insight and judgment enabled her to size up the Auto-Knitter offer quickly and decide promptly. Not everyone makes as much with the Auto-Knitter as Mrs. Unger, because not everyone devotes as much time and energy to the work, but women everywhere are solving the "extra money" problem in this way without leaving their home. Men, too, are making money with the knitter in spare time. Why shouldn't you do likewise?

The home the Auto-Knitter is paying for Perhaps you haven't even as much spare time as Mrs. Unger. It may be that you can devote only a few moments at a time to the work. But, as Mrs. Unger points out, you can pick up the work at any time, knit as long as you wish, and leave your machine when it is necessary to do something else. Auto-Knitting will pay you directly in proportion to the time you spend at it.

Clearly and briefly, here is our proposition: The Auto-Knitter Hosiery Company enters into an agreement to buy all the standard socks you knit on the Auto-Knitter, and send in to them, paying a fixed guaranteed price. Checks will be sent promptly for each lot. Replacement yarn is also furnished for every shipment you send in. Thus you have yarn to work up into more socks.

Previous experience in hand-knitting is not necessary. Inexperienced persons can learn to turn out standard "Olde Tyme" wool socks, with the aid of the Auto-Knitter. And the machine operates many times faster than even the most skilled hand-knitter.

The Auto-Knitter comes to you with a sock already started in it. Then, too, there's a complete instruction book that makes everything plain. And as you operate the machine you are earning money to buy pretty things to wear, new furnishings for the home—and whatever else you may be needing.

Write Today for Our Liberal Wage Offer

Of course you want to know more about the wonderful little machine that helped Mrs. Frank Unger make her dreams come true; the machine that has done so much for other women.

Send right away for the company's free literature and read the experience of other Auto-Knitter owners. Find out about the pleasant and profitable money-making opportunity offered you.

Remember what Mrs. Unger said just a few short months ago—"At any rate I can't lose anything by finding out what they have to offer!" She lost no time in getting the facts. You are in her position today. Will you follow her example?

Just write your name and address in the space below. The Auto-Knitter Hosiery Company, Inc., Department 103, 630-632 Genesee Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Auto-Knitter Hosiery Co., Inc.,
Department 103, 630-632 Genesee Street,
Buffalo, New York.

Send me full particulars about Making Money at Home with the Auto-Knitter. I enclose 2 cents postage to cover cost of mailing prospectus, etc. It is understood that this does not obligate me in any way.

NAME .....
(Please write plainly)

ADDRESS .....

CITY..... STATE.....

Comfort3-22

31-Piece Dinner Set

THIS splendid set of dishes is full size for family use and consists of 6 Plates, 6 Cups, 6 Saucers, 6 Cereal or Fruit Dishes, 6 Individual Butters and large Meat Platter all handsomely decorated with clusters of purple wood violets surrounded with rich green foliage and bordered with lovely tracings of gold. Our illustration gives you no idea of the real beauty of these dishes. This is by far the handsomest, daintiest dinner set we have ever offered and we are positive that it will more than please every woman who secures one of them on the terms of our very liberal offer. No matter where you live (if it is not outside the United States), we will ship you this set by express direct from the pottery in Ohio. You are to pay the express charges, but they will be but a fraction of what this set would cost you at retail.

Given To You! For a club of only ten one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this handsome 31-piece Violet Decorated Dinner Set carefully packed to prevent breakage, charges collect. Reward No. 75010.

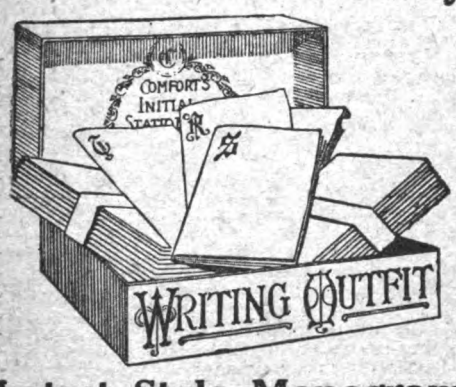
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Whose Little Girl Wants

Look At Me!

ME? I Am The Cutest, Sweetest Baby Doll In Toyland and You Can Have Me FREE!

I Have Curly Hair



I'm All Dressed Up!

YES, this beautiful curly-haired doll is free to any little girl and on such liberal terms that we expect to give away thousands of them during the next few months. Don't think she is so small as she looks in the picture for she stands nearly a foot high. She has a strong, durable, stuffed body, and an indestructible head. You can make her stand up, sit down in a chair and assume all sorts of natural positions. Her beautiful brown hair hangs in luxuriant curls, her eos are blue as the sky, she has on a pretty lace trimmed dress with sash, and taken altogether she is certainly the cutest and sweetest baby doll in all toyland. Fathers and Mothers—just look at this beautiful doll as she sits smiling with arms outstretched waiting for someone to pick her up, hug her, kiss her and take her out to play. Don't you think your little girl would just love to have her for her own? We will send her to you free, packed in a strong box so she cannot possibly get broken, if you will accept the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this handsome Doll, exactly as described, free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 9872.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Box Of Initial Stationery

Latest Style Monogram

IT is now the height of fashion and evidence of the very best taste to use stationery with your own monogram initial or "crest" on it. In this offer we give you two dozen sheets white linen stationery 10½x6¼ inches in size, each sheet beautifully embossed in colors with any monogram initial you desire and two dozen envelopes. Just think how nice it will be when writing to your friends to have your own letter crest monogram initial embossed in colors on this high-grade fine quality stationery. Remember you get one full quire of choice paper and twenty-four envelopes in this complete writer's outfit. Don't hesitate to send for this premium today because you will surely be delighted with it.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you a box of this Initial Stationery free by parcel post, prepaid. When ordering be sure to specify what monogram initial you want. Reward No. 9482.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Plant This Grand Fruit Orchard!

For A Club Of Only Two We Will Send You Seventeen Apple And Pear Tree Grafts, Berry Bushes And Grape Vines!

LAST season we sent out nearly twenty-five thousand of these Orchard Collections to COMFORT readers. So far as we know, not one of them failed to grow. This season we expect to give away fifty thousand. We buy these Collections from a nursery man who has been in business for years and who has the reputation of producing some of the finest nursery stock to be obtained anywhere. He personally selects the different varieties that make up these Collections and forwards them direct to our readers by prepaid parcel post. He Guarantees Every Collection. If any of the trees, bushes or vines fail to grow satisfactorily they will be replaced for you free of all charge.

Here Is What You Get!

ONE Snow Apple Tree, One Wealthy Apple Tree, One Kieffer Pear Tree, One Bartlett Pear Tree, Two Lucretia Dewberry Bushes, Two Rex Raspberry Bushes, Three Niagara Grape Vines, Three Delaware Grape Vines, Three Concord Grape Vines.

The four Apple and Pear Tree grafts are one foot high, grafted from bearing trees with good records. They will take root as soon as planted and grow rapidly into vigorous, healthy trees.

The nine Grape Vines are a product of Southern Michigan, where the finest grapes in the world are grown. From selected vines, cuttings are taken and buried in underground pits until they undergo a process known as "callousing." After being properly "calloused" the cuttings will take root as soon as planted. The "calloused" Grape Cuttings in this Collection are all produced in this manner. They will grow rapidly and bear immense crops of choice grapes almost as soon as large vines planted at the same time.

The two Raspberry Bushes and two Dewberry Bushes are robust, one-year-old youngsters, ready to set out as soon as you receive them. They will begin growing at once and develop into fine, heavy-bearing bushes if given proper attention.

All Will Bear Soon!

This Fine Fruit Orchard will prove an ever-increasing source of pleasure and profit to you year after year. All the trees, vines and bushes will bear fruit in a remarkably short time. In two years the Raspberry and Dewberry bushes will commence bearing. The following year you will have grapes. The Apple and Pear Trees will begin to bear in from three to five years. Then you will have loads and loads of fine fruit in increasing quantity every year.

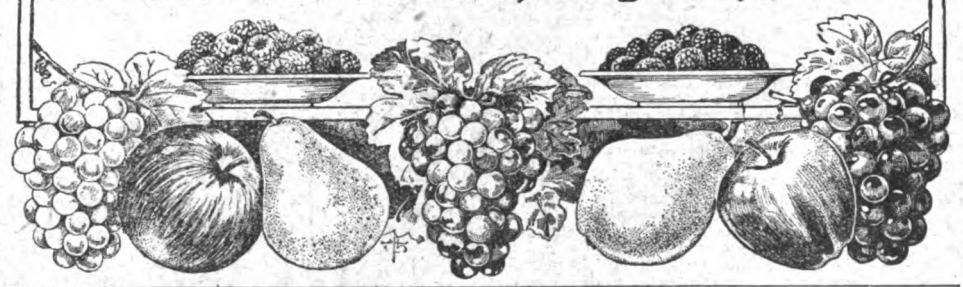
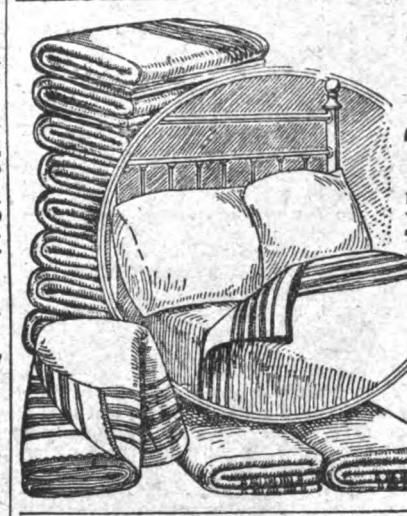
Full Planting Instructions!

WITH this Orchard Collection you will also receive instructions for planting. These directions are illustrated with pictures and diagrams showing you just what to do and when and how to do it. By following these simple directions you should in a few years have one of the finest orchards in your neighborhood.



They Are Sure To Grow!



REMEMBER, everything in this Collection is absolutely guaranteed to grow. We stand behind every Collection sent out and the grower in turn stands behind us. You may rest assured that this splendid Collection will reach you in good condition and grow to your entire satisfaction if the directions for planting are carefully followed. If any of the trees, bushes or vines fail to make growth satisfactory to you, we hereby guarantee to replace them absolutely without charge. You run absolutely no risk in accepting this offer.

Our Free Offer!

FOR a club of only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will give you this remarkable Fruit and Orchard Collection free—the two Apple Trees, two Pear Trees, two Dewberry Bushes, two Raspberry Bushes and nine Grape Vines. The whole Collection will be carefully wrapped and sent to you prepaid by parcel post, direct from the grower at the proper time for planting in your locality. Remember we guarantee that everything will reach you in perfect condition. Be sure to send in your order this very day and ask for Reward No. 9542.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine

Soft Warm Bed Blankets

Sent Prepaid For A Club Of Eight

THIS IS an offer which no good housewife can afford to overlook. It is your opportunity to secure as many large double bed blankets as you may need without a cent of expense. They are 45 inches wide, six feet in length extremely well made and finely finished. The color is gray with white border. This is in reality one of the best bargains in a premium we have ever offered due to the fact that we buy these blankets in large quantities direct from the mill at a specially low price and therefore are enabled to offer them for a very small club of subscriptions. When you think of this big warm blanket on your bed or lying on a closet shelf ready for use when wanted, we believe that you will want to start a club at once for the sake of securing one or more of them free of all cost to you. We will gladly send you one or more of these splendid blankets upon the terms of the following Club Offer. For a club of only eight one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you one of these fine double bed blankets free by Parcel Post prepaid. Reward No. 7578.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Shaggy Teddy Bear

EVERY little boy and girl wants a Teddy Bear and here is an opportunity for every father or mother who reads COMFORT to get one without expense. "Teddy" is a plump, shaggy fellow, 10 inches tall, made of brown plush, carefully stitched and finished, and his head and legs are jointed in such a manner that you can place him in almost any position. He will stand up, sit down, stand on his head, walk on all fours, in fact he gets himself into all kinds of positions, so comical and lifelike that it makes the children scream with delight just to look at him. Teddy is so well made that he cannot easily become broken, and with ordinary care should last for years. We will send you Teddy free if you will accept the following special offer:

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Teddy Bear free and prepaid. Reward No. 9992.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Silver Bonbon Dish

THIS beautiful dish can be used for a variety of purposes—for candy, nuts, salted peanuts, popcorn, etc. It is much larger than it appears in the above illustration, measuring over five inches in width and two inches deep. It is heavily silver plated outside and gold lined. Needless to say, it makes a handsome ornament for the sideboard and will last a lifetime.

We will send you this handsome Silver Bonbon Dish free upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this Silver Plated, Gold Lined Bonbon Dish free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9942.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

New Crochet And Sweater Books

HUNDREDS of new, lovely designs for COMFORT crochet workers. The very latest patterns in edges, beadings, insertions and laces, crocheted and knitted sweaters, all with complete directions and illustrated by large, clear photographs of the finished work. Each book is 8 by 11 inches in size, printed on the finest paper, handsomely and durably bound. Following is a brief description of what each book contains:

BOOK NO. 20.—Sixty-two beautiful edges and insertions.

BOOK NO. 21.—Fifty-seven pretty designs in edges and insertions.

BOOK NO. 22.—Fifty-two new designs in Filet crochet.

BOOK NO. 23.—Seventeen alphabets in various styles and sizes.

BOOK NO. 24.—Fifteen artistic yokes.

BOOK NO. 25.—How to make knitted and crocheted ripple sweaters and jackets with and without sleeves.

BOOK NO. 26.—Thirteen lovely new yokes in filet and fancy crochet.

BOOK NO. 27.—How to make twelve elaborate medallion arrangements in camisoles and yokes.

BOOK NO. 28.—How to make filet sweaters, illustrating fourteen handsome designs.

BOOK NO. 29.—Tatted yokes and camisoles —fifteen lovely arrangements of medallions in different handsome patterns.

BOOK NO. 30.—Seventy-two patterns in edges and corners and insertions.

BOOK NO. 31.—A book of "spiders," showing this antique design in all its many variations.

BOOK NO. 32.—Fourteen filet crochet sweaters, in light and heavy threads.

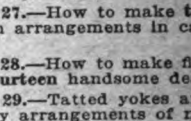
Free Offer No. 8591. For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you any three of the above books free and postpaid. Please be sure to give the number of each book wanted.

Free Offer No. 9702. For two one-year subscriptions at 50 cents each we will send you and postpaid. any seven books free Please give number of each book wanted.

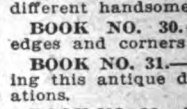
Free Offer No. 8963. For three one-year subscriptions at 50 cents each we will send you all thirteen books free and postpaid.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Sugar, Creamer And Tray



MADE of "crushed" silver—the very latest idea. Sugar, Creamer and Tray are full standard size. The Tray is quadruple silver plated and both Sugar and Creamer are quadruple silver plated outside and gold lined inside. A very useful set and a beautiful ornament for the dining table or sideboard.



CLUB OFFER. We will send you this Crushed Silver Set free and prepaid for four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each. Reward No. 7904.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Genuine Gold Filled — Guaranteed For 5 Years

APRIL

AUGUST

JANUARY

Gold Birthstone Rings

THE most popular ladies' rings worn today are these beautiful birthstone rings. Not only is it considered lucky to wear one of them but they are now and always will be exceedingly stylish. We are able to illustrate only three of the rings but there are twelve in all—a different stone for each month of the year, and of course you should wear the stone that is symbolical of the month you were born. The following is a list of the twelve rings, names of the stones and the month to which they apply:

No. 8411, January, Garnet. No. 8421, February, Amethyst. No. 8431, March, Bloodstone. No. 8441, April, Diamond. No. 8451, May, Emerald. No. 8461, June, Agate. No. 8471, July, Ruby. No. 8481, August, Sardonyx. No. 8491, September, Sapphire. No. 8501, October, Opal. No. 8511, November, Topaz. No. 8521, December, Turquoise.

Each ring is guaranteed genuine gold filled, which looks exactly like solid gold and will wear for years. In fact we absolutely guarantee each ring for at least five years. The rings themselves are perfectly plain, the stones are solitaires and perfect imitations of the real gems. The setting of each ring is the ever popular "Tiffany" style. As a Christmas, Birthday or all-the-year-round gift for wife, mother, sweetheart or sister, nothing could be more appropriate and acceptable than one of these beautiful guaranteed rings set with the birthstone of the person to whom it is given. We will send you one of these rings free upon the terms of the following offer:

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you one of these beautiful gold-filled Rings by parcel post, prepaid. Please be sure to give size and number of ring wanted.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Ends Stubborn Coughs in a Hurry

For real effectiveness, this old home-made remedy has no equal. Easily and cheaply prepared.

You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous old home-made remedy. Anyone who has coughed all day and all night, will say that the immediate relief given is almost like magic. It is very easily prepared, and there is nothing better for coughs.

Into a pint bottle, put 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, the full pint saves about two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly, and tastes pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out and disappear. A day's use will usually break up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness, and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, the most reliable remedy for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Beautiful Silk Remnants

REMNANTS of real silk, in all shapes, sizes and colors. They are carefully trimmed and just what you need for making up quilts, tidies, pillow tops and all kinds of "crazy patchwork." We will send you a package containing more than one hundred of these beautiful silk pieces and 5 skeins embroidery cotton in different bright colors, also an Instruction Book with eight full-page illustrations showing how to ornament seams of crazy patchwork and other work where fancy stitches are used, also how to work the Outline and Kensington Stitch, Arrasene and Chenille Embroidery, ribbon work, plush or tufted stitch, also directions for Kensington painting. All this is yours free upon the terms of the following special offer:

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you one package of these Silk Remnants free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 5561.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

For A Club Of Four

All Metal Hot Water Bottle

COMFORT housewives who know the danger of using hot water bottles or bags that are liable to burst or leak will quickly realize the many advantages of this new patented all-metal bottle. It is made of finest nickel-plated brass—absolutely no rubber about it to dry up or chip off. It cannot be punctured and will not leak. It is the only bottle in which boiling water can be safely used. It can be heated hotter and stays hot longer than any other bottle. It gives a dry, healthy heat. It can be used every day and all day long. It holds two pints, comes in a soft, warm blue-flannel removable cover and has an attachable handle for filling and carrying, so as not to burn the hands.

A hot water bottle like this should be in every home. Not only is it indispensable in time of illness and emergency, but whenever extra warmth is needed for the body—between the sheets on winter nights, for the nursery, on the sleeping porch, in baby's carriage, for sleighing or motor trips, it is a wonderful comfort, an absolute necessity. It will never wear out. It will last a lifetime if given ordinary care.

You can have one of these splendid hot water bottles free by accepting the following special Club Offer. For a club of four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this all-metal hot water bottle exactly as described, free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8044.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Poems Requested

The following poems have been requested by readers of COMFORT and sent for publication.

Guilty or Not Guilty?

She stood at the bar of justice,
A creature wan and wild,
In form too small for a woman,
In feature too old for a child.
For a look so wan and pathetic
Was stamped on that fair, young face,
It seemed long years of suffering
Must have left their silent trace.

"Your name?" said the judge, as he eyed her
With kindly look, yet keen.
"Is Mary Maguire, if you please, sir."
"And your age?" "I have turned 16."
"Well, Mary," and then from a paper
He slowly and gravely read,
"You are charged here, I am sorry to say it,
With stealing three loaves of bread."

"You look not like an offender,
And I trust that you can show
The charge to be false; now tell me,
Are you guilty of this or no?"
A passionate burst of weeping
Was at first her sole reply.
But she dried her tears in a moment,
And looked in the judge's eye.

"I will tell you just how it was, sir;
My father and mother are dead,
And my little brothers and sisters
Were hungry and asked me for bread.
At first I earned it for them
By working hard all day,
But somehow times were hard, sir,
And the work all fell away.

"I could get no more employment,
The weather was bitter cold,
The young ones cried and shivered,
Little Johnnie's but three years old;
So, what was I to do, sir?
I am guilty; but do not condemn;
I took, oh, was it stealing?
The bread to give to them."

Every man in the courtroom,
Graybeard and thoughtless youth,
Knew as they looked upon her
That the prisoner spoke the truth.
Out from their pockets came kerchiefs,
And out from their eyes came tears,
And out from old faded wallets
Treasures hoarded for years.

The judge's face was a study,
The strangest you ever saw,
As he cleared his throat and murmured
Something about the law.
For one so learned in such matters,
So wise in dealing with men,
He seemed on a simple question
Sorely puzzled just then.

But no one blamed him or wondered,
When at length these words were heard,
"The sentence of this young prisoner
Is for the present deferred."
And no one blamed him or wondered
When he went to her and smiled,
And tenderly led from the courtroom
Himself—the guilty child.

You Look Better When You Smile

"When you're feeling mighty blue,
As misfortune comes to you,
And ill luck seems shaped about you in a pile;
You will stand a greater show
If you don't let others know,
And besides you look much better when you smile.

"When your business all goes wrong,
Just keep plodding right along,
Better times are surely coming after while;
Sun is sure to shine again,
Cheerfulness is not in vain,
And you look a great deal better when you smile.

"When your health seems broken down,
Don't sit by to scowl and frown,
Pessimism long ago dropped out of style;
Let your heart give forth good cheer,
Scatter sunshine far and near,
For you look a whole lot better when you smile."

Where's Mother?

When father came from work at night,
Before he'd wash his hands and face,
Or hang his hat upon the peg,
His glance would wander 'round the place,
And if dear mother's sunny head
Was not within his vision's ken
He'd search for her from room to room,
Upstairs and down and all, and then
He'd stop and ask,
"Where's mother?"

But if he found her in her chair,
He'd potter off about the lot,
And pick a mess of early greens,
Or fix a chicken for the pot;
He'd mend a fence, or set a hen,
Or do some other homely chore,
With only now and then a glance
Toward the half-open kitchen door
That seemed to ask,
"Where's mother?"

When mother left us sorrowing
He followed her within a day;
And while we laid white flowers around
His smooth-brushed hair, as white as they,
We could but think that when the light
And beauty of that wondrous place
Burst on his newly-quickened gaze,
He must have raised an eager face
And simply asked:
"Where's mother?"

Live in the Sunshine

Live in the sunshine, don't live in the gloom.
Carry some gladness the way to illume.

Live in the brightness, and take this to heart,
The world will be gayer if you do your part.

Live on the housetop, not down in the cell;
Open-air Christmas live nobly and well.

Live where the joys are, and, scorning defeat,
Have a good-morrow for all whom you meet.

Live as a victor, and triumphing go
Through the queer world, beating down every foe.

Live in the sunshine, God meant it for you,
Live as the robins, and sing the day through.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

NOT MORE THAN ONE FREE TRIAL BOTTLE TO ANY FAMILY

I will send anyone anywhere one free Bottle of my Syrup Pepsin—What is Your Address?

THERE is someone in every family who is constipated, bilious, dyspeptic. They need my Syrup Pepsin and will be better off for using it. It may be a woman, an old man, a tiny baby. Syrup Pepsin is as effective for grownups as it is safe for babies. Thousands of mothers can testify to that.

Perhaps you have reached the stage where you take pills every night and think there is nothing else for you to do. Don't believe it! No matter how chronically constipated or dyspeptic you are, Syrup Pepsin will regulate you. It is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin that acts on the stomach and intestines, and in a short time trains the digestive organs to do their work naturally and without help.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL
"As I Am Today"

YES, I TAKE MY OWN MEDICINE!

I know what old people suffer with their bowels for I have been a family physician in my county since 1875, and I am old myself, past 82 years of age; born 1839, and still strong. I don't know of a remedy that is better for old people than my Syrup Pepsin, and I'll tell you why: It is mild and gentle in action; it doesn't gripe, and it doesn't lose its effect when you take it regularly. I know this by using it myself, by prescribing it since 1875 and by manufacturing it since 1892. You can form your own opinion by sending for a free trial bottle.

WHO NEEDS SYRUP PEPSIN

I want to send a free trial bottle of my Syrup Pepsin to anyone who suffers from one or more of the following: Constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, biliousness, headache, belching, bad taste, bad breath, dizziness, drowsiness and the many other symptoms of sluggish bowels. If you have children who suffer in this way write for them.

SEND FOR A FREE TRIAL BOTTLE

In spite of the fact that my Syrup Pepsin is on sale in every drug store, I want you to become acquainted with it at my expense, and then, if you find it as I claim, buy it of your nearest dealer at a price that will stand you about a cent a dose. One such bottle will last an average family many months. Just now send me your name and address in any way most convenient to yourself, by filling out the coupon below, by postal or letter. I have given many thousands of these bottles away and I know you will appreciate it as keenly as others have. Address me today.

Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 553 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois.
I want to try your Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Kindly send a free trial bottle to the address below, all charges prepaid.

Your name .....

St. or R. F. D .....

Town and State .....

Little Boy Blue

Eugene Field, journalist and poet, was born in St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 3, 1850, and died at Buena Park, Chicago, Ill., Nov. 4, 1895.

The little toy dog is covered with dust,
But sturdy and staunch he stands;
And the little toy soldier is red with rust,
And his musket molds in his hands.
Time was when the little toy dog was new
And the soldier was passing fair,
And that was the time when our little Boy Blue
Kissed them and put them there.

"Now don't you go till I come," he said,
"And don't you make any noise;"
So toddling off to his trundle bed,
He dreamt of the pretty toys.
And as he was dreaming an angel song
Awakened our Little Boy Blue—
Oh, the years are many, the years are long,
But the little toy friends are true.

Ay, faithful to Little Boy Blue they stand,
Each in the same old place,
Awaiting the touch of a little hand,
The smile of a little face.
And they wonder, as waiting these long years through,
In the dust of that little chair,
What has become of our Little Boy Blue
Since he kissed them and put them there.

—Eugene Field.

Which Loved Best?

"I love you, mother," said little John.
Then, forgetting his work, his cap went on,
And he was off to the garden swing,
And left her the water and wood to bring.

"I love you, mother," said rosy Nell,
"I love you better than tongue can tell."
Then she teased and pouted full half the day,
Till her mother rejoiced when she went to play.

"I love you, mother," said little Fan;
"Today I'll help you all I can.
How glad I am school doesn't keep!"
So she rocked the babe till it fell asleep.

Then, stepping softly, she fetched the broom
And swept the floor and tidied the room.
Busy and happy all day was she;
Helpful and happy as child could be.

"I love you, mother," again they said,
Three little children going to bed.
How do you think that mother guessed
Which of them really loved her best?

When Grandma Danced the Minuet

Grandma told me all about it—
Told me so I couldn't doubt it—
How she danced, my grandma danced,
Long ago.

How her dainty skirts she spread,
How she held her pretty head,
Turning out her little toes,
How she slowly leaned and rose,
Long ago.

Grandma's hair was bright and sunny;
Dimpled cheeks, too—ah, how funny!
Really quite a pretty girl,
Long ago.

Bless her! Why, she wears a cap,
Grandma does, and takes a nap
Every single day, and yet
Grandma danced the minuet,
Long ago.

Modern ways are quite alarming,
Grandma says; but boys were charming—
Girls and boys, I mean, of course,
Long ago.

Brave, but modest, grandly shy;
She would like to have us try,
Just to feel like those who met
In the graceful minuet,
Long ago.

VIOLIN FREE

Beautiful Violin, richly polished wood, well finished finger board and tail piece, full set strings, fine bow, box of rosin, and Instruction Book, for selling 30 packages Colored Postcards at 10 cts a package. Write for Postcards today.
COLUMBIA NOVELTY CO., Dept. 627, EAST BOSTON, MASS

10 YEAR GUARANTEE

Stem Wind & Set

Watch, Ring & Chain Given—We positively give a genuine American Stem Wind & Set Watch, beautifully designed case, warranted time-keeper. 10-year guarantee; Sparkling Set or Plain Ring all for selling 25 large Beautifully Colored Art and Religious Pictures at 10c each. When sold send us $2.50 & we'll send Watch and Ring. HOME ART CO., 426-28 West 59th Street, Dept. 307, Chicago

NEW LOW PRICES

HATCHED TO LAY

Purchase this year's crop of chicks from Murray McMurray. Our incubator capacity is so large that we are able to guarantee 25,000 of finest baby chicks a week. Catalog Free.

Murray McMurray
19 Varieties Box 12, Webster City, Iowa

Rifle And Fount-Pen BOTH GIVEN FREE RING

for selling 24 Perfumed Sachets at 10c a packet. When sold return $2.40; both rifle and fountain pen are yours. Send no money. Write R. MORE CO., 336 W. 63rd St., Dept. 46K, CHICAGO

Ivory White Toilet Set — Comb Brush Mirror — For A Club Of Six

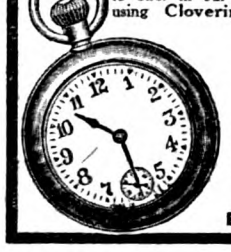
PURE white, with a fine smooth finish, this handsome Comb, Brush and Mirror Set equals in appearance the finest French Ivory. The Comb is 7½ inches long, very light and dainty, with both coarse and fine teeth. The Brush is 10 inches long and 2½ inches wide, with medium-length, finest, stiff bristles. The Mirror, which measures 10x5½ inches, is made of heavy, flawless, beveled French glass, 4½ inches in diameter.

No lady could wish for a finer Toilet Set than this one. It has the air of refinement found in the highest grade Ivory Sets, it is just as durable and can be cleaned as often as desired without injury to its smooth ivory white finish.



We will give you, free, this fine Ivory White Comb, Brush and Mirror Set in a fitted box upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For six one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this Comb, Brush and Mirror Set in a fitted box, free, by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 7796.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

WATCH, CHAIN AND TWO RINGS

as premiums—send no money—simply name and address—merely give away FREE 12 Beautiful Art Pictures with 12 Boxes of our famous White Cloverine, which you sell at 25c each. We will send you this Genuine American Watch, also Chain and two Gold Shell Rings, according to offer in our Premium Catalog which you receive with the Cloverine. Millions are using Cloverine.

LADIES! YOU CAN ALSO EARN A BEAUTIFUL DINNER SET OR SIX LACE CURTAINS

and many other beautiful premiums. Our plan is the easiest and absolutely square. Write quick—Pictures and Cloverine sent promptly, post-paid. Be first in your town.

THE WILSON CHEMICAL CO.,
BIG CASH COMMISSION TO AGENTS Dept. M. 107, Tyrone, Pa.

She Is Looking For A Mother

Do You Want Her?

"Peggy" The New Winter Doll

PEGGY first saw the light of day in New York but she didn't like the big city with its noise and confusion and was mighty glad to come to Maine on a brief vacation before looking for a permanent home somewhere in the country.

She doesn't care where she lives so long as as it is in some cozy little town or on a nice, big farm, and provided she can find some little girl who will be a kind mother to her. She just loves the horses and cows and doggies and kitties and—yes, even the little "piggies" make her laugh until she can hardly stand up.

Peggy says that life on the farm is the only life for her, so we want to give her to some little girl who lives on a farm, where she can romp and play to her heart's content and be happy all day long. Please remember, however, that we have but a limited number of these Dolls on hand and if you want one your order should be sent in at once.

A New York manufacturer who wanted to keep his help busy during the dull season sold us these Dolls at about one-half the regular wholesale price, so we are enabled to give them away for almost nothing.

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you "Peggy" free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8621.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

French Ivory Manicure Set

In A Roll-Up Leather Case

Given For A Club Of Four!

A PRACTICAL and beautiful Set, containing everything necessary for the proper care of the nails. It consists of a 5-inch flexible polished steel nail file, a pair of 3½-inch polished steel curved nail scissors, a 4-inch cuticle knife with French Ivory handle, a 4-inch French Ivory nail stick, and a 4½-inch nail polisher or buffer with French Ivory Top. All these articles are neatly contained in a moire-lined, genuine leather case, measuring 5½ inches wide and 6 inches from end to end when opened. The case rolls up as shown in illustration, and fastens with two snap clasps. In this form it resembles a miniature pocketbook, and is just as convenient to carry, as it measures only 5½x2 inches and only 1 inch in thickness.

Although we offer this Manicure Set for an unusually small club, please understand that each and every piece is strictly high grade and regulation size. We know that every woman and girl who accepts this offer and earns one of these splendid Sets will be more than delighted with it. It is free on the terms of the following offer.

Given To You! For four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this splendid French Ivory Manicure Set in a roll-up leather case free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 8124.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Writing And Drawing Outfit

Reward No. 9972

For Home And School In A Fine Leatherette Case

HERE is something that is needed in every home and by every schoolboy and schoolgirl—a big value-assortment of almost everything needed for writing and drawing. Our illustration is, of course, greatly reduced in size. The Case, which is made of fine leatherette, is 10½ inches long and 2½ inches wide. It is of the folding style, with a snap fastener, so that it can conveniently be carried in the pocket or in the children's lunch basket. Inside the Case there are three high-grade pencils with erasers, one good quality penholder with pen, one twin pencil (in reality two pencils in a combination holder), one pencil sharpener, one large rubber eraser, one 10-inch ruler and an aluminum collapsible drinking cup with cover.

This Outfit is manufactured by the American Lead Pencil Company, which is sufficient guarantee of its fine quality, and we know that it will please our readers, especially those who have children going to school, and of course it is just as handy in the home, because all the pencils, penholder, etc., are high grade and just what grown people like to use. If you will accept the following special offer we will send you one of these fine Outfits free.

Given To You! For only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this complete Writing and Drawing Outfit, exactly as above described, free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9972.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

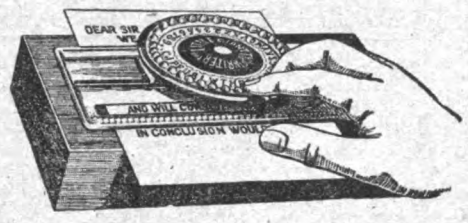
Five One-Year Old ROSE BUSHES

HERE is the offer you have been waiting for—our new 1922 offer of beautiful Rose bushes free to all COMFORT readers. This year we shall give you what we believe to be five of the finest varieties yet produced. They come from the most famous rose grower in the United States—an expert who has done nothing but cutivate roses all his life. Each bush is one year old and in a growing condition when delivered to you. No matter where you live, you will receive the bushes at the proper time to plant in your locality. We guarantee that they will reach you in perfect condition. If they do not, or if any of the bushes fail to grow, we will replace them for you free of all cost. Following is a brief description of each of the five different varieties. Please read carefully—and send in your order today.

For One Subscription You Get These Five Prize Beauties!

Alexander Hill Grey A magnificent giant yellow rose, standing head and shoulders above all others of its color, ranking with the American Beauty and the Killarneys in value and grandeur. The color is a deep golden yellow with the edge of the petal a little lighter.

Columbia A very large Rose, the open flower measuring six inches across. The color is a true pink, deepening as it opens to a glowing pink. The shades become more and more intense until the full maturity of the flower is reached, and this color is enduring.



Lady Gay One of the most wonderful of all climbing roses, noted for its sweet and lasting fragrance and immense clusters of double, light pink blossoms—as many as thirty to forty in a single cluster. It has none of the defects of the Rambler but remains free from disease in all climates.

Eugene E. Marlitt One of the finest garden roses, healthy, vigorous and free blooming. The flowers are large and very double and of a rich bright carmine with scarlet tones which do not fade in the hottest weather. It is very hardy, fragrant and keeps up a close succession of bloom.

Bessie Brown A splendid new rose introduced here from Europe and beautiful beyond comparison. It bears large, full, double blossoms on strong, erect stems, is very hardy and fragrant, blooming profusely all through the summer. The color is almost pure white, flushed with pink.

Our Free Offer For only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50c we will send you the above described five Rose Bushes, free by parcel post prepaid. They will be forwarded to you at the proper time for planting in your locality and we guarantee they will reach you in perfect condition. Reward 8661.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine

Little Giant Typewriter

A REAL machine that writes very distinctly. Has every letter in the alphabet, all the numerals from 1 to 10 and punctuation marks. Uses any size letter paper up to 5 inches wide. For correspondence, making out invoices, statements, addressing envelopes, etc., this machine will do the work well. It is very easy to operate, in fact, a child can write on it after a little practice.

Given To You! For three one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Typewriter free and prepaid. Reward No. 8853.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

54 Inch Rope Of Pearls

Reward No. 9882

Full Opera Length

THE dream of every woman and girl is to possess her own necklace of gleaming, iridescent pearls. There's a wonderful fascination about them—a beauty that appeals to every feminine heart.

Now your dream can come true—for we are giving away this handsome, full opera length rope of Parisian pearls. It is 54 inches long, all the pearls are of uniform size—¼ inch in diameter—of perfect finish and luster, far handsomer than the ordinary imitation pearl necklace sold at a high price. It can easily be wound twice around the neck, making the double rope as shown in our illustration.

By rare good luck we secured first choice of these necklaces from a large importer and at a price that enables us to give them for an unusually small club. Please read the following offer and learn how you can get a beautiful, 54-inch rope of pearls free of all cost.

Given To You! For only two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each, we will send you this handsome, opera length Pearl Necklace free by parcel post prepaid. Reward No. 9882.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

130 New Transfer Patterns FREE

All The Latest Stylish Designs For Milady's Dress, Lingerie And Accessories, Children's Garments, Household Linen And Fancy Work, Also Hoops, Stiletto, Embroidery Cotton And Instruction Book.

COMFORT needleworkers will welcome this splendid new transfer outfit consisting of five large sheets of patterns, five skeins embroidery cotton, different colors: hoops, bone stiletto and book on embroidery stitches. This grand pattern assortment, which easily surpasses anything we ever offered before, includes more than one hundred thirty new stylish motifs for all kinds of wearing apparel, table linen, towels, handkerchiefs and many beautiful articles of fancy work for home decoration. They may be used singly and in innumerable combinations. There are designs for corset covers, petticoats, collars, borders and sprays for dresses, lingerie, etc., borders for braid, towels, etc., anchors, repeat scallops in five different sizes, two sizes of fancy scallops, fleur-de-lis, French knots, child's dress, Dutch figures, scarf end for Bulgarian work, rose design for pillow, corners for table covers, centerpieces, lunch cloths, handkerchiefs, etc., etc., 17-inch butterfly centerpiece, doilies, one complete 2¾-inch Old English alphabet, one complete 1⅝-inch initial block alphabet, one complete ½-inch initial script alphabet, and various other designs—over one hundred thirty in all.

The patterns may be instantly transferred to any material by simply rubbing with bowl of a spoon or by pressing with a hot iron. They can be used at least six times with satisfactory results.

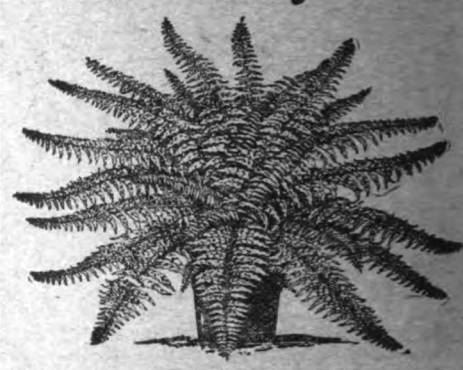
Remember—in addition to all these patterns, we also include free of charge, five skeins good embroidery cotton in different colors, hoops, bone stiletto and a book illustrating and describing all the principal embroidery stitches, making embroidery so simple that a child can do it.

We will make you a present of this big transfer outfit if you will accept the following offer.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this complete Transfer Outfit, exactly as described, free by mail postpaid. Reward No. 9272.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

26-Piece Table Set



Given For A Club Of Only Five

WE have made many offers of table-ware, but this is the first time we have been able to offer a complete set of 26 Pieces in return for so small a club. And please don't think that because we are giving this set on such liberal terms that it is plated on a brass base and consequently will change color and have that "brassy" look just as soon as the plating wears off. On the contrary, it has a white metal base; therefore each and every piece is the same color all the way through and will not show signs of wear, even after years of constant use. As shown in the above illustration, there are 26 pieces in this set—6 Knives, 6 Forks, 6 Teaspoons, 6 Tablespoons, Sugar Shell and Butter Knife. Each piece is full regulation size for family use, the handles are handsomely embossed and the blades of the knives and the bowls of the teaspoons and tablespoons are perfectly plain and bright polished. It is only because we buy this set in large quantities direct from the factory that we are able to secure it at a price that enables us to offer it as a reward for so few subscriptions. It is by far the greatest value we have offered and we guarantee every set sent out for a period of five years. We will send this 26-Piece Table Set exactly as illustrated and described to any address upon the terms of the following special offer.

Given To You! For a club of five one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each, we will send you this 26-Piece Table Set free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 7625.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Three Lovely Ferns

THEY are the largest, handsomest varieties ever grown for house culture—the Roosevelt, the Boston or "Fountain" fern, and the Whitmani or "Ostrich Plume" Fern. We guarantee thse ferns to be strong, healthy and well rooted, and that they will reach you in perfect condition, ready to pot. If any of them fail to grow, we will cheerfully replace them free of charge. We are able to illustrate but one variety, "The Roosevelt," but remember you get all three ferns free on this offer.

Given To You! For one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents we will send you the above described collection of three beautiful ferns free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 8581.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

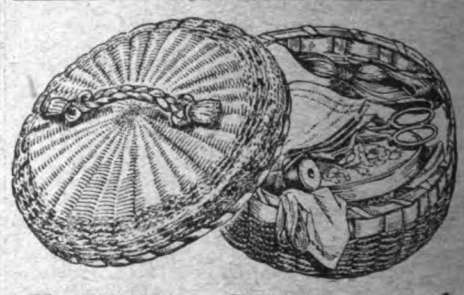
2-Piece Toilet Set



THIS is a good grade Toilet Set, consisting of comb and brush. The comb is seven inches long, with coarse and fine teeth, and comes in the new popular "Malachite" green finish. The brush is nine inches long, two and a half inches wide, with firm white bristles, and is finished in the same beautiful "Malachite" green, with a silverine shield on the back. We have given away thousands of these sets and it never fails to please.

Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you this Comb and Brush Set free and prepaid. Reward No. 9982.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Sweet Grass Basket

For Your Sewing And Fancy Work

WHERE is the woman who does not "just love" these beautiful Sewing Baskets made of sweet grass? Their delightful fragrance which is practically everlasting is like that of flowers; they are handsome in appearance and very strong and serviceable, being hand-woven by the St. Regis Indians of Canada, who produce the finest hand-made baskets in the world.

Of ample size—eight inches in diameter and three inches deep—and with its close-fitting top, this sweet-grass Basket is just what you need in which to take along your sewing or fancy work when calling or visiting. And at home it holds your work, along with scissors, buttons, thread and other necessities, so that you always know just where to look for them. And the Basket itself is such a beautiful ornament for any room.

The Indians sell these Baskets for $2.00 and $3.00 apiece at summer resorts, but by buying in large quantities they let us have them at a special low price. Therefore, we are able to offer the Basket herewith illustrated and described for a very small club of subscriptions as you will note by reading the following bargain offer.

Given To You! For only four one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50c each we will send you this fragrant, sweet-grass Sewing Basket free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 8084.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Insist!
Insist!
Insist!
on it by name
PISO'S
SAFE AND SANE
for Coughs and Colds
This syrup is different from all others.
Pleasant—gives quick relief. Contains no opiates—good for young and old.
35¢ per bottle everywhere

OH BOYS-GIRLS GREAT SPORT
THROW YOUR VOICE
Into a Barrel, under the Table, Back of a Door, into a TRUNK, DESK in SCHOOL, Any Old Place. Great FUN fooling the TEACHER, Friends, EVERYBODY with Our
CLAXOPHONE
© 1919
Which Sets On your Tongue Unseen, it NEVER FAILS Anybody Imit. Birds etc. The CLAXOPHONE, with Full Instructions, a Set Of SECRET-WRITING TRICK, (beats Invs., Ink) a MAGIC-DIAL Trick, (a Great Money maker) ALSO, This Marvelous Novelty—
NEW SCIENTIFIC WONDER
"X-RAY" CURIO
With IT you Apparently See thru Clothes, See the bones in your Fingers, Lead in Pencil, etc. No end of fun
3 FOR 25c. BIG FUN
WE SEND ALL ABOVE Novelties by pre-paid Mail for 10c.
3 For 25 cts. A nice Souvenier Free with each 25 ct. order.
CLAXO TRICK CO. DEP. X-C, NEW HAVEN, CT.
WE GIVE The BEST and MOST for The MONEY.

MOVIE SECRETS DISCLOSED
Inside Secrets of the Studios given the public for the first time by expert who has spent years in Hollywood Studios.
Carefully guarded details that are absolutely necessary for the successful scenario writer told. Camera tricks — Illusions — Trick Scenic effects — Building sets — lightings — costume values explained in detail.
Have you wondered why your scenarios do not sell? Have seen an effect in pictures and asked: "How do they do it?" At last the Secrets are out.
Information NEVER BEFORE TOLD is contained in Melvin M. Riddle's new book: "PEN TO SILVER-SHEET." Limited edition just off the press. While they last—and they're going fast—$1.00 by mail, postpaid.
HARVEY I. WHITE PUB. CO.,
1357 Genesee St., Hollywood, Calif.

3 FOOT OR YARD BEAN
So called from the length of its pod. Many of the pods grow to THREE FEET or more in length. A good eating string bean used extensively in Japan.
A big producer, a great CURIOSITY and a rare and costly seed. A sample of FUJIMANE or Daylight Bean & Chinese Cabbage with each pkt of Yard Beans.
Pkt 10 cts. 3 for 25 cts. 7 for 50 cts. 15 pkts for $1.00
The Rundle-Murphy Co. Dept 10 Westport Conn.

What 15c Will Bring You
Only 15c gives you the Pathfinder 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a cheerful illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center for people everywhere; an independent home paper that tells the story of the world's news in an interesting, understandable way. This splendid National weekly costs but $1 a year. The Pathfinder is the Ford of the publishing world. Splendid serial and short stories and miscellany. Question Box answers your questions and is a mine of information. Send 15 cents and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15 cents does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends.
From the Nation's Capital
The Pathfinder, 688 Landgdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

$500 Prize Contest
The Lester Park-Edward Whiteside photoplay, "Empty Arms," inspired the song "Empty Arms". A third verse is wanted, and to the writer of the best one submitted a prize of $500.00 cash will be paid. This contest is open to everybody. You simply write the words for a third verse—it is not necessary that you see the photoplay before doing so. Send us your name and address and we shall send you a copy of the words of the song, the rules of the contest and a short synopsis of this photo play. It will cost you nothing to enter the contest.
"EMPTY ARMS" CONTEST EDITOR,
World M. P. Corporation,
245 W. 47th St., Dept. 683, New York, N. Y.

Two Turkish Towels
Good Size Soft And Fleecy
AFTER bathing there is nothing quite as fine as a good rub down with a Turkish towel, in fact it is the best towel for all purposes, whether for the bathroom, guestroom or everyday family use. They absorb the water much more readily than other towels and the soft fleece-like surface imparts to the body a delightful feeling of warmth and well-being. They are also fine for baby's toilet as they will not hurt the tender skin. The towels offered here are 15 inches wide and 32 inches long which is a good convenient size for all-round family use, and are of good weight, well made and finished. We will make you a present of two of these towels upon the terms of the following offer.
Given To You! For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 50 cents each we will send you one pair (2) of these fine Turkish Towels free by parcel post, prepaid. Reward No. 9912.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

The Family Doctor

The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be taken to your local doctor.
Address The Family Doctor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Sign your true name and give your address. Name will not be published

MRS. F. G., Calumet, Iowa.—Your case is one of chronic dyspepsia. Take some compound bicarbonate of sodium tablets after meals. Also take a tablespoonful of American Oil with your meals to lubricate the intestines, and also to get rid of your constipation. Of course you must keep your bowels open and regular.

MRS. J. J. S., Corydon, Ky.—You have strained your vocal cords in singing, hence your loss of voice. Rest and use of Dobell's solution as a gargle and spray plus the application of a mustard plaster to the outside of throat is all that you can do for the present. Rest and time will restore your voice. Your husband must be suffering from ulcer of the stomach. A starch-free diet and one composed mostly of liquids will be beneficial. Also have your husband take three drops of dilute muriatic acid after meals three times a day. Take the acid in water.

MISS E. C., Philippi, West Va.—For the choking sensation following the taking of food, no remedy is better than five-grain tablets of asafœtida taken after meals.

MRS. B. H. B., Madison Heights, Va.—You can remove the warts by using caustic soda. This remedy must be applied only to the warts and in a small quantity—one drop or so.

MRS. W. B., Portage, Wisc.—You may have tuberculosis and not show the tubercular germ. Maybe you have a lung abscess. From the X-ray, this seems possible in your case. Of course you must eat the eggs and drink milk as indicated by your family physician. Only time will determine the final outcome in your case as a positive diagnosis is impossible.

MRS. W. F. H., Belleville, Ill.—Chronic constipation is best relieved by eating green and coarse vegetables, avoiding sweets of all kinds, and, with meals, taking a tablespoonful of American Oil. You can also take one or two cascara pills at night.

MRS. C. A., Goodman, Mo.—For the acidity of stomach, avoid starchy foods of all kinds, and take five drops, well diluted, of hydrochloric acid, dilute, after meals.

MRS. E., Ripley, Ohio.—You better not take any remedies for tapeworm while you are nursing your baby.

MRS. A. D. J., Creola, Ala.—Have your daughter avoid sweets of all kinds, drink plenty of water and, for awhile, live on rice and milk only. Locally, apply Lassar's paste to the weeping eczematous spots. Apply the paste at night. Only by diet and general hygiene and care can eczema of this nature be cured.

MRS. H. R. M., Gorman, Texas.—One of the best stimulating hair-tonics is a two per cent. solution of resorcin in equal parts of alcohol and water. This lotion can be applied every night after thoroughly brushing the hair.

MRS. S. J. R., Rotan, Texas.—See a good dentist and have your teeth thoroughly cleaned. Then gargle and wash the mouth out with Dobell's solution three or four times a day.

MRS. C. D. W., Webb, Miss.—There are no "beads" that will hoodoo goiter that we know of. Better consult some good surgeon and have the tumor removed by operation. This is the only help for her.

MRS. S. M. F., Tippecanoe City, Ohio.—Probably a malarial neuritis is the trouble with your mother. Have her take a tablespoonful of tincture of cinchona after meals, and apply, locally, a solution of camphor and chloral hydrate.

MISS C. L., Benzonia, Mich.—Ringing in the ears may be due to a cold, to wax in the ears and to a chronic catarrh of the middle ear. Better consult some good ear-specialist and see just what the trouble is.

MRS. B. G., Buckley, Wash.—Your are anemic and run down. Take, for all your symptoms, Basham's mixture in tablespoonful doses well diluted after meals. Also diet and eat only wholesome foods, such as you know will agree with you.

MRS. L. H., Bellport, L. I.—Epilepsy is practicably incurable. Have your sister live on a simple diet, avoiding sweets of all kinds, and also keep her bowels regular. She might also take, three times a day, ten-grain tablets of bromide of soda after meals. Any treatment that only makes for "better feeling" without promise of curing the main trouble is worse than useless—simply waste of money.

MISS M. W., New Brunswick, N. J.—Moles are best removed by use of the actual cautery in skilled hands. Trichlor-acetic acid can be used also, but must be used by one accustomed to its use. Do not try to use it on your own initiative.

MRS. J. K., Houston, Texas.—Sleeplessness has a multitude of causes. Maybe you drink too much tea and coffee, or eat too much at night, just before retiring. Maybe, also, you have gotten the habit of wakefulness at night. Better sit up and read until you are very sleepy and then go to bed, relax, and think of nothing but sleep. The appearance of glass before the eyes is simply physiological and must be disregarded. Don't get into the habit of taking any drug to make you sleep—it will soon make you a nervous wreck.

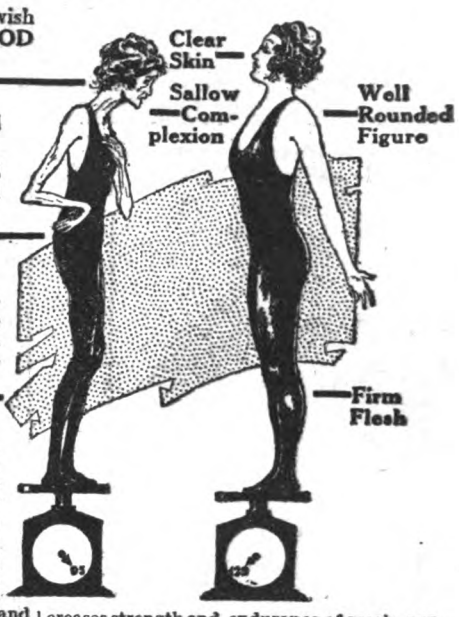
MRS. J. F., Bull Run, Va.—You are all suffering from malarial poison. Take two teaspoonfuls of Warburg's tincture after meals, well diluted. Get the modified tincture which has added some aloes for constipation.

MRS. E. E., Republic, Mich.—Your heart trouble is probably due to being rather fat, gas in the intestines, and lack of out-of-door exercise. As a tonic, try Basham's mixture in tablespoonful doses, well diluted, after meals.

MRS. J. D. W., Abord, Ky.—Your trouble is rheumatic in character. Take five-grain tablets of salicylate of soda after meals.

MRS. S. C. H., Snowball, Ark.—For your nervousness take a ten-grain pill of asafœtida after meals. For the constipation take one or two compound cathartic pills at night. Of course regulate your bowels and live the simple life.

MRS. S. W. W., Washington; V. H., Ohio.—Nujol and American Oil are the same. High blood pressure is dangerous and should have immediate treatment.



MRS. W. Z., Bay City, Mich.—One of the best remedies for chronic rheumatism is salicylate of soda, taken in five-grain tablets after meals.

MRS. H. B., Big Run, Pa.—For the "habitual sneezing" in the morning, spray the nose with some oil-spray such as alboline nasal spray. Take also, internally, ten-grain tablets of bicarbonate of soda after meals.

MISS L. C., Cortgie, Ga.—Apply to the painful joints, chloroform liniment. Take, internally, five-grain tablets of salicylate of soda after meals. Drink plenty of water and avoid sweets of all kinds.

MRS. G. B. G., Middlefield, Ohio.—Would not try to reduce at all. You must have varicose veins. Bandage the limb in question with an elastic-woven bandage during the day and remove the bandage at night. Of course, if there are ulcers on the leg, these must be treated before applying the bandage.

Weigh Yourself, Then Take Genuine Yeast Vitamine Tablets—and watch the results!
Thin, weak, run down folks who wish something to help them put on GOOD FIRM FLESH, round out face and figure, and increase their strength and energy, should try this wonderful nutrition product.
ONE DOLLAR PACKAGE ABSOLUTELY FREE, as explained below, to readers of this paper, for the next five days, to prove to you what they will do.
We want to prove to you the difference between taking yeast vitamine tablets mixed with drugs and Genuine Yeast Vitamine Tablets, absolutely pure and unadulterated.
Investigations of the Medical Research Committee would seem to show that no matter what quantity of food may be taken if such food is deficient in vitamines you gradually lose flesh and become thin and weakened, while a much smaller quantity of food, rich in Vitamines, quickly produces good firm flesh and increases weight, strength and energy, provided your blood contains a sufficient quantity of oxygenated organic iron to enable you to assimilate your food properly. Without organic iron, both food and Vitamines are absolutely useless. Organic iron takes up oxygen from your lungs. This oxygenated organic iron unites with your digested food as it is absorbed into your blood, like fire unites with coal or wood, and by so doing it creates tremendous power and energy. Without organic iron in your blood your food merely passes through your body without doing you any good.
For centuries scientists tried in vain to produce organic iron. At last the problem was solved so that you may now obtain pure organic iron from any druggist under the name of "Nuxated Iron."
It has been arranged to give to every purchaser of Nuxated Iron, who wishes to put on flesh or increase weight, a large regular $1.00 package of Genuine Yeast Vitamine Tablets, absolutely free.
DO NOT TAKE VITAMINES UNLESS YOU WISH SOMETHING TO HELP INCREASE YOUR WEIGHT up to what a person should normally weigh. If you merely desire greater physical and mental vigor, strength and endurance, we recommend that you take Nuxated Iron only. It is often remarkable what an astonishing difference it makes in a person's appearance to round out face and figure with a few pounds of good firm flesh and it is often equally surprising what a tremendous amount of "pep," vigor, force and energy a little more oxygenated organic iron will give a person whose blood is deficient in this magic-like substance. Over four million people are using Nuxated Iron annually, their experience proving that it increases strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run down people in many cases within two weeks' time. If you want that force, that stamina and strength so necessary to success and power in every walk of life, you owe it to yourself to try Nuxated Iron today. If you do not receive all and even greater benefits than you expect, the manufacturers will promptly refund your money.

GET YOUR FREE
$1.00 PACKAGE OF GENUINE YEAST VITAMINE TABLETS from your druggist today by using this FREE COUPON
This coupon, if used within one week, entitles you to one regular $1.00 package of Genuine Yeast Vitamine Tablets absolutely free with each bottle of Nuxated Iron that you purchase. If your dealer does not have our Vitamine Tablets he can easily obtain them for you from any wholesale house.
Cut out this coupon and present it to your dealer today.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 34.)

Would like to receive letters and old papers of any kind from the sisters.—MRS. W. I. MONEY, Cypress, Fla.

I would like to get the song, "The Green Fields of Virginia."—LENNA HAYWARD, Dennysville, R. R. 1, Maine.

I would be glad if the sisters would send me sheet music of which they have grown tired.—IRENE P. BOWERS, Jeffress, Virginia.

Full information on care of skunks, everything I would need to know to start profitable fur business.—MRS. NORA MORGAN, Spier, N. C.

Poem containing these lines:
"Crumbs were spilled on the floor,
But, Bob, he wasn't afraid."
—M. MERL GREEN, Polk, Ohio.

Cheery letters for Mrs. R. N. Turner, an old lady with dislocated shoulder. Do not look for answers. Requested by her granddaughter. Address: Mrs. R. N. Turner, Zuni, Isle of Wight Co., Tennessee.

Will members of the different states please send me pieces of calico for quilt, also poem about saloons being "bar to Heaven, gateway to Hell," and recipe for good cake without eggs.—MRS. D. E. DUBBS, Vesta, Minn.

Poem containing these words:
"Little heads all brown and golden,
Little forms on bench and stool,
Drooped so languid, warm and weary,
In the hillside, village school."
—MRS. JOHN H. SHUE, Hanover, R. R. 5, Pa.

I am very anxious to obtain a copy of an old reader, think it was McGuffey's Fifth or Sixth Reader, containing poems, "The Mariner's Dream," "The Cataract of Lodore," and "The Old Clock on the Stairs."—MRS. L. L. HINTON, Pontotoc, Miss.

Old papers or magazines would be appreciated. Living fifty miles from town. Reading matter will be passed on to others.—MRS. ANNA ELLEN, Lost Lake, Alta., Canada. Via Peace River.

Remedies

CROUP.—Make a syrup of white sugar and water and add a pinch of alum; it cuts the phlegm and gives relief almost at once.—HUBBY'S PAL, Aleppo, Pa.

WARTS.—Apply turpentine freely. This may not be effective in every case but it cured our little girl of warts.—MRS. MARY NORLANDER, Milaca, Minn.

EARACHE.—One teaspoon sweet oil and yolk of one egg. Fry until hard, squeeze all the sweet oil from yolk and apply while hot, on piece of cotton inserted in ear.—A COMFORT SISTER, Boehrs, S. Dak.

WHOOPING COUGH.—A good remedy for whooping cough is a tea made from dry chestnut leaves or take one cup of this tea and a cup of sugar and boil down to a syrup. Give freely to children.—MRS. ERNEST ROSENKOETTER, St. Louis, 8630 Church Road, Mo.

Apply kerosene to fresh cut and it will stop flow of blood. Do not bind on or it will blister.

For a serious wound or cut, take a shovel of hot coals and sprinkle with a handful of sugar and smoke the wound well while it is fresh and it will not be sore.

Always keep all medicine in medicine closet or in one place, so that it will be easily found when needed. Have bottles containing poison marked plainly and corks fastened in with wire.—SMILES, Milner, Ga.

Deafness
Perfect hearing is now being restored in every condition of deafness or defective hearing from causes such as Catarrhal Deafness, Relaxed or Sunken Drums, Thickened Drums, Roaring and Hissing Sounds, Perforated, Wholly or Partially Destroyed Drums, Discharge from Ears, etc.
Wilson Common-Sense Ear Drums
"Little Wireless Phones for the Ears" require no medicine but effectively replace what is lacking or defective in the natural ear drums. They are simple devices, which the wearer easily fits into the ears where they are invisible. Soft, safe and comfortable.
Write today for our 168 page FREE book on DEAFNESS, giving you full particulars and testimonials.
WILSON EAR DRUM CO., Incorporated
542 Inter-Southern Bldg. LOUISVILLE, KY.

ALL THIS FREE
Gold-plated Lavalliere and Chain, pair Earbobs, Gold-plated Expansion Bracelet with Im. Watch, guaranteed quality and 3 Gold-plated Rings ALL FREE for selling only 15 pieces Jewelry at 10 cents each.
EAGLE WATCH CO.,
Dept. 15, East Boston, Mass.

BIRTH STONE RING FREE
14K GOLD finished, guaranteed to give satisfaction, with stone for any month, to introduce our catalogue. Send 13c to cover cost of advertising and mailing. Send size.
SUN JEWELRY CO., Dept 109, EAST BOSTON, MASS

A REAL 22 Rifle HAMILTON ACTUALLY GIVEN AWAY
for selling only 22 Pkgs. Bluette, Our Famous wash Bluing at 10c or 48 Pkg. Sachet Perfume at 10c. Order choice. Both fast sellers. You'll be surprised how easy it is to earn this Fine True Shooting 22 Cal. Rifle. Guaranteed.
CHICAGO BLUING WKS., 1920 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 701, CHICAGO

Sisters' Circle Pin Free!
EVERY COMFORT Sister should wear this beautiful Sisters' Circle Brooch Pin—the one and only official Sisters' "badge" of membership, uniting in one grand Circle of friendship and love the thousands of COMFORT Sisters living in all parts of the world. It is the size of a 25-cent piece, gold finished, and the front is inlaid with handsome cloisonne enamel in two colors—your choice of red or blue—with the words "COMFORT Sisters" deeply embossed, as shown in the illustration.
If you are a COMFORT Sister, send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50c and we will send you a Sisters' Circle Pin free and prepaid. Or, if you prefer, you may send 50c to pay for a one-year renewal (not your own), and we will send you the Pin free. Be sure to mention color wanted. Reward No. 8471.
Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

ALL THIS JEWELRY FREE
This "Lucky Tige" CHARM with 36-inch silk Cord, this Im. WRIST WATCH with adjustable leather strap and buckle, this pair of sparkling pierceless EAR RINGS, 3 Gold plated RINGS and this handsome 36-inch Oriental Rice Bead NECKLACE with Tassel Beaded Drop. We give ALL these 7 articles FREE for selling only 12 Jewelry Novelties at 10 cents each. Send today. We trust you and treat you square.
H. W. MEAD MFG. CO., Providence, R. I.

Four Wheel Chairs in February

630 Is COMFORT'S Total to Date

The four February wheel chairs go to Mrs. A. J. Walls, Dayton, Wash., 127; Johnnie Brasher, R. F. D. 6, Box 27, Crockett, Texas, 80; Mrs. Jane Goodwin, Beaver, Okla., 68; Harvey T. Perry, Winfield, Ala., 64. The figures following their respective names indicate the number of subscriptions sent in by them or by their friends for them.

Johnnie Brasher, age 22, has been paralyzed from his knees down the past two years, so that he is unable to walk or even stand. His sister, Mrs. John Williams, writes that his condition appears to have been caused by the "flu." As he is strong in his arms and body, this wheel chair will enable him to get about and thus be a help to his widowed mother who has to care for him.

Mrs. Jane Goodwin, age 73, is paralyzed in both legs. Mrs. Bertha Benger and Mrs. Flo Kanp, the two ladies that sent in the entire club of 68 subscriptions for Mrs. Goodwin's chair, write that she "needs comforting in this way, if ever a poor soul did, and now is the time to comfort her." At present she is being cared for by her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Kellar.

LOIS TURNER ENJOYING HER COMFORT WHEEL CHAIR.

Hartey T. Perry, age 10, has been paralyzed from his hips down since he was four years old, due to spinal trouble and rheumatism. He is unable to walk or even stand, but at times drags himself across the floor by his elbows. As he has full use of his arms, the wheel chair will enable him to get about.

Mrs. A. J. Walls, whose name heads our February list of wheel-chair winners, is a crippled shut-in who needs a wheel chair; and that is all I know about her. Her good friend, Mrs. Laura Gabriel, who sent in the entire club of 117 subscriptions for her, omitted to give any other information about Mrs. Walls, and this has delayed the shipment of her chair until I receive the requisite information for which I have written, and doubtless it will be forthcoming within a few days. Before sending out a wheel chair I require information as to the applicant's age, size (including approximate height and weight), general physical condition, and how and to what extent crippled and disabled, which is necessary to guide me in ordering a wheel chair of the right size (there are three sizes) and proper equipment to suit the particular case. The person that sends in the first club for any particular wheel-chair applicant usually encloses with it a statement of the age, condition and circumstances of the shut-in for whom the chair is desired; I wish this practice might be adopted in every instance of a first club for, or first communication regarding, a wheel-chair applicant.

The two pictures here reproduced with accompanying letters of thanks are especially interesting, also this month's Roll of Honor.

Sincerely yours,
W. H. GANNETT,
Publisher of COMFORT.

P. S. For the information of our many new subscribers let me explain that for each and every 150 one-year subscriptions to COMFORT, at 50 cents each, sent in either singly or in clubs by persons who direct that they are to be credited to COMFORT'S WHEEL-CHAIR CLUB instead of claiming the premiums to which they would be entitled, I give a FIRST-CLASS INVALID WHEEL CHAIR to some needy crippled Shut-in and pay the freight, too. It is a large and expensive premium for me to give for that number of subscriptions, but I am always glad to do my part a little faster each month than you do yours.

Gets About in Her COMFORT Wheel Chair to Do Quite a Bit of Work and Visits Friends

Desloge, Mo.

Dear Mr. Gannett:

Although I received my wheel chair last spring I have just got around to have a picture taken of me in it, which I now enclose and hope to see printed in COMFORT, with my thanks to you and all others that aided me in getting it. I think the wheel chair a wonderful premium. I can wheel myself around in it and do quite a bit of work; also have been able to visit friends in this way since I have had my chair.

Your grateful friend,
Lois Turner.

Could Not Do Without Her COMFORT Wheel Chair

Tell, Texas.

Dear Mr. Gannett:

I received my wheel chair and am truly thankful to you and my many friends for kindness in helping me to obtain it. I am sending you a picture of me in my chair. I am visiting my daughter, Mrs. J. A. Crooks, at Tell, Texas, and I brought my chair with me, for I could not do without it.

MRS. ANNIE MATLOCK VISITING WITH HER COMFORT WHEEL CHAIR.

Truly yours,
(Mrs.) Annie Matlock.

COMFORT'S Roll of Honor

The Roll of Honor comprises the names of those who have sent five or more subscriptions, or a dollar or more in money, to credit of the Wheel-Chair Club during the month previous. Following each name is the number of subscriptions or amount of cash sent.

Mrs. Laura Gabriel, Wash., for Mrs. A. J. Walls, 117 subs; Mrs. Bertha Benger and Mrs. Flo Kanp, Okla., for Mrs. Jane Goodwin, 68 subs; Miss Annie Perry, Ala., for Harvey Perry, 30 subs and $1.25; Mrs. Joe Griffin, Ark., for Elvie Tedford, 28 subs; Mrs. Charner Colvin, La., for Clovis Colvin, 19; Ruth and Dolorice Norton, Texas, for Johnnie Brasher, 15; Mrs. John Williams, Texas, for Johnnie Brasher, 12; Mrs. Will Tutherow, N. C., for Clarence Tutherow, 11 subs and $1.55; Ira B. Norton, Okla., for own, 10 subs; Mrs. J. E. Walls, Wash., for Mrs. A. J. Walls, 10; Mrs. Adell Sumner, Fla., for Mrs. M. J. Sumner, 10; Mrs. Charley Wilkerson, Ark., for Alvie Tedford, 8; Mrs. Pearl Newell, Texas, for H. F. Selers, 7; Dora Sizemore, Okla., for Ethel Sizemore, 7; Rosla Melton, Tenn., for Johnnie Melton, 6; Mrs. C. V. Harris, Ala., for Mrs. Sarah Hasford, 5 subs and $1.00; Mrs. Iolar Borders, Ala., for Vertice Borders, 5 subs; Louise Bryson, Okla., for general, 5; B. F. Oneal, Texas for Mary Jane Oneal, 5; Mrs. Thomas Cude, Texas, for Johnnie Brasher, 5; Edith Pixler, W. Va., for general, 4 subs and $1.00; Mrs. O. E. Beal, S. Dak., for general, $5.00; Mrs. F. M. Parker, Wisc., for general, $5.00; Mrs. Louise Wine, Mich., for general, $2.50; Mrs. J. C. Seafler, W. Va., for general, $1.00; Arthur A. Harding, Mass., for general, $1.00; Mrs. Annie Latham, Mich., for general, $1.00; Mrs. Parrie Hulett, Texas, for general, $1.00; Mrs. Ollie Wilson, Ill., for general, $1.00; Mrs. Mary Beals, Mich., for general, $1.00; Mrs. W. H. Seibert, Calif., for general, $1.00; Katheryn Ackerson, Ill., for general, $1.00; Mrs. John Merchen, Utah, for general, $1.00.

Neatness

Neatness is an asset in any walk of life. Some persons are naturally that way and seem unable to do things in a slovenly manner. Others find it difficult to take pains and are constantly losing opportunities because they neglect the small things that make up the sum total of perfect work. If you belong to the latter class, you should recognize it early in life and make a determined effort to remedy matters. Practice neatness in small things and it will soon become a habit. Perhaps your personal appearance will admit of some improvement, or you might write more neatly than you now do, or even speak more precisely. It is attention to the small and apparently insignificant details that makes one man's work better than another's. Michael Angelo, the great painter said, "Trifles make perfection and perfection is no trifle." It was a chance remark but it expresses a truth as plainly as volumes could. If I were asked to give a boy the most valuable bit of advice he will need as he journeys along the road of life, I would say, "Take pains. Be neat."

Why Men Take Mastin's Yeast Vitamon To Clear The Skin

Build Firm "Stay-There" Flesh, Strengthen the Nerves and Increase Energy.

EASY AND ECONOMICAL—RESULTS QUICK.

If you want to quickly clear your skin and complexion, put some firm healthy flesh on your bones, increase your nerve force and power and look and feel far better, simply try taking two of Mastin's tiny yeast VITAMON tablets with each meal and watch the results. Mastin's VITAMON tablets contain highly concentrated yeast-vitamines as well as the two other still more important vitamines (Fat soluble A and Water soluble C) combined with true organic iron and the necessary lime salts all of which Science says your body must have to keep you strong, vigorous, well formed and fortified against the germs of disease. Mastin's Vitamon Tablets will not upset the stomach or cause gas, but, on the contrary, are a great aid to digestion, to overcome constipation and as a general conditioner of the whole system. Pimples, boils and skin eruptions seem to vanish like magic under this purifying influence, the complexion often becomes fresh and clear, with cheeks glowing with ruddy health, the flesh firm instead of flabby, the eyes bright instead of dull.

Of what use are fine features with an ugly, mottled skin, flabby flesh, sunken cheeks, pouches under the eyes or a careworn, sickly-looking face?

WARNING: Your safety and protection depend upon getting MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS—if it isn't MASTIN'S it isn't the Original and Genuine VITAMON—the World's Standard—now used by millions. Beware of imitations, cheap substitutes or so-called "yeast vitamine tablets." Insist upon MASTIN'S. At all good druggists.

MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS
THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE YEAST VITAMINE TABLET

MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS Are Fully Guaranteed In Every Respect Or Your Money Will Be Promptly Refunded.

if it isn't MASTIN'S it isn't VITAMON
The World's Standard-Used by Millions

Crooked Spines STRAIGHTENED

Cure Yourself or Your Child at Home, Without Pain or Inconvenience, of any Spinal Deformity with the Wonderful PHILO BURT METHOD.

No matter how old you are, or how long you have suffered, or what kind of spinal deformity you have, there is benefit and a possible cure for you. The Philo Burt Appliance is as firm as steel and yet flexible and very comfortable to wear. It gives an even, perfect support to the weakened or deformed spine. It is as easy to take off or put on as a coat, causes no inconvenience, and does not chafe or irritate. No one can notice you wearing it.

Cure Yourself At Home

The Appliance is made to fit each individual case. It weighs ounces where other supports weigh pounds. The price is within the reach of all. Hundreds of doctors recommend it.

We GUARANTEE Satisfaction and LET YOU USE IT 30 DAYS.

If you or your child are suffering from spinal trouble of any nature, write me at once for our new book with full information and references. Describe case fully so we can advice you intelligently. The Philo Burt Method consisting of a scientific appliance and a course of especial exercises, has produced wonder benefit or cure in over 30,000 cases.

Philo Burt Company, 334-15 Odd Fellows Temple, Jamestown, N. Y.

Don't Wear a Truss

We Guarantee Your Comfort

with every Brooks' Appliance. New discovery. Wonderful. No obnoxious springs or pads. Automatic Air Cushions. Binds and draws the broken parts together as you would a broken limb. No salves. No plasters. No lies. Durable, cheap. Sent on trial to prove it. Full information and booklet free.

C. E. BROOKS
187 R State St., Marshall, Mich.

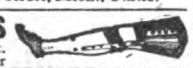
The Bee Cell Supporter

A BOON TO WOMANKIND

Made from the purest, softest rubber. Six cups or faces render misplacement absolutely impossible. Endorsed by the medical profession. Send us $2.50 and we will mail you one postpaid in plain package. Money back if not entirely satisfactory. Write for descriptive circular. It's FREE.

The Bee Cell Co., Dept. 168 White Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

LOOK YOUR BEST. Make sure of smooth white arms, face and neck in spite of sallowness, blotches, freckles, blackheads etc. If you want to be charming and attractive—Don't pay 50c but send 10c at once for sealed Package, which will transform your appearance instantly. Warranted. TOILET COMPOUND CO. Box 1927A, Boston, Mass.



Can you afford to

STAMMER? or STUTTER

It ruins the future of child or adult. Send postage for large free book "The Correction of Stammering and Stuttering." Methods successful for over a quarter-century. THE LEWIS INSTITUTE. 12 Lewis Bldg., 77 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

"FIBRE-LITE" LIMBS

Easy Payments—Do Nature's Work. AGENTS WANTED who wear Leg. Good Pay. FREE Fibre Sample. DESCRIBE STUMP TO WORMAN CO., 252-C Hennepin, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Comfort's League of Cousins

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 24.)

Angeles. I have only seen one letter from a cousin in Los Angeles.

There is a big brush fire raging in the hills back behind Los Angeles and it is endangering a few homes and also a big water shed.

In the summer weeks I spend my vacation at Catalina Island. This last summer I went hunting, but I failed to catch any of Billy's brothers as they ran too fast for me.

I wish some of the cousins would write to me and for the best letter I will send my picture. I must close now, for time is getting scarce.

Your nephew, WILLIAM STRATTON.

William, you need not have worried about your namesake and my co-laborer in the Field of Letters being desirous of making his supper "off" of your charming epistle. Billy, of course, never considers any meal complete unless a certain supply of paper—either raw, stewed or baked—forms a part of the repast. But whether the dish before him be bran muffins or paper, cocoa or correspondence, he always eats this, at any time of the day, "off" of a golden oak, quarter-sawed, dining-table of early fourth-century Byzantine design. The table is covered with a cloth of fruit-of-the-loom damask having a design showing a field of Wakefield cabbage in full bloom. Bill draws his armchair up to this table of an evening, props his volume of Macaulay against the salt cellar, and proceeds to partake of a generous meal in a leisurely and dignified manner. You can see how different all this is from any idea of making a light and hasty supper "off" of your letter—and probably dropping crumbs of muffin and paper off the edge of the letter and down upon our dining-room Smyrna art square. No, indeed; Bill needs more than a letter for a dinner-table.

I hope you got that brush fire extinguished. Will, before it burned up your water shed. I suppose a water shed is more difficult to burn up than is a wood shed, but a good lively brush fire can make ashes of almost anything from a cake of ice down.

Your school must certainly be broad and deep as well as high if it holds 2,925 pupils. I should think it would be easy to get lost in this scholastic crowd and turn up in the wrong class. But you Californians have a big state and are used to doing things on a large scale. It is staggering to think of the amount of knowledge it must take to "go around" your nearly 3,000 students. Your school must be seriously depleting the available stock of knowledge, William, and you will probably end up by having to import a new supply from China—where there is popularly supposed to be a large surplus of wisdom left over from the days of old Confucius.

Great Scott, William, I hope you are not serious when you write about having gone to Catalina and chased some of Bill's relatives who live there! I think you had better write again and straighten this out. I know that California is a long ways from Brooklyn and railroad fares are high—but if Billy should take it into his head to go out to Los Angeles and investigate this little hunting expedition of yours, well, it's certain you would be eating your supper "off" of the mantlepiece after he had finished investigating.

League Shut-in and Mercy Work for March

"Inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these you have done it unto Me."

Written references from doctor and postmaster must positively accompany all appeals from shut-ins. Every month brings to me many letters which disregard this simple and necessary rule. Appeals unaccompanied by the references required will be destroyed.

Ada Champion, care of Stella Murchison, Shelby, N. C. A poor invalid who for sixteen years has never been out of pain. Asks the prayers of the cousins and for any material aid that can be given. Sallie Satterwhite, Blairstown, Box 24, Mo. Unable to walk, but struggles pluckily to aid herself in all possible ways. Give her a dime shower—and more than this, for she deserves it. Mrs. Viola Mollett, Boons Camp, Ky. Ill in bed with a husband almost blind. Has a boy of 10 years and three girls ranging from 12 to 13. Second-hand clothing will help, and money that will buy this unfortunate family food during the cold months. Irene E. Pruett, Lobelville, Tenn. A bedridden widow whose only hope is an operation she cannot afford. This poor woman cannot even sit up without pain. You have the chance to aid her helplessness. It is your money against her life. Mrs. Edna Bandy, Franklin, R. R. 9, Tenn. A shut-in who asks for letters, cards and quilt pieces that can aid her to pass lonely hours. J. E. Simpson, North Bradford, Maine. Crippled with rheumatism for twenty years and now afflicted with failing sight to add to his helplessness. A well-recommended and worthy case. Dennis Cobb, Cobbtown, Ga. A crippled lad of sixteen who has not walked for four years. Give him a little of the happiness that belongs to youth.

Those listed this month have passed through the winter months of days that shut-in hours have made very long indeed. Reward them now by cheer and gifts to show them their brave struggles have been worth making. Only a little aid on your part will mean so much to those whom misfortune makes pitifully grateful for small help. Remember this and lay aside forgetfulness and delay.

Lovingly,

Uncle Lisha

Comfort's League of Cousins

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of COMFORT'S immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers.

Membership is restricted to COMFORT subscribers and costs fifty-five cents, only five cents more than the regular subscription to COMFORT which is included. The fifty-five cents makes you a member of the League and gives you an attractive League button with the letters "C. L. O. C.," a handsome certificate of membership with your name engrossed thereon, and the privilege of having your name in the letter list, also a paid-in-advance subscription to COMFORT. You continue a League member as long as you keep up your subscription to COMFORT. There are no annual dues, so after you have once joined all you have to do to keep in good standing is to keep your subscription to COMFORT paid up.

How to become a Member

Send fifty-five cents to COMFORT'S Subscription Department, Augusta, Maine, with your request to be admitted into COMFORT'S LEAGUE OF COUSINS, and you will at once receive the League button and your membership certificate and number; you will also receive COMFORT for one year if you are a new subscriber; but if you are already a subscriber your subscription will be renewed or extended one full year beyond date of expiration.

The League numbering over forty thousand members, undoubtedly is the greatest society of young people on earth.

Address all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and they will promptly reach the head of the department for which they are intended.

The Emporium of Bargains and Opportunities

Pithy Little Advertisements that are Interesting, Instructive and Profitable to Read, for they put you wise to the newest and best in the market and keep you in touch with the world's progress.

AGENTS WANTED

Agents—Sodereze: we are paying $7 an hour taking orders for this newest invention; send for Free Outfit and Samples. American Products Co., 5615 American Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

We Start You In Business, furnishing everything; men and women, $30 to $100 weekly operating our "New System Candy Factories" home anywhere. Booklet free. W. Hillyer Ragsdale, Drawer 5, East Orange, N. J.

Agents—Write for big soap offer. Quick Seller, Big Money Maker. Ho-Ro-Co, 131 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo.

We Start You without a Dollar. Soaps, Extracts, Perfumes—Toilet Goods. Experience unnecessary. Carnation Co., 131 Olive, St. Louis.

Agents—Make a Dollar an Hour. Sell Mendets, a patent patch for instantly mending leaks in all utensils. Sample package free. Collette Mfg. Co., Dept. 453-B, Amsterdam, N.Y.

Sell Necessities. Everybody needs and buys the "Business Guide." Bryant cleared $360.00 in July. Send for sample. It's Free. Nichols Co., Dept. 6B, Naperville, Ill.

Large Shirt Manufacturer wants Agents to sell complete line of shirts direct to wearer. Exclusive patterns. Big values. Free samples. Madison Mills, 503 Broadway, New York.

Agents: Sell full line of guaranteed hosiery for men, women and children. Must wear 12 months or replaced free. All styles, colors and finest line of silk hose. Often take orders for dozen pairs in one family. Permanent customers and repeat orders make you steady income. Write for sample outfit. Thomas Mfg. Co., Class 412, Dayton, Ohio.

Agents! 1922's Greatest Sensation. 21-piece toilet article set selling like blazes at $1.75 with $1.00 dressmaker's shears free to each customer. Line up with Davis for 1922. E. M. Davis Co., Dept. 505, Chicago.

350% Profits Easy Seller. Kleanrite. Washes Clothes without rubbing. Sample Free. Best-ever Prod. Co., 1947-V Irving Park, Chicago.

Agents:—$100 Weekly. Automobile owners wild with enthusiasm. Marvelous invention doubles power, mileage, efficiency. Saves cost first day. Sensational sales everywhere. Territory going like wildfire. $26 sample outfit and Ford Car free. Write quick. Ovee Co., Dept. 113, Louisville, Ky.

Men and women make $100 upwards weekly selling greatest labor and money saving household necessity. Big repeater. Good Crew Managers proposition. Free sample and particulars. Rolly Co., D-1, Hastings, Nebraska.

Agents—Steady Income. Large manufacturer of Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods, etc., wishes representative in each locality. Big profits, honest goods. Whole or spare time. Credit given. Send for particulars. Freeport Mfg. Co., 60 Main St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Agents! A sale in every home for our beautiful Dress Goods, Silks and General Yard Goods. Quick sales! Big profits! Large book of 1000 handsome fabric samples. Write today. National Importing & Mfg. Co., Dept. 24X, 573 Broadway, New York Sell Pudding Powders—delicious desserts. Fast sellers, quick repeaters big profits. Send for terms and free samples. C. H. Stuart & Co., 71 Broadway, Newark, New York.

Agents: New 2 in 1 Reversible Double-duty raincoat. One side rich tan dress coat, other side storm overcoat. Two coats for the price of one. Saves $20. Positively guaranteed waterproof or money back. Commission paid same day you take orders. No capital required. Sample furnished. Great seller. Real money for agents. Parker Mfg. Co., 417 Rue St., Dayton, Ohio.

We Pay $200 monthly salary, furnish rig and expenses to all who qualify introducing guaranteed poultry and stock powders. Rigler Company, X314, Springfield, Illinois.

Agents Sell Neverfail Iron Rust And Stain Remover. Huge profits. Big line. Sample. Write today. Sanford Beal Co. Inc., Newark, N. Y. Dept. 4.

Men's Shirts—Big sellers - Factory to consumer, $15.00 daily. Undersell stores. Complete line. Free Samples to workers. Chicago Shirt Co., 208 So. LaSalle, Dept. 106, Chicago.

Big Money and Fast Sales. Every owner buys Gold Initials for his auto. You charge $1.50; make $1.35. Ten orders daily easy. Write for particulars and free samples. American Monogram Co., Dept. 64, East Orange, N. J.

Make $2 an hour with new article that removes stains: other products. Write for free demonstrating outfit and start taking orders at once Christy, 6 Union, Newark, New York.

Unusual Opportunity. County rights free. Quick sales. Large profits. Repeat orders. Experience unnecessary. P. Barnes, Togo Street, Casadero, Calif.

Sell Minitmend For Tires And Tubes—cost 2c. repair: surpasses vulcanizing, saves 500%. Every auto and accessory dealer buys. Profits amazing. Shaw made $21 first day. Hart $155 first week. Particulars and free sample. The Colonial Rubber Co., Dept. 96, Philadelphia, Pa.

Agents. Sell rich looking 36x68 imported Rugs, $1 each; Carter, Tenn., sold 115 in 4 days, profit $87; you can do same. Write for sample offer selling plan; exclusive territory. Sample rug by parcel post prepaid, $1.50. E Condon, Importer, Stonington, Maine.

Your Chance to make Big Money resilvering mirrors, auto reflectors, metal plating. Outfit furnished. Write for particulars. International Laboratories, Dept. D6, 309-311 Fifth Ave., New York.

Salespeople Wanted—Men and Women. Earn $10 to $15 a day selling remedies, cosmetics, soaps, Coffee and food products; best quality easy sellers; you own and run your own business; we teach you how; selling experience unnecessary; you can make $35 to $100 a week the year around. Write today for special sample offer. Furst & Thomas, Distributors, Desk 11, Freeport, Ill.

Agents—fast selling novelty used by everyone. Big profits. Particulars free. Advertising Nov. Co., Sta. F, Baltimore, Md.

AGENTS WANTED

Be successful Agent! Free sample outfit—worth $2.25. "Quality" beauty preparations. Make big money. Extensive line. Established 50 years. Lynas Co., 209 Logansport, Ind.

General Agents. Something new. Whirlwind seller. "Repeat" washing powder. Washes clothes without rubbing. Women throw away washboards. Big profits. Exclusive territory. Write today free package. Kittredge Co., 2 Putnam St., Tunkhannock, Pa.

Polishing Cloth—great seller—big profit. Get our proposition. Newton & Co., 23 Main St., Newark, New York

Agents—New Invention. Harper's Ten-Use brush set and fibre broom. It sweeps, washes and dries upstairs windows, scrubs and mops floors and does 5 other things. Big profits; easy seller. Free trial offer. Harper Brush Works, Dept. A, Fairfield, Iowa.

Agents—Make $7 to $14 a day. Brand new Aluminum handle Cutlery Set. You take orders, we deliver and collect. Pay you daily. Full or spare time. No experience necessary. No capital. We need 1500 Sales Agents, men or women, to cover every county in the U. S. Demand enormous. Write quick. Jennings Mfg. Co., Dept. 1823, Dayton, Ohio.

Wonderful Seller. 96c profit every dollar sales. Deliver on spot. License unnecessary. Sample Free. Mission Bead Factory C, 2421 Smith St., Detroit, Mich.

$1,000 Per Man Per County. Get yours. Inexperienced men pulling down star salesmen's profits. Write for proof: How farmers, ministers, clerks—men in all walks of life—made big money in whole or spare time. You can do it. Amazing proposition — wanted everywhere. Exclusive territory—no sales limit. A hot or cold running water bath equipment for any home at only $7.50. Self-heating. No plumbing nor water works required. Investigate. Terms. Send no money. Write letter or postal today. Allen Mfg. Co., 645 Allen Bldg., Toledo Ohio.

Women Wanted—Reliable firm wants earnest, refined women to introduce Priscilla Fabrics, Underwear, Hosiery, etc. Good pay. Samples, instructions furnished. Write today. Fitzcharles Co., 121 Fitzcharles Bldg., Trenton, N.J.

Agents—A sale in every house. Handsome folding Shopping bag. Big capacity when opened up. Quick seller—Good Profit—Honest goods—Woman can't do without them and when seen in use Agents find ready sale. Material sample free. Territory going fast. Wright Cover Mfg. Co., 1413 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Agents: Here is something you can sell to every housewife. Most useful household article made. Indispensable in every kitchen, restaurants or hotels. Tyler's Ideal Fibre Cutter tenders meat, chops vegetables, shaves ice, cleaves bones, scales fish, all in one. Low price, quick sales, big profit. Address now—M. H. Tyler Mfg. Co., Dept. A-1, Muncie, Ind.

A Business of Your Own—Make Sparkling glass name plates, numbers, checkerboards, medallions, signs; big illustrated book Free. E. Palmer, 504 Wooster, Ohio.

Soap Agents: Free Sample Morgan's Hygienic Vegetable Oil Soap and selling scheme-Morgan Supply Co., B-10, St. Louis, Mo.

Agents—Men or women. $6 to $9 a day, taking orders for Liberty Raincoats. Made to order in our own factory. Guaranteed. We deliver and collect; pay you daily. Full or spare time. No capital needed. Be sure and write today. Liberty Coat Co., 2520 Liberty Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

Gold Sign Letters for stores and office windows. Photo Pillow Tops, Portraits, Frames, Sheet Pictures, Medalions, Waterproof Aprons, Novelties. Samples, catalogue free. Thirty days credit. Jas. C. Bailey Co., Desk A-2, Chicago, Ill.

Turn Your Spare Time Into Dollars. We start you free selling Washing Tablets. New Premium plan gets the money. Send for free premium offer and sample. L. A. Knight Co., 119 Market St., St. Louis, Mo.

We pay $8 a day taking orders for Inside Tyres. Guaranteed to prevent punctures and blowouts. Double tire mileage. Any tire. Tremendous demand. Low priced. Write quick for agency. American Accessories Co., B330, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Agents—Best seller; Jem Rubber Repair for tires and tubes; supersedes vulcanization at a saving of over 500 per cent.; put it on cold, it vulcanizes itself in two minutes, and is guaranteed to last the life of the tire or tube; sells to every auto owner and accessory dealer. For particulars how to make big money and free sample, address Amazon Rubber Co., Philadelphia, Pa., Dept. 508.

Tailoring Agents: Make $50 to $100 a week and more, with our wonderful all-wool one price line; sells at $29.50 per suit; $20 cheaper than retail prices; you collect profit at once; we ship C. O. D. to customer for balance; exclusive territory; hustlers wanted; write fully; state experience. Sales Manager, Dept. A-40, 831 West Adams, Chicago, Illinois.

Men! $100 weekly easy and a dandy new Raincoat Free on our new Factory Offer. Interesting details postpaid. Write at once to Uneeda Raincoat Co., Dept. W, 378 W. Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

We Pay $36 a Week and expenses and give a Ford Auto to men to introduce poultry and stock compounds. Imperial Co., D 1, Parsons, Kan.

FEMALE HELP WANTED

$6-$18 a dozen decorating pillow tops at home; pleasant work; experience unnecessary; particulars for stamp. Tapestry Paint Co., 104, LaGrange, Ind.

At Once; 5 bright, capable ladies to travel, demonstrate and sell dealers. $40 to $75 a week. R. R. fare paid. Goodrich Drug Co., Dept. 82, Omaha, Nebr.

Women—Become Government Clerks, $90 month. List positions free. Write Franklin Institute, Dept. B 9, Rochester, N. Y.

Women—Girls. Learn Gown Designing. $35 week. Sample lessons free. Franklin Institute, Dept. B 861, Rochester, N. Y.

Be Millinery Designers. Big Easter demand. $25 week. Sample lessons Free. Franklin Institute, Dept. B866, Rochester, N. Y.

MOTION PICTURE PLAYS

Photoplay Ideas Wanted By 48 Companies. $25-$300 paid. Experience unnecessary; details Free. Producers League, 311, St. Louis.

MISCELLANEOUS

Remnant Store, 1516 Vine St., Cincinnati, O. Greatest Dry Goods Bargains on Earth. Agents and Storekeepers supplied.

Don't buy a Bicycle Motor Attachment until you get our catalogue and prices. Shaw Mfg. Co., Dept. 3, Galesburg, Kansas.

Switches made from combings. The new way. Write me. Mrs. E. Vandervoort, Davenport, Iowa.

Hemstitching and Picoting Attachment works on any sewing machine, easily adjusted. Price $2.50 with full instructions. Oriental Novelty Co., Box 11, Corpus Christi, Texas.

Large Blue Prints. 14x17 inches, hand-made, of Poultry houses, Coops, Incubators and Brooders. Send 50c for a set and build your own. J. Sherman Piper, Box 338, Hammond, Ind.

OLD MONEY WANTED

$2 to $500 Each paid for hundreds of Old & Odd coins. Send 10cts. for 111'st Coin Value Book, 4x6. You may have valuable coins. Get Posted. We pay cash. Clarke Coin Co., Ave 20, Le Roy, N. Y.

SALESMEN WANTED

Only One Policy A Day Means $130 Per month profit; same on renewals. Policy pays $5,000 Death; $25 weekly benefit for injury or sickness. Premium $10 yearly. Full or spare time. Easy seller. Write quick for territory. Underwriters, Dept. 39, Newark, N.J.

Cigar Factory Wants Salesman—Full time or side line. Previous experience unnecessary, as we give complete instructions. J. H. Hargrave & Co., C22, Chatham, Va.

Easy to sell Groceries, Paints, Automobile Oils, Roofing, Stock Food to consumers from samples, no capital or experience necessary, steady, profitable work. Commissions advanced. Satisfaction guaranteed; 50 years in business. Write for full particulars. Lovell & Browne Co., Wholesale Grocers, 1761 So. State St., Chicago, Ill.

FARMS FOR SALE

118-Acre Farm With 10 Cows, Furniture, etc. included; good house, 66-ft. barn, all $2500, part cash. Page 24 Free Catalog. Strout Farm Agency, 150 B G Nassau St., New York City.

The State Land Settlement Board of California has a number of desirable irrigated farms of twenty and forty acres in San Joaquin Valley for sale to bona fide homeseekers on 36½ years' time. 5 per cent interest annually. Your opportunity to acquire a farm in winterless California. All deciduous fruits profitably grown; alfalfa is a paying crop. Ideal conditions for stock and poultry. Good schools and unsurpassed roads. Fruit associations market your crops, relieving you of marketing problems. You can farm all year in California. Go now and see. State Board's booklet, also Santa Fe folder describing San Joaquin Valley, mailed free on request. C. L. Seagraves, Gen. Colonization Ag't, Santa Fe Ry., 913 Ry. Ex., Chicago.

Want to hear from owner having farm for sale; give particulars and lowest price. John J. Black, Comfort St., Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Ladies—Earn Money Crocheting, Sewing, tatting, making aprons and caps. Patterns and plans 35c. Send remittance now. Returned if desired. Kenwood Pattern Co., 6138 So. Park Ave., Chicago, Ill.

HELP—MALE & FEMALE

Earn $25 Weekly, writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary; details Free. Press Syndicate, 461, St. Louis, Mo.

Government Positions Are Fine: $1400, $1600, $1800 at start, up to $2300 and $2600. Exams everywhere. Write Today for full information. Patterson Civil Service School, Box K, Rochester, N. Y.

Young men, women, over 17, desiring government positions, $130 monthly, write for free list of positions now open, J. Leonard, (former Civil Service examiner) 7 Equitable Bldg., Washington, D. C.

FARM LANDS

Own Your Own Orange Grove In Fruitland Park, Florida's finest lake-jeweled highland section, way above sea level. A few dollars a month will buy it. Plant peaches, a quick money crop, with oranges, and the peaches may be made to pay not only for your land and orange grove but yield a profit besides. We can produce you a better orange grove for less money than anyone in the State and in Florida's greatest section. Fruitland Park is best. We can prove it. Write for a book of actual photographs, the interesting story of a Fruitland Park farm and why peaches may pay for it. Lake County Land Owner's Association, 280 Palm Ave., Fruitland Park, Lake County, Florida.

Productive Lands. Crop Payment or easy terms—along the Northern Pacific Ry., in Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. Free literature. Say what state interests you. H. W. Byerly, 14 Northern Pacific Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

MICH. FARM LANDS FOR SALE

Good Farm Lands! 20, 40, 80 ac. tracts in Mich. only $15 to $35 per ac. Very easy terms. Investigate this opportunity. Write today for Free booklet. Swigart Land Co., C-1246, First Natl. Bank Bldg., Chicago.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

Earn $100 to $500 weekly; start a "Specialty Candy Factory"; own home; small store; anywhere; Men-women, booklet Free. Ben-Lee System, 15, San Francisco, Calif.

PATENT ATTORNEYS

Patents—Write for free Guide Book, and Evidence of Conception Blank. Send model or sketch and description for free opinion of its patentable nature. Highest References. Prompt Service. Reasonable Terms. Victor J. Evans & Co., 641 Ninth, Washington, D. C.

Inventors—Desiring to secure patent should write for our book, "How To Get Your Patent." Send model or sketch and description for opinion of its patentable nature. Randolph & Co., Dept. 112, Washington, D. C.

Patents Secured. Submit sketch or model of your invention for examination. Write for Record of Invention blank and valuable book, Free. J. L. Jackson & Co., 230 Ouray Building, Washington, D. C.

Patents—Send for free book. Contains valuable information for inventors. Send sketch of your invention for Free Opinion of its patentable nature. Prompt service. (Twenty years' experience). Talbert & Talbert, 402 Talbert Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Inventors. Send sketch or model of invention for advice. Write for Evidence of Disclosure form and Book on Patents, Free. Prompt Service. Merton-Roberts & Company, 169 Mather Building, Washington, D. C.

Patents Promptly procured. Moderate Fees. Best References. Send Sketch or Model. George P. Kimmel, Master of Patent Law, 27-F, Lean & Trust Bldg., Washington, D. C.

MALE HELP WANTED

All men, women, boys, girls, over 18, willing to accept Government Positions, $123, write immediately, Ozment, 104, St. Louis.

Be a Railway Traffic Inspector! $110 to $250 monthly, expenses paid after 3 months' spare-time study. Splendid opportunities. Position guaranteed or money refunded. Write for Free Booklet G-5. Stand. Business Training Inst., Buffalo, N. Y.

Boys—men, Become Automobile experts. $45 week. Learn while earning. Write Franklin Institute, Dept. B 410, Rochester, N. Y.

Government needs Railway Mail Clerks, $133-$192 month. Write for free specimen questions. Columbus Institute, A-2 Columbus, O.

Be an Expert Penman; Wonderful Device guides your hand; corrects your writing in few days. Complete Outline Free. Write C. J. Ozment, 53, St. Louis, Mo.

Firemen, Brakemen, Baggagemen, Electric Motormen, conductors, Sleeping car and train porters (colored) Railroads everywhere, $140-$200. 828 Railway Bureau, East St. Louis, Ill.

Firemen, Brakemen, for railroads nearest their homes—Everywhere, beginners $150, later $250 monthly (which position?). Railway Association, Desk M-17, Brooklyn, N. Y.

OLD COINS

Old Coins Wanted. Have you an odd or old coin or bill? It may be worth several dollars. Get posted. Send 4c for coin circular. May mean much profit to you. Send now. Numismatic Bank, Dept. C, Fort Worth, Tex.

GAMES & AMUSEMENTS

250 Magic Tricks—10c. Big New catalog of Tricks, Novelties, Books—2c. L. Meody, 6074 Stony Island, Chicago.

HELP WANTED

Become Government Railway Mail Clerks. $133-$192 month. Steady. Men-boys, over 17. List Government positions free. Write today sure. Franklin Institute, Dept. B12, Rochester, N. Y.

Government Positions. Men, Women, 18, over, Wanted. Railway Mail, Postoffice, other positions. Examination soon. Salary $1400-$1800 year. Experience unnecessary. Particulars free. Write Columbia School of Civil Service, 464 Pope Bldg., Washington, D.C.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

Used Correspondence Courses. Bargain prices. Bulletin 1025 free. Courses bought. Instruction Exchange, 1966 Broadway, N. Y.

We rent correspondence school courses 25 cents to 50 cents per week. Free list of 1000 courses to select from. We pay cash for used courses. Students' Exchange, 47D West 42d St., New York.

STAMPING NAMES

Stamp Names on key checks. Make $19 per 100. Send 25c for sample and inst. Either Sex. O. Keytag Co., Cohoes, N. Y.

MAGAZINES

Ambitious Writers send today for Free copy, America's leading magazine for writers of photoplays, stories, poems, songs. Instructive, helpful. Writer's Digest, 609 Butler Bldg., Cincinnati.

FOR ROADSIDE SELLING

Roadside Gladiolus Selling—Send for free instructions. 10 sample bulbs, 10c. Outfits $1 up. J. L. Vendel, Sharon, Mass.

FANCY MAINE POTATOES

Fancy Maine Potatoes. 135 barrels per acre. Will send you sample box of seed by express enough to plant over 100 hills for $1.15. No orders after May 20th. Dugal Supply Co., Portland, Me.

PHOTOPLAYS, STORIES

Wanted—Men and women ambitious to make money writing Stories and Movie Plays. Send for wonderful Free Book that tells how. Address Authors' Press, Dept. 31, Auburn, N.Y.

PHOTO FINISHING

Special Trial Offer. Your next Kodak film developed 5c. Prints 2c each. Moser & Son, 2122 St. James Ave., Cincinnati, O.

Old Tintypes, Daguerreotypes or Faded Pictures of loved ones can be restored so as to produce beautiful enlargements and perfect likenesses under our new process. Individual pictures may also be produced out of groups Satisfactory results guaranteed. Prompt work. Fair prices. Roanoke Photo Finishing Co., 502 Bell Ave., Roanoke, Va.

Better Pictures—Your kodak film developed 4c—prints 4c each. Cameron Photo Co., O 3418 Burch Ave., Cincinnati, O.

Kodak Finishing. Not the cheap way, but the most reliable. Our Quality Work insures best prints from every negative. Get particulars and List of Prizes. Or send Trial Order. Moem Photo Service, 15-A, LaCrosse, Wisconsin.

MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS

$25.00 Profit Nightly. Small capital starts you. No experience needed. Our machines are used, endorsed by Govt. institutions. Cat. free Atlas Moving Picture, 471 Morton Bldg., Chicago

FEMALE AGENTS

Do hemstitching and picoting, Attachment fits any machine $2.50. Buttonhole at $8.00. Hand embroiderer $5.50. Agents wanted. E. Stephenson, 22 Quincy St., Chicago, Ill.

HONEY FOR SALE

Delicious White-Clover Honey. Diamond clear. World's finest. Aids digestion. Promotes long life. Fine on pancakes, waffles, etc. Send today for 10 lb. pail, postpaid $3.00. Quantity price list and sample free. Rockward Nusbaum, Honeyhill Farm, Uniontown, Md.

Honey and Cheese of Superior Quality packed in family size packages, write today for Free price list. E. F. Rosa, Monroe, Wis.

STORY WRITERS WANTED

Authors:—Stories, poems, photo plays etc. are wanted for publication. Submit Mss. Literary Bureau, C4, Hannibal, Mo.

AUTOMOBILES

Auto Owners Wanted to use and introduce our new 5,000 and 10,000 Mile Guaranteed Cord and Fabric Tires. Make big money, part or full time. Free Tires for your car. Write quick for special agents offer and low wholesale prices. It will pay you to answer this little adv. now. Reliable Tire & Rubber Co., 35th St. & Michigan Ave., Dept. 70, Chicago, Ill.

INVENTIONS

Inventions Wanted. Cash or royalty for ideas. Adam Fisher Mfg. Co., 91, St. Louis, Mo.

ENTERTAINMENTS

Plays, Speakers, dialogues, and Entertainments; catalogues free. Address Dept. A, Ames Pub. Co., Clyde, O.

FOR PHOTOGRAPHERS

Have You a Camera? Write for Free sample of our big magazine, showing how to make better pictures and earn money. American Photography, 230 Camera House, Boston, 17, Mass.

MAIL ORDER BUSINESS

I Made $25,000 with small Mail Order Business. Sample article & plan 25c. Free Booklet. Tells How For Stamp. AC Scott, Cohoes, N. Y.

POULTRY

Baby Chicks: 10c up. 12 kinds, and ducklings. Postpaid. Guaranteed. Large illustrated catalog and guide free. Superior Farms, Windsor, Mo.

Day Old Chicks, for sale. Thousands per week. Strong, better hatched, utility and pure Bred, circular Free. Old Honesty Hatchery, Dept. C, New Washington, O.

FARM WANTED

Wanted To hear from owner of good farm for sale. State cash price, full description. D. F. Bush, Minneapolis, Minn.

Farm Wanted—Want to hear from owner, give lowest price, and full particulars. L. Jones, Box 107, Olney, Ill.

FOR THE GARDEN

Bulbs—10 kinds Gladioli mailed for 10c and names of four friends who grow flowers. Will include free, bulb of beautiful Mirabilis. S. W. Pike, Seedsman, Box R3, St. Charles, Ill.

FOR SALE

All Wool medium weight pants, brown and gray mixture. Best wearing cloth made direct from the manufacturer at wholesale price $3.98 by parcel post prepaid. True-Value Clothing Company, 728 Broadway, New York.

Surplus Stock of $18.00 Government New Hip Rubber boots since 7 to 12. Special $3.98 parcel post prepaid. American Clothing Company, Portland, Maine.

$1 Brings HARTMAN'S Richly Upholstered 7-Piece Suite

Quarter-Sawed and Solid Oak Throughout

Send only $1.00 for this complete suite of library, parlor or living room furniture—seven splendid massive pieces—so gracefully tapered in design. Use it 30 days, on free trial; then, if you don't say that it is even more than you expected, ship it back and we return your $1 and pay transportation charges both ways.

Upholstered Backs and Seats Comfortable Spring Seats

Important!
Do not confuse this fine Hartman suite with furniture which may look like it in pictures, but is inferior in construction and finish. Every Hartman piece is made to give lasting service as well as to have an elegant appearance. Note also the handsome upholstering, spring seats, ornamented backs, rounded arms and quarter-sawed oak in this special suite.

A Full Year to Pay

Only by seeing this splendid quarter-sawed and solid oak suite can you realize how it will add to the appearance of your home. Only by examining it can you appreciate what a record-breaking bargain it is at our smashed price. Furniture like this—elegant, comfortable, massive—can be bought nowhere else at anywhere near the price nor on such liberal terms.

Handsome Fumed Finish!

TABLE, solid oak with top 24x36 inches. Has a shelf 7 inches wide. Height from floor, 29 inches. ARM ROCKER, solid oak with quarter-sawed top panel and rounded arm rests; seat 18x19 inches. Width over all, 25¾ inches. Height of back from seat, 21½ inches. Bent elm runners. SIDE ROCKER, solid oak with quarter-sawed oak top rail; seat 16x14 inches. Width over all, 17 inches. Height, 33½ inches. ARM CHAIR, 37 inches high, and SIDE CHAIR, 36 inches high, with seat 16x14 inches. Table and chairs stand on noiseless glides. Backs and seats upholstered in durable imitation Spanish brown leather. Comfortable spring seats. TABOURETTE, 16½ inches high with 10-inch top, is solid oak. BOOK BLOCKS, heavy enough to support a liberal number of volumes. Shipped (fully boxed, "knocked down" to lessen freight charges) from factory in Central Indiana, Western New York State or Chicago warehouse.

Order by No. 112DMA7. Reduced Bargain Price, $37.95. Send $1 now. Balance $3 monthly.

FREE Bargain Catalog

368 pages of the world's greatest smashed price bargains. Everything you need for the home—the pick of the markets in Furniture, rugs, linoleum, stoves, watches, silverware, dishes, washing machines, sewing machines, aluminum ware, phonographs, gas engines, cream separators, etc. Everything sold on our easy monthly payment plan and 30 days' Free Trial. Post card or letter brings this 368-page Bargain Book by return mail FREE.

"Let Hartman Feather YOUR Nest"

HARTMAN
Furniture & Carpet Co.
Dept. 4213 Chicago, Illinois

Copyright, 1922, by Hartman's, Chicago

Hartman Furniture & Carpet Co.
Dept. 4213 Chicago, Illinois

Enclosed find $1. Send the 7-Piece Living Room Suite No. 112DMA7 as described. I am to have 30 days' free trial. If not satisfied, will ship it back and you will refund my $1 and pay freight both ways. If I keep it, I will pay $3 per month until the full price, $37.95, is paid. Title remains with you until final payment is made.

Name.....

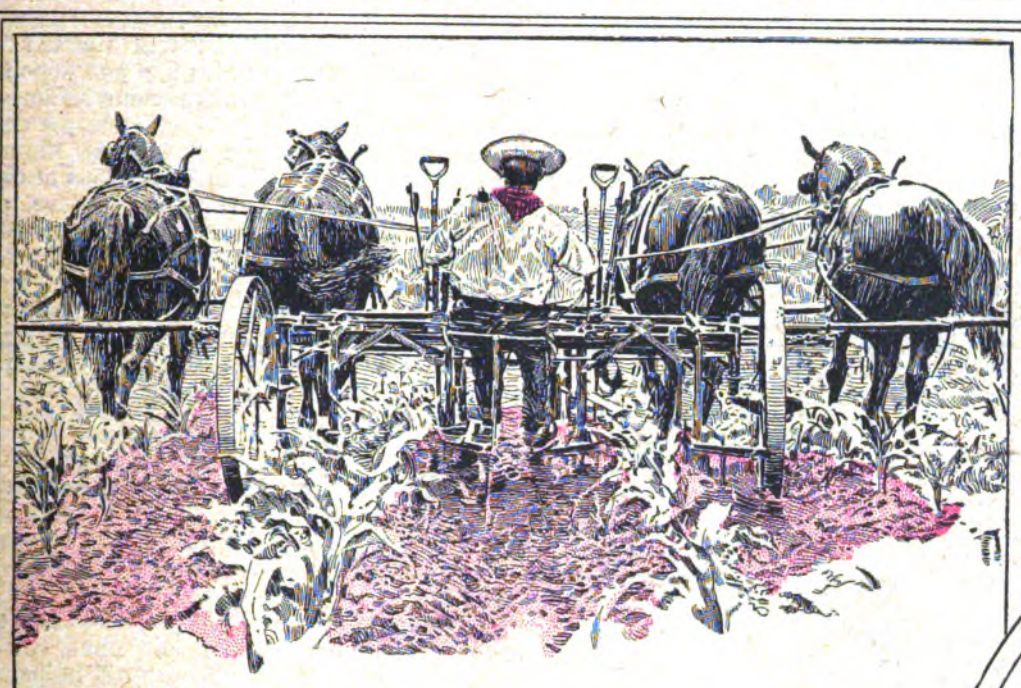
Street Address.....

R. F. D..... Box No.....

Town..... State.....

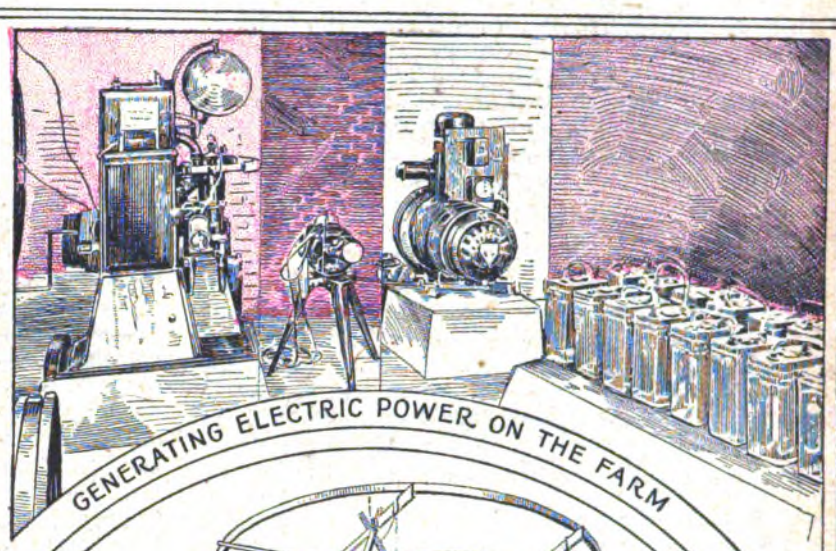
State Your Occupation..... Color.....

FARM IMPROVEMENT NUMBER



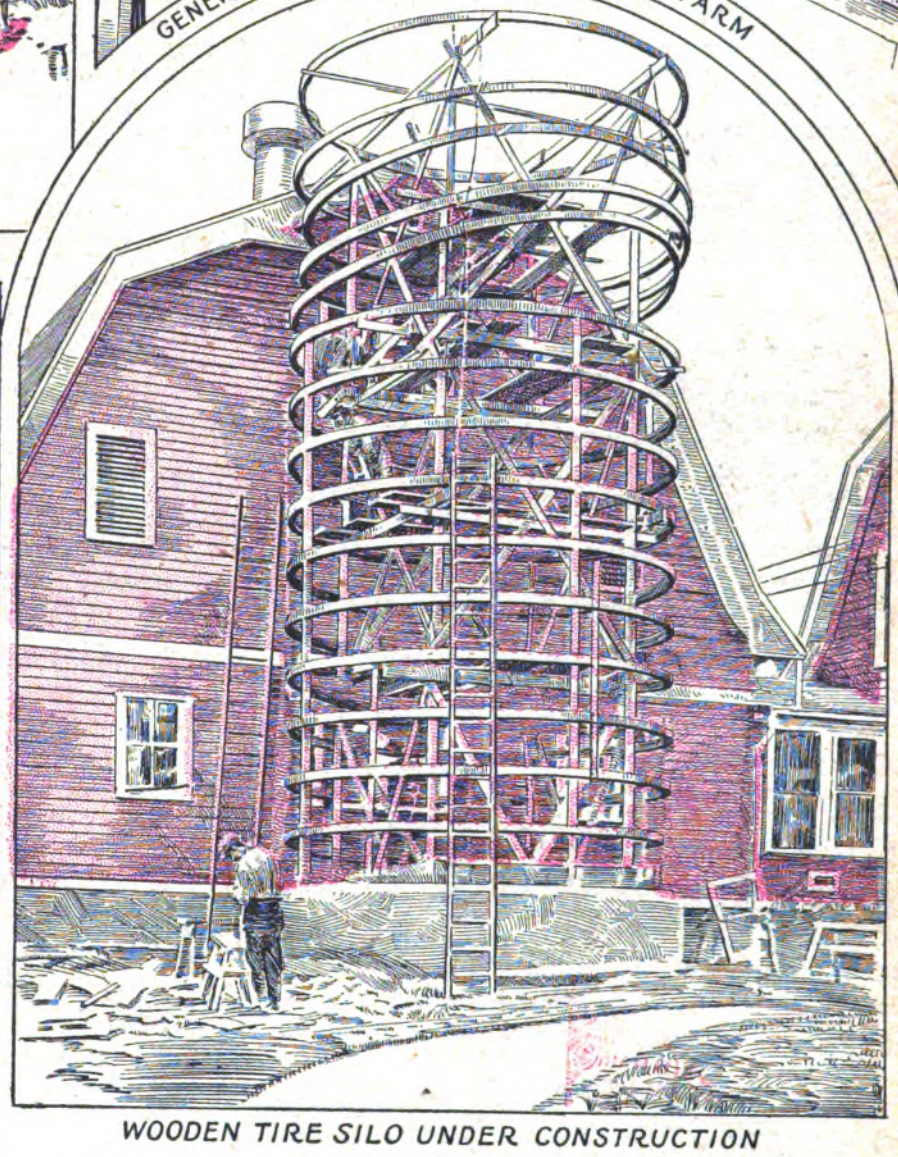
COMFORT

The Key to Happiness and Success in over a Million and a Quarter Homes

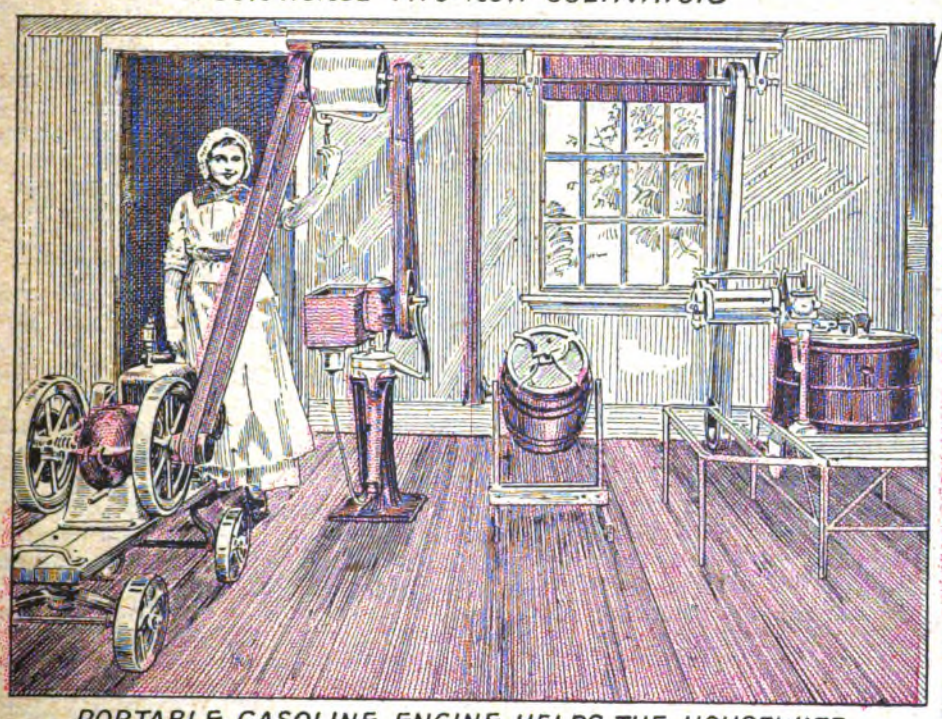


Published at Augusta Maine

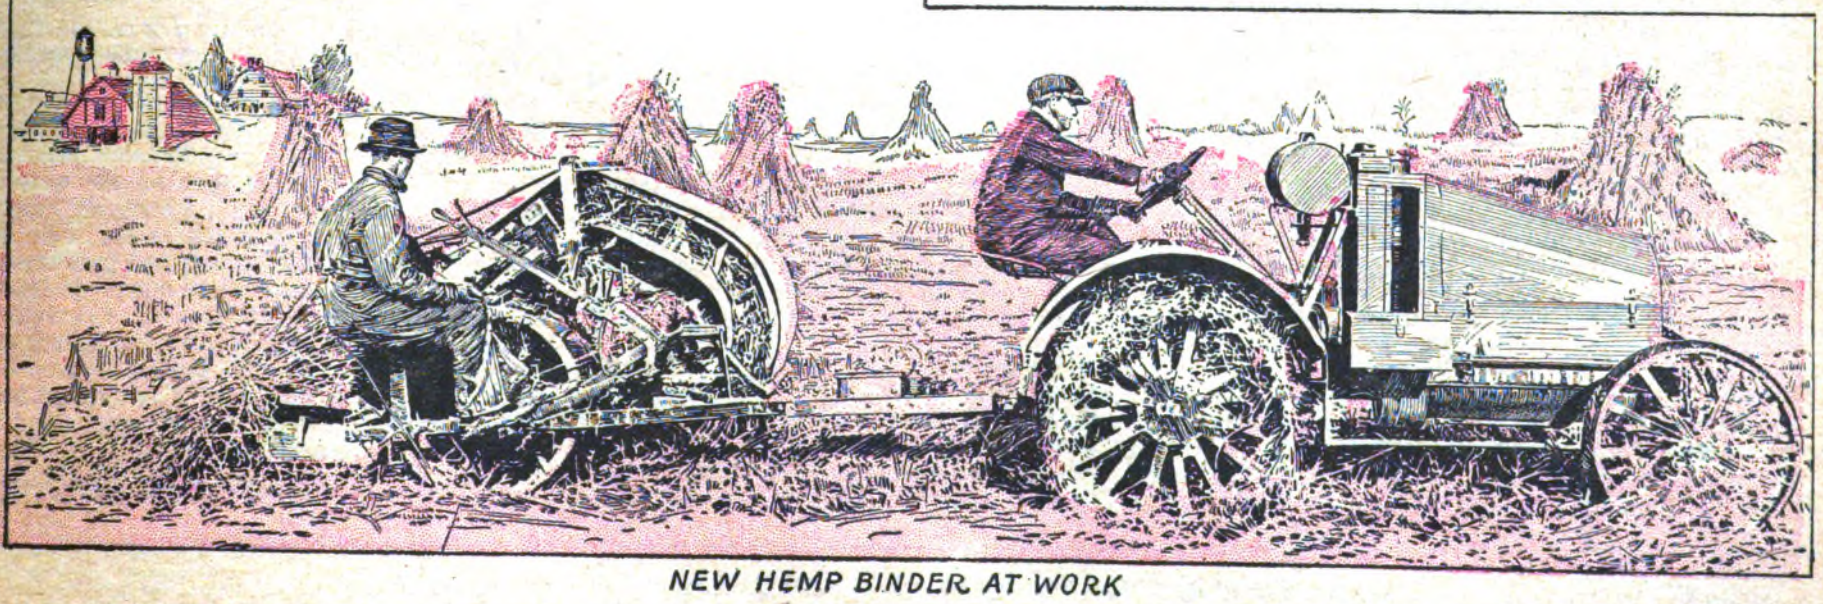
VOL. XXXIV
NO. 6



APRIL
1922



FOUR-HORSE TWO-ROW CULTIVATOR



GENERATING ELECTRIC POWER ON THE FARM

WOODEN TIRE SILO UNDER CONSTRUCTION

PORTABLE GASOLINE ENGINE HELPS THE HOUSEWIFE

NEW HEMP BINDER AT WORK

See "Farm Improvement," page 21, and Modern Farmer, page 23.

Copyright 1922 (Trade-Mark Registered), by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Incorporated.

Table of Contents on Page 8.

COMFORT EDITORIAL

THOUGHTS THAT BREATHE AND WORDS THAT BURN

Increasing Demand and Rising Prices for Farm Products Reflect Brighter Prospects for the Farmers

"IT is always darkest just before dawn" is an adage notably applicable to times of business depression, a verification of which is seen in the very recent and marked improvement in the conditions affecting agricultural interests that suddenly shone forth and dispelled the shadow of gloom when in its darkest aspect it was weighing most oppressively on the farmers.

Although we have regarded the outlook more hopefully than the crape-hangers have painted it, unquestionably the situation during the past year has been hard and discouraging for the farmers, unjustly and increasingly so until it reached its lowest stage of depression about the beginning of the new year, and then it was that the markets (for their products and for what they had to buy) turned in their favor. Since then their prospects have been continually brightening in consequence of changed conditions resulting from natural causes having a permanent tendency that not only forecasts for them a fair degree of prosperity the coming season but promises, in connection with other movements on foot, a progressive advancement of agricultural interests in the future.

The leading editorial in the March 4 number of The Literary Digest in pointing out the hopeful signs of the dawn of general prosperity lays stress on the improved situation and prospects of the farmers, remarking that "Peculiarly significant is the new note of optimism in the agricultural press A few weeks ago," asserts the editor, "the immediate outlook for the American farmer was generally regarded as desperate. But with the recent upward swing of prices for farm products the clouds that hung so blackly on the rural horizon have begun to lift and scatter." And in support of his assertion he cites opinions editorially expressed in late issues of prominent publications from some of which we quote in part as follows:

"For some seven or eight months now," says The Michigan Business Farmer, "the farmers have been passing through a most unpleasant deflation process. The prices of crops produced at the highest cost in the history of the present generation dropped fifty and sixty per cent. That wouldn't have been so bad but prices of other things stayed up, and it has only been during the last sixty days that they have shown any intention of coming down. But now they, too, are dropping and as they fall, prices of farm products are starting up again. Nearly every manufacturer of farm machinery and implements has recently announced drastic price cuts affecting his entire line." * * * "Clothes, dress goods, automobiles, hair-cuts, shoes, candy, et cetera, have succumbed to the forces of deflation, and they're going down!

"A few months and the leveling process will be complete. Farm prices will be up where they belong and prices of everything else will be down where they belong. Then the farmer can resume his buying and prosperity will be with us again."

As indicating that business men are sensing the fact that their own prosperity is dependent on that of the farmer, the Nebraska Farmer remarks that "It is significant to hear business men, when asked nowadays for opinions upon the future prospects, almost invariably point out the recent increase in the price of corn, wheat and live stock to the farmer and give that as a reason for an improvement in the business outlook. * * *

"It is quite true that farm prices have been on the up-grade in recent weeks, and that is of material benefit to farmers and presents a hopeful aspect for agriculture in the coming year."

Among the financial authorities that point to the improved agricultural prospect as a ground for optimism is the Des Moines Northwestern Banker which rejoices that "With corn at fifty cents a bushel and hogs at ten dollars a hundred the farmers of Iowa are recovering from the depression in excellent shape. In fact, the advance in corn and hogs in the last thirty days has increased the wealth of Iowa farmers by over forty million dollars. They realize that the tide has turned."

The Boston News Bureau, the leading financial journal of New England, prints in its March 6 issue a report from Kansas City on business and financial conditions in the Southwest from which we quote: "Kansas City—For the first time in more than a year, business in the Southwest is climbing forward at a rate which is creating real enthusiasm among bankers and trade interests in general. Improvement in prices of livestock and grain in recent weeks and enlargement in sales of merchandise are surprising to almost all classes. Improvement had been expected, but not at the rate witnessed lately." This authority attributes this business revival chiefly to the rise in prices of farm products and says in explanation that "Rise of $2.50 a hundredweight on lambs the past month, advance of about $2.00 on hogs, rise of 75 cents on cattle, upturn of more than 35 cents on wheat, gains in feedstuffs and firmness in refined oil trade are among the developments making for distinct turn for the better in general business.

"Country merchants are reporting collections the best in months, and are beginning to take more merchandise because they see purchasing power of farmers and stockmen rising. Addition of the value of the large reserves of corn and other feedstuffs resulting from the recent upturns in prices is almost sufficient to carry trade forward in a gratifying manner, to say nothing of livestock and other products.

"Lambs never paid better profits than feeders are now earning. Texas is selling an unprecedented number of sheep at this season because of the high market, and proceeds are paying off loans and creating new business. Communities with big corn stocks, steeped in pessimism not long ago are now cheerful."

Some Obstacles Yet to Be Removed from the Road to Prosperity

THE greater part of the twenty-three billion dollar National debt and of the enormously increased State and municipal debts, under which we are staggering, represents the excessive cost of over-stimulating a sham prosperity by bolstering up highly inflated war prices. Everything was costing twice to four times its value and the Federal Government and the States were running in debt to pay the fiddler for the merry jazz. Of course this could not go on indefinitely, and when, after the war, the Government ceased to "hold the bag" the artificial props went out from under the market and the public began to demand a general lowering of prices to somewhere near normal levels. That should have been, but was not, the course pursued. Farm products were the first to yield to pressure and were forced down too fast and too low, below the cost of production; and this became a twofold hardship to the farmers because meanwhile the prices of other commodities stayed up or dropped comparatively little. This, of course, reduced the farmers' purchasing power and was soon reflected in a general business depression.

The industrial and mechanical laborers in the cities thought it a fine thing to drive food prices as low as possible regardless of disastrous consequences to the farmers, and at the same time demand war-time wages for themselves, thereby keeping up the high cost of manufactured goods. But they reckoned without their host, for the diminished purchasing power of the farmers so curtailed the market for goods that many factories were forced to close or run on half time, thereby augmenting the ranks of the unemployed.

Agriculture is the basic and by far the greatest and most important industry of this country, and on it depends directly or indirectly the prosperity of every other industry and line of business. When the farmers have abundant crops and dispose of them at good prices business is good throughout the land, and likewise hard times with the farmers always bring on general business depression. Of course there are other factors that exert an influence on business conditions, but it is an accepted axiom that industry and trade cannot thrive when agriculture is struggling with adversity.

As herein explained, the recent upward turn of agriculture has injected new life and hope into business, but there still remain some serious obstacles to be removed or overcome ere the country can make very much progress along the road to prosperity. Among the most noxious of these obstructions may be mentioned strikes and other labor troubles that demoralize industry, lower efficiency and raise the cost of production; also high railroad freight rates and expensive and inefficient means and methods of distribution that exact heavy tolls which cause an excessive spread between the price received by the producer and that paid by the consumer.

The National Farm Conference on January 27, the closing day of its five days session at Washington, after much discussion and careful consideration set forth its demand for lower freight rates by adopting the report of its Committee on Transportation which concludes with the following resolution:

"In conclusion we insist that the railroad corporations and railroad labor should share in the deflation in charges now affecting all industries. This is essential to the restoration of normal conditions in agriculture, and it is essential to the welfare of the entire community."

Reports of various other committees of the Conference that deal with deflation of war prices and other readjustments proposed for bringing about normal conditions in industry and trade are worthy of thoughtful attention, but we have space for only the two following extracts from the report of the General Committee on Costs, Process and Readjustments.

"There can be no general restoration of national prosperity until both wages and capital which enter into the production of the commodities which the farmer buys bear their mutual and just share in the general process of readjustment.

"Probably the chief source of relief which the farmer may rightfully expect and demand is in readjustment between the prices of the products which he buys and those which he sells. This is prevented at the present time by distributors' spreads far in excess of any income which the farmer is able to secure, and by high industrial wages and freight rates."

Cooperative selling organizations of farmers for marketing their products have been in successful operation for some years in certain sections and the movement is expanding through the medium of the Farm Bureau Federation. The purpose is to eliminate unnecessary middlemen and save their expenses and profits which so largely increase the price paid by the consumer over that received by the farmer for his products. Any achievement in this line will be of mutual benefit to the farmer and the consumer, both of whom are complaining of the inordinate cost of the present inefficient and wasteful system of distribution.

Lack of space does not allow us to discuss here the various legislative measures drafted in the interest of the farmers and now pending in Congress. Some of them, such as the extension of farm credits on security of harvested crops to tide the farmers over hard places and save them from the necessity of dumping their products on a glutted and falling market and others designed to curb the pernicious activities of speculators in farm products, may be of substantial benefit to the farmers and the general public. We believe, however, that irrespective of Government help a brighter era has dawned for the farmers and that it will make for general prosperity.

COMFORT'S EDITOR.

COMFORT, PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY W. H. GANNETT, PUB., INC., AT AUGUSTA, MAINE.

Subscription price in United States and United States Possessions 50c a year; Canadian subscriptions 65c a year, foreign countries $1.00 a year. No premiums or prizes will be given on Canadian or foreign subscriptions. Please send your renewal just as soon as your subscription expires. We can not send you even one copy of COMFORT, after expiration, until your subscription is Renewed. If you do not get your magazine by the 25th of the month write us and we will send you another copy free. Please notify us immediately in case you move, so that we can change your address and see that you do not miss a single copy. Remember that we must have your former address, as well as your new address to make the change. Be sure to send both. We do not supply back numbers.

Entered at the post office at Augusta, Maine as second-class mail matter. Copyright, 1922 (Trade-Mark Registered), by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

A Psycho-Illogical Episode

By W. W. Hatfield

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

A SHORT time ago, at the instigation of a magazine editor, I made a journey to the Windy City for the purpose of gathering some first-hand information for the writing of an article on psychic phenomena. I failed, signally, to obtain any data worthy of recording. But one afternoon, as I was dejectedly supporting a lamp-post in front of a Van Buren Street hotel, a large hand descended suddenly and forcibly upon my shoulder, and the owner of the hand dragged me into the hotel, where he planted me in a cushioned seat opposite him, with a little round table between us.

"Now, Bill," he said, when he had ordered cigars and some other things not so dry, "shoot! Tell your Uncle what hurts you! You never looked like this when you and me was ridin' herd together out Cochise way, exceptin' mebbe once or twice when your cayuse put his foot in a gopher hole on the dead run."

It was "Breezy" McInnis, an old pal of mine, who had been in turn miner, cowpuncher and railroader over the greater part of that country lying between Paradise, Montana, and Nogales, Arizona. We "chinned" over old times for a few minutes, and then I confided to him that I had been assigned to write an article on occultism, and that my bluish expression was due to the failure of the immaterial information to materialize.

"Occultism? You mean spooks, don't you?" interrogated "Breezy". "Well, I imagine they would be sort of hard to corral. I never believed in 'em none myself, not bein' a eddicated man, but I once knowed a feller that did. And thereby hangs a tale, as the story-writers say."

And this is the tale that was delivered to me by "Breezy" McInnis, whose reputation was as good as his name, and the diction thereof is also his:

One day last summer I blowed into the town of Lost Angels, New Mexifornia. I had quite a stake at the time, havin' just disposed of a placer mine for a certified check with five figures on it. I hadn't been in town long before I got chummy with one of the main gazabos, a feller they called Doc Kenna. He owned a bank and a hardware store and a few miles of real estate, but he wasn't no doctor. He'd got that moniker on account of his fondness for airin' his book-learnin'. Doc's favorite brand of knowledge was spookism, psychic phenomena, he called it. He kept read up on spookism and spook doctors, and knew all about the most famous spooks. Doc and me conversed consid'able on this subject, which was a easy matter for me—all I had to do was to say spooks and then keep my mouth shut and my ears open.

But there was one thing that Doc thought more of than his eddication, and that was his daughter. He had a right to be proud of her, too, which is by way of sayin' that she was a right nice little party to have around the house. Violet was her name, and so was her eyes. She stood an inch taller than a yardstick and a two-foot rule in her lisle feet, and she weighed about as much as a hundred pounds of sugar. She had a complexion that made the girls on the magazine covers turn green every time she looked at 'em. Her disposition was as different from Doc's as the South poll is from the Republican, and Doc's disposition was as acetic as a dozen lemons. Her bein' the only child and Doc bein' a widower, he fussed around over her like a old hecluck with one lone chick.

But there was other folks besides Doc and me thought a lot of Violet, among 'em bein' a young chap by the name of Tommy Waller, who was a pal of mine, in a way. Waller was a well-eddicated and ambitious cuss, but he was a orphan and as poor as Job's gobbler. He wanted a job casherin' in Doc's bank, which Doc wouldn't give him, seein' as how the young feller had never accumulated no mazuma and didn't have no rich relatives to back him. Doc said a man goin' into a responsible job like that had to have a few thousands in his jeans. But Violet was real friendly to Tommy, her and him havin' been schoolmates together. Along about that time, too, she took to sighin' and showin' other indications of a evident desire to commit matrimony, although as yet nothin' definite had been said to Doc on the subject. But she got real peeved 'cause Doc wouldn't give Tommy a job in the bank, and she told him so.

Well, when Doc got wise to the fack that some one was fillin' Violet's cranial attachment with the weddin' bell idea, he was mad. So one night he cut Tommy out of the herd, read the riot ack to him, told him that Violet wouldn't never marry no one but what was a man of eddication, refinement and means, called him a ignorant and penniless young pup, and kicked him down the front steps. Which was a mistake on Doc's part.

Tommy picked himself up out of the begonia bed, shook his fist at Doc, and called on high Heaven and me to witness that Doc would pay for that ack. Then he turned around and took himself off up a dark street.

The next mornin' Tommy Waller was among the missin'. They was considable chin-music about his vanishment for a couple weeks, and some of his friends even made half a dozen trips to the morgue, but was disappointed. And then people sort of forgot him. Exceptin', of course, Violet and me, we didn't forget him none. We both thought a lot of Tommy.

One day shortly after that I ast Doc if he didn't think a woman orter have some say in pickin' out her own husband, but Doc immejiately boiled over and scalded me with certain remarks tendin' to illustrate the advisability of people mindin' their own business—especially people without any brains or eddication, like me and Tommy Waller. Also he reckoned that he could corral a conjugal mate for his daughter without any help from a uneddicated cowpuncher. Which was enough to make any man peeved. I didn't talk back none, but I confined my subsequent conversations with Doc to the subject of spookism, which, as I said before, was a easy matter. Also, when Doc wasn't around, I done my best to keep Miss Violet cheered up by tellin' her stories about my wild and woolly life, in which, if I do say it myself, she seemed to take quite a interest.

Well, to make a short story thick, one evenin' Violet Kenna went out for a little stroll and didn't come back. All that night Doc walked the floor and waited for her, and in the mornin' he went out and called up the police and hired detectives an went to see the manager of the morgue. Also he posted notices offerin' a thousand dollars' reward for information leadin' to the whereabouts, etcetery. People went around draggin' ponds and bloodhounds and things, but nobody qualified for that thousand. When a week went by without nobody findin' a lock of her hair or a han'kerchief or nothing, like they allus do in deteckative stories, Doc made his reward offer five thousand. And when another week went by without her trail bein' picked up he raised it to ten thousand. You can take it from me, half the population of Lost Angels turned Shylock, there bein' at that time another ten thousand dollar reward offer for the apperhension of a actress known as Marjorie Carmencita, who was also missin', along with a couple hundred thousand dollars' worth of diamonds not belongin' to her.

One evenin' a few days later, when Doc and I was walkin' down the street together, I called his attention to a old house settin' back from the street quite a ways. It was a big house, with vines and cupolas and towers and things growin' all over it. It looked as spooky as the graveyard at Tombstone, Arizona, by moonlight. There was a brass nameplate on the door, signifyin', in big letters, the fack that the name of the guy what lived there was Kubla Khali.

"Doc," said I, sudden like, "I've heard a lot about this Kubla Khali guy here lately. They say folks comes to him from all over the country and gives him twenty-dollar bills so 's they can talk to the spooks of their great-grandmothers what was scalped in Custer's last charge. Now you know consid'able about spook doctors. Why don't you give this guy a try-out? Mebbe he can get his tellypathic lariat on the horns of Violet's fourth dimension, so to speak."

Doc studied a little bit and then opened the gate and we went in. I rung the door-bell while he give the brass name-plate the once over. They was a lot of little chicken tracks under Kubla Khali's name that looked like they might 'a' been either Chinese or Choctaw.

"What's the hieroglyphics mean, Doc?" I ast him.

Doc wiped his spec's and took another look.

"They're Hindu," he explained, with a show of learnin'. "Translated, they mean 'Professor of Occult Science'."

"Never knew you could read Hindu, Doc," I said, lookin' at him with suspicion. "I believe you're tryin' to put one over on me. They look more like Aztec or Eskimo or Nonconformist to me."

Doc started to flare up, but just then the door was opened by a undersized party dressed in a nightgown or shroud or somethin', with a turban on its head and nothin' on its feet but a pair of perforated slippers. Its complexion was somethin' between a octaroon and a bottle of shoe polish. It put one hand on its stomach and bent over real respeckful while it held the door open.

"What do you reckon it is, Doc?" I whispered in his ear.

"Shut up, you ignoramus," Doc answered. "It's a Hindu boy." Then to the party in the shroud: "Is the Professor in, boy?"

For answer, the boy straightened up and motioned for us to foller. He led us down a dark hall to a little room at the end, where he made more motions to the effeck that Doc and me might set down, which we did. Then he took a sneak for hisself.

The room he left us in was fitted up like a doctor's waitin' room, with bookcases and a library table full of books and magazines and things on theosophy and astrology and occultism. Doc fussed around till he got hold of a magazine with a lot of big words in it and then started to read me a lecture.

"See here, Doc," I told him, "I didn't come here to be thee-ossified. Anyhow, I'd ruther hear you read Hindu. It ain't so hard to translate."

Just then the Hindu boy stuck his bean through a door and motioned for us to foller him again. He took us through another little passageway into a big room all decorated up with Oriental rugs and hangin's and things, and lit with a spooky light that you couldn't tell where it come from.

At the fur end of this room Professor Kubla Khali was takin' his ease in a Morris chair, readin' a book and smokin' one of them hookies. He was dressed in a Oriental costume, his robe bein' of silk and speckled with new moons and stars and comets and things. He had on perforated slippers, like the boy, but he didn't wear no turban. His hair was coarse and black. It was parted in the middle and hung down over his ears. His complexion was a shade darker than a cigar store Indian. His eyes was black, and when he turned 'em on you he didn't seem to look at you, but through you. We was led up to him by the Hindu boy, who got down and walloped his nose on the floor three times, after which he took a sneak for hisself again.

Kubla Khali amused hisself first by takin' a mental X-ray photograph of me. It only took him two seckins to classify me to his apparent dissatisfaction. Then he perforated Doc with his eyes for a couple minutes. Doc seemed to suit him better. Anyhow he smiled agreeable like.

"Be seated, gentlemen," he said, or words to that effeck. He had a accent somethin' between a Japanese bell-boy and a love-sick bobcat.

Doc and me deposited ourselves in chairs.

"Now," said the Professor, "which was it you wished to consult me about?"

Doc told him all there was to tell about the vanishment of Violet, casually mentionin' the ten thousand dollars reward. Kubla looked interested, especially at the last.

"I have had consid'able success," he said, "in locatin' missin' people by means of psychography. If you like, we will make an attempt to get into psychic touch with your daughter immejiately."

"The sooner the quicker," answered Doc.

The Professor rung a little bell and the Hindu boy trotted in and massaged the floor with his nose again. Then the two Orientals moved a little cabinet to the middle of the room. They was a depression in the top of this cabinet, into which fitted a doojigger which looked like a schoolboy's slate. The Kubla guy opened up this slate and ast Doc to examine it and load it up hisself with a sheet of blank paper and a pencil, so's he could be sure no one was dealin' from the bottom of the deck. Doc looked into things pretty careful, after which he tore a sheet of paper out of his notebook and laid it in the slate, along with one of his own pencils. Then he shut the slate. The Hindu boy brought four chairs and we all set down, holdin' each others' hands so as to form a circle around the cabinet. All at once the light went out. It was darker than Egypt on a rainy night.

We set that way for half an hour before anything happened. Then there was a noise, faint at first, but gradually gettin' louder, like a pencil tappin' on the slate. Doc was beginnin' to get nervous. I could tell that by the way his hand shook, him bein' between me and Kubla Khali. Directly the tappin' stopped and was followed by a slow scratchin' sound, like a kid learnin' to write. It kept up for several minutes, and then there was a noise like the pencil droppin' on the slate. We set still a little longer, but everything was quiet after that. All at once the light come on. Kubla Khali made motions for Doc to look in the slate.

Doc opened up the slate and took out his sheet of note-paper. It was full of writin'. The words was kind of cramped and the lines run crooked, but it was Violet's handwritin'—I could see that myself with half a eye. This is what it said:

"Dear Father:—Don't you think I ought to choose my own husband? VIOLET."

Doc read it over two or three times, blinkin' like a owl.

"Ask her where she is, Professor," he said.

"I'll try," answered the Professor, or words to that effeck.

Then we all set around the cabinet again, holdin' each others' hands. The light went out, same as before, mysterious like. I listened to Doc's watch runnin' a race with mine for three-quarters of a hour, and I was commencin' to feel so spooky I could see things where they wasn't any when the tappin' started again. Then came the scratchin', followed in a few minutes by the sound of the pencil droppin' on the slate. After that, quiet for a spell, then lights, then Doc jumpin' for the slate. Sure enough, there was another message. It read:

"You must answer my question before I answer yours. VIOLET."

Doc swallered hard when he read that. Then he called me over to one side.

"Breezy," he said, "what do you think of it?"

"Well," I answered, "allus havin' been a disbeliever in spooks myself, I'm kind of up in the air, so to speak. But if I ain't locoed, this is Violet's handwritin', and——"

"It is her handwritin'," Doc interrupted. "Of course it's impossible for a man of your limited eddication to comprehend that psychography is a scientifically established fack, but, nevertheless, such is the case. There is not a doubt in my mind but that Violet wrote these messages. The question is, where is she and what does she want me to answer?"

"Well, such bein' the case," I told him, "I would suggest that you answer the question she ast you in her first message."

Doc looked like thirty cents, Mexican dinero.

"I suppose," he said, "I'll have to tell her I was a trifle hasty with this Waller chap. Not that I've got so much against him, outside of the fack that he's a uneddicated and material minded cuss, like you. He might make Violet a good husband. Anyway, I'd let 'em get married if he had a few thousand saved up to keep a wife."

"Well, they ain't neither one of us throwin' our material away on spooks, and sich immaterial things," I reminded him sarcastic like.

So Doc went back to the Professor and told him to wireless Violet that he was expressin' regrets for his undue hastiness in the matter of Tommy Waller. Everything was arranged as before, and after another half-hour's wait in the Stygian darkness we got this message:

"Don't beat around the bush. Answer my question. Will you let me pick my own husband? "VIOLET."

Doc gritted his teeth. Bein' a hard-headed guy, it went consid'able against the grain for him to give in. So he got out his pencil and notebook and concocted a answer in the form of a complex sentence containin' about two hundred and fifty words, mostly ifs and ands and buts.

"Doc," said I, "of course I'm a uneddicated cowpuncher and don't know nothin' about this spook business, scientifically speakin'. But I would opine that you got about two hundred and forty-nine words too many there. It's a leetle lengthy for a spook to grasp, so to speak. If you want results you better cut it down to about three letters, unqualified, like this—y-e-s."

Of course Doc wouldn't concede that I knowed nothin' about it, so he ast the Professor. The Professor sided with me and Doc had to give in. He told Kubla to tellypath the "yes". Then we held another long spook session, and got another message from Violet. It read:

"Will you give Tommy a position in the bank? "VIOLET."

By this time Doc was lookin' to be a older man than he really was. Also he was gettin' peeved. He called me over in the corner again and drawed on his vocabulary of cuss words to relieve his feelin's.

"Breezy, what do you make of it?" he ast.

"Well," I told him, "bein' a uneddicated guy, especially in the ways of spooks, I'm disqualified to speak, so to speak. But, as you ast me, my unperfessional advice is to accede to all proposals."

"I will," said Doc, sort of grim like, "but I'll put more than three letters in my answer."

So he got out his notebook and wrote this answer:

"Yes. I'll do anything you ask. But I won't answer any more questions. Where are you?"

"Can you send her that, Professor?" he ast.

"I'll try," said Kubla Khali, readin' the message aloud.

Then the spook business was institooted again. Inside of half a hour we got this answer:

"I will be at pier 27 at midnight. VIOLET."

Doc looked at his watch and let out a yell. It was 11.30 P. M. then, and pier 27 five miles away.

"Come on," he hollered, and started for the door, with me and the Professor at his heels. Just as the three of us hit the sidewalk a taxicab swung around the corner. Doc hailed it. We all piled in and he told the chauffeur to take us to pier 27 without payin' any particular attention to the speed laws and sich.

It was still fifteen minutes till midnight when we unloaded at the pier. There was no one in sight there, exceptin' for a man in a rowboat which was tied to the wharf ladder, who looked at us kind of suspicious. So Doc and me ambushed ourselves like a couple of Injun sentries, while Kubla Khali stood between us, lookin' now at the stars, and again at the dim hulk of a yacht that was loomin' up in the offin'.

In about ten minutes another taxi come tearin' down the waterfront and skidded to a stop in front of pier 27. A woman jumped out, throwed the driver some money and made a bee-line for the pier, lookin' neither to the right nor the left. She looked like she was plumb set to do the high-divin' ack. Anyhow she went straight to the ladder, and had one foot on it when Kubla Khali grabbed her. Doc and me bein' sort of paralyzed at the time.

* * *

At this point "Breezy" McInnis smiled so reminiscently, lit a cigar and puffed at it so deliberately that I could not retain my curiosity.

"Well," I asked, "was it Violet?"

"It was not," answered "Breezy," "it was Marjorie Carmencita, the diamond thief. The feller in the boat was waitin' to take her out to the yacht. She was makin' her getaway when Kubla nabbed her. Subsequently he got the ten thousand dollars' reward for that little ack."

"And Violet," I persisted, "what about her?"

"Well," answered "Breezy" grinning, "that's the part that takes a little explainin'. Of course, bein' blessed with a average intelleck, you've already figgered out that this spook business was phony. Them funny scratches on that brass door-plate, for instance, was not Hindu. They was put on there by Sing Ho, my Chinese laundryman. I got Sing to translate 'em for Doc one day after it was all over. Sing said they meant, 'Allee samee catchee plenty big foolee'. You can bet your best saddle Doc never spouted to me about his eddication after that."

"But Violet, what about her?" I reiterated.

"I'm tellin' you, just as fast as I can," continued "Breezy." "You see, this Waller chap got the idee first, but he didn't have the mazuma to finance it. I did. So, him and me bein' pals, and him havin' the bean and me the beans, so to speak, we j'ined hands. I paid for the stuff and he done the actin'. He was Kubla Khali. A little walnut juice and a wig done the work. As for Violet, more walnut juice and a turban 'll make a Hindu boy out of any girl. She set between me and Tommy at the spook sessions, so's she could get up and scribble them messages. She was figurin' strong on liquidatin' part of that ten thousand on her weddin' tour. Half of the money, of course, was to come to me for backin' the thing and leadin' Doc into it."

"But why wasn't Violet at the pier?" I inquired.

"She was," answered "Breezy." "She made a quick change and followed in another taxi—we had both taxis ordered beforehand. But she went to pier 29. Pier 29 was what she really wrote in her message, but, writin' in the dark that way, she got her fingers so cramped up that the 9 looked more like a 7, and we got balled up. When it was plumb midnight and she hadn't showed up, I got worried and took another peek at the message, and figgered out what was wrong. Then we went over to pier 29 and picked her up. Seein' as how the triflin' error netted us a extra ten thousand, we didn't kick none. The next day Doc paid the reward, and Professor Kubla Khali disappeared, and Tommy Waller went casherin' in Doc's bank."

"I suppose," I said, still feeling a little in the dark, "that she and Tommy Waller were already married."

"Not by any means," answered "Breezy." You know I told you Doc made a mistake that night in kickin' Tommy down the front steps? Well, Doc got the wrong man. Of course Tommy and Violet was real good friends, havin' gone to school together. But the guy that put the weddin' bug in her ear, and that got matrimonially spliced to her the night she disappeared, was me, and we're spendin' that five thousand right now on our honeymoon."

"Breezy," he said, "what do you think of it?"

He that has never changed any of his opinions and was never wise enough to recognize mistakes in himself, cannot be charitable enough to excuse the mistakes of others.

Love Will Find the Way

by Wenona Gilman

June did not speak. He put out his hand and grasped that of his old friend.

She had come to a little rustic gate in the hedge and lifting the latch, she let herself through.

"But I tell you it is impossible. You are mistaken!"

Copyright, 1898, by George Monroe.
Serial Rights by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Junius Beckwith, a Westpointer, Anne Gordon, wealthy, Marian Reade, companion, friend and protegee of Anne Gordon, occupy a box at the Metropolitan Opera House. The curtain falls and Beckwith admits that "Lucia di Lammermore" has a depressing influence upon him and he cannot think of insanity without repulsion, no matter what the cause may be, and a marriage with either tainted, should be made a crime punishable by law. The next morning is Marian's birthday and deciding to go home, Anne Gordon, with a premonition that she ought to stay, exacts a promise, if any trouble comes, Marian will let her know first. Marian walks away and turning the corner meets June Beckwith and they go to the park. Remembering it is her birthday, he offers his love as a gift and asks her to be his wife. Happy in her love for June, Marian reaches home. Janet Reade, her grandmother, tells her that her mother is not dead but the inmate of a madhouse. What can she say to June? Hearing a voice, she answers to her father's call. He gives her a curious Venetian ring for a birthday gift, and questioning him where he got it he evades the answer and queries what Anne Gordon gives her. Showing the watch, her father berates Marian's friend. She might have given one thousand dollars, which he needs and will have. Marian, under the horror of all she hears, forgets all her grandmother told her, even forgets June Beckwith. Later in the night, recalling her promise to Anne Gordon, she goes to her home. A light flashed from a window opposite shows a rope hung from Anne Gordon's window, and in the window her father's face. Reaching home, Marian meets her father, tells him where he has been, and for no honest purpose, and demands that he return all he has stolen. He refuses, and only after her earnest pleading does he ask what she will do for him. Little dreaming the price she must pay, she asks for nothing but to serve him and she seals the promise upon her mother's Bible. Left alone, Paul Reade decides to keep one ring. Marian writes June she does not love him and that her soul is withered as much as the flower she encloses. Her father assures her he has obtained a position in the brokerage business and rented a house down town. June is stunned upon receiving Marian's letter and welcomes his friend, Fred Underwood, who tells him Paul Reade is a most unscrupulous villain and the house he has rented is a decoy for gamblers, that Marian is not as innocent as she appears. June cannot believe it, and Underwood will prove it to him if he cares to go. June calling upon Anne, she tells of Paul Reade's sudden wealth, and June, knowing where it comes from, as a friend, forbids Anne to go to Marian Reade's home. Going to the reception, Underwood requests Paul Reade to introduce Marian. In the meanwhile June appears with a message from Miss Gordon. He invites Marian for a waltz which she ends with Dick Gresham, the most notorious gambler in New York. The evening ended, Marian faces her father and asks who were those people. She receives no satisfaction from his answer—he expects her to receive them with courtesy, she has sworn to obey him. Anne begs Marian to come to her for a home, to divulge the secret that troubles her and she denies she has one. June Beckwith calls upon Anne, who defends Marian and with tears in her eyes pleads with him not to condemn her. If he never loved Anne before he thinks he does now and she is willing to be his wife. Marian speaks to her father of her mother and what has kept her from Marian all these years. She must see her. Her father refuses and Marian insists. There are those who will help. Paul Reade requests Ezra Morris, whose mother is hopelessly insane and confined in a house built especially for her, to allow Marian to visit her, believing she is her mother. Returning home she cries, "will the inheritance come to her?" Dick Gresham announces Anne's betrothal to Junius Beckwith, and for several days Marian remains in her room. Again mingling with her father's guests, she is introduced to Elliott Dwight, a multi-millionaire who, by his words and manner, arouses Marian's suspicions as to his motives. She demands of her father, and before his guests, to deny that she is an inmate of a gambling house, a decoy by his will for his guests, that it is not as Elliott Dwight says. Her father's silence convinces her it is true and in her anguish Marian leaves the house. She is stopped by Fred Underwood who exacts a promise that she will see him before making a decided change. Her heart sinks. June believes her guilty. Underwood admits he is in a most uncomfortable position. June loves Marian, Anne Gordon loves June and I love Anne Gordon. Janet Reade goes to Anne Gordon; she knows her son is not only a gambler but a thief, and has stolen from Anne, detected by his daughter and innocent of the character of the house Marian leaves as soon the truth comes to her. Fred Underwood takes Marian to Wildhurst where she meets Mrs. King, to whom she is strongly attracted and who tells her that Wildhurst joins Judson's Asylum. June going to see Anne, she tells him that Marian is innocent of their suspicions.

CHAPTER XXVII.

AN EXCHANGE OF OPINIONS.

UNDERWOOD had just returned from his drive into the country. He was rather tired after his sleepless night and the excitement under which he had labored during that long morning, had gone to his room for a bath and a little rest before he presented himself at the home of Paul Reade for his interview with Marian's grandmother.

He had thrown off his coat, and was about to shed the remainder of his clothing in like manner, when a knock sounded upon the door.

A servant entered in answer to his rather brisk: "Come in."

"Mr. Beckwith is down-stairs, sir," he said. "I told him you had left orders that you were not to be disturbed; but he seems very much upset about something, sir, and insists on seeing you."

"Tell him to come up."

Underwood slipped into his dressing-gown, and stood there waiting. He heard the quick, elastic step on the stairs, and a little flush arose to his brow.

"I wonder if he has heard?" he said mentally; "and I wonder how it is all to end?"

He was still standing there when June entered, forgetting to shake hands, in his excitement.

All restraint was removed from June then, but he was apparently more calm than he had been in the presence of his betrothed wife. He was deathly in his pallor, and his eyes showed curiously against the colorless skin; but his voice was strangely quiet as he said:

"Have you heard the news, Fred?"

"What news?"

"Why, about the Reades. Were you there last night?"

Underwood sat down before replying. He looked up at June's white face, and said, with an effort at self-control that proved successful, as it usually did with him:

"Sit down. Who told you? What have you heard?"

"But were you there?" persisted June.

"Yes, I was there."

"Then you must have heard about the scene that occurred. You must——"

"But who told you of it? There is nothing in the papers."

"Anne told me. Mrs. Reade went to her this morning. And you knew?"

"Yes."

"And did not come to me at once?"

Underwood did not reply at once. His gaze wandered for just a moment away from his friend's face, and then came back with a suddenness that was almost startling.

"Hang it all, man!" he exclaimed vehemently, "how could I tell you? If it had not been for the cursed cross-purposes at which we have been playing, I should have gone to you before I slept; but what was I to do? What would you have done? You love Marian Reade, and—— What is the good of going over the ground? I could not tell you!"

"Will you tell me just what happened there?"

The scene was rehearsed in its entirety; then, when it had been completed, June exclaimed:

"And you know that she has—disappeared?"

The last word was scarcely more than a whisper, but it seemed to tell Underwood something of what his friend feared. He leaned forward and placed his hand upon June's knee.

"Old man," he said gently, "I am under a solemn promise of silence, but I may at least tell you this much in order to relieve your anxiety: Marian is in no danger. She is safe where she is."

"Then you know her whereabouts?"

"Can you think that I would have left her to herself under these circumstances. I waited outside of the house last night until she had left it, and then—— I am not at liberty to tell you more until I receive her permission."

June did not speak. He put out his hand and grasped that of his old friend. If Underwood had looked at him, he would have seen that there were tears in his eyes, tears of gratitude for the friendship that had never failed him.

Underwood, too, was silent for a little while; then, he leaned forward and again placed his hand on June's knee.

"Have you thought what you were going to do in this emergency, old fellow?" he asked quietly.

June's great, wistful eyes were fixed on him.

"I seem like an overgrown baby," he said dully, "waiting for some one else to think and plan what I shall do. Had I not been so willing to believe wrong of Marian, this terrible decision might never have been put upon me. However, there is but one course to pursue, Fred. I have thought that out long ago. I thought it the instant the blow fell, and the belief that I was right has not changed. I am the betrothed husband of Anne Gordon. She has sinned in nowise, and I have not the right to break the pledge that has been made. I shall carry out my contract with her."

There was a dogged determination in the weary voice, and Underwood heard with a sinking of the heart, and at the same time an increased admiration for his old friend.

"I think you are right," he said musingly, after a time. "You have not the right to break your pledge; and yet—— June, don't think that I am speaking for myself! Don't think me selfish enough to want her made unhappy in order that I may have an opportunity to gratify my own desire, but is it fair to her that she should be deceived? Is it treating her loyally and honestly? Do you think that it is according to her desire? Suppose that in the years that are to come she should discover that you do not love her. What then, June?

Beckwith arose suddenly. All the animation had died from his countenance. It looked old and gray. He leaned against the mantel-shelf and looked down upon Underwood without seeing him clearly.

"I don't know," he said huskily. "These matters are too momentous to decide without reflection. We take a week to think of a business proposition. This is more than that. It encompasses more than life, for the salvation of a soul might hang upon it. My mind is at rest about Marian now, and I can think."

"There are many sides to it which must be considered," said Underwood wearily. "I seem to be too much exhausted, mentally and physically, to be able to advise you in any particular. Marian tells me that there are other disgraces that are connected with her life that would prevent her union with you, even now that this is removed."

June colored.

"I know to what she refers," he said, hanging his head with a dull sense of shame; "but"—lifting it suddenly and looking Underwood in the eye with a sort of defiance—"she is not responsible for the sins of her father."

Underwood leaned back in his chair and fixed his eyes questioningly upon June.

"June," he said earnestly, "I believe you would marry Marian if you knew her father to be a —convict!"

Beckwith flushed again. He did not reply and after a moment of silence Underwood exclaimed slowly:

"I thought so. You love her so that there is nothing that could stand between you except a fault of your own or your honor. But does your honor suggest the straight course to you in this? Is it fair that you should marry a girl like Anne Gordon, a girl who has the right to the whole heart of the man whom she marries, while your soul is filled with thoughts of another woman?"

Still June did not reply, and rising, Underwood placed his hand on the younger man's shoulder.

"There!" he exclaimed. "There is no reason why this decision should come at once as you have said. Forgive me, old man. I realize fully that there are two sides to it. Miss Gordon loves you. She is your betrothed wife. Most men would consider that honor held them to the pledge that had been made, and perhaps they would be correct in it. God knows I don't know. I acknowledge frankly that I cannot look at it dispassionately. I can only say this, June: If Miss Gordon were no longer your fiancee, I would not ask her to be my wife, because I should want one of whose whole heart I was the undisputed possessor."

Beckwith lifted his head and smiled. There was no mirth in it, but infinite sadness.

"There is a favorite expression of Miss Gordon that seems to me to apply to this situation," he said quietly. "It seems to me to be peculiarly appropriate. Do you remember the old song from which she has probably taken it? 'Love will find the way'?"

Underwood said nothing. He turned half-away with his hands thrust deeply into his pockets, and looked through the distant windows to the houses opposite. With that curious tangential flight of the mind that we have all observed, he noticed two children leaning far out in their efforts to see into the street. A fear came upon him that they might lose their balance and fall, and he was about to cross the room to call out to them, when June put out his hand and grasped his colder one in a warm clasp.

"Good by, Fred," he said huskily. "I am going home. I wish you would obtain from—Miss Reade her permission for me to see her once more. Tell her that if she forbids it I will not ask it again; but there are some things that are necessary that I should say to her. Will you do that for me, old man?"

"You know I will."

"And when shall I come for her answer?"

"Tomorrow at this hour. If anything should occur between now and then, I will send you a telegram."

The door closed upon Beckwith, and turning back, Underwood placed his elbows upon the mantel-shelf and propped his cheeks upon his clenched fists.

He had forgotten the children opposite.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

DR. JUDSON'S STATEMENT.

With bowed head, Marian walked on in the direction that the gardener had indicated.

There was a hard sort of smile on her lips as she walked down the little pathway between the trees, a smile that was not used to dwell there.

"I am only giving to her that which another will not have," she thought bitterly. "Everything else has failed me, and now I turn to the duty for which I should have sacrificed every other desire in life. I should have left all for her sake, and I did not. After all, my punishment has been just. I danced, while she lay there, chained like a dog, in the room in which she has remained for sixteen long years. I have been happy while manacles have cut into the wrists of the woman who gave me birth. And when I saw her misfortune, I turned, sick with repulsion. I begged to be taken away where my eyes could not be tortured with the loathsome sight of the terrible affliction that had fallen upon my mother. Oh, I have deserved to suffer! Do I deserve forgiveness?"

A wild sob arose in her throat. She strove to control her emotions; but tears, the first she had shed, blinded her. She stopped and vigorously applied her handkerchief to her eyes.

"Now is not the time to weep," she said, aloud. "There is work to do, and with the help of Heaven, I am ready to do it."

She had come to the little rustic gate in the hedge, and lifting the latch, she let herself through.

On the other side of the hedge the lake lay, bordered with trees, but with the clear water visible between, lying with gentle, almost caressing touch against the greensward. A little lower down she saw the boathouse, picturesque as the imagination of an artist. The silence was broken alone by the slow swish of the water, and the peacefulness of the scene calmed her.

She paused a moment and looked about her, a resignation, sweet as religion, coming over her. Then she went on and entered the tiny boathouse.

A pleasant-looking man turned as she opened the door.

"I was told by the gardener that I should find some one here to row me across the lake," Marian said quietly. "Are you the man?"

"Yes, lady," he said politely. "Is it to the asylum that you want to go?"

"Yes."

"All right, lady. There is a boat all ready at the end of the float. I'll have you over in half a minute. Come along."

She followed him and took her seat opposite him in the end of the boat; and as he dipped his oars into the water he said:

"Have you ever been over?"

"To the asylum—yes: but not across the lake. Can you land me beside the little house where the isolated patient is confined?"

"Oh, yes. But you can't go in there, you know. They never let any one see her."

"Yes, I know," answered Marian faintly.

"You ought to hear her when she gets in one of her violent moods, sometimes. Why, we can hear her scream clear to Wildhurst, and it is like the scream of a human being, but the strange, unearthly noise that an animal makes. Poor old soul! They have looked for her to die for—the Lord knows how many years, but she don't die. She only grows worse and worse all the time."

Marian did not reply. She was listening, with her eyes bent on the water; and as the man ceased speaking, an awful thought came to her.

"If I remain here, there will be no escape for me. Sooner or later I must share her fate. I, too, must be like the animal. I, too, must live for years and years in a condition that is a thousand times worse than death. But I have not the right to shirk duty in order to save myself. I must do what I can, and trust God for the rest."

The boat was drawn ashore just below the little stone cottage, and she stepped out. With a shiver of horror she saw the place. She remembered her feeling of gratitude to her father when she had first looked on its beauties, and a curious sensation came over her.

"He can't be altogether bad," she said, with her hands pressed closely over her heart, "when he can love as he has loved her."

There was comfort in the thought, and she clasped it more closely to her. She turned to the boatman hastily and said:

"Can you wait for me here to take me back?"

"Unless I am summoned from the other side. If I am not here, you just whistle or call, and I will hear you and come."

"Thank you."

She turned away and walked swiftly. Before the door of the little cottage, which she remembered so well, a man sat. There was a short-stemmed pipe in his mouth, and his chair was tilted back against the cottage, only half-shaded from the glare of the sun. He saw her as she approached, and arose.

"May I—may I see the—lady who is confined in here?" asked Marian timidly.

"I am sorry, miss," he said, taking the pipe from his mouth, "but it is against the rules."

"But I have been in before. I am a relative of hers."

"The orders are just the same, miss. I can't let you go in without permission of one of the doctors; but if you will go up to the office, miss, I've no doubt but they would let you see her, if you are a relative and have been in before."

"Where is the office?"

"Straight up that path, miss, to the right of the entrance."

"Thank you. Do you—do you attend—her?"

"Yes, miss."

"And how has she been of late?"

"Just like she always is. There is never any change. She grew worse for a long time, until it got so bad that it could not be worse, and now it remains just the same. What keeps her alive is a mystery. I don't know what you want to see her for, miss. It is bad enough for us that have to wait on her."

"I will go to the office."

She bowed to him and moved on, unable to whisper to that man that the creature whom he so loathed was her own mother. Another sob arose in her throat; but she stranged it back, and almost ran in the direction of the office, in order that she might keep herself from thinking, and so retain her self-control until she had seen the doctor.

At the foot of the stoop she encountered a female attendant, and asked:

"Is the doctor in his office? May I see him?"

"I think Dr. Judson is in there. Walk right in."

She went up the stoop, and stood before the door which she saw open. A man with a sympathetic face, if a trifle stern, and with gray hair, sat beside a desk writing. He glanced up as he heard the footsteps pause.

There were few mn who could look upon Marian Reade without a thrill of pleasure, and Doctor Judson arose at once with a smile that warmed his countenance perceptibly.

"Won't you come in?" he asked. "Is there anything that I can do for you?"

He saw at a glance that she was excited, and placed a chair for her. She entered, but did not sit, placing her hand upon the desk and leaning there for support.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 10.)

This Department is conducted solely for the use of COMFORT sisters, whereby they may give expression to their ideas relative to the home and home surroundings, and to all matters pertaining to themselves and families; as well as opening a way for personal correspondence between each other.

Our object is to extend a helping hand to COMFORT subscribers; to become coworkers with all who seek friendship, encouragement, sympathy or assistance through the interchange of ideas.

Any abuse of this privilege, such as inviting correspondence for the purpose of offering an article for sale, or undertaking to charge a sum of money for ideas, recipes or information mentioned in any letter appearing in this department, if reported, will result in the offender being denied the use of these columns.

Do not ask us to publish letters requesting money contributions or donations of any sort. Much as we sympathize with the suffering and unfortunate, it is impossible to do this as we would be flooded with similar requests.

Please write only on one side of the paper, and recipes on a separate sheet.

Always give your correct and full name and address, very plainly written; otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

Address MRS. WHEELER WILKINSON, CARE COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

TO take our minds from housecleaning, gardening, and the thousand and one things that must be done about a home, is another travel letter from Mrs. Marsh, wherein she describes a visit to San Francisco's Chinatown. The adventurous spirits among us can make the trip by proxy while the homebodies can read it and say, "My, I wouldn't go there for all the world." If you like these letters and want more of them, tell me so, for I have several interesting accounts of her travels.—Ed.

SO. BERKELEY, 3025 Adeline St., CALIF.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

Much has been said and volumes written about the quaint Orientals in San Francisco's Chinatown, but each and every time one is fortunate enough to visit this Little China, there is always found something new and interesting that has, perhaps, escaped the observation of others.

There are twenty square blocks and over 15,000 of these people in grand restaurants, curio bazaars, fruit and vegetable, herbs and jewelry, with the glorious jade ornaments, not forgetting the doorway cobblers, mostly dressed in Oriental costume and a smile.

Our trip through Chinatown was after dark, when we arrived at the Joss House in the sightseeing autos, with guides, and found the temple on top of the house. This, we were told, is to get as near heaven and to face the East.

The Chinese worshipers always take off their shoes before entering. My husband whispered to me that he was glad it did not refer to us as he was not certain about his socks. No sooner were we seated when a handsome Chinaman came into the Joss House and beat wildly upon a big gong. I don't often pray, but I did that time that it was not a riot or a fire.

The guide then explained that this was done to drive away any evil spirits that may have followed us into the Joss House.

"Toss the Joss sticks and see what luck you have with them," said our guide, and my husband did so and he secured a cross between good and bad luck, but I noticed the next man got the ham bones flat, so he was in better luck.

The carvings and gold were glorious, and we were informed that over a million dollars could not replace it. The wedding canopies were beyond description, and the offerings to the god in a canopied enclosure, were in small Chinese bowls. I tasted some of it but wished I hadn't.

In the next room we were shown the "cookers" which reduced the worn-out Chinks to ashes to be sent back to their native land, for, unless the dust lies there, there is scant chance of heaven.

Then we were introduced to Underground Chinatown. What a creepy feeling came over us as we groped our way through narrow passages with niches or holes in the walls where they lived in a six-foot square compartment, while the only ventilation, said the guide, is got by opening the door. No wonder they wear a smoke-dried appearance and a smile.

Here, underground, was a Chinese family, a mother and nine children, who sang for us in Chinese and American, danced, and passed the basket for good Yankee coin. We bought a pair of chop-sticks from the children, but up to the present we have been unable to successfully convey any food of even semi-liquid nature to our eats chamber.

This long underground passage brought us to the gambling joints, where men and women were mixed in the games, passing through the toughest of alleys, so narrow that sunlight was an absolute stranger at all times.

At another place, underground, we saw an old Chinaman who was said to be over 80 and who played on many instruments, of which his room was covered, said to be 100 kinds. His rendition of Chinese opera was a scream.

The Chinese Notice Board on a side street with a crowd of Chinks reading them, looked to us like a magnified wash ticket, only red.

Some few weeks after, my husband related the following story to a friend of mine:

"While passing one of the families in Underground Chinatown, I touched a Chinese woman, who was holding a baby in her arms, under the chin, and my wife turned around, and seeing her smiling, smiled in return, thinking it was meant for her. It never dawned on her that I, not her, was the cause of the merriment. That was one time I got by and with an Oriental queen at that."

What wonderful art is wrapped up in a packet of water flowers! Who can repress a smile when they watch an animated 12-foot bamboo pole to which is attached often six chairs, and the center a Chinaman entangled in a mass of dessicated cane, on his way home into Chinatown. Poor fellow, he was bent up like a letter 'I.

Your sincere sister,
MRS. JAMES C. MARSH.

MISSOURI.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I have been a silent reader of this corner for a long time and have been helped in many ways by the sisters' letters. I believe the usual way to introduce oneself is by a description but I fear if I undertook that it would be such a homely one that you would not finish reading my letter, therefore I would not have my questions answered, so I'll give a description of our home. We have three acres of cherry orchard and in the midst of it is our house, just a common, five-room house. I wish you could visit us when the cherries are in blossom, or, better yet, when the cherries are ripe.

We have four babies, three boys and one girl. The oldest is ten years old, the next eight, the girl is six and the baby boy is four years old. Sometime if I may I will send their pictures to be printed in COMFORT. Our boys are healthy, happy and full of fun but our girl worries us. She has never been a little girl at all but seems about ten years older than her real age. She is never so happy or contented as when talking with some old person and seldom plays with children of her own age and when she does it is always some little girl or boy she thinks is being slighted by the other children. It seems to us that she denies herself all the care-free happiness that should be her own, just to make others happy. When we ask her if she enjoyed herself playing at school or at a party, she very often answers: "I didn't have much time to play. The children ran away from little Fred and I had to go back and help him take off his shoe to get some gravel out," and something like that seems to keep her from playing or having a good time like other children. She learns fast at school and her teachers love her. She is now ready for the third grade. I am glad she loves old people and little ones that are slighted but I don't feel that it is right for us to let her go on denying herself, without having more pleasures. I realize, too, that this is a step to be taken with care and I hope some of you can help me to do what is right.

Pearl Vesey, I'd like to visit you in your mountain home. We don't have to have a big house, electric lights and hot and cold water and all that to make a house a home. I think sometimes the very best homes to be found are the little log cabins our mothers lived in. It may be nice to live in a fine house but as a general rule the one living in such a house is kept so busy keeping things "shining" that she has very little time to make it a home.

I would like to correspond with some of the sisters in the Western and Northern States. Mrs. Wilkinson has my address.

Love to all. CHERRY.

Cherry.—You shouldn't have told us about your cherry orchard. We are apt to descend upon you when cherries are ripe and do terrible things to your cherry crop. Your little girl is rather unusual, I'll admit, but if she is healthy and normal in every way, I'd be glad, if I were you, that she was so kind and thoughtful of others and not try to change her.—Ed.

LACENTER, WASH.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

The first thing I'll do will be to ask some of the sisters to write to me. I like to write letters so will be sure to answer.

I am eighteen years young, a high school graduate, at present attending Business College and have hopes that some future day will find me in a University. This hope brings me to the object of this letter—a little appeal on behalf of the daughters and younger sisters of our big family.

First, education. I wonder how many of the sisters (and brothers) still cling to the belief that education is not for girls? Just oodles and oodles of you, aren't there? I knew it. How I wish you would get that narrow, senseless idea out of your heads—for it is absolutely senseless. I could give you reason upon reason why education is just as much, if not more, necessary for a girl than a boy, but to do so would require at least a page of COMFORT. What if a girl does marry? Is that any reason why she shouldn't have an education as well as her brother? Why should she just have to sit patiently around and wait for just anyone to come and carry her off to a home of her own, when it is easy to realize that it is only in the atmosphere of the work she loves that she will come into contact with the man whose ideas and tastes are congenial to her own and which congeniality tends to make for marital happiness. Moreover, it is essential for a woman to be independent for who knows when the day may come, when deprived of her chief support, and perhaps with small children dependent upon her, she is suddenly flung upon her own resources. A man may be independent without an education but for a woman it is almost impossible. Lacking the physical strength of a man, she needs must depend more on her brain to help her out. Hence the need of an educated brain. Oh, there are reasons and reasons, but taking not even any of them into consideration, let me tell you that there are no days so happy, no lectures more uplifting, no friends so true, or no dreams and ambitions so lofty as those found in the joyous, earnest hours of our school days. So, sisters and brothers, who are mothers and fathers as well, I plead with you to forget the old prejudice and when the eager eyes of that little daughter of yours grow big and wistful with dreams and ambitions, and she begins to wish for a college education, encourage her and begin laying aside money for her sake as well as "son's" and help her to make those wonderful dreams a splendid reality.

Almost in line with this was the other suggestion I wished to make on behalf of the younger sisters who will probably appreciate the point. That is, let your daughter have a little privacy. By all means, if possible, let her have a room of her own fixed to suit herself. You will be surprised how the room will be an open book of her taste and character. And when she retires to this corner of her own, let her alone. Don't try to enter or to find out what she is doing. What difference does it make whether she has wrapped herself in a bedspread in an effort to imitate Cleopatra or Theda Bara; or whether she is trying "movie expressions" before the mirror, or a new hair dressing or a new dance step, or just sitting by the window and dreaming wonderful dreams? What is that to you? It doesn't gain you anything and it does irritate her terribly. Youth doesn't like to be laughed at for its dreams and fancies. To us they are tremendously real. Give them a chance and your precious understanding will be the sweetest and most appreciated thing on earth when the years fly by and daughter is herself a woman.

That's all.

If any of you should like to know what sort of creature the writer of this is, just picture to yourself a slip of a girl, just a trifle over five feet tall, full of the joy of living, add to this a black satin smock, a black velvet tam, a pair of Irish eyes, a fluff of dusky hair—and you have as accurate a picture as could ever be drawn of

A LITTLE DREAMER.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I am writing to you for help for I feel that we are near to one another. I have been reading your letters for fourteen years and love all that I have read; that is why I am going to you for help now.

I have been married eight years to a kind husband, in some ways. I always have the pocketbook and spend most of the money and he is always good and kind and seldom says a harsh word to me but early last spring I was told that he was spending much of his time at a house he wouldn't have me visit. There was only the husband and wife in this family and I soon learned that the husband was away most of the time and that my husband was with his wife while he was away. I had heard questionable rumors concerning this woman and at first I tried not to believe what I had been told, but later I was forced to think that it was true. This may sound foolish to some of you but will anyone who has been through a similar experience tell me how you felt toward your husband in after years. Don't think I don't love him for I do. If I didn't care for him I would go away and let him do the same; still, it seems to me that I have a different love for him now. Do you think going away from here would help heal the wound? I have met this woman everal times but have never spoken to her. He still denies the stories. In my heart I think he is guilty. I have never seen this subject discussed and maybe the sisters can help me. HEARTBROKEN WIFE.

Heartbroken Wife.—I've often wondered how women similarly placed felt toward their husbands in after years, and shall be interested in the replies to your letter.—Ed.

MEDINA, R. R. 1, TENN.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Mrs. Wilkinson, I noticed in the February COMFORT that your weight was 130 pounds so you won't be interested in my chat for it's really to the fleshy ones who wish to reduce without giving up sweets entirely and without taking as much exercise as the doctors advise.

Last year when I was trying to find a suit that would fit me, a clerk asked me if I had ever tried reducing and told me of the following plan; said her sister read it in an article written by a doctor, had tried it and found it the best way to reduce.

Eat as much and any kind of solid foods you want one day then drink as much and any kind of liquid foods the next and so on until you have reduced to the desired size.

Rich liquid food is just as nourishing as solid food and reducing this way you lose flesh but not strength and do not get so hungry, especially for sweets, for you see you can eat all you want of them every other day. The lady, in speaking of the liquid foods her sister drank, mentioned sweet milk. I said, "Sweet milk is a flesh builder." She said, "You will find it isn't when used with other liquids just every other day," which I found to be true when I tried it.

I weighed 174 pounds when I began to reduce and in about three months I had lost twenty pounds. Most everyone who knew of it laughed and said I was starving myself to death. They didn't seem to think the liquid foods would satisfy the appetite.

Don't think now that after you have reduced to the desired size, that you can go back to the solid foods every day for after I reduced I began eating solid foods one and sometimes two meals on my liquid food days. While doing this I didn't gain any but I soon left off my liquids and in a little while went back to 170, but returned to my solid foods one day and liquids the next and soon reduced again.

I have been a silent reader of COMFORT for a long time and enjoy reading everything in it, especially the sisters' and cousins' letters. I think Uncle Lisha is proving to be another Uncle Charlie, don't you, sisters?

Pauline Williams, your suggestion for a "mope closet" is good; but don't you think it would also be good to ask God to help us not to mope any more?

How many of the sisters think they could act as the woman Dotty wrote about and their husbands not know of it? I think if the wife or husband are untrue to the other, they will soon find it out but oftentimes don't want other people to think they know. I have been happily married nine years and I believe if my John were to find another he'd rather be with, I'd soon know it. We have a little girl, five years old, and like most children where there is only one in the family, she keeps us busy entertaining her. Am teaching her at home and reading her a letter from one of the cousins who started to school at the age of seven in the fourth grade she says I will have her ready for the fourth grade when she begins school.

I want to ask the sisters to send me a scrap of gingham for a gingham quilt. I want to put all the pieces together and outline the state from which it was received, in each piece of gingham.

With best regards to Mrs. Wilkinson and the COMFORT family, MRS. A. G. DUNAVAN.

VERMONT.

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Let me in before Mrs. Wilkinson finds out I am a farmer's wife and let me sit near the door so I can run if West Texan chases me when she finds out that my chief occupation is farmwork. I really hope help is not so scarce in Texas as in Vermont. If I did not help out of doors the town would have to take care of us as this farm is more than one man can handle. My health is better too when I do out-of-door work. I never was worth much until I did it.

What became of the Farmer's Wife who wanted a request granted? I have been looking for it ever since her letter was published.

I can back the Parson's Daughter. She is telling the truth. I am not one; goodness, no. My father was a farmer too, but I chummed with a minister's daughter and besides I have heard a lot of talk about their extravagance, etc., like "Another Parson's Daughter" tells about. I have known of the parson's wife going to call at places where the people were at home and they

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 13.)

Comfort Sisters' Recipes

AN emergency shelf is a splendid thing at any time of year but particularly valuable at the "in between" season when the winter supply of vegetables are nearly gone and the fresh ones not large enough to be eaten. A sister, Mrs. Martha Mayfield, Middlebourne, W. Va., tells us of the good things her shelf contains, all of which she canned herself, and any suggestions or additions to this will be welcomed. Perhaps we can form a composite COMFORT Emergency Shelf. Here's Mrs. Mayfield's list: Canned green beans, lima beans, baked beans, pickled beans, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, corn, turnips, mixed vegetables for soup, beets, spare-rib, sausage, fruits."

A box of shredded codfish could be added to this, thus making a combination of salt fish dinner, as shown in illustration.—Ed.

SPANISH RICE.—Cook one cup of rice until it begins to get tender. In a frying-pan put two tablespoons of lard (I prefer bacon grease), chop a small onion into fine pieces and fry until light brown. Now add cooked rice, salt and pepper and one cup of catsup or chili sauce; tomatoes will do, but require more seasoning. Let cook.

SAVORY SCALLOPED POTATOES.—Peel and slice very thin as many potatoes as required. Put a layer in a baking dish, add a few thin slices of onion, salt, pepper, butter and a pinch of sage; another layer of potatoes, etc., until dish is nearly filled. Add hot milk to almost cover and bake in a moderate oven until done, not less than one hour.—BETTY'S MAMMA, Kansas City, Missouri.

MOCK OYSTERS OF COLD MEAT.—Slice cold boiled meat quite thin, dip in rather thick pancake batter and fry in deep fat. Turn so both sides will brown.

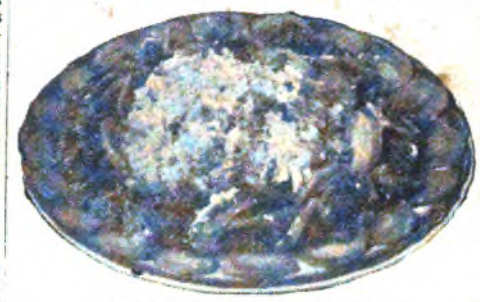
COLD WATER BATTER FOR ABOVE.—One cup flour, one rounding teaspoon baking powder, one-quarter teaspoon salt, one rounding teaspoon sugar, and enough cold water to make a thick batter.

PARTY CAKE.—Cream together one half cup of butter and one and one half cups of sugar. Beat in one teaspoon of vanilla and one-half cup of milk. Sift together one and one-half cups of sifted pastry flour, one-half cup of corn-starch, one-half teaspoon of soda and one and one-half teaspoon of cream of tartar and add to butter mixture, beating hard and smooth. Lastly, add the stiffly beaten whites of five eggs. Bake in a round pan in a moderate oven. Just before serving, split and fill with strawberry preserve beaten with white of egg. Cut into sections, tie around with narrow white ribbon, and dot with fresh or whole cooked fruit.

PARTY CAKE.

BOILED PORK PUDDING.—One cup of chopped salt pork, one cup of raisins, one cup of molasses, one cup of boiling water, one teaspoon soda and enough flour to make as stiff as soft gingerbread. Steam three hours.

SAUCE.—One cup of sugar, one tablespoon flour, two tablespoons of any tart jelly, and one-half pint boiling water. Set on stove, stir often until it boils up clear, then add a small piece of butter and serve hot.—MRS. JULIA BUMPIE, Clinton, Conn.



ORANGE SPONGE.—Soften one envelope of fine gelatine in quarter of a cup of cold water twenty minutes, add one cup of boiling water and one cup of sugar. When the sugar is dissolved add one cup of orange juice. When the jelly begins to stiffen, with an egg beater beat in the whites of two eggs that have been previously beaten stiff and dry. When hard, turn onto plate and surround with sections of orange from which all the outer pulp has been removed.

ORANGE SPONGE.

HONEY SYRUP.—Three cups sugar, one cup water. Stir until sugar is dissolved then let syrup come to boil, take from stove, add one cup of honey and stir until dissolved. We think this is fine and it keeps well and doesn't candy.—ROSE O' JUNE, Myrtle Point, Ore.

COMBINATION SALT FISH DINNER.—Take one box of shredded codfish and soak over night, or dessicated fish can be used if you choose. If the former, boil for half an hour, pour off the water, add one pint of milk, two tablespoons of butter, a tablespoon of flour, rubbed smooth in one egg that has been thoroughly beaten. Let this mixture boil until it thickens. Stir into it mashed potato and place in the center of a platter. Surround this with slices of boiled carrot, boiled beets that have been diced and another row of boiled carrots. —MARY HARROD NORTHEND.

COMBINATION SALT FISH DINNER.

PORK STEAK AND RICE.—Put one pound of pork steak through meat chopper, add one cup of cooked rice and moisten with three-quarters can of tomato soup; salt and pepper to taste, put in buttered baking dish and cook one hour.—MRS. M., Boyne City, Mich.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT.—One-half pound dried beans, one-quarter pound salt pork, one-quarter pound grated cheese, one and one-half cups bread-crumbs, one egg, one teaspoon of salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Pick over and wash the beans, soak from twelve to twenty-four hours in cold water. Pour off the water. Put the beans into three cups of cold water with one-quarter teaspoon of soda and boil three to five minutes. Drain off this water. Return the beans to the kettle with three cups of fresh water and the salt pork, which has been washed, scraped and scored. Cover and cook slowly until the beans are soft (from two to three hours). Take out the pork, mash the beans, add the cheese, breadcrumbs, egg and seasoning. Mix well and put into a buttered dish. Cover with bread-crumbs and pieces of the pork. Bake one-half hour in a pan of hot water. Canned or baked beans may be used. One-half pound dried beans equal about three cups of mashed beans. This roast may be served hot or cold and is much improved if served with tomato sauce or catsup.—MRS. M. C. MACKINTOSH, Canton, Ill.

POTATO PUFF.—Two cups mashed potatoes, two tablespoons flour, two eggs, one tablespoon butter, pinch of salt and one-half cup sweet milk. Mix well together, put in buttered baking dish, spread with butter and bake.—MRS. K. E. J., Bruce, S. Dak.

A POT ROAST.—Trim off the rough parts of a brisket of beef, weighing about four pounds; place it in a kettle over a good fire; brown on one side, then turn and brown on the other; then add one pint of boiling water; cover and cook slowly fifteen minutes to every pound. Add a teaspoon of salt when the meat is half done. After the water evaporates add no more, as there should be sufficient fat to finish cooking the meat. When the meat is done place it on a heated dish. Drain all the fat but two tablespoons from the pot and put it away to be used for frying. To the two tablespoons in the pot add the same quantity of flour. Mix well and add one pint of water; stir until it boils; season and pour around the meat.

PRESSED MEAT.—Boil two pounds of good rump steak until done, when cold chop very fine. Boil the water away to a cupful, put the meat in with butter, salt and pepper and cook a few minutes. Pack in a dish and serve hot or cold.

APPLE CATSUP.—One quart of apple pulp, one cup of sugar, one teaspoon of pepper, one teaspoon of cloves, one teaspoon of mustard, two teaspoons of cinnamon, one tablespoon of salt, two grated onions and two cups of cider vinegar. Pare and core twelve apples, cover with water and bring to the boiling point. Let simmer until soft when all the water should be evaporated or nearly so. To each quart of apple pulp add the above ingredients and bring to boiling point and let simmer one hour. Bottle or put in cans while hot.—MRS. E. W. C., West Burke, Vt.

IN all recipes calling for baking powder, insure successful results by using Royal Baking Powder (absolutely pure).

It is conceded by domestic science teachers and baking experts the world over to be "the most healthful and dependable baking powder made." Royal contains no alum.

Stella Rosevelt

by Mrs. Georgie Sheldon

Did you hear what I said?" she demanded sharply.

With a stern face, he watched them until they were burnt to ashes.

Mr. Richards and family were thrown into considerable confusion by the double surprise.

Copyright, 1883, 1902 and 1903 by Street & Smith.
Renewal granted to Mrs. Georgie Sheldown Downs, for 28 years from March 20, 1911.
Serial rights by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

A terrible storm at sea and from a steamer running between Liverpool and New York is Stella Rosevelt Gladstone, an orphan, on her way to distant relatives in New York. She is befriended by Jacob Rosevelt, who is startled when he learns her mother called her "Star," her grandmother giving her the name. A fire breaks out and the boats are rapidly filled. Stella refuses to go unless room is made for Mr. Rosevelt, who the next day suffers from an ill turn and is carefully nursed by her. The sixth day they are rescued. Mr. Rosevelt is told of the care Stella gave him during his illness and while thanking her a young man approaches and Mr. Rosevelt introduces Archibald Sherbrooke, whose home is in Derbyshire where Star's father preached. Star's shawl becomes loosened and not finding the pin, Mr. Sherbrooke draws one, an exquisitely carved stone, from his necktie, and Stella pins the shawl and then tells the story of the wreck and her endeavor to save Mr. Rosevelt's life. Arriving in New York, Mr. Sherbrooke places a card in her hand with his address upon it. Stella, remembering the pin, passes it to him. He begs her to keep it as a souvenir. Wishing she had something to give, he will accept a lock of her hair. Stella is met by Mrs. Blunt, Mrs. Richards' housekeeper, who hurries her away. Stella receives a cool reception from her aunt, who had written she would befriend and educate Stella until able to care for herself, and learns she is to be degraded to the level of a common servant. She asks her aunt if her father, from what she wrote him, had any idea she was to come into the family as a servant. Mrs. Richards does not relent, and Stella appeals to Mr. Richards, giving him the letter written by her father to Mrs. Richards and her reply. Stella has one hundred pounds. Could she not use it and then teach, relieving his wife of all responsibility? Mrs. Richards is surprised at Stella's suggestion and Mr. Richards makes arrangements for her to attend a select school, she giving a part of each day to household work. Stella wins, at commencement, a part in the class exercises and surprises Mr. Richards by her instrumental music, essay and promotion to the senior class. Josephine, admiring the cameo worn by Stella suggests she give it to her, as her wardrobe does not correspond with it. Going to Stella's room and finding the cameo, Josephine takes it and discovers the initials "A. S." Stella misses the cameo and is suspicious who has it. In the meanwhile Mr. Richards receives a letter from Mrs. Richards' Uncle Jacob. He has lost all, is penniless and will accept the home that was offered him when rich. Mrs. Richards refuses to receive him, the house is full, and Mr. Richards is left troubled. Upon his arrival he is taken to the Lodge to sleep, Mr. Rosevelt meets Star who offers her room to him and does all she can to brighten his life. Mrs. Richards receives him coldly, and Josephine ignores her uncle. Mrs. Richards and Josephine go to Long Branch where they meet Lord Carroll, of Carrolton, Derbyshire, England, who appears pleased with Josephine and requests permission of her mother to call. Noticing a ring Josephine wears and examining it he sees the initials "A. S." Josephine claims it is given by a relative. Lord Carrol cannot understand it. The next day he leaves for New York. Stella, hurrying to take a train for home, and in danger, is stopped by Archibald Sherbrooke and the acquaintance renewed. Stella tells him that she and Mr. Rosevelt are in the same home. Mr. Rosevelt goes to New York with Stella to call upon Mr. Sherbrooke in his studio and arranges a pleasure trip for them to Coney Island for the following day. When they return from it Stella is the promised wife of Archibald Sherbrooke. Lord Carrol, of Carrolton, thought to be Josephine's betrothed, is expected. Stella sees in him her promised husband, Archibald Sherbrooke. She passes a sleepless night. Walking to the lodge, she meets Archibald, and he cannot understand why he finds her there. Believing he is acting a part, for he wins her love as Archibald Sherbrooke, he appears as Lord Carrol of Carrolton, the expected husband of her cousin, and refusing his explanation she bids him go back to Josephine and ask her for the cameo he gave her. Archibald seeks Mr. Richards' confidence and explains his position, his meeting Star on the steamer, his interest in her and later her promised husband, his ignorance that she is an inmate of this house, his meeting Stella and her refusal to listen to him. Mrs. Richards, overhearing his story and determined that her plans shall not fail, seeks Stella in the lodge, where she has gone for sympathy from Mr. Rosevelt. She upbraids Stella for conducting herself in a shameless manner, misconstruing Lord Carrol's attentions and accusing him with unfaithfulness. Stella is crushed with shame and humiliation.

CHAPTER XX.

STAR'S DETERMINATION.

"STAR, my dear child, what does this mean?" Mr. Roosevelt ejaculated, in a tone of wonder, as his niece concluded.

"It is unnecessary to ask her whether I have spoken the truth or not; her very looks and manner betray that she is guilty of what I have told you," Mrs. Richards said, scornfully. "I did not suppose, however, with her innocent face and apparently quiet, modest manner, that she could be quite so shameless. But it is always so; such cat-like natures always work in the dark."

Star's proud little head came up with a haughty air at this taunting speech, while her blue eyes grew dark and ominous.

"You are accusing me ignorantly and most unjustly," she said, in a hard tone, but with pained and quivering lips.

"How so? Do you presume to deny that you met Lord Carrol in the grounds tonight?" demanded Mrs. Richards, severely.

"No."

"You did meet him?"

"Yes."

"And denounced him as a traitor?"

"Yes. I believe him to be a traitor to truth and honor, and—a coward!"

"Explain yourself," commanded Mrs. Richards, bridling.

"I shall explain nothing," Star answered, coldly, yet firmly. "What I said to Lord Carrol tonight was intended for him alone. If he has chosen to betray me, the responsibility rests upon himself, and you can go to him for explanations if you choose."

"Where did you meet him first—how did you make his acquaintance?" asked Mrs. Richards, longing to get Star's version of the story.

"I decline to answer any questions upon the subject," she returned quietly.

"I command you to tell me."

"And I still decline," Star said, with an air that surprised both of her listeners.

She was as colorless now as a block of marble, but so beautiful in her proud sorrow, her agonized scorn, that they could but regard her with wonder.

"You have no right to refuse what I ask of you. I am your guardian, and I demand a truthful confession of this whole scandalous affair," Mrs. Richards reiterated, sharply.

"You have already had it, you say, from Lord Carrol's own lips; it will therefore be unnecessary for me to repeat or enlarge upon it," the young girl returned, with calm scorn, while her delicate nostrils dilated, and her sweet lips curled with supreme contempt.

"I cannot understand—there must be some mistake in all this," ejaculated Mr. Rosevelt, his face a perfect blank. "I thought, Saturday, Star, that you——"

A slight motion from her checked him in what he was going to say.

"No, there is no mistake; and this much I will explain to you. I did meet Lord Carrol tonight, as Mrs. Richards has told you," she said. "I did believe myself his betrothed wife, and him to be a man of honor, until he came here last night as Miss Richards' acknowledged suitor, and when I saw him this evening I did denounce him as a traitor. It seems that he has volunteered explanations to suit himself to Mr. and Mrs. Richards, and I decline to go further into particulars with them. I have no desire to blight Miss Josephine's prospects in life, and I wish her all joy with her high-born and honorable lover."

Pen cannot portray the scorn which pervaded those last words, ringing out so clearly, so scathingly that Mrs. Richards' cheeks burned and her ears tingled; for this was the man—if he really had been the traitor which she wished to make him appear—whom she was using all her arts to secure for Josephine's husband.

"I do not see how you dare look any respectable person in the face, and confess what you just have, without seeking to clear yourself," retorted Mrs. Richards, sternly. "You are compromising your character in the most wretched manner. What can I believe of you—what can any one believe of you, if you own to having been upon such intimate terms with a man of such standing as Lord Carrol, while he is here as the acknowledged suitor of my daughter?"

"The very worst that you can believe, madam," Star returned, calmly, and meeting the woman's eye fearlessly, but with a look which made her quail in spite of herself, "can only serve to compromise the man, whose favor and title you appear so anxious to secure, more than it possibly can me. Notwithstanding whatever claim I may have supposed myself to have heretofore possessed upon him, I now most cheerfully resign it in favor of Miss Richards."

Mrs. Richards ground her teeth with rage over the fact that the man whom poor, despised Star Gladstone thus spurned, believing him to be the very soul of dishonor, she knew Josephine was using all her arts to win, while, of course, she could not undeceive her because it would spoil her plot.

"You are an insolent, overbearing girl," she said, in a low, hissing tone, "and I wonder how I have tolerated you in my house as long as I have. I wonder how you dare face me, and use such insulting language to me after your shameless conduct."

"I am neither insolent nor overbearing, Mrs. Richards. Ever since I came into your house I have striven to do as nearly right as I knew how, and to make as little trouble as possible. It is you who have been overbearing, who have wounded me by insulting the memory of my parents, and have tried to crush and trample upon me. In no way have I rebelled against your authority, except in the determination not to become a common servant and to pursue my education. This I did in justice to myself, and because I had promised my father I would do it. If you have 'tolerated me in your house,' believe me, there has been as much toleration exercised upon my part, for in no sense of the word has it been a home to me; instead, it has been merely a place of shelter, a spot to exist in until I could complete my education. I can bear it no longer. I shall consider your house no longer my home," Star concluded, with a decision which rather startled Mrs. Richards.

But she retorted, derisively:

"Your independent spirit ill becomes you. Where could you go? Who would take you, a penniless beggar, and give you the advantages which you have been enjoying during the past year? But it is folly for me to give heed to your idle words. I command you to return directly to your room, and hold no intercourse with any one, and tomorrow I will decide what course to pursue with reference to your future."

But Star did not move. She remained standing quietly by Mr. Rosevelt's chair, as if she had not heard her command.

"Did you hear what I said?" she demanded, sharply.

"Yes, madam."

"Well, do you intend to obey me?"

"No, madam."

"What!"

"I refuse to recognize your authority over me from this moment. I refuse to obey any longer one who, from the first, has been governed only by feelings of personal spite in all her dealings with me," Star returned, firmly.

Mrs. Richards could scarcely credit her ears.

She had not imagined that the usually quiet girl possessed a tithe of this spirit.

"Well, Uncle Jacob, what do you think of your little pattern of excellence now?" demanded the astonished woman, turning with an injured air to her uncle, who was nearly as much amazed himself.

"I think the child has been severely tried," he returned, quietly, whereupon Mrs. Richards flew into another rage.

"I must say, Uncle Jacob, "that I consider it very bad taste in you to take sides with her against me; and let me warn you that you have both got yourself into trouble by the doings of this night."

The arrogant dame did not wait for any reply, but turned abruptly and left the room, retiring, however, with a sense of defeat which it was not pleasant to contemplate.

The moment that the door closed after her, Star dropped again upon the floor by Mr. Rosevelt's side, heart-broken.

"My child, tell me what Ellen means. What cause has she for coming here to accuse you of such dreadful things? Who is this Lord Carrol, and what has he been to you?"

She lifted her white, pained face to him.

"You do not believe what she has told you—you do not believe I would be guilty of anything so shameless as she would try to make me appear?" she questioned, brokenly.

"No, no; I think there is some terrible misunderstanding. I do not believe you would do anything which you knew to be wrong; and yet your own words have mystified me. I cannot comprehend them."

"I will tell you all about it. I would not explain anything to her—I could not after she had told me what he said," Star answered, but her face flushed with shame at the thought of confessing a tale of love and devotion on her part, of deception and treachery on the part of the man whom she had so trusted.

Then she told him all the story of her love for Archibald Sherbrooke, beginning with that day when they had exchanged souvenirs on the steamer, and which, she felt, had been the commencement of their love.

"Oh, Uncle Jacob," Star concluded, hiding her face on the arm of his chair again, "I believed him so true, so honorable, so worthy of my love, and now to find him so unprincipled and treacherous, it crushes me!"

Mr. Rosevelt looked very grave, almost stern.

"This is just as I supposed—as I was led to believe from your appearance last Saturday. I knew well enough, when we returned home from Coney Island, that you had promised to be Sherbrooke's wife. But I don't understand his treachery, as you call it, nor what connection all this has with the young lord who has come to ask for Josephine's hand," he said, coldly.

Star looked up again, at the unfamiliar tone.

"Oh!" she said, wearily; "I am so miserable that I have not made it plain to you—I have not told you; but Lord Carrol is only another name for the man who called himself Archibald Sherbrooke. Under the latter he cheated me into loving him, and he has ruined my life; under the former, which is his real name, I suppose, he has been trying to win the heiress."

Mr. Rosevelt was speechless from amazement at this revelation, and for a full minute could only look down into those piteous, uplifted eyes in mute dismay.

"Impossible!" he cried, at length. "I cannot believe it; I cannot think that young Sherbrooke would be guilty of anything so dastardly. There must be some mistake."

"There is no mistake," Star returned, with despair in her tones. Then she told him all she had heard and seen while sitting at her window.

"Poor child! poor child!" he murmured, softly.

"I meant to bear it alone, and never let any one know how cruelly I had been deceived, or how readily I had given my foolish heart away," she went on, "but after our meeting tonight I seemed to have no strength! I called him a traitor and a coward, and then I ran away and came to you, who are the only friend I have in this wide, weary world."

"You did right, dear, to come to me; but were you not a trifle hasty and rash? I think you should have listened to young Sherbrooke's—or whoever he may be—defence," Mr. Rosevelt said, gently.

"What possible defence could he have had to offer?" Star cried, in a voice of scorn. "He has pretended to be Archibald Sherbrooke, a simple artist, to me, while everybody else knows him as Lord Carrol, of Carrolton."

"But he may have been traveling incognito under the former name," suggested Mr. Rosevelt.

"Then why did he not keep it to the end? Why did he go to a fashionable watering place and flourish as a titled Englishman, and devote himself to Josephine? Why did he resume the former name upon meeting me again, and lead me to love him, believing him to be a poor artist? No; there can be nothing said in defence of such double-dealing as this. He has cheated and fooled me. I have found him out, and compelled him to own it. It is enough to make me scorn him; but it has been a bitter lesson, and has taught me never to trust a man again," Star concluded, with vehement bitterness.

"Never, Star? Surely that acrimonious resolve does not include me?" said Mr. Rosevelt, with gentle reproach.

"No; I know that you are kind and true, and you are the only one in the world who cares for me," the suffering girl said, in husky tones.

"Indeed, my child, you have become very dear to me, and my life would be very forlorn without you."

Star bent down and touched his hand with her lips. In her wretchedness it comforted her greatly to know that she had contributed to his happiness.

"But I cannot get over what you have told me. I never was so deceived in my life before; and if this young sprig of English nobility is the villain you represent him, he is not fit to live," Mr. Rosevelt said, sternly, after a few moments of thoughtful silence.

Star shivered with pain. Much as she believed she scorned him, she could not endure that another should speak disparagingly of him.

"Never mind, Uncle Jacob," she said. "I have put him out of my life forever; and now I want to talk to you about something else. You say that I have made your life happier since you came here, and that you would be very lonely without me. I am going to tell you a little secret, and then I want you to promise to go away from here with me. I am not going to remain here another day," she concluded, decidedly.

"Is that your secret, Star?"

"Part of it," she said, with a sad smile. "I have a little money, as you know—a hundred pounds—which, at Mr. Richards' suggestion, I put at interest last year. Now I want to take this money and make a cozy little home for you and me somewhere, until I get through school—there will be enough to last till then, I think—and after that I shall be able to take care of us both in fine style, by teaching and giving music lessons."

He smiled skeptically as she planned so hopefully what her poor hundred pounds would do, while a tear started to his eye at her thought for him.

"You do not believe that I shall be able to take care of us both," she said eagerly, "but I know that I can, for I have not yet told you all. Listen."

She bent nearer to him, and putting her lips close to his ear, told him something which even you and I must not know just yet, my patient reader.

He was nearly as much surprised as he had been to learn of Archibald Sherbrooke's treachery.

"My dear," he said, while his face lighted with pride and joy, "you shall have your way, and I will do just as you wish, and I——"

He checked himself suddenly, dropped his head in thought for a moment, then resumed:

"I am not happy here any more than yourself, and have been thinking for some time I must go away; but I could not bear the thought of parting from you. Now we will go together as you wish, unless——"

"Unless what, Uncle Jacob?" Star asked, anxiously.

"Unless you will let me see this young scamp of a lord, and take him to task for his faithlessness to you."

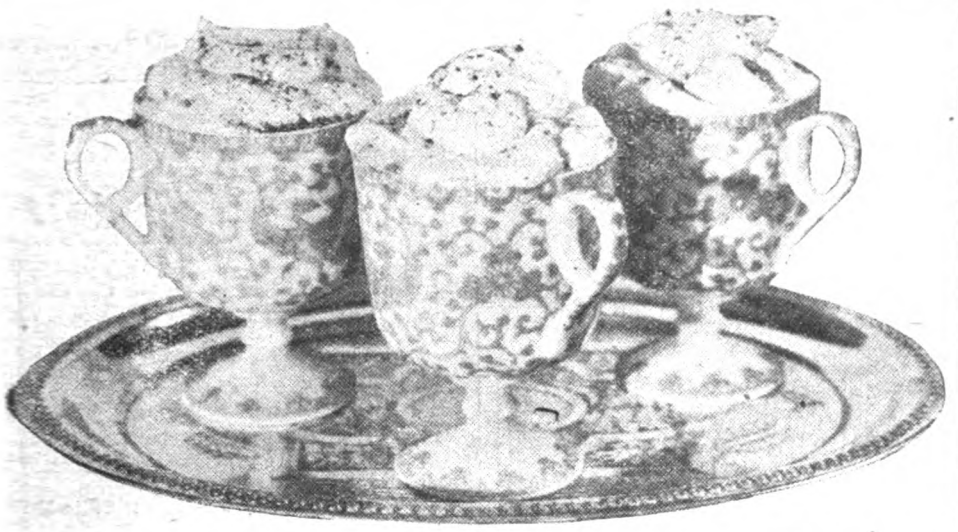
"Never!" Star replied, proudly. "What good would it do to——"

"There may be some mistake; he might be able to explain everything satisfactorily," interrupted Mr. Rosevelt.

Star's beautiful lips curled.

"What would his explanations amount to? He is here as a suitor for Josephine's hand—they all confess it; and did you ever listen to a more monstrous story than Mrs. Richards repeated here tonight? To think that he could say anything so basely false of me is enough to drive me wild," Star cried, excitedly. "No, Uncle Jacob; although he has been guilty of the most cruel treachery, I will not contend with him. If he is such a craven that he would try to win a young girl's heart for the amusement of breaking it, and then seek to blight her fair fame by charging her with what he has imputed to me tonight, he is too far beneath me to be worthy of anything save my supreme contempt, and I never wish to meet him again. I only want to get away from them all, and never see their faces more."

Her voice broke with such a wail of despair in it that the old man could not find it in his heart to refuse her anything.



"Very well; we will go away tomorrow," he said, sorrowfully.

"Oh, thank you, Uncle Jacob!" the unhappy girl said, eagerly; "and will you go without letting them know? They would never consent, and I do not wish them even to know where I go."

"It shall be just as you wish, my dear; I feel that I am doing you no wrong in gratifying you. You shall be like a young daughter to me, and I—I promise I will be no burden to you, notwithstanding that I am old and feeble," Mr. Rosevelt answered, with a sad smile.

"A burden!" Star repeated, with quivering lips. "Oh, please do not imagine such a thing! It is you who are to take care of me and shield me

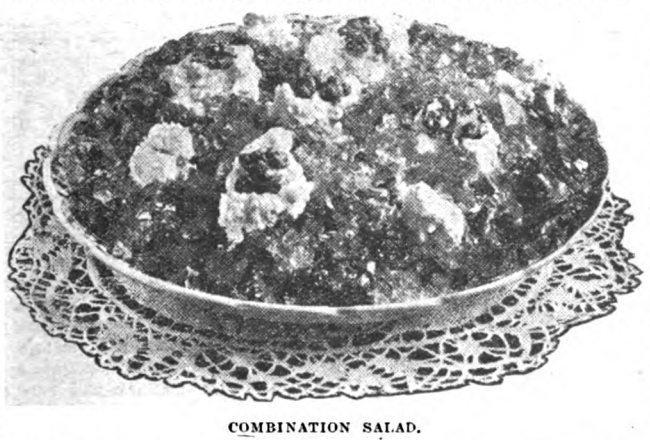
(CONTINUED ON PAGE 15.)

TONIC IN EARLY SPRING FOODS

By Violet Marsh

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

HOW many of our readers still adhere to their belief in "spring-tonic" taking time, and can recall being lined up to take their dose of flower of sulphur mixed with good old-fashioned New Orleans molasses, as a preventive against "spring-fever"? Some of you found the decoction not unpleasant as the sulphur flavor was concealed by the molasses, which in those earlier days was rich and delicious, and provided a wholesome sweet that could be eaten without stint.

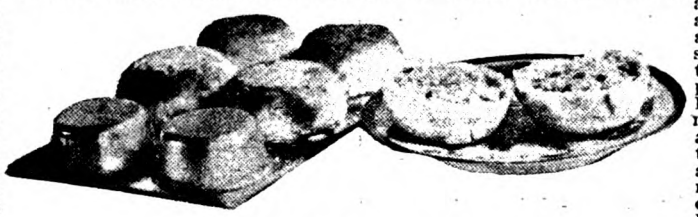


Years ago "spring-fever" was no myth. The blood became thick and sluggish, causing a languid feeling, for which teas steeped from various early roots and greens, and the ever-ready friend sulphur and molasses, were regarded as unfailing agents in assisting nature to "thin out" the blood. The fresh, aromatic root of the sassafras plant was made into a strong brew and drunk by the whole family, being considered a valuable "blood purifier."

PUFFS WITH STRAWBERRY FILLING.

A craving for something bitter or acid was not ignored nor treated as a "notion' ' in the good old days of root and herb home remedies; and who shall say but they were all sufficient, even in the light of modern knowledge and science, which, besides bewildering us with "cures," has placed the preventives against these "spring conditions" in our very hands by teaching us how to process our fruits and vegetables so that we may daily have them on our table in a variety of ways, and thus enable us better to wait for nature when again she will give out the refreshing products of field and garden.

There is a long list of greens and young vegetables that are highly beneficial for their tonic content when eaten raw, providing time is taken to thoroughly masticate them. They supply our blood with the vital vitamines, and take the place of fruits when they are scarce and expensive. These include lettuce, celery, finely-cut bleached cabbage, watercress, parsley, onions, leek, tomatoes, freshly-picked cucumbers, the tender bud ends of spinach, the heart of new green cabbage, small carrots, small early white turnips, young peas, and tender dandelion leaves which are highly beneficial eaten raw. A French dressing made from a good quality of oil, or just a sprinkling of salt, is the proper condiment for salads, and is easily digested, while the oil nourishes and acts as a valuable bowel lubricant.



COMBINATION SALAD.

Our citrus fruits (oranges, lemons and grape-fruit) must not be overlooked as among our highly beneficial spring tonics. This is the season to make a supply of orange and grapefruit marmalade. Its tart, slightly bitter flavor acts as appetizer when the digestive organs become a little slow. Orange juice contains a high vitamine content, and is an excellent tonic taken half an hour before breakfast or between meals. Many find a half glass taken before going to bed an excellent laxative and liver stimulant.

Maple-sugar, probably the most wholesome form of sugar known, is another food that nature gives out in her early spring days in certain Northern States. Taken as a whole, the amount of maple-sugar produced is comparatively small, and fortunate are those who can share in this limited supply of delicious syrup or sugar.

Unless maple syrup is put into tins and sealed at the "sugar camps" when the maple sap is boiled down to the right consistency, it is a safe precaution to bring it just to the boiling point and seal in glass jars. Extended boiling impairs the fine maple flavor, which accounts for the sugar never having quite that rich, delicious quality of flavor found in the syrup.

As the maple-sugar supply is so small in comparison to the demand, many housewives make a very delicious sugar by adding a good grade of brown sugar, together with a little glucose, and thus extend the maple flavor. If the two sugars are combined, melt them slowly with the addition of a little hot water, cook until a little crisp when tested in cold water, give it a few hard strokes of beating, and pour into tins. The syrup and brown sugar will not require the addition of water.

RHUBARB CUSTARD PATTIES.

Maple Pralines are a famous confection said to have originated in New Orleans many years ago. No doubt they were originally made of pure maple, but I suspect that the pralines of today enjoy little more than a maple flavor, because they are made in such large quantities throughout the country. But they are very nice at that. A very simple recipe calls for one cup of maple syrup, one cup of brown sugar, one-half cup of medium-weight cream and one and one-half cup of pecan meats. The half nuts should be unbroken. Cook the sugar, syrup and cream until a little dropped in cold water forms into a soft ball, then remove from fire and beat until creamy, add the nuts and pour onto oiled tins in thin cakes. Be sure not to beat the mixture so long that it will not pour from the sauce-pan.

Dishes from the Spring Foods

DANDELION GREENS.—Before washing the greens carefully pick over and remove all grass and foreign material. Put through several waters slightly warmed as it starts the grit quicker than cold water. If greens of any kind are not to be cooked the day they are received, do not keep them in water as it greatly injures the flavor. Instead, pick them over if possible, wash, having the last water cold, drain, cover with a cloth and set in a cool place. To cook, put into boiling water, but care should be taken not to use too much, for as soon as they begin to boil, the shrinking process begins, so that only a small quantity of water is necessary in the beginning. It is better to add water, if necessary, than to start with too much. This rule applies to all kinds of greens. If pork or bacon is to be cooked with the greens, use it whole so that small pieces will not be all through the dish, which many object to, especially children. Greens of all kinds are far more wholesome and beneficial if cooked without the addition of fat meat. Butter or a good quality of salad oil, salt, pepper, lemon juice or vinegar constitute the best seasonings.

GREEN ONIONS.—Not many realize that the tiny green onions with the crisp tops, which are thinned from the onion patch, make a delicious dish. Cut off the roots but do not cut into the onion. Plunge into boiling water and cook uncovered until tender. Drain and cover with white sauce. Add a little salt to the water just before the onions are done.

LEEK SOUP.—Eight leeks cut fine and one small onion sliced, all lightly browned in two tablespoons of clear beef fat. Add one large potato sliced fine, and one pint of boiling water. Cover closely and cook until all is tender, then rub through a wire strainer. Add one pint of rich milk, salt and pepper, and celery salt to taste. Bring to a boil and serve with sliced toasted biscuits.

YOUNG CABBAGE FRIED.—Slice fine, removing the core. Place the cabbage in a frying-pan with boiling water to cover, add a little pepper, one tablespoon of butter and a little salt, cover closely until it is boiling hard then remove the cover and cook twenty minutes. Drain, and season with two tablespoons of vinegar and one tablespoon of butter. Delicious served with fresh pork.

ASPARAGUS BAKED WITH MEAT.—One cup of chicken meat put through the food chopper then spread over the bottom of a baking dish. Dot with butter, and lay over it a bunch of asparagus which has been broken into pieces and all the hard part removed. Cover with one cup of white sauce, sprinkle lightly with fine bread-crumbs, and bake in a moderate oven thirty-five minutes.

ASPARAGUS OMELET.—Allow one egg to a person. To four eggs, have ready three-fourths of a cup of asparagus cooked tender and cut into small pieces, and one rounding tablespoon of grated cheese. Beat the eggs a very little, add two tablespoons of cold water, or one if the asparagus is freshly cooked and not drained, a dash of pepper, and a sprinkling of salt. Warm the omelet pan so that a tablespoon of butter will melt and bubble, then pour in the egg, and on top evenly distribute the asparagus, and sprinkle with the cheese. Increase the heat, and as soon as the edges are firm when a knife is slipped around the omelet, put the omelet into a moderate oven and bake until well puffed and firm. Remove from oven, spread a little softened butter over it, fold once and turn out onto a warm platter.

RAW VEGETABLE SALAD.—One cup each of young tender carrots and white turnips, one cup of mixed tender celery and lettuce, and one leek, ground all together through the food chopper. Mix with salad dressing.

STRAWBERRY COMBINATION SALAD.—Dice four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 10.)

[here's the answer to "How can she do it on $20 a week?"]

get and use our Budget PLAN:

Girls!

Get your copy of this book to help you have the little luxuries you want.

Here's Your Silent Partner

WHERE can you go to borrow five or ten dollars if you need it? To some friend, or draw ahead on your salary?

Wouldn't it be fine if you had a silent partner of your own from whom you could borrow whenever you felt like it or who was always on hand to say "Here's five dollars" when you needed it?

Well, that's exactly what this budget Plan is.

It's an aid to independence for everyone; it's a friend when you need it.

It's an aid to the saving of your money; it helps you have the money to buy better quality things which will wear longer and last longer and give you more service for your money.

There is nothing that takes the place of this, your silent partner whether you be a salaried employee, a piece worker, or a housewife whose income comes from her husband or the husband himself.

No matter where your income is from, it's a first aid to personal independence and to having some thing to show for your work.

The sooner you get yours—the sooner you'll enjoy its help—and have something to show for your year's work.

You can HAVE this First Aid to Independence, working with you—helping you to avoid WORRY, helping you to HAVE something to "fall back on."

You also can get some of the $5,000.00 that will be distributed to those WHO use this book most intelligently.

How to get your share of the $5000 is told in this book—which is sent postpaid for $1.00. Order your copy Today.

You can obtain your copy of the book at the following addresses, where we demonstrate PRACTICAL THRIFT.

(The nearest approach to it sells for $2.50)

Order Now, Postpaid $1.00

MENTER

TEACHERS OF PRACTICAL THRIFT IN FORTY CITIES IN THE U. S. A.

Address mail orders to HOME OFFICE: 465 Seventh Avenue, New York City

226 West 125th St., NEW YORK, N. Y.	200 South Market Ave., CANTON, O.	217 South Anderson St., ELWOOD, IND.	313 Monroe Ave., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
435 Fulton St., BROOKLYN, N. Y.	230 North High St., COLUMBUS, O.	501 Main St., EVANSVILLE, IND.	114 South Franklin St., SAGINAW, MICH.
6 Court St., BINGHAMTON, N. Y.	425 Euclid Ave., CLEVELAND, O.	1024 Calhoun St., FT. WAYNE, IND.	156 North Main St., WICHITA, KANS.
119 North Pearl St., ALBANY, N. Y.	35 South Ludlow St., DAYTON, O.	111 South Illinois St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.	1017 State St., ERIE, PA.
615 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.	33 West High St., SPRINGFIELD, O.	659 Wabash Ave., TERRE HAUTE, IND.	1117 Market St., WHEELING, W. VA
29 Seneca St., GENEVA, N. Y.	212 Summit St., TOLEDO, O.	525 North Main St., PUEBLO, COL.	48 East 7th St., ST. PAUL, MINN.
62 State St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.	231 West Federal St., YOUNGSTOWN, O.	1539 Welton St., DENVER, COL	418 Nicollet Ave., MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
423½ South Salina St., SYRACUSE, N. Y.	423 North Main St., BLOOMINGTON, ILL.	147 Asylum St., HARTFORD, CONN.	853 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.
13 Third St., TROY, N. Y.	320 West State St., ROCKFORD, ILL.	332 Main St., SPRINGFIELD, MASS.	1224 Grand Ave., KANSAS CITY, MO.
53 Franklin Sq., UTICA, N. Y.	515 N. S. Square, SPRINGFIELD, ILL.		424 West Market St., LOUISVILLE, KY.
39 South Howard St., AKRON, O.

*NOTE: A BUDGET is simply a PLAN which regulates the spending and saving of your INcome, so that you can control your OUTgo and live on less than your EARNINGS. It helps you to accumulate money and open a savings account.

Copyright L-jr, for Menter Co. 1922. No. 206A-L-22

COMFORT COUPON APRIL

Fill in your

Name .....

Street No. or R. F. D. .....

City ..... State .....

Then tear this out and return to us with One Dollar ($1.00) attached,—(Money Order or cash registered). You will receive your plan for saving money by return mail.

Cubby Bear and the Turtles

By Lena B. Ellingwood

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

CUBBY Bear and his playmates had been having a merry game of "ring-around-a-rosy," and were resting in the shade of a great maple tree. Gentle summer breezes were whispering among the maple leaves, and soft white clouds were floating in the blue sky overhead.

"I'm expecting visitors soon," announced Tillie Turtle, with an air of pride.

"You are? How nice!" said Cubby Bear. None of them remembered that Tillie had ever had visitors before.

"Yes," went on Tillie; "two of my relatives are coming to see me. They are much larger than I."

"Why, aren't you grown up yet?" asked Chirpy Chipmunk. "I thought you were quite old!"

"I have been grown up for a long time," answered Tillie, "and shall never be any larger than I am now. Perhaps you do not know much about the Turtle family. They are of various kinds and sizes. Many of them call themselves by the name of Turtle, but some like Tortoise better, thinking it has a grander sound. A few very prideful ones go by the name of Terrapin. For myself, my mother named me Tillie Turtle, and though the name is a plain one, it suits me, and I like it.

"There are many different kinds of Turtles. Some live in the big seas, and never go out on the shore excepting to bury eggs in the sand. Some live in marshy places, and others by lakes and rivers, spending part of the time in the water, and part on the land, just as they choose. There is one kind, I have heard, whose shell is soft, poor thing! I have never seen any of them, but I pity them with all my heart!"

"But I would not want a hard shell!" said Redtop Woodpecker. "I could not fly, nor hop around!"

"You are not a Turtle!" said Tillie. "Now I like my safe, hard shell, into which I can draw myself and go to sleep, with never a thought of harm! But then, the soft-shelled ones live in the water, I am told, where they are safer, perhaps.

As a family, we live to be very old! One hundred years is a common life for us, and my mother said she had seen one hundred and twenty summers come and go. I have even heard of some Turtles who lived as long as two hundred years!"

"Wh-whoo? Who-oo?" asked Wise Owl, and his voice sounded as though he were making sport of Tillie.

"I cannot tell you their names," she said, "but it is well known that we live much longer than owls."

"Pooh, pooh!" puffed Wise Owl. "Your people cannot see in the dark, as mine can. Nor can they fly! And see how small you are! Why, my cousins, the Great Horned Owls, are almost as large as Edric Eagle!"

"Very likely!" agreed Tillie calmly. "Sometime you shall tell us all about your relatives. We shall be glad to have you. But just now I am talking about mine. As to size, some of the Turtles are very, very large—as long as Cubby Bear—yes, even longer. And heavy—why, I wouldn't dare tell you how much some of them weigh, for you would never believe me."

"You were speaking of how old some Turtles live to be," said Wollie Woodchuck. "If you don't mind, Tillie, I would like to know how old you are, yourself!"

"No, no!" refused Tillie Turtle playfully. That I shall not tell! Perhaps some of you young things would not want me for a playmate, if I did.

"Some of my relatives live in desert lands, and can stow away enough water inside them, to last for a long time, like a camel. We are all hard to starve, and if food is not easy to find, we can go without it for weeks. In cold countries we find a snug little winter home and stay in it through the cold weather, but in warmer climes Turtles live an active life the whole year round."

"My, my! does she call a Turtle's life active?" whispered lively Chirpy Chipmunk to Cubby Bear.

"We are very strong," went on Tillie Turtle, "and never sick. We never suffer from toothache, for we have no teeth to ache."

"No teeth?" asked Bunny Rabbit. "Then how can you bite your food as you do?"

"Our jaws are covered with a sharp, horny substance, and the Snapping Turtle's jaws are so sharp and so strong, he could snap off your paw in a twinkling, if he chose to do so!"

Billy Bluejay was heard to whisper, "Tillie is boasting today!"

"You needn't believe me if you don't want to," said Tillie, "but everything I have told you is true."

"Pooh, pooh!" scoffed Wise Owl again. "It couldn't be!"

"Perhaps Tillie is just fooling us," said Minnie Mink.

"A-ll right!" said Tillie. "If you can't believe me just you wait. Perhaps you'll get no invitation to my pick-a-back party!"

TILLIE INTRODUCED THEM TO HER FRIENDS AS MR. AND MRS. TIMOTHY TURTLE.

"Your—what kind of a party?"

"Never you mind." Tillie started to walk off, and would say no more.

But later in the day she told Cubby Bear:

"These relatives of mine who are coming to see me live many miles away, by a big lake. Redwing Blackbird brought me word last week that they were on the way, but, as you know, all Turtles travel slowly, and I do not know when they will get here."

"How large are they?" asked Cubby Bear.

"Oh, as large as—how can I tell you? Much, much larger than I. Why, I should think it would take eight of my size to cover one of their shells. And strong—why, they could give you a ride on their backs, Cubby Bear, heavy as you are!"

Whoever met Tillie Turtle in the forest the next few days asked about her visitors, and the party she was to give. But, "Never you mind!" or, "Wait and see!" was all Tillie would say to them.

A few days afterwards, in the dusk of a summer's evening, Cubby Bear and Racky Coon went together to the Big Brook for a drink of cool water. The stars were shining high overhead in a clear sky, and off in the west a thin little new moon was just going down out of sight.

"Look, Cubby Bear! what are those things?" asked Racky Coon, in sudden fright.

"Where asked Cubby.

"Over there!" said Racky, pointing to the shadows near the farther shore of the Big Brook. "At first I thought they were little islands near the shore, but they are moving—coming this way!"

"I see them!" said Cubby wonderingly.

The two dark objects were certainly moving. There was no doubt about it.

"We must run!" cried Racky, in terror, seizing hold of Cubby Bear. "If islands in the Big Brook can float, there is no knowing what may happen! The earth may be shaking all apart!"

They ran a little way from the Big Brook, and were glad to find that the ground was as solid and firm as ever.

Going cautiously back toward the brook to make sure if the islands were really floating, so they might tell their friends about it,

"Honest and true,
Black and blue,"

what was their amazement to find that the little islands had crawled out of the water, and were coming toward them, on the land!

Then a voice called to them:

"If you please, can you tell us if Tillie Turtle lives hereabouts?"

Cubby drew a sigh of relief, and both he and Racky Coon began to be ashamed of their fright. Their floating islands were only two great, slowly-moving Turtles! Tillie's relatives had arrived, and were every bit as large as Tillie had said.

"Oh, yes!" answered Cubby Bear. Tillie Turtle is expecting you, and we will be glad to show you where her home is."

And the next day, invitations were sent out for a pick-a-back party.

Of course Tillie could not carry the invitations around herself, for she was so slow it would have kept her away from her relatives for their whole visit. But Redtop Woodpecker kindly offered to do it for her.

"Shall you ask Mr. Wise Owl, Billy Bluejay and Minnie Mink, who did not believe what you told us?" asked Cubby Bear.

"Oh, yes, indeed, poor things!" said Tillie pityingly. "In a few years, I shall be glad to remember that I did not keep a grudge against them, but gave them the pleasure of coming to my party!"

Everybody came, for they were all anxious to see the great Turtles. Tillie introduced them to her friends as Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Turtle.

"Oh, ho, ho!" cried little Chirpy Chipmunk, clapping his tiny paws. "I've guessed what Tillie meant when she said she would have a pick-a-back party! I know, I know!"

"Oh, do you?" asked Tillie, looking a little disappointed. "I didn't think anybody could guess."

"But perhaps he hasn't guessed right!" said Cubby Bear.

"What is it?" asked Tillie. "If you know, you may tell."

"Well, then," said Chirpy, "I guess that Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Turtle are to give us rides on their broad shells."

"That is right!" said Timothy Turtle, "and the one who guessed it shall have the first ride. Hop on my back! Why, you weigh nothing at all! I could carry forty Chipmunks and never mind their weight!"

They all had rides, even Cubby Bear, who felt rather foolish to be carried about like that, when he had four strong paws of his own to walk on and could go so much faster—and Wise Owl, who was continually losing his balance and falling off.

They had a jolly afternoon at Tillie's party, and all were sorry that the visitors were to stay only a few days longer.

"Oh, Cubby Bear! what do you think?" cried Racky Coon in delight, meeting Cubby Bear the day before Tillie's relatives were to leave the Pleasant Forest and start for their home by the lake. "Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Turtle have invited Tillie and me to go home with them for a visit, and to ride all the way there pick-a-back! Of course I shall walk most of the way, but it will be nice for poor, slow Tillie to ride. I shall have such a good time going out on the great lake!"

"That will be fine," said Cubby. "I am glad you can go. But do you suppose," he added slyly, "that there will be any floating islands in the lake?"

"Oh, yes!" answered Racky Coon, laughing, "for many, many large Turtles the size of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy live there, and may be seen out for a swim any day, so Tillie tells me."

CONTENTS

	Page
Editorial	2
A Psycho-Illogical Episode	3
Love Will Find the Way (continued)	4
Comfort Sisters' Corner and Recipes	5
Stella Rosevelt (continued)	6
Tonic in Early Spring Foods	7
Cubby Bear and the Turtles	8
Crumbs of Comfort	8
Comfort's League of Cousins	9
The Pretty Girls' Club	11
The Bread of Idleness	12
The April Wedding	13
Curious Easter Customs	14
Mother and Baby	16
Old-Fashioned Smocking	18
Shown in Easy Stitches	19
Farm Improvement	21
The Modern Farmer	23
Automobile and Gas Engine Helps	25
Poultry Farming for Women	26
Manners and Looks	27
Talks with Girls	28
Home Lawyer	29
Veterinary Information	33
Information Bureau	33
Family Doctor	34
Three Wheel Chairs in March	34
The Emporium of Bargains and Opportunities	36

All Subscriptions Cut Off At Expiration

All subscriptions will be cut short off on date of expiration, unless the subscriptions are renewed and paid for. Not even one copy will be sent, after expiration, until the subscription is renewed. If the number over your name on the wrapper on this magazine is 402, it means that this is the last copy of COMFORT you will receive until you renew your subscription. DO IT TODAY.

MAY COMFORT

Special Features for May

"Loyalty and Love" A thrilling Memorial Day incident that forces on the young war widow a choice between lifelong widowhood in loyalty to her departed hero and happiness in the love of a live hero.

"Hair of Grey" To dye or not to dye? This question that confronts every woman when the silver threads become conspicuous in her hair is treated sensibly.

"A Little Culture" works wonders, sometimes in a strange and unexpected way, as in this unique romance.

"An Engagement Shower" Describes appropriate arrangements for entertainment and refreshments.

"Round Prairie Observes Mothers' Monday" Wear the pink on Mothers' Sunday once a year, but be mindful every week to lighten the tasks of Mothers' Monday.

"Family Faults" Some big, some little faults and failings that mar the happiness of the home and depress the spirit of childhood.

"Cubby Bear Seeks New Friends" Cubby Bear's interesting adventures in an excursion to find new friends.

If the number over your name on the wrapper on this magazine is 402 it means that your subscription expires with this present issue and that you will not receive May COMFORT unless you renew your subscription at once—we can not send you a single copy, after expiration, until you have renewed. Don't miss May COMFORT.

Save money by renewing and extending your subscription two or three years. Use coupon below and do it today.

Please send bills or silver carefully wrapped in paper and securely sealed, or post-office money order. If obliged to send postage-stamps, send two-cent stamps.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: 50 cents a year, $1.00 for three years, 75 cents for a TWO-YEAR renewal, in U. S. or Cuba. (In Canada 65 cents a year.)

SUBSCRIPTION COUPON FOR RENEWAL OR EXTENSION

Publisher of COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

I enclose ..... cents for renewal and extension of my subscription ..... full years from date of expiration.

Date..... Name.....

Post Office..... Street and No......

R. F. D. No...... Box No...... State.....

April, 1922.

Crumbs of Comfort

Seek wisdom.
Calmness is power.
Happiness is earned.
No blessing lasts forever.
Capital is accumulated labor.
Proverbs are portable wisdom.
Neither despise nor be despised.
Outward actions show inward secrets.
Adversity is the architect of fortitude.
Circumstances can rule only the weak.
God hides himself behind causes and effects.
Do not expect praise, but learn to deserve it.
We all need mercy and must learn to grant it.
The sea is the greatest of all burying grounds.
We are not without wealth when we can laugh.
A tender conscience must be tenderly handled.
He is blessed who prepares pleasure for a child.
A book is a friend that can be always by our side.
The birth of a child is the imprisonment of a soul.
Make your own opportunities, do not wait for them.
An artist should work for no other mind but his own.
Both brains and money should be kept out at interest.
Common sense is genius dressed in its working clothes.
It is better to obey a wise man than to command a fool.
Whatever we put into life will in time come back to us.
The defeat of a wise attempt cannot be called a failure.
The only way to be loved is to be, and to appear, lovely.
The man who is hard to satisfy is the man who moves forward.

Because children are good imitators, parents should be good examples.

Next to the disapproval of your friends, avoid the approval of your enemies.

Without children we would have a world of little loveliness and great loneliness.

The joy of the spirit indicates its strength. All healthy things are sweet-tempered.

One of life's deepest joys is to have a constant sense of brotherhood with all men.

To carry care to bed with you is as foolish as to sleep with a pack upon your back.

Religion begins when man ceases to think for himself and thinks for the whole race.

The Bible is a window in the prison of life through which we can look out upon eternity.

Great is he who has vanquished his enemies, but he is greater who has won them over.

Do not let your heart be an island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins to them.

We can ask questions of the greatest men and women in the world by reading the books they have written.

The world goes on and the stars shine forth in the dark; we never miss in the great expanse of the sky some star that has ceased to light.

Agriculture is the backbone of the nation, and it is a backbone made up of the three vertebrae of a fertile soil, an active brain and a strong body.

LEAGUE RULES: To be a comfort to one's parents. To protect the weak and aged. To be kind to dumb animals. To love our country and protect its flag.

CONDUCTED BY UNCLE LISHA

COMFORT for one year and admittance to the League of Cousins for only 55 cents. Join at once. Everybody welcome.
ADDRESS all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. See Instructions at the close of this Department.

NOW that the rays of the sun are lengthening and deepening, often shining with prophetic warmth, Billy's winter discontent, I am glad to say, is fading like the last snowbanks left in fence corners. He is even cheerful at times, and allows a gleam of facetiousness to replace the consistent grouchy cynicism with which winter and rheumatism have been afflicting him. I have found the change agreeable and have done my best to foster it, you may be sure. But today Bill came into the house with gloom darkening his countenance and disarranging his whiskers: "It's an outrage, Uncle Lisha!" he exclaimed, flinging himself and his legful of library books into a paper-heaped chair where I had just sorted out 672 letters that, in various ways and voices, assailed Cousin Jack Wilcox of Allston, Massachusetts.

"What's all the fuss about, Bill?" I asked. "Who's been rubbing you the wrong way now? The only outrage I know about is the way you bounce in here mixing up my letters."

"I mean it's a shame people should have to live in such crowded ways as they do in this city today, Uncle Lisha," said Billy, in quieter tones of annoyance and rustling peevishly the fallen letters piled about his feet. "I was caught in this rush-hour jam in the subway and it is disgraceful! Why, I had my game leg stepped on four times coming up from De Kalb Avenue—once by a man I'll bet weighed three hundred pounds! The cars can't move the people, and out in the packed streets the people can hardly move themselves. Surely you have noticed how the city's congestion has increased in the past five years, Uncle? Why don't some of 'em move out in the country where there is more room?"

"Of course I've noticed it, Bill," I said. "I don't love it any more than you do—either for myself or for the millions who are huddled in here with us. It's since 1910 that the population shift has so increased that town dwellers are now in the majority. Your friends, the statistic-makers, tell us that only about 48 per cent. of our people now live in the country, Bill. In 1890 the percentage was almost 64 per cent.; and it was over 70 per cent. in 1870. So you see the likelihood of your getting your toes stepped on, Billy, my boy, is increasing with every decade."

"Well, what do they do it for?" exclaimed Bill crossly, scowling prodigiously and looking as if he were quite capable of reducing the surplus city population by means of his pivot teeth. "Goodness knows it is bad enough to live here, with rents sky high, and food at prices hardly to be imagined by any farmer that raised the stuff. Why do people keep pushing in, making things always worse and wages constantly lower?"

"Bill," I replied, "you mention the wages of the city worker—what do you know about the wage cut of the farmers? Cities would be less crowded, I believe, and the tide of population might turn fieldward, if the farmer were sufficiently paid for what he produces and his financial prospects stabilized and encouraged. No wonder there is a 'Farm bloc' in Congress today! In the inevitable deflation of the past few years, Bill, our nation's farmers have been the first and heaviest sufferers and now they are fighting for the aid they need. It is a serious fact to face that the agriculturists of our land received in 1921 eight billions of dollars less for their products than was theirs in 1919. Of course, all industry and trade have suffered. Deflation is not easy in its adjustments for either business or labor. But the farmer, always inadequately protected and hopelessly unorganized, has lost at both ends and most of all. With the prices received for his crops fallen as low or lower than before the war while he has to pay twenty-five to one hundred per cent. more than pre-war prices for nearly everything he buys, he is doubly a victim and is impelled to seek reasons and remedies for his troubles.

"The farmer knows he is insufficiently paid for what he produces. I don't think I make too broad a statement, Bill, when I say that farmers have thus wrongfully suffered from the time when increase in our nation's agricultural production meant the establishment of markets for our surplus from the soil. But now, with the coming to the farm of rural surveys and statistics, the farmer's trade disadvantage has become glaringly evident. No matter how high in the market may be the products of the soil when they reach the consumer, the farmer is sure never to have received his rightful proportion of the price. About a year ago, I remember, Chicago consumers were shown to be paying ten cents a pound for onions. Now what did the Texas grower—perhaps one of our big Family, Bill!—get out of these $200 per ton perfume-makers? Exactly $42 a ton at his Texas farm. The high freight charge of $29.64 on a ton of onions from Texas to the pork-packing metropolis does not account for the price discrepancy. Deducting the freight charges, some people were dividing $128, or over three times what the grower received. Such a case as this, Bill, is typical. The situation, in plain words, is that the farmer has been and is consistently and systematically robbed, through many channels, of the rightful reward of his toil. And a farmer's toil is real toil. As a firsthand producer of wealth the dweller on the land can never gain his labor return as easily as those taking part in banking, commerce or the various professions where money is passed from hand to hand—leaving a share stuck to each palm in passing. And yet it is from the soil only that this stream has its headwaters; where the flowing flood begins of which only a trickle is left finally to moisten the farmer's calloused palm.

"Rightly realizing that his help can only come through organization in the same way that both capital and labor, through which he deals, are organized today, the farmer is organizing, and the movement, already well started in several Western States, is spreading. The farmer means to cease being the only worker who must accept whatever may be offered him for his product by those who plan to profit largely from his toil. When the farmer has won his fight, Bill,—for he is certain to win it—life upon the land, in addition to its many natural advantages, will offer its proper commmercial return, and the drift cityward will be stayed. In the meantime, Bill, you mustn't be too hard on these huddled humans that jostle you and step on your one sore foot and your three sound ones. For remember, these city-crowded, unfortunate masses are shut away from the primal condition of human happiness: namely, that the tie between man and the earth shall not be severed, and that he shall dwell on the land and till it under the open sky."

"Uncle," said Billy, looking at me curiously, "you were a farmer once, weren't you?"

"Yes, Bill, I am proud to say I was," I replied.

"Huh," grunted Billy meditatively; "I thought you were talking rather enthusiastically. Well, why don't you and I get a farm, Uncle Lisha, and leave these crowds and stop paying so much good money to landlords?"

"I'm afraid you'd make a pretty poor sort of farmer, Billy," I answered. "Your particular agricultural ability lies in making one blade of grass grow where two grew before—and this would be rather bad for our hay crop!"

At which little joke of mine, Bill vouchsafed a wide grin and ambled, most amiably for him, out of the room. At the end of another four weeks Bill's disposition will be positively cherubic—particularly if we have a warm April and early dandelions.

And now for the letters—

SOMEWHERE IN MINNESOTA.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA AND COUSINS:

What a perfect darling you are anyway, Uncle! After you so nobly refuted Friend Jack's arguments against the "cross, ugly" American girl, I cannot refrain from sending you a thank you. My fingers fairly ached for a pencil as I read Jackie's refreshingly frank criticism of all of us who belong to the feminine portion of the youth of our country. Jack, old top, where art thou? Aha! I see your cynically smiling face gazing around at COMFORT'S group of "hopelessly plain" girl cousins. I seem to read in the depths of your honest gray (are they gray) eyes a desire to be back in France among those rare violet sky blue-eyed beauties who adorn the bourgeoisie (My French dictionary, James, quick!). It is to smile! Oh, by the way, pray explain the exquisite color "violet sky blue." Do you mean one eye is violet and the other sky blue? Ah, unique idea, what? Why don't you go, and leave behind you that type of girlhood which so offends your discriminating optic? We're all plain? "Mais oui," comes in Jack's slow musical drawl, as he gestures quite Frenchily with his hands and shrugs daintily. Don't you like us at all?—and we wait breathlessly for his answer: "Non, non, Mademoiselle or Madam; I could not like anyone who lacks beauty." Oh! oh! Now listen, mon cher homme, we don't care whether you like us or not. There are plenty of ex-service men who do, Jack, old laddie. Ta! ta! boy, see you at the next dance. I'll save "Sunny Tennessee" for you. Perhaps the next fox-trot hit will be "The Ugly American Girl Blues." Quite probable!

Ted Carmichael (isn't that a delicious name?) is an ex-soldier who sounds good to me. Tall and dark and curly-headed and twenty-three. Oh, girls! I'd write to him, but I know he must be swamped with pink, blue, buff and orchid-tinted (and perhaps scented with a chic French "parfum") letters, so that I wouldn't stand a ghost of a chance of recognition. If Teddy ever wrote to me, I'd answer or break a guy wire. But alas and alack! There's no chance for I'm not having my full name and address in COMFORT. But if any of the cousins from any part of the country except Minnesota care to write to me, my address can be secured from Uncle Lisha. You'll oblige(?) them, won't you, Uncle? There's a dear!

I have been in a rather subdued frame of mind ever since I read Augustus' second letter which appeared in the same issue as mine. It was so noble and clean and courageous that one cannot but admire him. If there is one quality in men I admire above all others it is courage, and Augustus possesses it to the nth degree. While I cannot agree with him on a few subjects, I respect his opinions, for I know he is honest in them. Augustus, I have gone half way in making peace, so let's be friends. I know you would be a wonderful pal, if you could get over your idea of the general uselessness of girls. Can't you?

It's getting frightfully late and my thoughts are running riot. My brain is fairly teeming with ideas I'd express if I could. I realize how weak and futile are my words to express what I really mean, but you will all overlook my failings, won't you? Love to Uncle and all the cousins, and a big piece for Billy with whom I have not yet had a row.

Your niece and cousin, RUTH.

Just as you did last July, Ruth, when you came forward as spokesgirl for those of your sex whom Cousin Augustus Trick had grievously treated, so you now step valiantly and merrily into print to curb Cousin Jack Wilcox's Parisian yearnings with a little Minnesota common sense. But, Ruth, poor Jack has been well scourged already, as you will see from his apologetic letter which appears in this issue. For my part, I haven't the heart to give him any more verbal hammering, so I am going to let your letter speak for itself without much comment concerning your successful efforts in kidding Jack, the Terror of the Boulevards. But you want to be careful, Ruth; your letter has so much French in it that Jack may be mistaking you for one of those sylphy brunettes or sky-blue eyed bourgeoisie. Perhaps it is just as well you left the secret of your address with me.

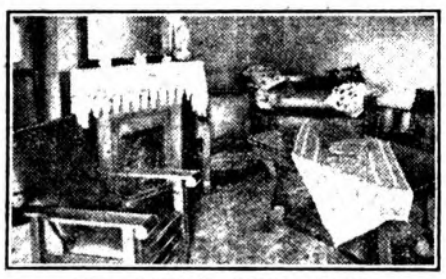
Ruthie, you say you admice courage in men more than all else. If so, you ought to just worship Jack, for his courage, it seems to me, is as sublime as his adjectives. Why as a stirrer-up of trouble Jack has Cousin Gus of Powder Puff fame beaten a mile! You and the doughty defenders of your sex seem to have effectually silenced bold Augustus. As for Jack, we will probably hear from him again. If he is still alive, I am sure that he has already taken passage for France—in a letter-proof cabin!

BIG CREEK, Camp 33 Hospital, CALIF.

DEAR UNCLE LISHA:

Your Billy is some boy; I hope that he is as fine a gentleman as my boss Nanny is a lady. Guess I had better tell you about her: I was sent to the Shaver Lake hospital to take charge during the attendant's absence. Upon my arrival there I found that he had already gone but left the following message: "I guess you will find everything O. K. Be sure and take good care of my friend Nanny." I immediately proceeded to become acquainted with the young lady, and, believe me, she is some lady is "Miss Nannie Goat." She is not at all like ordinary goats; oh, no! Nanny hails from aristocracy; her mother being the winner of a blue ribbon as queen of a tribe of mountain goats. Early last spring Nanny's mother met her fate by trespassing on the right of way of a 30-30 bullet which was intended to reach a deer—thus leaving Nanny an orphan while in her early infancy. Doc Mason (whom I relieved here) was one of the party of sportsmen. Being kind-hearted, he adopted the baby Nanny, grew to be fond of her, and as a result she is a very much spoiled child. No old tin cans or paper for her! I

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 14.)



MRS. BAUER AND HER BOYS.

How I Made Home Cozy For My Loved Ones

By Mrs. Louis Bauer

Surely there is no place in the world that means so much to all of us who read Comfort Magazine as "Home Sweet Home". How we long to make it cozy and homelike! How eager we are that our boys and girls in after years shall look back upon it as the dearest spot on earth! And truly how important it is for the future of our children that we keep up their interest in home and make the home circle more attractive to them than any other place in the world.

Our dear little home in Louisville, Kentucky, spells hospitality itself, with its tidy green hedges and spotless white paint. But to be truly inviting, the home must reflect within, as well, real comforts in the way of tasteful furnishings. How I used to long for restful easy chairs, artistic rugs and other handsome parlor and dining-room pieces, so that my boys as they grew up would be proud of the home in which they lived.

MRS. BAUER'S LIVING ROOM.

How was I to make these dreams of a mother's heart come true, and at the same time give to my growing boys all the motherly care that they deserved? Suddenly, as though a fairy had waved her magic wand, there came to me an opportunity beyond my wildest hopes, to bring comfort, coziness and beauty into our home.

Today as I look around our home, its transformation amazes me. I wish that the camera might do justice to the attractiveness of parlor, living rooms and bedrooms, beautifully furnished as they are through what I consider the ideal womanly work for women—running a Larkin Club.

And yet, today this transformation seems like a play, so easily and naturally, and entirely in my spare moments, has my Larkin Club work fitted into my daily life. And as I think of the many new friends it has brought me, I realize in how many different ways my Larkin Club has increased life's happiness for me.

Ours, I may well say, is a Larkin Premium home, containing more than 200 beautiful Larkin Premiums, of which I am very proud. Besides being furnished almost completely with Larkin furniture, even the paper on the walls, and the paint and varnish inside and out, were all given to me by my Larkin Club work.

Do you wonder then that I smile, when I am asked "Does it pay to be a Larkin Secretary?" If the readers of Comfort could only pay me a little visit there would be no need of words to answer the question.

The work is more than profitable. My two boys, aged twelve and six years, as well as myself, have really had a lot of fun out of running a Larkin Club. It has brought us so close together,—this mutual interest, which the boys and I share, in turning our spare moments into profit and pleasure. Naturally, the Larkin Co. and I do not let my two hustling young "assistants" go unrewarded. Perhaps our picture taken together one day when the boys were joyfully picking out Premiums of their own from the Larkin Catalog, tells better than words just how much the very name "Larkin" means to us.

Next to the happiness that the Larkin Plan has brought to my own home and loved ones, has been the great pleasure of spreading among my good neighbors the benefits and savings of Larkin factory-to-family dealing. It has been a big satisfaction to see housekeeping money, which might otherwise have been spent with nothing to show for it but receipted bills, bring into the homes of these good friends, handsome and valuable Larkin Premiums. For by the Larkin Plan, the same money which stocks the Pantry also furnishes the home.

I hope that this little glimpse of what becoming a Larkin Secretary has meant in one particular home, will prove a message of inspiration to many of the readers of Comfort Magazine. It will pay any home-loving woman to learn more about what a delightful opportunity is open to her in her spare time, to earn not only beautiful furniture but even clothing for herself, without sacrificing a single minute from home and social and business duties.

MRS. BAUER'S COZY HOME.

Whether you are a mother and home-maker as I am, or are teaching or in business every day, you can still find the little time necessary to conduct a congenial neighborly Larkin Club in your neighborhood.

If you would know more about Larkin Premiums and how easily they are earned, write now while you have this page before you. Just fill out and mail the coupon below: Larkin Co. will gladly send you their fascinating Catalog and full information about how you can make home cozy for your loved ones as I have for mine.

This Coupon brings you FREE the book that spelled opportunity for Mrs. Bauer.

Larkin Co Inc. Peoria, Buffalo, Chicago.

Please send me the beautiful new Larkin Spring Catalog No. 76 telling me how I, too, can easily start a Larkin Club among my friends and neighbors and earn handsome home furnishings and stylish apparel just as Mrs. Bauer did.

Name .....

St. and No. .....

P. O. and State .....
GP456

Cozy Fiber
Settee 20c a Day

Especially desirable during spring, summer, early fall for porch and veranda use are fiber and reed pieces. But equally serviceable throughout the home any time of the year. Our big helpful, 128 Page FREE Larkin Book of Better Homes shows a complete line of these Furnishings. Also 1227 other Furnishings for every room in the home.

☐ Furnishings
☐ Symphonic Pianos
☐ Symphonic Player Pianos
☐ Symphonolas

(Check offer interested in)

Symphonic Pianos, Symphonic Player Pianos, and Symphonolas (the phonograph with natural tone, which plays all Records) sold to tens of thousands of music lovers the past nine years. Get our Book describing these famous musical instruments by checking above.

NO Money Down—30 Days FREE Trial—1 to 4 Years TIME

Check offer now. Cut out this ad. Give your full name and address. Mail TODAY.

Larkin Co Inc.
Desk FCT-422 Buffalo, N. Y.

Dont Send One Penny

Emb. Sheet and Pillow Cases

Do not send one penny with your order for this embroidered sheet and pillow cases. Pay the postman when he delivers them.

The Sheet is fine quality with hemstitched edge and handsomely embroidered in bow-knot design. Seamless. Size 72x90. 2 pillow cases to match. Size 36x42 in.

Delivery Free Just send your name and address—no money. When this three-piece outfit arrives, pay the postman $2.79 for it. We have paid the delivery charges. If it is not better than you expected, for any reason whatsoever, return it at our expense and we will cheerfully refund your money. Order by No. 20.

WALTER FIELD CO., Dept. X 1077, CHICAGO

The complete vocal mechanism showing important Hyo-Glossus muscle

The Secret of Caruso's Greatness

Science has discovered the secret! Thousands of men and women will benefit. Thin, weak, defective voices can be made rich, resonant and powerful You can develop your voice by scientific exercises right in your own home.

100% Improvement Guaranteed

Professor Feuchtinger, world-famous discoverer of this great secret, will train you by the same method he has used with his thousands of successful students, many who are now international singers and speakers. If your voice is not improved 100%, in your own opinion, we will refund your money.

Free Book Write today for beautiful book on voice culture. FREE. Send right away.

Perfect Voice Institute, Studio 3704
1922 Sunnyside Avenue, Chicago

This Beautiful Sleeping Doll FREE

You can have this Beautiful, Doll. She has closing eyes, movable arms and legs, turning head, real hair. Dressed as you see her in this picture. Dress can be taken off and put on. She also wears socks and baby bonnet. We will send her free, all charges paid, for selling 15 packs of Post Cards at 10c per pack.

Jones Manufacturing Co.,
Dept. 184, Attleboro, Mass.

Get The Book FREE! If you would like to read the whole of this wonderful story at once and learn its thrilling conclusion, rather than wait for the monthly installments as they appear in COMFORT, we will be glad to make you a present of the complete story in book form. Send us only one one-year subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 50 cents, and we will send you a copy of the book free and postpaid.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Tonic in Early Spring Foods

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7.)

large slices of canned pineapple, cut the soft part of one orange into small pieces, slightly mash two cups of ripe sweet strawberries, and break apart, wash and drain dry the white leaves of a head of lettuce. Arrange the lettuce on a platter and fill each leaf to overflowing with the fruit mixed together, and then pour over it a sweet salad dressing made as follows: Beat the yolks of two eggs until light yellow and creamy, gradually beat in one cup of powdered sugar and a pinch of salt. Lastly, gradually beat in one-half cup of pineapple juice.

VEGETABLE COMBINATION SALADS.—Usually these salads are chiefly made from left-over vegetables with the addition of uncooked celery, diced apple, fresh ripe tomatoes, a little raw onion, lettuce, nuts, shredded cabbage, or chopped crisp cucumber. The following will suggest combinations: Cold dandelion greens cut fine with freshly boiled potato, cold asparagus, finely-sliced radishes and lettuce. Cold chopped spinach, a grating of onion, and hard-boiled egg. Cold boiled beet, potato, carrot and scraped onion. Cold string beans, peas, celery and a little green pepper. Lettuce, tomato and cucumber. Apple, celery, nuts and lettuce. Shredded cabbage, shredded green peppers with seeds removed and thinly-sliced radishes. These vegetable salads are mixed with mayonnaise, Thousand Island dressing and French dressing.

MAYONNAISE DRESSING. — Three level tablespoons of butter melted in a porcelain-lined stewpan until it bubbles. Gradually work in one and a half tablespoons of dry flour and let it slowly cook about two minutes, while continually stirring. Remove pan to back of stove. Have ready one cup of boiling hot milk, and very slowly stir it into the butter and flour. Return to fire, stir until the mixture boils, then cover closely and slowly simmer ten minutes. Remove from fire, and beat in the well-beaten yolk of one egg, season with salt and cayenne pepper, and cover again. When partly cool add the juice of one lemon. When cold add the eggwhite beaten very stiff and dry.

THOUSAND ISLAND DRESSING.—One tablespoon each of sour pickle, onion, boiled beet, hard-boiled egg, stuffed olives, parsley, all minced or grated fine. Add two tablespoons of some kind of sharp sauce; chilli sauce is the best. Stir together and add to mayonnaise dressing as above described, with one-half teaspoon of salt, and pepper if needed.

FRENCH DRESSING.—In a cup put one-fourth teaspoon of salt, a small pinch of mustard, a little black and cayenne pepper, and one teaspoon of vinegar. Some like the addition of a few drops of onion juice. Beat well and add five teaspoons of salad oil. Beat hard and pour it over the salad before it settles.

MAPLE CUSTARD.—One and one-half cup of milk, and one-half cup each of maple and brown sugar heated in a double boiler until the milk is scalding hot and the sugar is thoroughly melted. Mix to a smooth cream one-fourth cup of sifted flour and one-half cup of cold whole milk, and add to it the well-beaten yolks of three eggs, beating all together with the eggbeater. Into this mixture slowly pour the hot milk and sugar, stirring continually. Return to the double boiler and continue stirring until the custard has thickened and is smooth, then cook five minutes longer, stirring occasionally. Just before serving, beat the eggwhites stiff and dry, and fold into the custard. Fill custard cups and sprinkle each with roasted almonds chopped fine.

RHUBARB CUSTARD PATTIES.—Cover an inverted gem-tin with pastry, as shown in illustration. Pick tiny holes for a steam escape and bake in a quick oven. Make the filling by stewing two cups of rhubarb cut into short lengths, one-half cup of sugar mixed with one tablespoon of flour, a small piece of orange rind and one-half cup of seedless raisins together until tender, and then pouring the boiling hot mixture over two well-beaten egg-yolks that have been mixed with one-half cup of sugar. Beat smooth, return to fire and cook three minutes, adding one tablespoon of butter. When both shells and filling are cool, put them together and top with a meringue made by beating very stiff and dry the two egg-whites and gradually adding two tablespoons of granulated or powdered sugar. Spread over the patties and brown in a moderate oven. Care must be taken to stir the rhubarb frequently while cooking, and if slowly brought to a boil it will be unnecessary to add water.

STEWED RHUBARB.—While rhubarb is delicious and refreshing, it contains oxalic acid, which is likely to make trouble for those who have a tendency to gout or gravel. For this reason many prefer to pour boiling water over the cut up rhubarb, let it stand ten minutes and then drain. It will be found that the water drained from the rhubarb will be highly acid. Add sugar to the rhubarb and stew. Addition of orange marmalade gives a fine flavor.

PUFFS WITH STRAWBERRY FILLING.—Bring to a boil half a cup of water with one-fourth of a cup of butter, and add all at once one scant cup of sifted flour. Stir rapidly until it is smooth and leaves the sides of the stew-pan clean. Remove from the fire and continue stirring until the mixture has partly cooled, then stir in two whole unbeaten eggs, one at a time. Drop by spoonfuls onto a biscuit-tin quite a distance apart. Bake in a moderate oven forty minutes. Do not open the oven door during the first twenty minutes. Cut a round from the top of each when cold, fill with mashed and sweetened strawberries stirred up with whipped cream, and then cut the round into several pieces and lay it into the filling. This is a very attractive dessert.

CITRUS MARMALADE.—Cut into very thin slices and remove the seeds from one lemon, one grapefruit and one orange. Carefully measure the fruit, and add twice the amount of cold water, putting the whole into a porcelain-lined preserving kettle and letting it stand over night. In the morning the mixture is boiled until the peelings are tender, which will take several hours. Let it again stand over night, then measure an equal amount of sugar. Bring the fruit to a boil, gradually add the sugar, and cook hard until thick enough to fall from a spoon in thick drops. Pour into hot glasses. It is ready for use. If to be kept any length of time, cover with melted paraffin.

ORANGE JELLY.—This is an old-time Jacksonville, Florida, recipe, made from the natural bitter orange, but very nearly the same results are attained by using the early, freshly-picked oranges before the peels have begun to shrink. In this state they contain a large amount of pectin. Use seven bitter oranges if obtainable (otherwise those as above described), two sweet oranges, and two lemons. Wash the fruit clean with a vegetable brush in cold water. Cover with cold water, bring to a boil, drain, and throw away the water. Slice the fruit into a preserving kettle, add three quarts of cold water, boil hard and keep the fruit stirred and mashed with a wooden pestle. Cook about forty-five minutes, stirring very frequently. Work through a wire sieve. The hard part of peel will not go through and is thrown away. Measure an equal amount of sugar. Boil the strained fruit ten minutes, gradually add the sugar, cook two minutes longer, and pour into glasses.

Love Will Find the Way

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6.)

"I have come to ask a favor," she said huskily. "It is to see—one of your patients."

"Which one?"

There was a moment before she could reply. A great lump seemed to be swelling in her throat, and she was compelled to gulp it down before she could force herself to reply.

"The one—down by the lake," she said hoarsely.

"I am sorry," he said gently, "but I cannot consent to that, my child. The gentleman who placed her here has forbidden that any one shall see her without his permission."

Marian was growing excited. She took a step forward, pleading expressed in tone and voice. She was scarcely conscious of what she was saying:

"But he has not the right to refuse me, nor have you!" she cried out miserably. "You have not the right to prevent a most unhappy child from seeing the face of—her mother!"

Doctor Judson stared.

"Your mother!" he exclaimed. "Do you mean that the woman confined in the cottage down by the lake is your mother?"

"Yes."

"But I tell you it is impossible. You are mistaken!"

"There is no mistake. I have seen her. I know."

"But it can't be!" exclaimed the doctor, his countenance expressive of utter bewilderment. "You are scarcely more than a child, and poor old Mrs. Morris has been under the care of myself and my father for more than thirty years!"

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE DOCTOR'S THEORY.

Marian stood there silent, bewildered, stunned under the effect of the words that had been spoken by Dr. Judson. Her mentality had received a terrible blow, from which it seemed impossible that she could recover.

Her eyes were fixed on his, the pupils dilating with each second. A curious, greenish color crept into her cheeks, and about her nose, that strange, pinched look grew that precedes death. Doctor Judson watched her for some moments as if fascinated, then fearing for her intellect, he stepped forward and caught her by the arm.

The physical pain which the sharpness of his touch caused seemed to bring back some semblance of life, for she started as if recovering from a dream, and passed her hand across her face in a dazed way. Then she sat down suddenly and again lifted her eyes to his.

He was about to speak, but she put up her hand and stopped him.

"Wait!" she exclaimed, so hoarsely that it sounded like no human voice. "Wait! I—I don't—seem to have—heard you—aright. What did—you—call—the woman down by the lake?"

"Mrs. Morris."

"Are you—sure that is her name?"

"Why, certainly. She is the mother of old Ezra Morris, the gambler."

"And she has been here——"

"For thirty years or more."

"It can't be!" cried Marian desperately. "There must be some mistake. In all the world there could not live so vile a scoundrel as that would make of him. Oh, sir, think! Only a few days ago a man came here bringing with him a girl. She was admitted to that house and permitted to see the woman whom you have called Mrs. Morris. Do you remember that?"

"Perfectly. Ezra Morris sent out word early in the morning of the same day that a gentleman would call, bringing a lady to see her. They were friends of his. He notified us that we were to allow them to see his mother without questioning. They were driven to the cottage and admitted by one of the attendants. I think his note is here."

Dr. Judson went to the desk by which Marian sat, and opening a drawer, ran through a pile of letters. He selected one at last, and opening it, spread it before Marian. She had recovered herself in those few moments with wonderful rapidity, and with eager eyes she read breathlessly:

"DEAR DOCTOR JUDSON: A friend of mine, accompanied by a lady, will call on you today to see my mother. Will you kindly have them admitted without questioning, and have the attendant speak as little in their presence as possible. I hope that all is still as well as we can ever hope for.

"Yours, with gratitude for past favors,
"EZRA MORRIS."

It was not her father's writing. It was not her mother that had been entered there under a false name, to prevent the world from guessing the misfortune that had fallen upon the family. There was no mistake. The poor creature down there in the cottage beside the lake was Ezra Morris' mother—not hers!

And Marian felt too strangely to understand her own sensations. She did not know which was greatest, her horror of the lie that her father had told her, her loathing for this additional sin that he had committed against her, or her relief at discovering that her mother was not that helpless thing that had lost every element of the human in the utter destruction of all intelligence.

She sat there silently, striving to think it all out, but too much confused in thought to be able to do it, weak, trembling, half-exhausted, and Doctor Judson stood watching her.

"Are you c vinced?" he asked at last, with a smile.

"I am afraid to allow myself to be," she faltered. "I can scarcely bring myself to think that it can be true. If that woman is not my mother then where is she?"

Doctor Judson did not reply at once. He stood there for another moment, looking down upon her, then he took a chair and drew it in front of her, seating himself quietly where no expression of her face would escape him.

"It would be impossible for me even to hazard an answer to your question without knowing more of the reason for your asking it. I would help you if I could, but I know nothing whatever about you. I am not airing my curiosity, I am asking you no questions, but if there is anything that you care to tell me of the situation, I may be able to at least advance an opinion. Now I am mute through compulsion."

Swiftly some of the incidents of her past life had surged through Marian's brain. She remembered how she had believed her mother dead all those years; she remembered how her father had acted upon the day that she had mentioned her mother's misfortune to him; she recalled how he had refused to allow her to see her mother until she had threatened him with the courts; how he had then reluctantly yielded. And then she recalled his ability to rob, his ability to make his own daughter the thing that he had tried to make of her, and a shiver passed over her. Where was her mother? Was she living or dead? If dead, why was her grandmother in ignorance of it? If living—where?

She saw that no secrets could be kept now. The disgrace that shadowed her must be made known to all the world, if she would discover the fate of her mother; and realizing that there was no time to be lost, she bent forward eagerly toward the first assistance that was held out to her.

"I don't know how to tell you," she exclaimed, striving to speak calmly under her excitement. "It is all so strange, so unreal. My father told me that it was mother who occupied that house; that she had been there for sixteen years, having been placed there two years after my birth. My grandmother told me on my eighteenth birthday of the blight that had rested upon my mother's life. I asked my father, a few weeks afterward, for permission to see her. I remember now how he hesitated; I remember that he at first flatly refused; I remember the horror with which he regarded me when the subject was mentioned to him, and that he refused until I threatened; then he brought me—here."

"And has he always been a good man? Have you always trusted him?"

Her eyes drooped and her face flushed painfully; but the bravery that had been born in her heart, for her mother's sake, did not forsake her. She looked up again and answered more firmly than she had yet spoken.

"No; he is not a good man; he has deceived me in every way. Except that no murder rests upon his soul, I do not see how a man could be worse than my father has proven himself to be."

There was no disgust, but only sympathy, upon the good doctor's face. He drew his chair a little closer to her, as if to give her strength before replying, then in a low tone filled with compassion, he said:

"Then, my child, the case seems clear enough to me."

"How?"

"You and your mother are the victims of fraud."

"Fraud?"

"Yes. Remember this is merely a suggestion. My knowledge, even after all that you have had the courage to tell me, is of the most meager. I am merely jumping at conclusions which seem wild enough in the light of the twentieth century, and yet there seems no other explanation of the situation, from what little I know of it."

"Go on."

"Certainly you have been deceived, horribly deceived. That Mrs. Morris is not your mother I would be willing to swear. She has been in the same room in which she now is for more than thirty years, and if you were anything like that age, you would be able to remember more of the past than you do or can. Even if your appearance were deceptive, as would be most improbable, your own memory would be the test. Therefore, I say it is impossible that you should be the daughter of Mrs. Morris. Your grandmother told you of your mother's insanity, and your father, when you demanded of him that you should see her, took you to see a woman whom he palmed off on you as your mother, and who is not. Consequently, there is but one inference—your mother is not crazy. If she had been, why could he not have taken you to her instead of to see Mrs. Morris?"

"But—may she not be—dead?"

"That is not probable, either. If she were dead, he would have told you, because there is neither horror nor disgrace attached to death. Even if he had—killed her, which is not likely, he has not been accused by the law, and consequently could have found an excuse to justify death to you. My belief is that she is not dead."

"Then where is she?"

"You have asked a question that it will require the most careful search and investigation to answer. My own belief is that she is perfectly sane, and that for some reason, which neither you nor I can fathom at present, he has placed her out of the way. He has not had the nerve to kill her, because he fears the law; but he fears to have you see her, and he has put this deception upon you in order that you ask no further questions, which, to say the least, were embarrassing to answer."

"And what would you advise me to do?"

"Have you a friend to whom you can apply?"

Instantly her thoughts reverted to Underwood, and she answered with grateful remembrance:

"Yes."

"Then let me telegraph at once. There is an office in the building. Come with me, or wait until I send for a blank, as you desire."

TO BE CONTINUED.

RAMIE REPP
the washable material that won't shrink

Swiss Embroidered
full TUNIC DRESS

Search thru all the catalogs and ads and you cannot find a bargain to equal this beautiful dress anywhere! Prize-winning Style for Spring and Summer 1922. Again LESTER-ROSE CO. offer the newest, prettiest dress at a price that will surprise you.

Wonderful Quality and Style

RAMIE REPP is the fashionable material chosen for this dress, launders beautifully without shrinking! Fast colors, and just the right weight for Spring and Summer wear. Remember, this charming dress has a FULL TUNIC. Revers and tunic are beautifully Swiss embroidered in popular Black. Edges prettily scalloped and finished with tiny embroidered figures, ¾ length bell-shaped sleeves, edged with Satin piping. Has wide sash, 3 yards long, for bow and streamers at back as shown. Closing at left of embroidered Vestee. Fitted waist band with skirt gathered at waist line to hang in graceful ripples.

Harding Blue or Rose

A $12 Dress for Only $3.65 PREPAID "Style is always a Season ahead"

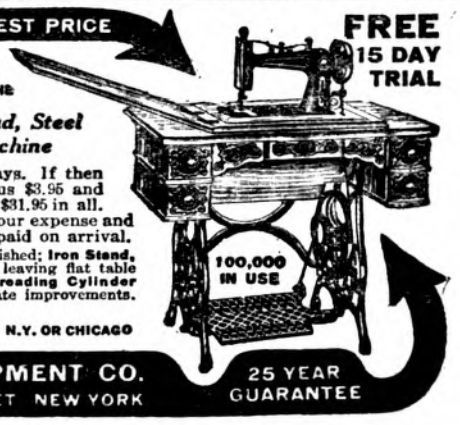
SEND NO MONEY!

Just write don't send one penny! Order by No. 4365. Misses' sizes 14 to 20. Women's sizes 32 to 46 inch bust. Colors, Harding Blue or Rose. Be sure to state size and color. Pay only $3.65 for dress when delivered. We pay the postage! WRITE TODAY!

Money Back if you're not delighted.

Lester-Rose Co. Dept. 572 Chicago

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES—LOWEST PRICE



SEND NO MONEY
JUST WRITE AND SAY YOU WANT TO TRY THE

Faultless Drop-Head, Steel Ball Bearing Sewing Machine

When it arrives use it free for 15 days. If then you are fully satisfied with it, send us $3.95 and pay $4.00 each month for 7 months—$31.95 in all. If it does not suit you, ship it back at our expense and we will refund even the freight you paid on arrival.

Genuine Oak Woodwork, beautifully finished; Iron Stand, enameled glossy black; Head folds inside, leaving flat table top; Automatic Bobbin Winder; Self Threading Cylinder Shuttle; Adjustable Stitch. All up-to-date improvements. All tools and accessories free.

SHIPPED FROM WAREHOUSE NEAREST YOU. N.Y. OR CHICAGO

FREE 15 DAY TRIAL

25 YEAR GUARANTEE

NATIONAL FARM EQUIPMENT CO.
DEPT A-38 98 CHAMBERS STREET NEW YORK

Your Moods, Whims, Annoyances

trace ageing lines and other blemished that mar the youthful smoothness of your skin. Elizabeth Arden, guided by her scientific knowledge and her sure understanding of women's needs, has perfected a balm for each prevalent difficulty. You need these two splendid preparations;

Anti-Wrinkle Cream, yellow, fragrant; softens the skin, nourishes the tissues and smooths away lines and wrinkles. $2 by mail.

Venetian Pore Cream closes relaxed pores and refines the skin. $1 by mail.

Write me a frank description of your skin; I will send you my informative booklet "The Quest of the Beautiful" with personal advice.

ELIZABETH ARDEN

Salon d'Oro, 681-D Fifth Avenue, New York
25 Old Bond St., London 255 Rue St. Honore, Paris

Cocoanut Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls of Mulsified will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—in guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

Don't worry about your complexion when blotches, roughness, redness and other skin defects are quickly relieved by

RESINOL

Soothing and Healing

Big Money

Made by agents selling our wonderful Facial Soap, Perfumes, Toilet Articles, Spices, Extracts, etc. Free cake of soap & agents terms mailed to any address.

Lacassian Co., Dept. 402, St. Louis, Mo.

Kill The Hair Root

My method is the only way to prevent the hair from growing again. Easy, painless, harmless. No scars. Booklet free. Write today enclosing 3 stamps. We teach beauty culture.
D. J. MAHLER, 348-X, Mahler Park, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

3 Piece Toilet Set Free

for selling only 8 boxes of our famous ROSEBUD at 25c a box; a home necessity. EASY TO SELL. WE TRUST YOU. Big catalogue sent with goods. Order today.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO., Dept. A, Woodsboro, Md.

Write to this firm.

We pay $7 a Day

taking orders for guaranteed hosiery for men, women, children. All styles, colors, including finest line silk hose.

Guaranteed To Give Satisfaction or New Hose Free

Often take orders for dozen pairs in one family. Repeat orders make you steady income. Devote spare time or full time. It will pay any man or woman to handle this guaranteed line. No experience necessary. Get started at once. Best season of the year. Write for samples.

Thomas Mfg. Co. H-5130 Dayton, Ohio

Patchwork SILK Ripplette; Fancy Shirtings; Ginghams; Percales; Heavy Damask. Send 10c for sample of SILK and each of the above. Satisfaction or money back HUB PATCHWORK CO., W. Medford, Mass.

Cuticura Talcum is Fragrant and Very Healthful

Sample free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. D, Malden, Mass. 25c. everywhere.

The Pretty Girls' Club

Conducted by Katherine Booth

Our Internal Complexions

THERE is no girl or woman who does not long for a beautiful complexion. I believe this one desire has more devotees than even the desire for a lovely figure. And we all know what women think about lovely figures!

Yet few of us are very intelligent in the methods we pursue to obtain what we desire. Most women seem to think that complexions can be bought in jars—at least that the remedies for a poor complexion are those to be applied externally. Nothing is farther from the truth. Good cold creams, pure powders, even a little rouge where one is naturally pale, are valuable adjuncts of the dressing-table and help to preserve a good complexion and aid a poor one, but they cannot overcome serious defects of complexion.

"And why?" ask the Bettys, and the Pattys, and the Elizabeths, and the Mabels. Well, my listening audience, just because the complexion is the outer advertisement of the condition of our interiors. And if we want a good complexion it is absolutely imperative that we should begin our campaign where complexions begin—inside our bodies. If our blood is poor and thin, we will never have a lovely bit of red in our cheeks—unless we buy it, and that is really a very poor substitute. If it is sluggish and full of impurities, those impurities are sure to come out in pimples, boils and other skin imperfections.

FIGS HELP THE ELIMINATIVE ORGANS OF THE BODY.

So, if a beautiful complexion we would have, we must get at the internal conditions which are keeping it away. Proper elimination of impurities is the first essential, of course, and is at the bottom not only of a perfect complexion but of good health, as well. So accept no excuse from your eliminating organs, but see that they do their duty. Proper foods, plenty of water, and exercise will take care of this, and the result upon your complexion will at once be noticeable.

Foods that aid elimination are figs, prunes, apples, oranges, spinach, lettuce, bran bread and bran biscuits. Foods that, eaten to excess, are apt to cause constipation are starchy foods, such as potatoes, white bread, hot biscuits, griddle cakes, too much pastry. The woman who wants a good complexion should eat plenty of fruit, because of its eliminative effect and because it supplies certain mineral salts which the body needs. Prunes in the morning, an apple at noon, an orange at night, is a very good schedule to follow, but any and all fruits except bananas are excellent foods to put on the diet list. Melons are fine, also the berries in their season. Figs and prunes are more effective than most other fruits, so should be eaten as generously as possible. I am always recommending a dish of prunes for breakfast, soaked over night after being washed, then cooked in the water in which they have soaked, very very gently until soft. It is better than a gallon of medicine.

Eight to ten glasses of water should be taken in the course of the day, but do not take too much liquid at one time. A glass of water is as much as you should have at one session, unless you sip it slowly.

For exercise, choose abdominal and waist exercises, that the stomach and intestines may be stimulated to action. A good exercise for a "sluggish liver" is a waist-twisting exercise. Standing with heels together, hands on hips, fingers forward and thumbs back, chin up, spine straight, turn the upper half of the body as far to the left as it will go, then as far to the right. Let the head go with the upper half of the body, without altering its relative position, just as if it were of one piece with the torso and was moved with it. Practice this exercise fifteen or twenty times, twice a day. Then practice it with the arms outspread in a curve. The object is to twist the waist as far around as possible.

Body bathing daily is of course another essential of a good complexion, because unless the skin is kept perfectly clean the pores cannot operate to throw off impurities. Even though there is no question of the body being soiled, it nevertheless throws off daily tiny particles of scarf skin which unless removed will clog the pores as effectually as dirt. Where one has no bathtub in the house, and a bath is therefore more trouble to prepare, one can keep one's entire body perfectly clean with nothing more than a pitcher of warm or hot water, and a good Turkish wash-cloth. Standing on a folded towel, one can give the body a good cleansing rub and rinse. This is the first requisite of not only a good complexion but of good health, and nothing gives one such a sense of well-being as the feeling of perfect cleanliness.

Exercise, fresh air, lots of bathing, attention to foods—and there is no reason in the world why any of us may not have a perfectly good complexion, even a lovely one.

Answers to Questions

JEWEL.—Read what I say this month about health and beauty, and follow those suggestions. All of this is of use in either gaining flesh if one is too thin, or in losing flesh if one is too heavy. In other words, it starts the digestive and eliminative organs working properly and they prevent too much fat forming while at the same time getting every ounce of nourishment out of the food eaten. I imagine what you need to do is to be very careful indeed about your food. Proper food will do much to restore health, and it will certainly make flesh. The first thing is to cut out foods which are not good for you. This would mean, for you, pies, cake, fried foods of all kinds, which include fried potatoes, fried meat, doughnuts, griddle-cakes, etc. And it would mean cutting out hot breads, since hot breads are difficult of digestion; which is also true of pork and veal. You can, of course, gain quickly and substantially by taking the milk diet, and going without solid food; but if you wish to gain on ordinary foods you must eat plenty of fruits and green vegetables in order to keep the eliminative functions in order, then must choose your other foods for their fat-building qualities. Potatoes are great fat-builders, as is rice, white bread, butter, milk, cream, cereals. But none of these will do you any good if your digestive organs do not assimilate them, or if the eliminative functions are not active. Exercise daily, morning and evening, in your room, and get as much outdoor exercise as you can, but not to the point of fatigue. Eat three times a day heartily, chewing your food thoroughly, and without drinking while eating. Most people who drink while eating use the liquid to wash down their food, thus saving themselves the trouble of chewing properly. But the saliva is needed for digestive purposes and it makes no difference how softened the food is with liquid when it is swallowed, if that liquid is not the one placed in our bodies for digestive purposes. Starches, such as potatoes and white bread, are almost entirely digested in the mouth, that is with the mouth secretions, and if they are swallowed without being properly chewed they do not digest as they should. Just remember that. In fried foods, the coating of fat which covers the food makes it very hard for the stomach juices to get at the food to digest it; therefore it overworks the stomach, which in time fails in its function. Do not eat too many different foods at one meal. A breakfast consisting of fruit, a great bowl of well-cooked cereal with plenty of cream or milk, and a soft-boiled egg, is a healthful one and will make you gain. If for dinner you eat a moderate helping of broiled or roasted meat, not too well done, with a little of the fat, some potato and another vegetable such as string beans, spinach, carrots, white bread and butter, and a simple dessert—such as fruit, blanc mange, custard, rice pudding, floating island—you will have another good meal. Bread and milk, and plenty of it, would be perfectly all right for lunch, with an apple to follow; or a dish of hot rice with milk and sugar—cream, when you can—with hot buttered toast. With this you could take a glass of milk, sipping it, and never drinking it when food was in the mouth, or a cup of hot cocoa, taken in the same way. Cut out coffee and tea altogether for awhile, if you want to gain in health and weight. Pork and veal are hard to digest, taking much more time than beef, lamb and mutton, or fowl; so choose your food accordingly. Bacon is perfectly all right for you to take, and broiled bacon with a poached egg—soft—or a soft-boiled egg, one or two, would be a good meal with a baked potato and bread and butter. Good luck to you!

MRS. A. B. C.—Is that the name you wanted me to use? To get rid of pimples you have to regulate the diet and the bowel action. No application from outside will cure them. Read what I say this month about "internal complexions"—there is where you have to begin, at the stomach.

DOTTY DIMPLES.—Just one sickness after another, wasn't it? No wonder your hair fell out. You were right to bob it. If it grows thick on top but not on sides and back, massage the scalp nightly. Of course, first look after your general health, appetite, bowels, lots of water, plenty of exercise and fresh air. Your circulation has to be in good working order to make the various parts of the body healthy—including the hair. To massage the scalp, slip the flat of the fingers of one hand next the scalp on one side of the head, and those of the other hand on the other side of the head, and pressing firmly against the scalp move it back and forward on the skull, then round and round. Move the fingers from one spot to another, giving each a thorough massage. This will bring the blood to the scalp and help to nourish the little hair roots. "Mange Cure" is supposed to be good for growth of the hair. It is rubbed into the scalp thoroughly, and left on for an hour or two. Then you will need a very thorough shampoo, and be sure that you keep away from the public while you have the mange cure on, for it smells to high heaven and does not tend to make you beloved! Eat plenty of nourishing foods, my dear, and get lots of sleep—these are two of the essentials in giving your body strength enough to nourish your hair properly.

A NINETY-SIX GIRL.—I certainly do think you under weight, my dear—one hundred and six pounds for five feet, six inches. You should weigh, at your age, at least one hundred and twenty-five so get to work to remedy the lack. Eating properly, regularly, sleeping all you can, drinking lots of water, exercising and breathing in good fresh air, all help. See what I say this month to "Jewel" and follow the directions. Don't eat between meals.

D.—If you have dandruff, you need more frequent shampooing, I am inclined to think. With short hair this should be easy. Shampoo once in two weeks, and rinse thoroughly. Give the scalp massage nightly, as per directions in this issue to "Dotty Dimples." Your hair doesn't need to curl to be quite the fashion. Many of the girls who bob their hair wear it perfectly straight, parted on one side, and brushed over to the other side. Sometimes they catch a portion of this combed-over hair in one thick strand, with a flat large hair-clasp, of gold or tortoiseshell, etc., but often the hair hangs perfectly straight all about the head, with this one side part. You say you are an "ugly girl." Oh, I wonder, my dear! I don't really believe it. What may be the case, however, is that you do not make the most of yourself. See that your hair is always well shampooed, and that it is brushed daily with many strokes of the brush, until it is live and glossy; and see that you take a complete body bath every day, and give yourself a good toweling afterward so that the skin glows with health; brush your teeth the first thing in the morning with a good tooth paste, then after each meal, and before you go to bed. You will soon have pretty teeth, and nothing adds so much to one's good looks. See that your finger-nails are well taken care of and always perfectly clean and well-shaped. And be trim about your clothes, stockings put on smoothly, shoes kept in good condition, everything fresh and clean. About the freckles, I wouldn't worry about them, just now. Freckles aren't really unbeautiful, unless they come in a tremendous crop! Just put your time on getting your complexion beautiful and clear, your teeth white and shining, your eyes clear, your hair smooth and glossy and clean as can be, and your clothes well put on and well taken care of. Read all I say each month about proper eating, about bathing, about exercise, about keeping the bowels in good condition without cathartics. The first thing is the hair, my dear, so get to work. I expect to hear before long that you haven't any more dandruff. Before your first shampoo, I should oil my scalp by running a medicine dropper first down one part and then another, then tie my head up in a towel until morning, then give the hair a thorough shampoo, following the directions given so many times in these columns. The oil will loosen the dandruff and make it easy to remove. Do not comb the scalp, when you are dressing the hair, but only the hair; you can scratch the scalp with a comb so that you will produce dandruff.

LOWER HALF OF BODY TURNED IN ONE DIRECTION; UPPER HALF IN ANOTHER.

JESSIE.—A brunette does not use as light colored a powder as a blonde. She should choose a flesh tint or a pink. A flesh tint has a little more color to it than white, while the pink powder when applied to the face seems just a flesh color. Don't use much powder in any case. If you are a young girl, I shouldn't use more than the merest dust of it—just so that my nose didn't look greasy.

MABELLE.—I quite understand the state of mind that makes one feel almost "wild" at times when there are a number of clamoring children around. You do not weigh nearly enough for your height, and need building up. You ought to weigh about one hundred and twenty-five pounds. You are probably not getting all the nourishment out of the food you eat, because of your nervous condition. It is also imperative that you learn to control the bowels without cathartics. Food will do this, even though you are unable to obtain fresh fruits, as you say. You can obtain prunes, and there is nothing better. Keep cooked prunes on hand all the time, and eat a dish for breakfast every morning. Do not add sugar to them in cooking, but after washing well, soak in plenty of water over night, then cook slowly until perfectly soft. These as a daily food will be just as beneficial for the children as for you. But you should not omit them from your diet one day. Canned fruits—but not rich preserves—are better than none, if you cannot obtain fresh fruits. You may not be able to get green vegetables at all times, but you can bake bran bread, bran muffins, bran biscuits, and eat those occasionally. It may be that you should eat them altogether instead of any white bread. White bread is about as constipating as any food you could choose. So make up your mind, every day, to have bran bread or muffins and prunes. Take plenty of liquid. As you go about your work, stop to drink a glass or half a glass of water, at short intervals. See that you get eight or ten glasses every day. Taking laxatives only aggravates your troubles, for you "wear them out" and have to keep taking stronger and stronger laxatives as time goes on. Drop them for the time being, and try the prune and bran bread regime. If you must, for a short time, resort to other aids, take an enema instead of a cathartic. Though the enema habit is said, by physicians, to be as bad as the cathartic habit. Of course exercise would help—like lying on the back and raising the right leg at right angles with the body without bending the knee; then slowly letting it sink to the bed again. The more slowly you can do this, the better the results, as it exercises the abdominal muscles, and this is what you need. After practicing with the right leg, the exercise should be repeated many times with the left and finally with both, remembering always not to bend the knee and to let the downward motion be as slow as possible. However, you may be too tired with your daily duties to have the strength to exercise. It might be more to the point if you could take the time an exercise would take and spend it just lying still in your own room with the door shut and getting hold of your nerves. For gaining flesh, read what I say to "Dottie Dimples" and "Jewel." These foods provide all the "fuel" anybody needs. In fact they are fuel foods. Fried foods use up your energy, as do pork and veal and dried meats. Bacon, eggs, milk, cream, sugar, butter, white bread (except for its constipating tendencies), cereal, custards, rice, are all the sort of foods that will give you "energy" as well as fat. You couldn't do better than eat the breakfast I have recommended to "Dotty Dimples," nor better than to eat that kind of dinner or supper. Remember you get no "energy" or "fuel" from food which you do not properly digest. More is obtained from the smallest amount of food properly digested. But, in any case, the regime I have laid down for you is full of "fuel" qualities and is sufficient nourishment for any amount of work you have to do. Your big job is to get over your constipation. Start right in drinking lots of water, eating apples if you have them on hand, one following breakfast or preceding it, and one at night before going to bed. Have your big dish of properly cooked prunes in the morning, followed by your cereal and cream or cereal and milk—letting it be thoroughly cooked—and adding a soft-boiled egg if you want it. Omit bread from your breakfast. Remember about chewing your food until each mouthful is liquid before swallowing it. You can see for yourself how the process of digestion must be simplified by this precaution, and it is your job to make things as easy for your stomach and bowels as possible. You have been taking cathartics for so long that just at first your bowels will probably refuse to act but, if so, take an enema to start them, and persist in the prunes, the water, the bran bread or biscuit, and it won't be any time until they behave as they should. Form regular habits. Attend to this at regular hours daily—at least twice a day. And keep on trying to form such habits, no matter if it seems at first entirely impossible.

Address all letters containing questions to
KATHERINE BOOTH, care COMFORT,
AUGUSTA, MAINE.

You Needn't Have Gray Hair At Any Age

The smart hat you choose won't make you seem any younger if your hair is gray, which it needn't be. Science has perfected a safe, sure and easy way to stop graying hair and bring back and keep the natural color. This you can learn for yourself by accepting our free offer.

You take no risk, for the test is made on a single lock and results tell their own story. When you see how even and beautiful is the restored color and how easily accomplished, you will start at once to restore and beautify all your hair.

A clear, colorless liquid

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer is a clear colorless liquid, clean and clear as water. Applied by combing—no skill or outside aid required.

No danger of the streaking or discoloration, which is worse than gray hair. There is nothing to wash or rub off—no interference with shampooing.

Beware of experiments

If you try to restore your hair with some unknown product and it doesn't turn out well there is nothing to do. The streaked, discolored hair which is so mortifying will have to grow out again and this is a slow process.

You take no risk when you use Mary T. Goldman's, which is a tested laboratory product, every bottle efficient and reliable, results always the same. Remember this when you are urged to try something just as good.

Mail the coupon

Don't accept any statement on faith, but judge for yourself by results. Fill out the coupon carefully, and if possible enclose a lock of hair in your letter. Send no money—this test offer is absolutely free.

When you have judged by this test, get a full-sized bottle from your druggist, or direct from us.

Mary T. Goldman,
1167 Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Please send me your FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. The natural color of my hair is black..... jet black..... dark brown..... medium brown..... light brown.....

Name .....

Address .....

Please print your name and address plainly.

The Bread of Idleness

By Maud Mary Brown

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

"SIDNEY!" Mrs. Blair's voice was sharply impatient. "Aren't you dressed yet?"

Sidney closed her book and looked up at her mother from the depths of an easy chair.

"I'm not going to that stodgy reception, mother. Monty has to drive into the country this afternoon and has asked me to go along."

"Monty! Don't tell me that you are mad enough to go off with that cheap soda fountain clerk when Oakhedge's favorite sons are gathering in the library."

"Oakhedge's old-home week is nothing in my young life," Sidney retorted flippantly. "I saw a few of those favorite sons leave the train last night. They're no favorites of mine, mother. Frankly, I prefer Monty. He belongs to my generation, at least."

Mrs. Blair was on the verge of despairing tears. "You are like your father in never seeing an opportunity," she accused.

Sidney's tawny eyes softened. "I wish I were more like him," she said simply.

"Sidney, you may as well be told that we are nearly down to our last dollar. I have done the best I could. I moved out to this dull town because we could live cheaply here. I have made our clothes. I have economized desperately—under cover. At that, we're pretty nearly done."

Sidney straightened, startled. She was very lovely with her tawny eyes quickened out of their habitual drowsiness and her tawny hair framing her oval face whose purity of coloring was intensified by the scarlet of her beautifully-modeled lips.

"Well," she demanded sharply, "what do you want me to do, mother?"

"I want you to make an advantageous marriage," was the candid reply.

"I think Monty is getting ready to propose," mused Sidney.

"Don't be a little fool, Sidney. There are several rich and distinguished men in town this week. Saxon Deane, the lawyer, is here, as well as John Randolph, the sculptor. I want you to stop playing around with Monty Brown and attend the old-home week ceremonies."

"And try to land a husband? It's revolting, mother."

"Fastidiousness is very well, within limits, my dear, but your face happens to be all the capital we have left. I haven't relished speaking so plainly, but I want you to realize that the situation is grave."

She left Sidney and went up to her room to make herself look as prosperous as possible before presenting herself before Oakledge's guests. She was on the reception committee, and she meant to make the most of that. If only Sidney would play up! But Sidney's reactions were as undependable as her father's had been.

Left alone, Sidney sank back in her chair, her brows drawn together in unpleasant reflection. This was the first intimation she had had that their circumstances were desperate. Well, she could work. She stretched her shapely limbs and admitted that she was deceiving herself. She hated the thought of work.

And her mother was right—Monty was out of the question. Her shrewd business sense acknowledged that.

She sat up finally, and threw her book aside. "I suppose I do owe mother something," she said. "But trying to trap a man is so humiliating. Daddy, if you couldn't leave us money, why couldn't you have left us some of your staunch courage?"

She rose and went slowly up to her mother's room. "What shall I wear?" she asked simply.

Mrs. Blair wheeled and they exchanged significant glances.

"Your brown Swiss with the yellow sash and your brown suede pumps will do nicely," she said.

"Precisely what I thought. Mother, we are really very much alike."

"We understand each other, I think Sidney."

"Perfectly. We are mild adventuresses, aren't we, mother? Only, we're strictly moral. We demand the wedding ring with a man's money, don't we? Well, I'm off to don war paint and beads? 'Bye, mother. See you later."

Mrs. Blair easily brought about the meeting of Saxon Deane and Sidney that afternoon and as easily found an excuse for leaving them alone.

"This must bore you frightfully," Deane said, his interested eyes on Sidney's face.

"Oh, no, indeed!" prevaricated Sidney. "We haven't lived here very long, but we love Oakhedge and we are proud of you today as is the oldest inhabitant who used to spank you when you stole her cherries."

"See here, Miss Blair," laughed Deane, "have you been getting acquainted with village legends?"

She shook her tawny head. "I know human nature," she said, "and you have an acquisitive eye."

"I suppose I ought to be grateful for having been called a thief so pleasantly," he grinned as they sauntered out into the spring air.

"Your mother asked me to call," he said shyly as he saw Mrs. Blair majestically approaching.

Sidney flashed him a warm glance. "Do come," she urged.

He shook hands with both women and watched them as they disappeared down the street.

"Jove!" He shook his shoulders as though ridding himself of a burden. "I feel younger than I have in years. I like those women and the girl's a beauty. Hello, Ranny!" He wheeled to greet John Randolph.

"Old man, isn't Oakhedge top hole? I expected to find it shabby and boresome."

"It is. Why do they drag us back, Saxon? What's that? You like it? Then you've seen a woman, man. That's the signs."

Deane had planned to hurry back to Harchester after doing duty as chief speechmaker, but he found himself inventing plausible excuses to remain over the week-end.

On Sunday evening he was invited to the Blairs for supper and when Sidney, flushed and triumphant, came out to the piazza to announce it, he was enchanted afresh with her beauty.

"I cooked everything that you're about to devour," she informed him, "and you are expected to put personal prejudices aside and call it excellent."

He followed the women into the dining-room and as he glanced at the daintily-set table, gleaming with silver and crystal and its garnished dishes of food, his eyes brightened.

"Oh, you country girls!" he exclaimed. "They don't breed home-makers in the city."

After supper Deane invited them both to go for a drive in the best car which the town afforded, but Mrs. Blair pleaded fatigue and Sidney and he started out alone, he at the wheel.

They wandered over the peaceful, half-forgotten roads of Deane's boyhood. They were for the most part silent, but finally Deane roused himself and placed a long-fingered hand over hers.

"You will think I'm mad, Sidney, for being sure so soon, but you are the girl I've waited for. Have I a chance? Or am I too old?"

"Old?" Her laugh was tremulous. "I don't believe you're thirty-five."

"Thirty-four, though, dear."

"Do you call that old—dear?"

He headed the car up a lane. "Just wait a minute," he said, "and I'll dare you to call me dear again."

It was late when they reached the Blair house, but Sidney found her mother waiting in her room for news.

"Well, mother, you can't say I'm not a fast worker. I've landed him."

"Don't be vulgar, Sidney. And kindly stop intimating that there was a conspiracy between us. I am sure that nothing was farther from my mind."

Sidney laughed shrilly. "So that's your system, mother! Well, I can't deceive myself quite so easily. I wish I could. It might be easier. Saxon Deane is sincere and I hate cheating him. He thinks I'm a simple country girl who enjoyed getting supper tonight. What if he should expect me to keep it up?"

"If you can't manage him," replied Mrs. Blair calmly, "you're no daughter of mine. I'm tired now, Sidney, and relieved enough to sleep well. Good night."

Deane spent as much time in Oakhedge that summer as his law practice would permit. He drove his car up and taught Sidney to drive it, leaving it there for her use. On each of his visits, Mrs. Blair talked to him confidentially about her daughter. She was not over-strong and she was highly-organized. She was so glad that her child was falling into his strong, protective hands.

His chief object in life, he readily promised, should be to safeguard Sidney from every shock and to make her the happiest, as she would be the loveliest, woman in Harchester.

He found himself advising Mrs. Blair not to spend any time on Sidney's trousseau. He planned to take her to Paris on their honeymoon and she could get all that she required then.

"But the expense, dear boy!" remonstrated Mrs. Blair.

"Mother Blair, I'm rather a rich man. Shall I tell you about my finances? You have a right to know."

A little later Mrs. Blair sought Sidney. "My dear," she said in restrained exultation, "Saxon Deane is richer than I dreamed."

"It's nice to know that I haven't become a rotter for nothing, mother," Sidney replied coolly.

"My dear!" Tears of vexation and offended pride filled Mrs. Blair's eyes. "I don't understand you at all."

They were married in early autumn and sailed on an ocean flier at once. Sidney spent a delirious season, spending money freely for the first time in her cramped life, while Deane looked on, tolerantly amused as at the greedy dissipations of a lovely child.

Returning in December, they found Mrs. Blair waiting for them in New York. Deane had sounded Sidney on her preference, a house or an apartment de luxe in Harchester, but he had succeeded in getting no definite response. Now Mrs. Blair took a hand.

"Aren't there any good hotels in Harchester?" she asked casually.

"Why, of course. There's nothing better than the Ardmore outside of New York."

"Then why not take a suite there for the winter?"

"I'm tired of hotel life, Mother Blair."

"Of course, dear boy. But Sidney is so young to assume so many responsibilities all at once. Wouldn't it be wise to give her time to get accustomed to her new environment before burdening her with housekeeping?"

Deane had been an eligible bachelor too long to have his bride regarded with indifference and as soon as they were established in their luxurious suite at the Ardmore—chosen by Mrs. Blair—Harchester began to call and Sidney found herself the intoxicating center of local interest.

For the first time in her twenty-one years she was thrown upon her own social resources. She could spend money without a qualm and select her friends without thought of policy. Her choice, Deane soon observed, was not his own, but he set that down to her youth.

He accompanied her to the Carrs to dinner one night, hopeful that she and Edith Carr would be companionable. Sidney was exquisite but disapprovingly silent and before the evening was over, sulky lines had settled about her mouth.

"That's over," she observed when they were in their car. "Hereafter let me manage the invitations, Saxon. We missed an evening of bridge with the Baxters for that."

"I hoped you would like the Carrs," he said simply.

"Professor Carr makes me nervous. He asked me my opinion of Lord Dunsany's latest play and wanted to know if I detected a touch of Barrie in it."

She laughed on a nervous key. "I told him I preferred jazz in music and literature," she added defiantly.

He turned to her, a rebuke on his lips, but at that moment they passed under an arc light and his sternness melted into an uprush of adoration at her beauty.

"It's early," she said. "Let's get the Baxters up for a rubber to take the taste of the Carrs from our lips."

"I have a brief to go over before I sleep," he said stiffly, his moment of rapture past.

"That's all right," she returned cheerfully. "Colonel Manley is always ready to fill in. You can read in the bedroom, Saxon."

At one o'clock she went into the bedroom, her eyes shining with excitement.

"See, Saxon!" She tossed a roll of bank-notes on his bed. "Little I won all that."

He frowned at the greenbacks. "I don't like you to play for money, Sidney."

"Don't be prehistoric, old dear! Merciful heaven, but I'm tired! Don't waken me in the morning, Saxon, there's a lamb."

During the winter Deane frequently spoke of taking a house, but Sidney, already the center of the gayest set in Harchester, pouted charmingly at the suggestions and stopped them with caresses. Finally, however, he became so insistent that Sidney sent for her mother.

Mrs. Deane wasted no time in getting to Harchester and a natural gift for strategy warned her that it would be better to approach the subject herself.

"You must have a home, dear boy."

His eyes brightened. "If only we might, Mother Blair!"

"But you must be patient with your young wife, Saxon. Remember, the first year of marriage is difficult, at best. Wouldn't it be better not to force her?"

"It isn't what I had expected of marriage," he said soberly.

"I know, Saxon. But it would be so easy to estrange Sidney. You must remember that she is years younger than you are."

That settled it then, and many times thereafter. Indeed, the disparity in their ages became the weapon by which mother and daughter clubbed him to submission.

However, Mrs. Blair was a little apprehensive. "I advise you to be a little more considerate of his wishes," she told Sidney.

"You see, mother dear," Sidney returned calmly, "I was your daughter long before I was his wife and you taught me well."

And Mrs. Blair wept because Sidney, turned by her into a certain path, was taking it headlong.

Time passed with Deane working to keep his income equal to their fast-increasing expenditures. It was difficult, for professional as well as business men were feeling the general depression and his capital was yielding shrinking returns.

He remonstrated with Sidney very gently, humiliated beyond words at the necessity, but she only pouted her adorable lips or, when that expedient failed, shrilled at him in a voice in which tears lurked.

They both showed the strain of the life they were living. Deep lines etched their way into Deane's cheeks and Sidney was forced to rely upon cosmetics to cover the ravages of excitement and loss of sleep.

One evening after nearly three years at the Ardmore, Deane and his wife made perfunctory conversation at dinner so long as the serving man remained.

When he had left, Sidney began in an aggrieved voice, "I knew you would return from John Randolph's funeral bringing its atmosphere with you. I wish we had dined down stairs. It's stupid eating up here, anyway."

"It is the one semblance we have of a home, Sidney."

"A home! Are you wishing for that again?"

"I've never stopped."

She gestured fretfully with her shoulders. "How did Lucy Randolph look in mourning?" she asked.

"Stunning."

"Trust her. Did he leave her a lot of money, Saxon?"

"No. Lucy's extravagance just about ruined him."

"That's right," sighed Sidney. "Lay it all to the woman."

"While we are on the subject, Sidney, I may as well tell you that the bills for this quarter are entirely beyond reason."

She rose angrily. "Do you want your wife to drop behind other women?" she demanded.

"Why not? What is the trophy you are after, Sidney?"

"Social power, for one thing," she said coldly. "And happiness."

"Sidney," he asked suddenly, "just why did you marry me?"

"I wonder," she said sullenly.

"How simple I must have seemed that summer when you were playing the domestic role. Well, I'm caught. But I'll make my trap tolerable or I'll fight my way out of it."

"What do you mean?" she quavered.

He glanced at her frock of Chinese blue and gold. "You are going out," he stated.

"And so are you."

"Oh, no, I'm not. I have some plans to work out. You can say I'm dead."

Sidney was frightened, and on her way to the Fosters' dance she wired for her mother.

Mrs. Blair, when she came, was unable to grasp Sidney's uneasiness. "I have never known him to be kinder or more generous," she maintained. "See this cheque, honey. It's for a trip abroad with the Havens. I merely suggested that I wanted to go."

Sidney, feeling a presage of evil, said, "I wish you wouldn't go, mother."

"But of course I shall go. You can manage Saxon now. If he becomes difficult, humor him. I think he is right about a home, anyway."

"Don't suggest that. He hasn't mentioned a home for weeks. I wish Saxon would hand me a cheque like that to me without my going on my knees for it. Let's go down town and buy some clothes, mother."

One evening in early March Sidney, housed with a cold, yawned over her book till her husband drew his chair alongside of hers by the fire and lighted a cigarette.

"I signed a lease for the Blanchard property today," he began quietly.

The Blanchard property? Do you mean that big place on the hill a few miles out of town?"

He nodded. "Four Winds," he said.

"What on earth do you want of that?"

"We are going to live in it, Sidney."

"I don't quite see the point of your joke, Saxon."

"I am not joking. We go out next week. It really is a fine old place."

"You think I will go to that prison to live?"

"I'm sure of it, Sidney."

His assurance infuriated her. "You shall never drag me there," she stormed. "Why, I have been told that motors go up that hill with difficulty. I'll join mother abroad or I'll go with the Fosters to Portsmouth, but you shall never force me to go there."

"Have you the money for Europe or Portsmouth?"

She whitened. "So you are threatening me," she sneered.

"I was merely asking a reasonable question."

"Well, I'll merely ask for a divorce."

"You won't get it," he said flatly.

"But I tell you I can't live in a place like that. What do you think I am?"

"A gold digger," he replied promptly. "But your sun has set. Your mother is too far away to summon and if you think about it all, you'll admit that, penniless, you will have few charms for Doris Foster and her ghastly crowd."

She was speechless, her tawny eyes filled with fear and anger.

He drew a memorandum book from the pocket of his dinner coat. "The first year of our marriage you cost me slightly over eighteen thousand dollars. So far in this third year you have spent thirty-one thousand. The price of wives, it would seem, is rising. Now, I pause to ask, what have I had in return?"

"You have the most popular and best dressed woman in Harchester for your wife."

"That isn't nearly enough. I have rebelled, Sidney, against being merely a banker for a silly wife. You are going out to Four Winds with me and take care of my house and be my woman. Get that, Sidney?"

"If you think," she began scornfully, "that I am the sort of woman to be tamed with cave-man methods, you are mistaken."

"Well," he returned cheerfully, "it does no harm to try."

She buried her face in her handkerchief and fired the final shot of the defeated woman. "Then you d-don't love me any more, Saxon?"

"I don't think I do," he said pleasantly.

In a storm of sobs she retreated to her room. Once in bed, she whimpered softly but her shrewd brain had never worked harder. Public opinion, she decided, must, at all hazards, be considered. Even Four Winds till she could work out a plan, was preferable to open scandal. But once there, she would make her husband so uncomfortable that he would be glad to ship her back to town and her friends. She might have to play a waiting game, but its result was certain. Toward dawn she slept.

It was on a mild, sunny day that Deane chose for their Hejira, and even Sidney had to fight the enchantment of the miracle of the budding season.

When their car had labored up the hill, Deane ushered Sidney into the house with a grave courtesy.

"It's furnished uncommonly well," he said, "and I'm sure you will like it."

"I'm sure I shall hate it," Sidney retorted evenly.

"This is living-room and library and dining-room combined," he explained on the threshold of a huge room.

Sidney glanced incuriously at the mammoth fireplace, the books and easy chairs, with lights cunningly placed for comfort in reading. A low jug of dull green held a mass of daffodils and she wondered idly who had placed it on the table.

"We make our own electric current," her husband was explaining.

"Indeed!"

"Would you care to see the kitchen now? No? Well, take your time. Above are two rooms connected by bath. We will use only this wing at present. Like it?"

"No."

"Too bad." He paused deliberately to light a pipe. "I am going outside. Want to come?"

"No."

"Very well. Have my supper ready promptly at six. We will have bacon and eggs and coffee. I remember that you cook them excellently. You will find things in the kitchen. I came out yesterday with supplies."

When he had left her, Sidney sat down in one of the big chairs and gazed unseeingly through a French window to the beautiful view beyond.

At six Deane entered by way of the kitchen and came to her chair, standing towering above her, as implacable as doom.

"I think I told you to have my supper ready."

"I don't take orders from you," she returned coldly.

"Oh, yes, you do. Go into the kitchen at once and cook my supper."

His voice snapped like the report of a pistol and Sidney, surprised and half-frightened, rose. She looked at him and saw about him the aura of authority and expediency warned her that it was better to give in now, while she might still be said to have some choice in the matter, than to wait for that humiliating moment when she would obey of necessity.

Like an outraged princess she swept out to the kitchen and cooked the supper, badly, but Deane was satisfied. The next morning he had her up at daybreak and, unaccustomed as she was to early rising, the effort of getting started was almost unendurable.

Sullenly she dragged around the kitchen, making the coffee and cooking the eggs. She refused food for herself, but if she expected her husband to protest at her abstinence she was disappointed, for he made no comment, but ate his breakfast in cheerful oblivion of her presence.

Events moved thus unpleasantly for days. Deane brought supplies from the Harchester markets and Sidney cooked them in aloof silence, but she never ate in his presence. When he addressed her, she answered as briefly as possible. Inwardly she was baffled and half-alarmed at his indifference.

However, youth can no more fail to react to voluptuous spring than dew can resist the sun, and Sidney, finding herself free for the first time from the influence of an ambitious mother, found herself drawing upon unexpected resources.

Her first, utterable weariness passed. As soon as her husband's car disappeared over the brow of the hill, she flew about her tasks, an unconscious song on her lips. At odd moments she opened the books which overflowed the library. Her eyes brightened one day when she found the Dunsany play that Professor Carr had discussed. It was almost like an unexpected meeting with a friend and she read it with interest.

Her Harchester friends had, it appeared, lost interest in her now that she was not an instrument for their amusement. They made no attempt to see her or to communicate with her. She thought about them frequently, a twisted smile on her lips.

She thought about her father also, and their warm companionship. When she was cutting tulips for the house or training the vines on the piazza columns, she reflected on his shy, whimsical philosophy.

"The bread of idleness," she remembered his having said, "is the most spiritually indigestible food in the world."

For three years she had had her fill and she knew him to have been right. She admitted at last that if only her husband's love and her own pride could be re-instated, she would be completely happy.

Many times she resolved that when he should return at night she would tell him that he had been right in forcibly detaching her from the life she had been leading. She even rehearsed the sentences till she knew them by heart. But always his implacable face or her own unsubdued pride prevented, and days melted into weeks with their differences unsettled.

As the days grew warmer, she explored the woods back of the estate. One day she ventured farther than usual, lured by the desire for one more spray of arbutus. She returned to the house finally, her hands overflowing with fragrance, her feet wet, her smile radiant.

The next morning she could not speak aloud. Aching in every bone, she crept down stairs to get her husband's breakfast. When he came down and saw her drawn face, he made no attempt to conceal his concern.

"It's nothing but a little cold," she croaked in answer to his question.

"Go right back to your room and get into bed," he commanded. "Mother used to have these colds and I know just what to do. Budge!"

For once she obeyed him gladly and in spite of her misery a delicious feeling of warmth stole over her.

They had been so long estranged that when he came into her room with remedies, she flushed, as though involved in an indiscretion, but he was too tactful or too intent upon his work of healing to observe it.

With hands as gentle as a woman's he made her comfortable. "Think you can sleep?" he asked when he finally adjusted the shades to her eyes.

Very happy and already drowsy, she nodded.

"Right-O! Do you mind being left for a couple of hours, Sidney?"

"I'm quite all right," she whispered. "I shall sleep."

His feet lagged as they bore him to the door. Once he turned, but he did not retrace his steps.

When he had closed the door behind him, Sidney stretched her limbs and smiled. "If I had been a decent human being, I'd have thanked him," she told herself.

In an incredibly short time Deane was back from the city, his car loaded with flowers and delicacies and superfluous books. Sidney, hearing the overworked motor, lifted herself on an elbow for a glance into a mirror.

Deane nursed her that day and the next though she knew what he did not suspect—that she needed his ministrations not at all. Formal courtesy, merged into friendliness but neither seemed able to destroy the barriers which separated friendliness from intimacy. Each covertly watched the other, waiting for the sign of complete surrender which each was too proud or too shy to give.

Toward evening of the second day Sidney came down stairs. It was a day of cold showers and Deane had a fire in the living-room and the supper table drawn up before it.

They discussed the books she had been reading and the latest plays. And the kitchen garden and gladioli. Those topics finished, constraint, like a spectre, sat between them.

Finally Sidney, an adorable flush suffusing her face, laid down an idle fork.

"Saxon." She leaned toward him across the table, her provocative eyes beckoning.

"Would you care to know what I'd call the most effective cure for marital disorders?"

He looked at her, bewildered.

"A hot mustard foot bath," she said demurely. "At least," she added shyly, "it completely cured mine."

The next moment he had charged around the table and she was crushed in his arms.

While a reporter was telephoning his story from Sing Sing, a convict hammering on the floor made it hard for the reporter to hear.

"Would you mind stopping for a few minutes?" asked the newspaper man.

"All right, boss," said the convict, "go to it. I got twenty years to finish this job."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Don't Send 1 Penny

Just send your name, address and size and I will send this skirt to you. You don't pay one penny until it is delivered at your door by the postman. This is a wonderful opportunity of getting a $5.50 skirt for $3.48. Compare it with others and see for yourself.

ALL-WOOL Pleated Plaid SKIRT

$3.48

This is the season's fashion favorite. Made of fine all wool plaid material in newest stylish colorings. Full box pleated all around. Extra belt. A fashion necessity. Colors: Blue-green-and-red Plaid or tan-brown-and-blue Plaid. Sizes: 22 to 36 waist measure; 36 to 40 length.

Delivery Free Just send your name and address—no money. When the skirt arrives, pay the postman $3.48 for it. We have paid the delivery charges. If you don't find it better than you expected, for any reason whatsoever, return it and we will cheerfully refund your money at once. Truly, could anything be fairer? Order by No. 53.

Walter Field Co., Dept. H1077, Chicago

The April Wedding

By Andre Dupont

Copyright, 1922, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

MASCULINE and feminine tastes differ greatly in regard to weddings. The average man agrees in his heart with that old English author who summed up the subject pithily when he wrote, "Wedding is destiny and hanging likewise," so the bridegroom wants the ordeal quickly over, but the bride thoroughly enjoys being the center of attraction, and the more elaborate the wedding the better she likes it.

If one reads the signs of the times aright a reaction is beginning to set in against the overelaborate wedding with its many bridesmaids and ushers, its pages and its flower girls in fancy costume and its throng of curious guests. Many of the most fashionable weddings of the past year have taken place in the home where the solemn ceremony was performed with but a small audience of intimate friends and relatives and all the "circus features", as one old lady of my acquaintance will insist on calling the pageantry of a fashionable wedding, were omitted. But this simplicity does not appeal to all young women for many look back all their lives with great pleasure and pride in the brilliancy of their church wedding and crowded reception.

